1. From hence we may infer, that God is not like unto sorry man, he performeth to poor sinners all that he hath promised to them. Men promise, but are often slow in performing, or not so large as in their promises, but thus God doth not. "Let the Lord forsake his ways, and the unrighteous man his thoughts, and let him return unto the Lord, and he will have mercy upon him; and unto our God, and he will abundantly pardon," &c., Isa. lv. 7. God doth not only pardon the sinner, but exceeds in his mercy and goodness all those thoughts the sinner could have. What could he do more in a way of mercy God beyond and love than is here expressed by the Father to the returning prodigal?

2. By this example of the Holy God, parents should learn to pass by great sins in their rebellious children, when they return to them, and humble themselves, and not to be of an irreconcilable spirit towards a prodigal child, who hath spent all on harlots, and by a wicked course of life; nay, and not forgive him only, but be kind and wonderfully bountiful to him, so as to overcome him with their love and goodness.

3. This may inform us, that the pardoning grace of God, and his rich mercy and bounty to returning sinners is wonderful, he forgives and upbraideth not.

4. This may serve to encourage sinners to return to God, though they have been never so vile and abominably wicked. See, you sinners, what entertainment you shall have, an how nobly you shall be treated, and be received, if you come unto God by Jesus Christ; what can you desire more? What, shall you have the very best that God hath? Will he deny you no good thing? Certainly some of you that hear me this day will resolve to return to this gracious God. Can you forbear one moment? O let nothing hinder you; let not Satan persuade you, God will not forgive your sins; see how he pardoned and received this great sinner.

5. This may also put us all upon the work of self-examination. Have we tasted how good God is; have we ever been thus fed and feasted with the best of our Father's house; if not, we may conclude that our faith is weak, or that we are but babes in Christ, or do not live by faith, but rather by sense. Observe those ten particulars I have laid down, and try yourselves by them.

6. Let none henceforth harbour hard thoughts of God, as if he gives grudgingly or sparingly unto us, because he gives us no more of the riches of this world. What, would you have the husks, which is the swine's food? God gives us the children's bread, that which is far better than what the wicked of the world have; and are we not contented? Is not God better than the creature? Doth he give us himself, and are we not satisfied?

SERMON XXIII.

And let us eat and be merry.—Luke xv. 23.

"LET us eat and be merry." This certainly denotes that sweet fellowship and communion every believer hath with God, when he closeth with him in Jesus Christ, or that sweet joy and comfort when he first comes home, or is converted; he then receives most choice and sensible communion with God and Jesus Christ. The Father's love is manifested to him, and the love of the Son is manifested to him; for then he feeds plentifully upon all the blessings of a crucified Saviour.

My brethren, there are three degrees or gradual steps of the happiness of believers.

1. Union with God and Jesus Christ. The prodigal was now brought into a state of union with the Father and the Son by the Holy Spirit: here our happiness begins, this is the first step or spring of it.

2. Communion. This is the next, "Truly our fellowship is with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ." 1 John i. 3.

3. Full and perfect fruition of God for ever: this completes our eternal happiness.

The two first we partake of here, while we are in this world; the last we shall receive in the world to come. Union is the spring or way of our happiness. Communion is a sensible taste thereof; and fruition is the fulness and perfection of it.

“Let us eat and be merry.” By eating, communion is often set forth in God’s word. “If any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in unto him, and will sup with him, and he with me,” Rev. iii. 20. We will eat together, rejoice, and be merry, i. e., he shall have sweet communion with me, and I with him. The word communion is by some rendered fellowship, by others converse, They are convertible terms, or words of the same import.

Doct. Returning sinners, or true believers, have communion with the Father and the Son. Let us eat and rejoice together; that is, the sinner with the Father and the Son, and the Father and the Son with him; they have mutual communion one with another.

I. I shall show you what is necessary, as previous to this communion.

II. Prove that there is such communion, and also show wherein it doth consist.

III. Show you the nature of it.

IV. Also show you what the effects thereof are upon the believers heart and life.

V. Apply it.

I. As to what is necessary, as previous to this eating, or gracious communion.

1. No wicked man can have communion with God and Jesus Christ. No wicked man can have fellowship with God.
 “Shall the throne of iniquity have fellowship with thee?” Psal. xciv. 20. That is, such that delight in sin and wickedness, no, this cannot be. “What fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? and what communion hath light with darkness? Or what concord hath Christ with Belial?” 2 Cor. vi. 15, 16.

(1.) Can there be communion and sweet fellowship, where there is enmity one against the other?

(2.) Can that person have communion with God, that hath not the nature of God, or a likeness of God in him? no, human creatures may as soon have fellowship with filthy brutes, or with swine, as unholy sinners can have communion with God.

2. No person can have communion with God, until he hath union with him. “Can two walk together, except they are agreed?” Amos iii. 3. Utter enemies to each other, can have no fellowship together. “The carnal mind is enmity against God,” Rom. viii. 7. And God is an enemy to all the workers of iniquity; his face is set against them, and his wrath is kindled and ready to seize them. Therefore there must be a mutual or reciprocal reconciliation to one another. First, God in Christ is reconciled to his elect, the atonement is made; and also he is actually reconciled to the person of this or that man or woman that believeth in Jesus Christ. Whilst the prodigal abode in his swinish nature, he was not actually reconciled to his Father; but now they are united in heart, in love and affections, and so can eat together, or have fellowship one with another.

3. None, it appears from hence, can have fellowship with God that are not renewed or born again, or regenerated. The prodigal’s heart is now changed, he hath got a new nature, and can now taste and relish spiritual things; sin now is become bitter to him, yea, loathsome and abominable, and God is become the object of his love and delight; he can tell you now that God is good, that root of bitterness, that averseness that was in him unto God and spiritual things, is gone and now he loves as God loves, and hates as God hates; before he was alienated from the life of God, and also favoured the things of the flesh.

4. None can have communion with God, or with Jesus Christ, until they have espoused him, or are married to him. Marriage is antecedent to conjugal fellowship and communion.

5. Saving knowledge of God in Christ is necessary to this fellowship. The choicest fellowship flows from intimate knowledge and acquaintance persons have of one another; there may be a remote knowledge where there is no communion; but to the nearest and choicest communion there is a real and choice acquaintance. “Acquaint now thyself with him, and be at peace, and thereby good shall come unto thee,” Job. xxii. 21, that is, all true good, that which is the sweetest, even communion with God and his Son Jesus Christ. My brethren, the image of God doth in part consist in knowledge. “And have put on the new man, which is renewed in knowledge, after the image of him that created him,” Col. iii. 10.

6. A man must actually be brought into the bonds of the covenant, before he can have communion with God.

Can a sinner eat and be merry, or have fellowship with God, whilst he remains under the covenant of works, or under the law, or the curse of the law?

Regeneration necessary to communion with God.

Marriage with Christ necessary to communion with God.

Knowledge of God necessary to this fellowship.

A man must be in the covenant before he hath con-munion with God.

no, evangelical communion is not bottomed upon the legal covenant; all unbelievers are in the first Adam; "And as many as are of the law, are under the curse," Gal. iii. 10. Therefore no unbeliever can eat with God and Jesus Christ, or be merry with them. Can a condemned malefactor be merry? or will the king admit him to eat at his table? Sirs, a man must have faith, he must believe and see his pardon, or have ground to believe he is freed from the sentence of condemnation, before he can rejoice and have fellowship with God. No man is actually in the covenant of grace that believes not, nay, he that believes not in Christ, "The wrath of God abides upon him," John. iii. 36.

There must be sincere love to God in him that has communion with God.

7. No man can have communion with God, without sincere love to God. Communion flows from that dear love and affection one person hath to another; and as love increaseth, fellowship increaseth; and as love decays, communion or fellowship decays or grows cold, also, or it is not so sweet and desirable. O how was the heart, the love, and affections of the Father drawn out towards his Son, and the heart, love, and affections of the Son set upon his dear Father? "The Father fell upon his neck and kissed him," and put the best robe upon him, and richly adorned him, and now he eats, drinks, and is merry with him; now they are united in love, and so have communion together.

8. It is necessary also that a believer knows the nature of that union from whence this communion flows; there is, as I once told you, a six-fold union.

A six-fold
union.

(1.) There is a natural union, that is, between the tree and the branches from whence the tree communicates its sap to the branches; also between the head and the body, and the members thereof, as likewise between the soul and body, and the food we eat.

(2.) There is a moral union, which is between one man and another; they cleave together in cordial love and affections, as Jonathan, who loved David as his own soul.

(3.) There is a conjugal union, this is that union that is between a man and his wife.

(4.) There is a political union, which is between a king and his subjects.

(5.) There is an hypostatical union, which is between the divine person of the Son of God and his human nature.

(6.) There is a mystical and spiritual union, and this is that union which is between Christ and his church, and every believer; and it is from hence our spiritual communion flows, though it is set forth by a natural and moral union, yet it is nearer and more intimate, as I shall show you by and by.

II. I proceed to prove, there is such a fellowship or communion betwixt God and a believing sinner, and shall show wherein it doth consist.

John xvii. 21.

The nature of communion between them.

1. They are not only united in love and affections, and in conjugal bonds, but are made one spirit with Christ. "He that is joined to the Lord is one spirit," 1 Cor. vi. 17. Not made one spirit essentially, but mystically; it is as if there was but one soul in two bodies; the same spirit that is in the head without measure, is in every member in some measure. "That they all may be one, as thou Father art in me, and I in thee, that they may be one in us," John xvii. 21.

Now where there is such a near union, there must needs be a most sweet communion. My brethren, true fellowship consisteth in community or communion. Now there is a fourfold community between Christ and believers.

1. Of enjoyment of each other. 2. A community of affections. 3. Of interest. 4. Of privileges.

I. They enjoy each other. Christ is theirs, and they are his. "I will be their God, and they shall be my people." "My beloved is mine, and I am his." God gives himself and all he hath to believers, and they give themselves to him; also Christ gives himself and all he hath to us, and we give ourselves to him.

(1.) Christ gives his person to espouse us, and so raises our glory. (2.) His treasure and fulness to enrich us. (3.) His righteousness to clothe us. (4.) His power to uphold and defend us. (5.) His wisdom to direct us. (6.) His Spirit to quicken, to renew, to enlighten, and to lead us. (8.) His love to delight and console us, and his glory to crown us. (9.) His angels to minister to us.

And we give Christ our hearts. "My Son, give me thy heart," Prov. xxiii. 26. We give him ourselves, and all we are. "They gave themselves unto the Lord." We give our whole souls, strength, affections, even all our faculties and powers, and members of our bodies, our judgments to judge and choose him, our understandings to know him, our wills to close with and obey him, our affections to desire, love, and cleave to him, our thoughts to contemplate on, him, our consciences to be kept awake, and stir us up to serve and live to him, our tongues to speak for him, pray to him, and to praise him, our eyes to look up to him, and to be employed for him, our hands to minister to him in his ministers and poor saints, our feet to travel to his sanctuary, and visit his poor members, &c. Sirs, Christ took our nature on him, "And so he is bone of our bone, and flesh of our flesh," Eph. v. 30. And he gives us his Spirit, his likeness, "And so we partake of the divine nature," &c. 2 Pet. i. 4. Christ's riches is ours, and our poverty was his. "He became poor, that we through his poverty might be made rich," 2 Cor. viii. 9. Christ's righteousness is ours and our sin was his. "He was made sin for us, who knew no sin, that we might be made the righteousness of God in him," 2 Cor. v. 21. His blessedness is ours, and our curse fell upon him, "He was made a curse for us, that the blessing of Abraham might come upon the Gentiles through Jesus Christ," Gal. iii. 13. He became a servant, that we might become sons; he bore our cross, that we might wear his crown; he took our shame, that we might have his glory. "The glory thou gave me I have given them," John xvii. 22. He was abused, that we might be exalted; he was crowned with thorns, that we might be crowned with eternal life. Thus there is a community of persons, and of what each other have.

2. There is a community of love and affections. Though this was signified before, yet let me speak to it more particularly because communion consisteth in this.

(1.) God and Christ love believers, and they love God and Christ; they have a mutual love to each other, signified by their eating or supping together. "Thou hast loved them as thou hast loved me. I will love him, and the Father will love him; and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him," John xiv. 23. "Lord thou knowest all things, thou knowest I love thee," John xxi. 17.

(2.) Their love runs all in one channel, and it is fixed upon the same objects: what God loves, Christ loves, that believers love also: and what God hates, Christ hates, that believers hate also.

(3.) The nature or quality of their love is the same: Christ loves believers with a strong, a great, a sincere, a constant, a single, or simple love, with a sympathizing love, with a love of complacency, with an unchangeable, and an everlasting love. So the love of every believer to God and Christ is great: it is a superlative love, a sincere, a single, a simple, a constant, a cordial love, and full of delight, and abiding: such as is the cause, such is the effect. "We love him, because he first loved us;" our love is but the fruit and reflection of his love on our souls.

(4.) Christ loves a believer in every state, when poor as well as when rich, in dishonour as well as in honour, on a dunghill as well as on a throne: when old, as well as young, in a prison, as well as in a palace: so believers love Christ in all states and changes he passed through, when in the manger, when tempted, when betrayed, when spit upon, when scourged, and when hanged on the cross, as well as now he is glorified at the Father's right-hand in heaven.

(5.) Christ loves not the souls of believers only, but their bodies also: yea, and he loves their graces, and all the holy and spiritual duties and services they perform to his glory: so believers love the person of Christ, the offices of Christ, the word of Christ; they love him as he is a Priest, as he is a King, as he is a Prophet, and whatsoever he is in himself, hath done, is doing, or is made to them; they love his image, his people, his church, his ministers, his poor, his ordinances, his worship, his promises, his interest, and his name, and his kingdom, and long for it.

(1.) He calls them his friends. "Henceforth I call you not servants, but friends: for the servant knows not what his master doeth; but all things I have heard of my Father, I have made known them to you," John xv. 15. And they call him their friend. "This is my beloved, and this is my friend, O ye daughters of Jerusalem," Cant. i. 16.

(2.) They walk together: "Enoch walked with God three hundred years," &c. "I will walk in them," &c.

(3.) They sit together in heavenly places.

(4.) They eat together, as in my text; they sup together, Rev. iii. 20, "I will [come into him, and will sup with him, and he with me." They feed on his merits, and he feeds upon their duties, and on their graces. "I have eaten my honey with my honey-comb, I have drunk my wine with my milk," Cant. vi. 1. Their graces refresh and delight his soul. "Thou hast ravished my heart, my sister, my spouse; thou hast ravished my heart with one of thine eyes, with the chain of thy neck," Cant. iv. 9.

(5.) They visit each other; Christ visits them in ways of mercy, and they visit him in way of duty.

(6.) Christ loves to hear their voice. "O my Dove, that are in the clefts of the rock let me hear thy voice, let me see thy face; for sweet is thy voice, and thy countenance is comely," Cant. ii. 14. And they love to hear his voice. "It is the voice of my beloved that knocketh." "My sheep know my voice, and they follow me," &c., John x. 27, that is, they love, approve, and delight to hear my voice.

(7.) Also precious love-tokens pass mutually to each other; he kisses them "with the kisses of his mouth," Cant. i. 1, which is a token of his love and affection; and they kiss the Son as a token of their love and subjection. "The Father fell upon his neck, and kissed him."

(8.) They have mutual desires after each other. "So shall the king desire thy beauty," Psal. xlv. 11. And what saith a believer? "with my soul have I desired thee in the night," Isaiah xxvi. 9.

3. There is a community of interest between Christ and believers.

(1.) They have one and the same design to manage and carry on in the world; and what is that, but the glory of God, and the good of his church, and of the souls of men?

(1.) Christ's grand design is to glorify his Father, and to greaten his own name; and this is the main design and eudeavour of believers, i. e., to exalt Jesus Christ. "Christ (saith holy Paul) shall be magnified in my body, whether it be by life or death," Phil. i. 20.

(2.) Christ's design is to enlarge his own kingdom in the world, or the increase of his church; and this is the design and end of believers; they pray for his kingdom: "Thy kingdom come."—"Do good in thy good pleasure to Sion; build thou the walls of Jerusalem," Psal. li. 18. Nay, the good of the church they prefer above all things on earth. If, like to David, "I forget thee, O Jerusalem, let my right-hand forget her cunning. If I do not remember thee, let my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth; if I prefer not Jerusalem above my chief joy," Psal. cxxxvii. 5, 6. Do some professors do this? no certainly. Why it is the property and duty of all believers thus to do; but do they do this, that hardly ever think of Sion? do they do this, that by their pride and covetous practices expose her to reproach? Do they do this, who suffer her to languish and decay, rather than they will spare their strength or treasure to support her? what hinders the increase of the church or spreading of the gospel? Is it not self-interest? Some will lay up hundreds, nay thousands for themselves and children, who grudge a few shillings to uphold the walls of Jerusalem, or to encourage poor ministers at home, or to send them abroad. Some so little regard the interest of Christ, his church and ministry, that were it not for a few faithful persons, his whole interest might fall to the ground for all them. Sad times! They drive a trade for themselves, and regard not Christ nor his church; they cannot say with David, "the zeal of thine house hath eaten me up," Psal. cxix. 139. Though he spoke it in the person of Christ, yet it was true no doubt in himself.

(3.) Christ's design is the good, the comfort and edification of his people, that they may abound in grace and holiness, and in all the fruits of the Spirit: and this is the design of all sincere believers, and thus their interest is one and the same, both strive to pull down Satan's kingdom, and to destroy sin and all sinful practices, with heresies and errors, traditions of men, superstition idolatry, popery, &c. Christ's work is to establish truth, and cause that to flourish: the interest of the husband is the interest of the wife; that which is the father's true interest should be the child's labour to promote.

2ndly. They also seek and choose the same means, in order to the carrying this interest on; that way Christ makes use of to promote his own glory, and his churches good, they approve of, and consent to.

(1.) If it be by weak means, they will support and continue it as much as they can, and not say, Christ is able to preserve his own truth, and good of his church, by his own hand another way.

(2.) If it be by persecution, they consent; if by the rod, they approve of it; if by liberty, peace, and prosperity, they submit, and are pleased; or if by ways that may seem hazardous as to their outward state, they complain not, nor go out of God's way; they are not like Jeroboam, rather than to hazard the loss of his kingdom, set up golden calves at Dan and Bethel.

3rdly. As they mutually agree in the means, so also in the instruments that Christ chooses to promote and carry his interest on, if noble and learned ones, every true Christian is pleased; but if God lays aside such, chooses few of that sort, but rather the unlearn-ed, or base and contemptible persons to preach his gospel and manage his cause, they are as well satisfied, and will not expose them to the scorn of the world, because they are not endowed with the knowledge of the tongues, or human literature.

4thly. They have also the same friends and the same enemies; he is no friend to Christ, that is an enemy to his people; nor is he a believer's friend that is Christ's enemy. Those that hate thee, and rise up against thee, I hate, saith David. My brethren, why do some men hate his present majesty, our gracious king? is it not because he is a friend to and a favourer of God's people, and why do the godly love him; but because God hath raised him up to favour his righteous cause, and to be a scourge to his enemies?

Christ and believers have the same friends and the same enemies.

Their interest and end, means and persons (as one observes) are so one and the same, that what is done, said to be done to one, is done to the other. They that despise you, saith our Lord, despise me; and they that receive you, receive me. And they also that persecute the saints, persecute Christ: "Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me?" Acts viii. 4. And hence the sufferings of the saints are said to be the sufferings of Christ. "They that touch you, touch the apple of mine eye," Zech. ii. 8. Moreover, they that feed, clothe, and visit the poor saints, feed, clothe, and visit Jesus Christ, Matt. xxv. 35. This their interest is one.

4. There is between them communion of privileges also, as is noted by divers worthy men. Christ is called God's child, he is called the holy Child Jesus: so the saints are called the children of God. Christ is the Son of God, and the saints are the sons and daughters of God also: Christ is called God's servant; also the heir of all things, Heb. i. i. 2. And the saints are called the heirs of all things, Rev. ii. 17. Or joint heirs with him. Rom. viii. 17. Christ is God's eldest, and they are God's elect in him. Christ was from above, and heavenly, and the saints are said to be born from above, to be heavenly also. Christ is a King and Priest, and the saints are called Kings and Priests also, Rev. v. 10. Christ a Conqueror, so the saints are said to be conquerors. Christ is called a Pearl, and the saints are called jewels: Christ shall judge the world, and the saints shall judge the world with him; they sit with him on his throne; he hath a crown, and they shall be crowned also. Thus they have communion in like privileges, but Jesus Christ hath infinitely the pre-eminence above them.

A communion of privileges between Christ and believers. See Durham.

"And let us eat and be merry." Why may not this eating comprehend, or partly refer to the Lord's Supper, every believer that is brought into God's house hath communion with him in that holy ordinance; and of all ordinances they have the sweetest fellowship with God and Christ in this: prayer is an act of homage, praise an act of gratitude; but this is the love-feast, or the chief consolatory dainties of our Father's house. O of what a Lamb do we feed on at this table?

But so much as to the second thing.

III. I shall open the nature of this fellowship and communion between God and Christ, and a believing sinner at this merry and joyful meeting.

It is a most honourable communion.

1. It is a most honourable and sublime fellowship. What! sit with the Father at his table, the glorious King of heaven and earth, eat, drink, and rejoice with him. What honour like this! what, eat with the King and with the King's Son! and be embraced in their arms, and have the kisses of their lips! What, walk with the King, converse with the King, behold the King in his galleries, may, be espoused by him, and be led into his chambers, "and into his banquetting-house, and have his left hand under our head and his right hand to embrace us!" Cant. i. 4, 5. ii. 6. Stand and admire!

2. It is a God-glorifying communion. For, my brethren, he manifesteth his glory to us hereby, in his glorious attributes. (1.) His wisdom in finding out the way to raise us to this high fellowship and amazing grandeur, (2.) His power in removing all those impediments that were in the way of it. (3.) His infinite love and goodness. (4.) His justice, in that we are not raised to this happiness, without full satisfaction made to the justice and law of God. (5.) Also, how is mercy, and rich bounty, and free-grace, magnified in admitting of a poor returning prodigal, to such a God glorifying banquet! and then believers glorify God by letting him have their hearts, their whole souls, and their superlative love and affections.

It is a God-glorifying communion

We by letting out our chiefest affections to God, glorify his beauty, amiableness, and divine goodness.

By a reverential fear of God, we glorify his justice.

By faith and a holy dependence upon him, we glorify his power, all-sufficiency, and faithfulness.

By our humility we glorify him in his majesty and greatness.

By our patience we glorify his wisdom and sovereignty; and now in the exercise of all these graces of the Spirit, we have communion with the Father and the Son.

It is the highest communion. 3. It is the highest fellowship we are capable of, while we are in this world; we can have communion with no persons of a higher rank, dignity, or quality.

What is it to have fellowship with an earthly king, to eat with him? &c. To this eating also the greatest love that ever was known was the spring and cause of it, the greatest price also was paid to procure it. Moreover, it is a resemblance of heaven, and prepares us for the fruition of God.

It is soul-profitable. 4. It is a soul-profitable and pleasurable communion. It doth not only tend to the glory of God, but also unto our good; such that sit under Christ's shadow, find sweet delight; every step of this fellowship is a paradise. O how sweet are those lips that drop sweet-smelling myrrh! What a fragrant scent doth he diffuse into our souls whilst he lies in our bosom all night! they that taste and eat with Christ, or have communion with the Father and the Son, will soon find the sweetest of earthly enjoyments bitter and burdensome; and be sure those that value not, prize not this fellowship, never tasted how good God is; the consolations of God are small with them, because they know not what they are, and because earthly comforts are overvalued by them. Until sin be bitter, and earthly enjoyments distasteful, Christ will never be sweet and precious to you; all is theirs who have Christ. O then let us eat and be merry! Man's chiefest happiness is in his enjoyment, and feeding on the chiefest good. "Thou hast put gladness into my heart, more than when corn and wine increased," Psal. iv. 7.

5. It is a free communion, all is the effects of free grace, sovereign grace. It is a free communion. "Lord, how is it that thou wilt manifest thyself unto us, and not unto the world?" It cannot be purchased; it is granted to whom the Father pleaseth, and the Son pleaseth; God gives himself, and Christ gives himself to us freely. "I will heal their backsliding, I will love them freely, for mine anger is turned away from them," Hos. xiv. 4. Freely without any desert, and without bounds or measure. God loves us because he will love us, and he vouchsafes us communion with himself, because he will do it; it is to magnify his love, and the riches of his free and undeserved grace, according to his own eternal pleasure and purpose in Christ Jesus.

It is an increasing communion. 6. It is an increasing and growing communion. "The path of the just is as a shining light, that shines more and more to a perfect day," Prov. iv. 18. And we grow in faith and love, our communion is more and more; the more light and knowledge of God and Jesus Christ we have, the more sweet fellowship, joy, and comfort our souls do possess; the more we grow in likeness to Christ, the more communion we have with him. "They shall go from strength to strength in Zion," Psal. lxxxiv. 7. And from faith to faith, nay, from glory to glory, from a lesser to a greater degree of glory. Grace shall prevail, increase, and be victorious, and therefore this fellowship and communion shall increase and be more sweet every day to such that walk close with God, and daily visit him, and wait upon him in his holy ordinances. If we follow on to know the Lord, we shall know him, i. e., know how good he is, and enjoy his love and favour.

7. It is a soul-strengthening, and a soul-confirming communion, it is feeding upon the fat things of God's house, food that hath strong nourishment in it. It is a vain thing for sinners to question the truth and reality of these things, and to persuade a child of God he is mistaken; no, no, saith he, I have experienced, and found what I say, I know what I speak, I have tasted how good God is, and the love of God and Christ is. You may as soon persuade me when I have newly drunk a draught of excellent wine, that it was water and not wine, as you can make me think I am mistaken in what I have seen, felt, and tasted, or my soul hath enjoyed of God. O how am I strengthened and confirmed hereby in the belief of this glorious Deity, and in the belief of the blessed Jesus, and in the belief of our true Christianity! "The joy of the Lord is my strength." The divine presence, his love and favour establisheth my soul in his ways and ordinances, which some contemn and despise. "What we have seen with our eyes, which we have looked upon, and our hands have handled of the Word of life," 1 John i. 1. "For the life was manifested, and we have seen it," ver. 2. As Christ was manifested in the flesh, so he is manifested to the souls of his people. "And that which we have seen and heard, declare we unto you, that ye also may have fellowship with us; and truly our fellowship is with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ," ver. 3. Sirs, if you do arrive to this communion, you will say, O it is sweet, it is satisfying, it is strengthening, and of a soul-confirming nature. But more of this under the next head.

IV. Let us consider the effects of this communion on the soul.

1. This communion you hear is of a soul-strengthening nature; and so it follows from thence, it revives and quickens the soul. "I will be a dew unto Israel:" and what then? "He shall grow as the lily, and cast forth his root as Lebanon; his branches shall spread, and his beauty shall be as the olive-tree," &c., Hos. xiv. 5. This communion is like a dew on tender herbs, it refreshes, quickens, and revives our souls. "They shall revive as the corn, and grow as the vine," ver. 7. The approaches of Christ to us are like the approaches of the sun in the spring on the earth, herbs, and

It hath reviving effects.

It is a soul-satisfying

2. It is a soul-satisfying communion: to eat with God, and sup with him, gives full content and satisfaction to the soul; the soul delighteth itself in fatness.

"They shall be abundantly satisfied with the fat things of thy house," Psal. xxxvi. 8. "Blessed is the man whom thou choosest, and causeth to approach unto thee, that he may dwell in thy courts; he shall be satisfied with the goodness of thy house, even of thy holy temple," Psal. lxy. 4. The prodigal eat before, but he was not satisfied, but now he had what his soul desired.

It causeth

3. It hath such effects on the soul, that it causes it to slight and contemn this world in all its glory, riches and pleasures. "Whom have I in heaven but thee? neither is there any on earth I desire besides thee," Psal. lxxviii. 25.

Paul esteemed all things as dung in comparison of the knowledge of Christ, and of communion with him; this made the spouse also to say, "Her beloved was the chiefest among ten thousand."

It is a precious cordial,

4. It is like a strong cordial to a drooping spirit, that bears it up; the reason may be, because it is the soul's first welcome to Christ, and to his Father's house: first love is commonly the sweetest, a believer meets with such a cordial at its first closing with Christ, which he cannot forget as long as he liveth. True, they do not feast on these dainties every day; and should they, perhaps, they would not prize them so much, Paul speaks of what he met with fourteen years ago, 2 Cor. xii. 1, 2, 3; he was not often feasted in that manner.

It causeth
the soul to remember
God.

5. It makes the love of the Father, and of the Son, and Holy Spirit, to be remembered. "The king hath brought me into his chambers," Cant. i. 4. Well, what then? "We will remember thy love more than wine." Get but a real taste of God's love, of Christ's love, and you will never forget it as long as you live in this world. When I remember these things, I pour out my soul to thee," i. e., Psal. xlv. 4; when I remember what communion I had once with thee. "When I went to the house of God, with the voice of joy and praise."

Communion
has soul-abasing effects attending it.

6. It hath soul-abasing effects attending of it; that is, it humbles the soul.

Who am I (said Elizabeth) "that the mother of my Lord should come unto me?" Luke i. 43, much more may the soul say, who am I, and from whence is it that my Lord himself should come unto me! O how low did Job lie at the foot of God when he had clear sights of him! "Now I abhor myself, and repent in dust and ashes," Job. xlii. 5. And thus it was with the prophet Isaiah also, he cries out, "I am undone," Isa. vi. 5. The more we see and enjoy of God, the more low we lie at his feet, and are abased before him.

transforming communion.

7. Such are the effects of this communion, that it is of a soul-transforming nature; it leaves a divine impression of God's image, of grace and holiness upon us. "We beholding with open face, as in a glass, the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image, from glory to glory, as by the Spirit of the Lord," 2 Cor. iii. 18. Compare this with Cant. v. 5, "I rose up to open to my beloved, my hands dropped with myrrh, and my fingers with sweet-smelling myrrh upon the handles of the lock." When Moses came down from the mount from conversing with God, his face shone so exceeding bright, that the children of Israel could not behold it.

Communion with Christ makes his

8. It causes our souls to prize those ordinances in which we meet with this communion; nothing raises the worth of ordinances like this: O, saith the soul, I prize the word of God, and the ministry thereof; I prize prayer, I prize the Holy Supper of the Lord, for I have met with God and with Christ in these ordinances, I have had sweet fellowship with him in them, and what is the cause others do not value them, but set light by them? Alas, they had only the shell, they never tasted God, met with God in them.

us long to to be in heaven.

9. It makes the soul to long for heaven. "When shall I come and appear before thee?" if one drop of wine be so sweet, so reviving, so strengthening, so consoling, and so ravishing, saith the soul, what will full draughts of it be, "In thy presence is fulness of joy, and at thy right-hand are pleasures for evermore," Psal.

It makes a dwelling in God's house prized. xvi. 11.

10. It causes the souls of believers to prize a dwelling in the house of God. "How excellent is thy loving-kindness, O Lord! therefore do the children of men put their trust under the shadow of thy wings, they shall be abundantly satisfied with the fat things of thy house, and thou shalt make them drink of the rivers of thy pleasures," Psal. xxxvi. 7. Also it maketh believers to desire further communion; such certainly are utterly strangers to fellowship with God, that do not pant and breathe after it, and also after greater degrees of. "O when wilt thou come unto me?" Psal. xlii. 1. How did David long, thirst, and pant for the living God? so the prophet Isaiah speaks, "With my soul have I desired thee in the night, yea, and with my spirit will I seek thee early," Isa. xxvi. 9.

APPLICATION.

1st. Trial. Examine yourselves, have you found fellowship with God? hath your eating with your heavenly Father, and your supping with Christ had such effects upon your souls, if not enquire, what the cause of it may be.

Why some find no more consolation in Christ.

1. Is not the world got to much into your hearts: are not earthly consolations over-prized by you?

2. May be you have been too much contented with ordinances, without the God of ordinances; what is a bare ordinance without God and Christ in it?

3. May be your faith is weak; weak believers have but small comfort, are seldom filled with joy, or partake of strong consolation; if you see not Christ is your's, or you have real union with him, your communion cannot be great?

4. Therefore (as one observes) there is a vast difference betwixt a reflexive or sensible certainty, and a real certainty; a strong faith hath the advantage and the pre-eminency here: yet you may have a real certainty, for that doth not depend upon the strength of faith, or strength of grace, but upon the truth of it. My condition may be good, and God may be my God, and yet I may not fully know it, or be persuaded of it. Pardon belongs to all believers: all have their sins forgiven, and all are justified, are renewed, all are adopted, all are sanctified; and all have an equal right to glory; but all do not partake of equal joy and communion with God here in this world.

5. May be thou hast fallen into some sin, or temptation, and hast given way to Satan, or dost not live by faith, live on Christ, on what he hath done, but on what is done and wrought in thee, fetching thy comfort from thy inherent holiness or sanctification. Or,

6. May be Christ hath withdrawn himself from thee for a time; he will return, and therefore be not cast down nor be discouraged. Or 2ndly. Sinners, may not this make you willing to return home, as this prodigal did? is not the entertainment you shall have very inviting to you? believe there is that to be found in God and in Christ which you never yet met with. Moreover, do not blame believers that they so willingly have denied themselves to follow Christ.

3rdly. This commends true religion, faith, and holiness to a blind world; let all take heed they speak not evil of those things they know not, and understand not.

4thly. Learn to know from hence, that the way to true happiness is to obtain union with Christ, and so opens the door to him; this lets the soul into this sweet and blessed communion, as you have heard.

5thly. What a fearful state are they in that fight or mock at this fellowship, and esteem communion with the works of darkness, and with the workers of iniquity better than this fellowship! alas, their hearts are carnal, and until they are changed they cannot relish these things. "The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit, neither can he know them."

6thly. Happy, thrice happy, eternally happy are you that can say, "Truly our fellowship is with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ."

Lastly. O what a difference is there between believers and such who are in their sins! Moreover, let such who do believe and sup with Christ, nor forget to live to him, to his praise and glory, whilst they live upon the earth.

SERMON XXIV.

For this my son was dead, and is alive again; he was lost and is found. And they began to be merry.—Luke xv. 24.

THESE words (as one observes) seem to be an abridgement of the whole parable.

1st. We have his former state expressed under a twofold allusion. (1.) "He was dead." (2.) "He was lost."

2. A twofold account of his present state. (1.) "He is alive again." (2.) "And is found."

3. The consequences or the effects of it upon the hearts both of father and son, and the rest of the family. "And they began to be merry."

True joy flows from grace, or is the fruit of the Spirit, and of divine union and regeneration; and it doth not only cause joy in the soul of a believer, but God the Father, and those that dwell with him in his house are pleased and delighted therewith; also all rejoice together.

"For this my son," &c. (1.) We may observe from hence, that God takes notice of every particular sinner that believes or returns unto him. (2.) Note also, that God sometimes converts great sinners. (1.) "This my son," even he that led such a wicked course of life; great afflictions, straits, and powerful convictions are blessed, sometimes to the conversion of notorious sinners. "This my son was dead and is alive again," (3.) Observe, that grace makes a mighty change upon a sinner; what can be a greater alteration of the creature, than for one that was dead to be made alive? the Spirit puts life into a dead sinner. (4.) That the Lord is not ashamed to be called the God and Father of such that return to him, who have lived very wicked lives before; when he is renewed, the Father calls him his son, owns him to be his child; he is not only (with Zaccheus) a son of Abraham, but by grace and adoption a Son of God.

God takes special notice of every soul that returns to him.

"Was dead," &c.

Doct. An unconverted person is a dead person; or sinners by nature are dead, spiritually dead.

There is a twofold death, viz., a natural death, and spiritual death; the prodigal was spiritually dead. Sometimes the taste of sinners before renewed, called, or regenerated, is set out, (1.) As being fallen. (2.) By one sick. (3.) By one wounded, (4.) By a captive. (5.) By being blind. (6.) By a leper. (7.) By a wretched infant cast out into the open field in its blood. (8.) By one naked. (9.) By one condemned to die, and often by one dead. A man may be considered in a threefold state. (1.) What he was by creation, as considered in the state of innocency, so he was alive. (2.) What his state is by sin or degeneration, and so considered he is dead; this presupposeth he was once alive. (3.) What his state is by regeneration, and so considered he is alive again. "He was dead and is alive again."

A threefold state of men in this world.

I. I shall show in what respect a sinner may be said to be dead, and whv said to be dead.

There is a twofold spiritual death.

(1.) In respect of state; as we say a condemned man is a dead man, he is dead in law; thus all unbelieving sinners are dead; the holy law of God lays all under the sentence of death and condemnation; this death passed upon all men in the first Adam.

(2.) Dead, as to a principle of true spiritual life, even truly and really dead in a spiritual sense; as a man naturally is dead when his life or breath is taken away, or his soul departed.

1. This death consisteth in that privation in all the faculties of the soul; they are under a total privation of the life of God, or of original righteousness; the same faculties remain, but the rectitude is gone. Original sin is the extinguishing of the light that was in the soul; like a candle that is put out, the candle remains, but the light is blown out; or like a tree that is dead, the body and arms remain, but the life is gone, its leaves are fallen off, its branches withered, and dead. Even thus it is with all men naturally, they are dead, or without a principle of divine life in their souls; and hence all their works, deeds, and duties of worship which they pretended to perform to God, are called dead works: repentance is called "repentance from dead works," Heb. vi. 1, 2.

Wherein spiritual death doth consist.

Sinners
beauty is gone, as is the beauty of a dead man.

Sinners are cold to spiritual things, as a dead man is
stone.

God, the preciousness of Christ, the sweetness of this world, promises and ordinances: alas! it is all nothing to them, they are cold to such things; though it is true, some of them may act from false principles, with some kind of moral heat, and seeming zeal, but Isa. i. 31. it is all from sparks of their own kindling, and not from the spirit of life received from God, and so all they do, or speak, or act, in religious matters, is vain, they being dead to God, but full of life to the things of this world. Talk to them about earthly things, O how warm and lively are they! then they are in their proper and natural element; but they are like fish taken out of the sea, if you speak of heavenly things to them.

not, pray not.

4. Dead men breathe not, there is no breath in them; so unregenerate persons pray not; prayer is the breath or spiritual breathings of the new creature: an unregenerate sinner may pray (the Pharisees prayed twice a day) but not from a principle of life, it was not by the Spirit of God: the Spirit of God is a Spirit of supplication, it causes a believer, as soon as ever it is poured forth on him, to cry Abba, Father, Father. It is one thing to say or read a few prayers, or to have the gift of prayer, and another thing to have the grace and spirit of prayer. Paul before his conversion (no doubt) prayed, but God took no notice of those prayers; but no sooner did Christ touch his heart, but he poured out his soul, behold (saith the Lord,) to Ananias, he prays, now he breathes forth his desires unto God.

in sin cannot
spiritually.

5. A dead man is without motion, he stirs not, moves not, acts not, all vital motion ceases; so a man dead in sin can no more move, act, or do anything in a true spiritual manner from a divine vital principle, than a dead man can act or move naturally, and therefore cannot prepare himself in any remote sense, or in any degree in order to obtain the life of grace: nay, it is worse yet with dead sinners, a dead man cannot resist or oppose the almighty Agent that hath power to quicken him; Lazarus could not resist that power in any respect that raised him from the dead; but dead sinners (being alive in their bodies, and the spirit of Satan being also strong in them at first) resist and oppose the motions of the Spirit, their carnal minds being filled full of enmity against God, and against the word and workings and influences of the Spirit, they for a time may make resistance. "Ye will always resist the Holy Ghost," saith Stephen, Acts vii. 51. Therefore know, it is one thing for men to act by natural or moral principles, and another thing to act from a vital principle. "Ye will not come to me that ye might have life," John v. 40. This shows the averseness or rebellion that is in the will, and not the power of it in moving the soul to come to Christ. From hence it appears, that greater power is required to be exerted to raise a dead sinner, or to quicken one dead in sin, than in raising one that is naturally dead, or that which God puts forth in creating the world; for there was no devil then to oppose him, nor in his creating man, there was no rebellions will to resist him; but there is, when he begins to create us again in Jesus Christ, the heart of the sinner opposes, the will opposes, and the devil oppose, and makes oppositions against the Spirit and operations of God: though in the day of his power the will is made willing. "If God will work, who shall let?" "The wind bloweth where it listeth," John iii. 8.

power required to
raise a dead
one that is
dead.

6. A dead man cannot speak, he cannot praise and magnify God. "The dead cannot celebrate thee. The living shall praise thee," &c., Isa. xxxvii. 18, 19. So unrenewed sinners, dead sinners, cannot perform any acceptable service to God, though God requires duties of them, and they owe him honour, worship, and praise, must hear and pray, &c., yet they bring no glory to God; all people are to pray, praise, nay, sing the praises of God, yet none but the living, i. e., the saints of God pray and sing his praises acceptably, to his glory; for how can he sing with grace that has no grace in his heart?

7. Such that are dead cannot feel, see, hear, taste, nor smell; so all the spiritual senses of the soul are gone : though guilt, like a mountain, lies upon him, he feels it not ; though sin, like a sword, pierces his soul, he cries not out, nor feels any pain. Also he is so blind that he sees no beauty in Christ, nor good in divine things ; and so deaf that he cannot hear the voice of the Lord Jesus in the word ; they are like the deaf adder ; neither can they taste any sweetness in the word, that is as honey and the honey-comb ; and their smelling also is quite gone, they smell not the savour of Christ's sweet ointments, nor of his garments which are as myrrh and cassia, they savour only the things of the flesh, and taste the sweet or worldly gain, honour, and pleasure.

8. A dead man soon stinks and is loathsome : so it is with dead sinners, they stink in the nostrils of God, and all gracious persons ; and all their brave ornaments and odours are but the perfuming of a dead corpse. " Their throats are as an open sepulchre." Their breath is loathsome, or their prayers abomination to the Lord. Moreover, a dead man is not fit to remain above ground, but to be buried ; so wicked men are good for nothing but to be cast into hell.

USE.

O mourn over the dead, over your dead sons, dead daughters, dead husbands, and dead wives, and dead neighbours.

2. See what sin hath done ; O what evil is in it ? it hath slain the soul, nay, the whole world, &c. What fools are sinners who love their sins, that have murdered their souls, and exposed them to eternal wrath.

3. I infer, that we live among the dead, converse with the dead ; and yet how few mourn over them : in some families many lie dead, and hardly any that there is not one or more dead. O lament ! people converse with the dead, and yet are not afraid ; the pestilence that fills houses with the dead is dreaded, but this plague, i. e., sin that slays millions, and lays all men dead and full of the tokens, yet very few either fear it, or strive to escape from it : when there was but one dead in a house in the land of Egypt, what sorrow or lamentation was there ? But for these that are spiritually dead, few are concerned.

4. This may reprove such that say, mankind by nature are not dead, but only maimed or wounded, and so need not to have a vital principle infused to quicken them : these men assert that the will is not so dead to spiritual things, but that only moral suasions may incline it so powerfully to that which is spiritually good, as to turn and convert the sinner ; which error I have in other parables detected. See the lost sheep.

5. Yet here is comfort for the dead ; Christ, that quickening Spirit is come to make the dead to live, he can raise the dead. " You hath he quickened, that were dead in sins and trespasses. Even when we were dead in sin, he hath quickened us together with Christ." Eph. ii. 1, 4. Such that are dead may in a moment be raised to life. " The dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God, and they that hear shall live," John 5, 25.

" This my Son was dead, and is alive again."

Doct. He only lives in a true spiritual sense, that hath received a principle of divine life from Christ. Saints are made spiritually alive.

A believing and a true penitent person is a living person : saints are alive, though sinners are dead.

I. Let me open the nature a little of this divine life, and prove that believers are alive

1. Before he was dead, but now life is infused into his soul : Can a dead man live until his soul returns again into him ? My brethren, what the soul is to the body, that is the Holy Spirit to the soul ; I mean it is the vital principle, or that which makes him a living man. Adam was no living person till his soul was created and breathed into him. Therefore as the body without the soul is dead, so is the soul without the Spirit of Christ. Some may ask, can these dead bones, dead sinners live ? yea if Christ please, " for the Son quickens whom he will." Who are alive spiritually.

2. Life infused, is stirring, it is not without motion ; so where there is true spiritual life, that soul will be moving Godward and Christward ; they are full of spiritual activity. Sirs, according to the nature of that life possessed, such is the nature of the motion and actings of the creature ; for all creatures act according to that principle by which they live.

3. Such that live in a spiritual sense, they are sensible, they see, they hear, they feel, they taste, they hear and know the voice of Christ, the call of Christ, they hear the joyful sound, or the soul-ravishing melody in Christ's banqueting-house. " There was music upon the returning of the prodigal to his father's house," Eph. i. 18. In God's house is mirth or spiritual melody ; and what is that but singing " Psalms, hymns, and spiritual songs ?" It is a pity any of the family should not like it : they do not only hear, but also see "their understanding is enlightened; they see what sin is to loathe it, what the world is so as to die to it; what Christ is, so as to cry out, he is "the chiefest among ten thousand," and that he is "altogether lovely," Cant. v. 10, 16. They also feel, the least sin makes them cry out, the very thoughts and words are a burden to them; I mean words that drop unadvisedly, or too hastily from their lips. Moreover, they taste and know the Lord is gracious, "that the Lord is good," Psal. xxxiv. 8; and daily feed upon the feast of fat things which others relish not, nor can taste any sweetness in; and they also smell the sweet odour of Christ's myrrh, cassia, and frankincense; all the graces of the Spirit are as sweet spices or perfumes to them.

4. Spiritual life influences the whole man; the whole man is quickened thereby, wherever it is, even all the faculties of the soul, and members of the body are governed by this life; their tongue speaks for God, prays to God, and praises God, &c.

5. They relish spiritual things, and are spiritually minded; also they "live in the Spirit, and walk in the Spirit," Rom. viii. 11, Gal v. 25, Rom. viii. 14. They live in Christ, they live with Christ, and they live to Christ; for the grand work and design of the Spirit, is to glorify Jesus Christ, and this is the great tendency of this life: such strive to magnify Christ, and exalt him above all in heaven or earth. Moreover, there is heat and warmth in their souls; "Did not our heart burn within us?" Luke xxiv. 32.

6. Lost beauty, even the image of God, is restored to them, they partake of the divine nature; the new creature is a glorious creature, it being "created after the image of him that created it," 2 Pet. i. 4. This life makes them lively and holy, and causeth them to delight in God, and to walk with God, and to live on high, i. e., in communion and fellowship with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ, 1 John i. 2, 3.

7. Such who partake of this life breathe freely, unless they are distempered, fallen sick, or are under temptations: I mean, unless they are fallen into sin, or are disordered in their spirits: they pray always, and go to God as to their Father, and cry Abba, Father; they love God as a Father, and love the habitation and provision of his house. And thus it was now with this poor prodigal, and therefore the father said, "This my son was dead, and is alive, was lost, and is found." What it is to be lost and to be found, I have opened in the parable of the lost sheep, and shall add no more to it here.

APPLICATION.

1. O what a change doth grace make! and O what power is that which God puts forth when a sinner repenteth? It is God that raiseth the dead.

2. Bless God for Christ, and magnify Jesus Christ, "who came that we might have life," and have it more abundantly. Sirs, we come to have this life by Christ's death; it is a life purchased for us, as well as a life infused in us.

3. Trial. Try yourselves.

(1.) What spiritual life, warmth, heat, and zeal do you find in your hearts? is God, Jesus Christ, and religion, preferred above all things by you? Are religious duties your delight? Do you make religion your main business? then certainly you are spiritually alive.

(2.) Do you remember the time when you were dead and cold to spiritual things, seeing no worth and value in them; and can you remember how, and by what means, and near the time when this mighty change was wrought in you?

(3.) Is sin, every sin dead in you, as to its ruling power? and is the least sin like a thorn in the flesh to your souls, or as a heavy burden? if so, no doubt but there is life in your souls. Are you dead to this world, and to all the sinful profits, honours, and pleasures thereof? and are you also dead to your own righteousness, dead to the law, and that dead to you, by your espousing of Jesus Christ?

(4.) Do you breathe freely and continually, that is not only a sign of life, but also of health; not that you are only in a good state, but in a lively frame. Some persons, though alive yet breathe with difficulty, they meet with obstructions; and others fetch their breath short, being weak and faint, and have lost their appetite: so some cannot pray freely, and others make very short prayers (though long prayers always may not be expedient, nor the best) but when a child of God finds it difficult to pray, it is a sign he is sick or distempered in his soul.

(6.) What faith have you? Faith is the life of the soul. "The life which I now live in the flesh, I live by the faith of the Son of God," Gal. ii. 20. None have Christ but such that believe truly in him. "He that believes hath the Son," John iii. 36. "And he that hath the Son hath life, and he that hath not the Son hath not life," 1 John v. 12.

(7.) Is the Spirit of Christ in you? The Spirit of Christ is the life of faith, that which gives life and vigour to faith; the Spirit is the vital principle in the soul.

(8.) Are you spiritual, holy, and heavenly minded? "They that are after the Spirit, do mind the things of the Spirit," Rom. viii. 5.

Exhort. O prize this life! what is natural life to true spiritual life? yet how is natural life valued? What will not a man give for his life? O then esteem this life!

1. It is a dear bought life; it cost Christ the price of his most precious blood.

2. It is the life of the soul; and O how precious is the soul, the subject of this life! and what a fearful death was it under before!

3. It is secure, it is a life a believer cannot lose; men nor devils cannot take away this life. "Because I live, ye shall live also," John xiv. 19. Men may as soon deprive Christ of life, as any one that is in him, of this spiritual life.

4. It is the seed, and the assurance of eternal life. Believers, by having this life, have eternal life in them; eternal life in the seed, in the principle, in the earnest, in the promise, and in their head.

5. It tends therefore to peace, to comfort, and joy, through the Holy Ghost; O what consolation is here to believers!

6. It is a growing and an increasing life; such grow in faith, love, humility, &c., and in saving knowledge; here is cause of mirth, "And they began to be merry."

"Now the elder son was in the field; and as he came and drew nigh to the house, he heard, music and dancing."

This elder son, I told you, was the Jews and Pharisees, they were in the field of this world, working for life, doing to be justified. But when they came near the gospel-church, in the ministration and dispensation thereof; they heard that the Gentiles and great sinners were returned to God, and that he pardoned them, and made them sing for joy of heart, and rejoice in the abundance of gospel blessings. At this the elder brother, the Jews and Pharisees were offended, and seem to be angry, that great sinners, and vile Gentiles, should be esteemed above them, or fed and feasted with gospel dainties. But see how sweetly the Father reproves him, answers all he had to say in a precious mild way, "Son thou art ever with me, and all I have is thine." These expressions, I suppose, make some think by the elder son, the holy angels are meant; but that cannot be, because they are not of the same kind or species with sinners: nor are they angry when a sinner repents, but contrariwise, as I have showed, do rejoice to see it. Nor can the older brother signify godly men: for they never are offended, nor angry when sinners repent and come to God, but also do rejoice.

By being ever with God must refer, I humbly conceive, to whatever God speaks of under the law, of the Jews, and of Jewish ordinances, rites, and privileges; which ever only referred to the end of that dispensation, or until the gospel-church took date. And plain it is, some of his words show him to be a Pharisee.

"These many years do I serve thee." He is called a son, but had a servile spirit.

"Neither transgressed I at any time thy commandment." Thus the Jews and Pharisees gloried. "All these things have I done from my youth up," said the young man.

"And all I have is thine." All must be taken here with restriction (as in many other places of scripture) i. e., all I have thought good to give to you my people of the fleshly seed of Abraham, or stock of Israel, legal rites, blessings, and privileges. "To whom pertaineth the adoption, the glory, and the covenants, and the giving of the law, the service of God, and the promises," Rom. ix. 4. Nay, Christ also was sent to them, offered to them, and he was theirs, as concerning the flesh. Now what had God more (if I may so speak) to give under that dispensation to this elder brother? "What could be done more for my vineyard, than I have done?" or be given more to them: but for their sins in rejecting of Christ, they lost all, and were cast off, and the younger brother, i. e., the poor Gentiles, were received and grafted into Christ, even all that believed, or received the Lord Jesus, though never so great sinners; and therefore the Father saith, it was meet that we should make merry and be glad: "For this thy brother was dead, and is alive again; and he was lost, and is found."

And thus I shall close with this parable.

And he spake a parable unto them, to this end, that men ought always to pray, and not to faint ;

Saying, there was in a city a judge, which feared not God, neither regarded man ; And there was a widow in that city, and she came unto him, saying, avenge me of mine adversary.

And he would not for a while, but afterwards he said within himself, though I fear not God, nor regard man ;

Yet because this woman troubleth me, I will avenge her, lest by her continual coming she weary me.

And the Lord said, hear what the unjust judge saith.

And shall not God avenge his own elect, which cry day and night unto him, though he bear long with them ?

I tell you that he will avenge them speedily. Nevertheless, when the Son of Man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth ?—Luke xviii. 1—8.

Of his ministry 4.

The time
preached.
Feb. 2. 1701.

In what parables the main scope only should be observed.

MY brethren, I enter upon this parable at a season when the subject may appear to all very seasonable, what is at this time more necessary than extraordinary prayer, or crying unto God ? We seem to be in an evil and amazing hour, what God is about to do with England, with other nations, and with his own people, we know not, we are in a cloud ; things look black abroad, and bad at home.

But to proceed.

My brethren, there is in this parable little more than the main scope and drift of it to be opened, it so much (with some other parables) differs from the generality of the parables our Lord spoke. Indeed, such parables that are taken from the actions of wicked men, as that of the unjust steward, and this, &c., is only the main scope that should be chiefly minded.

Now the main drift and design of our blessed Saviour in speaking this parable, is in the general expressed in the first verse, " He spake a parable to this end, that men should always pray," &c:

1. Therefore one grand design of it is, to provoke the people to prayer, viz. ;

The scope. (1.) To be fervent in prayer ; this is signified by crying, " Who cry day and night to him."

(2.) To be constant in prayer, " Men ought always to pray."

(3.) Not to be weary, or give over praying, " And not to faint."

(4.) To patience in waiting for the answer of prayer, " Though he tarry long," &c.

2. Our Lord's design herein is to show his saints, that all those wrongs and injuries they sustain in this world, from the hands of wicked men, shall be avenged, and that in the mean time their afflictions and persecutions should stir them up to fervent prayer.

3. And to assure us also, that though God doth seem to delay, to avenge his own elect for a time, or to answer their prayers ; yet he will assuredly at last appear for their help, and against their enemies, though they think it is long before he doeth it.

4. That if God's people do cry unto him day and night, and not faint, he will avenge them speedily ; he never tarried long, when a mighty spirit of prayer was poured forth upon them.

5. To show nevertheless, that when Christ comes to avenge his elect upon their enemies, in the last days, but very few will believe it will then be done.

“Shall the Son of man when he comes find faith on the earth?” That is, faith as to his coming to execute judgments on his church’s enemies; he refers to this, not to the grace of faith. These five things, I conclude, take in the sum of his whole design, in speaking this parable.

As to what is contained in the several parts of this parable, and how to be improved, I shall in the next place speak briefly to that.

1. We have an account of a judge, and of his character, viz., an unjust judge, one “that feared not, neither regarded man;” a worse judge cannot be.

The parts of
opened.

2. An account of a widow, poor widows commonly go to the walls, and are unjustly dealt with, and abused with their poor fatherless children.

(1.) A relation of her condition (which is implied) she was wronged by her enemy. Widows (like poor afflicted Sion) have adversaries, or meet with enemies, and are ill-treated, as I hinted.

(2.) An account of her actions, or what she did. (1.) She came to this unjust judge, to be avenged of her adversary. (2.) Her importunity, she would not let him rest; she it seems follows him, and cries to him again and again, saying, “Avenge me of my adversary.”

(3.) An account of her success at last; though he would not at first, yet at last he did it.

(4.) The reason why he resolved in himself to do it, or grant her request, i. e., lest by her continual coming she weary him.

3. We have the improvement our blessed Saviour maketh of this action of the unjust judge, viz., “And shall not God avenge his own elect?” that is, shall not God much more do it?

1. Because the judge was a person that feared not God, nor regarded to do that which was just to men; he was an unjust judge, but God is a righteous judge.

2. He did it for a woman that perhaps was a stranger to him, or one that was no ways related to him; whereas the saints are God’s own elect, such that he hath redeemed; his children are such that he loves dearly.

3. Also very likely the unjust judge was under no promise nor engagement to this widow; but God hath laid himself under many gracious promises to his people, to appear for their help, and to save them when they cry to him.

4. The unjust judge regarded not his honour, name, nor credit; for he regarded not man, valued not what men spoke of him: but God’s name and honour is dear to him. “Shall not the judge of all the earth do right?” With him the fatherless find mercy; and he is the revenger of the widow’s cause; “For the Lord your God is God of gods, and Lord of lords, a great God, a mighty and terrible God, who regardeth not persons, nor taketh reward; he doth execute the judgment of the fatherless and widow,” &c. Deut. x. 17, 18. Poor Sion who sits as a desolate widow, he judgeth. “A Father of the fatherless, and a judge of the widows, is God in his holy habitation,” Psal. lxxviii. 5.

5. The unjust judge had no bowels to pity, nor sympathize in his heart with the widow; but God is full of pity and bowels. “As a father pities his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him,” Psal. ciii. 13.

And therefore (as if our Saviour should say) you may be sure from hence, God will avenge his own elect. Shall a wicked graceless man, by reason of earnest importunity, appear to help a poor widow? What greater reason have you to believe that God will avenge his own elect, that cry day and night to him, and who have none else to help and relieve them? and though (for reasons known to himself) he may seem to tarry long, yet if they cry to him, and cease not, he will at last avenge them with fury, and that speedily, though but few on earth will believe that he will do it then, or at that very time when he will come, and appear clothed with vengeance against his enemies to do it.

Now from the words thus opened, several propositions, or points of doctrine may be noted.

Doct. 1. That prayer is a great duty, and ought continually to be performed.

trines raised.

Doct. II. That the people of God, like a poor widow, are greatly wronged and abused by an ungodly world, or by wicked men.

Doct. III. That God will hear the cry of his people, or his elect ones, and at last execute vengeance on their enemies, though he seems to delay.

Doct. IV. That at that very time when Christ comes to execute judgment on his peoples’ enemies, but very few, or none of them, will believe it.

My chief design is to speak to the first of these propositions, as taking in the main scope and design of this parable; and I shall show,

- I. That prayer is a great duty, and ought continually to be performed.
- II. Show what is meant by praying always.
- III. Prove that prayer is an indispensable duty.
- IV. Show that prayer tends much to the glory of God, and to the profit of his own people, and others also.
- V. Show what prayer tends to the honour of God, and is profitable to us, and others.

What prayer is. I. Show you what prayer is, or what it is to pray.

1. Prayer is the pouring forth of the soul to almighty God, by the help, assistance, and the influence of the Holy Spirit. Hence the Spirit of God is called the spirit of supplication. "I will pour upon the house of Jacob, and the inhabitants of Jerusalem, the spirit of grace and supplication," &c. Zeeh. xii. 10. Hannah prayed to the Lord, and what did she say? "I have poured out my soul before the Lord," 1 Sam. i. 15.

My brethren, I understand not that reading out of a book, is any more praying, than the reading a sermon out of a book is preaching. When I pray, I will pray with the Spirit: that is, my spirit shall pray by the aid and assistance of the Spirit of God. And hence Paul saith, "We know not what to pray for, but as the Spirit helps our infirmities," &c. Rom. viii. 26. It is called a wrestling and striving with God. "Jacob wrestled with the Lord, he wept and made supplication," &c.

2. There are several sorts of prayer, but all from the same Spirit.

Several sorts of prayer. Ejaculatory prayer. 1. There is ejaculatory prayer, which is nothing else than the lifting up of the soul to God upon a sudden emergent occasion, or at any time, which some sorts, but lively expressions of our desires to him; it may be vocal, or only by some secret sighs, desires, groans, and workings of the heart to God, and those darts often reach heaven as well as the loud cries and voices which a thousand people hear. When Hannah prayed, though her lips moved, yet her voice was not heard. This sort of prayer is to be valued, (1.) Because we may be beset by some sudden temptation of Satan, and then may send up to God our prayers and sighs, when we have no place to retire unto to put up vocal prayer. (2.) Because we may pray thus when we walk the street, or in our work, or among evil company, even at all times. (3.) And this is the way to keep our hearts with God continually, and a sovereign means to get our affections off of the world, and delivered from snares, and also to keep up our communion and converse with him always.

Vocal prayer. 2. There is vocal prayer; that is, to pray with our heart and voices; but if we are alone, it is best our words be not loud, lest it proceed from hypocrisy; that God that knows our sighs and groans can hear us, though our voice be not heard.

Social prayer. 3. There is social prayer; that is when many join together with one heart in those prayers that are put up by one mouth: for it is confusion for many to speak in prayer together; though we read in social singing all joined together, not only in heart, but in their voices also, which tends to make the melody the more sweet: but we read of no such sort of praying.

Family prayer a great duty. 4. There is family prayer, which ought to be daily performed, if possible, twice or thrice a day. We read that "David prayed three times a day." The same also did Daniel, Dan. vi. 10. Such therefore who pray not so much as once a day, are either under great temptations, or in a dying state, or else are no true Christians. The prophet invokes God to pour forth his wrath upon the families that call not upon his name, Jer. x. 25.

It appears that Cornelius prayed in his house or family always; it was, no doubt, his constant practice, Acts x. 2, 3.

Secret prayer. 5. There is secret prayer, or closet prayer, when a man gets by himself alone in secret, and pours forth his heart to God; and this sort of prayer our Saviour exhorts us to; nor can a true believer live without it, though being found in this we ought not to neglect family duty any day: one duty should not displace another. "When thou prayest, enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut thy door, pray to thy Father," &c.

Extraordinary prayer, which to be found in it. 6. There is also extraordinary prayer; and the special times for extraordinary prayer, are these following.

1st. When we are afflicted. "Is any afflicted? let him pray," James v. 13. What, only then? No, no, not only when afflictions are upon us, but at such a time more than ordinarily, to be much more in prayer, or pray mightily to God.

2ndly. When we are tempted or buffeted by Satan. Thus Paul in an extraordinary manner prayed, when he had that "thorn in the flesh, the messenger of Satan to buffet him. For this I besought the Lord thrice, that it might depart from me," 2 Cor. xii. 8; that is, many times: how often that thrice might be, we know not; he means he cried often and earnestly to God.

When we are tempted, we must be much in prayer.

3rdly. When we look for, and suddenly expect to be called to great sufferings. Our blessed Saviour just before he suffered, was all night in prayer, and in prayer he prayed, that is, in an extraordinary manner. When we look for suffering, or are in trouble, or under persecution, we should cry mightily to God. "Call upon me in the day of trouble," &c., Psal. l. 15., that is, more than at other times.

So when great sufferings are expected.

4thly. When the enemies threaten us, and seek to invade us, or come in like a flood upon us, then we would in an extraordinary manner pray and cry to God. Thus did Jacob, when he heard his brother Esau was coming to meet him with four hundred armed men, to cut off the mother with the child; he was all night wrestling with God in prayer, and prevailed, Gen. xxxii. 24, 26. Thus also did Jehoshaphat and all Israel; and the like did Hezekiah, when Sennacherib invaded Judah. Also Esther and Mordecai, when all the Jews were in danger to be cut off in one day, 2 Kings xviii. 10, 15.

When we are threatened, we should pray much to God.

5thly. When heavy judgments are upon us, or upon the land. "If I shut heaven that there be no rain, or if I command the locusts to devour the land, or if I send the pestilence among my people," 2 Chron. vii. 13. O that is a time to pray more than ordinary. "If my people humble themselves, and pray, and seek my face, and turn from their evil way; then I will hear from heaven, and will forgive their sins, and heal the land."

6thly. In times when great and wonderful things are expected, or strange revolutions for the church's deliverance may be near, then mighty prayers should be made. Thus did Daniel, when he understood by books, that the seventy years captivity was near expired, he then set himself to seek the Lord by prayer and fasting, Dan. ix. 3, 4.

When great things are expected we should pray mightily.

7thly. When we are going about some great work for God, or desire that he would put forth his miraculous working power, as in healing the sick, or casting out unclean spirits; then we must fast and pray, or be more than ordinary in prayer. "This kind goes not out but by prayer and fasting," Matt. xvii. 21.

When we are going to do some great thing or to ask some great things of God.

3. I shall show you of what parts prayer consisteth. Prayer, my brethren, consisteth of three parts.

Prayer consisteth of three parts.

Confession.

Supplication or intercession. Thanksgiving.

(1.) When we pray, we should confess our sins, and the sins of God's people, even all the manifold evils of our lives, and our unprofitableness unto God: thus we find all the Lord's people ever did, and thus our Lord teacheth us to do.

(2.) We must humbly entreat God, or supplicate him graciously to give or vouchsafe to us whatsoever it is we need, or his people need: even lay all our wants, and the wants of our families, and of the church of God, and of the land in which we live, before him; and intercede for help, and all supplies from him.

(3.) Also give God thanks, and bless his holy name for all those good things we daily receive from his merciful and bountiful hands.

My brethren, as we must pray to God for what we have not, so we must praise him for what we have.

So much as to the first thing, viz., what it is to pray.

II. I shall show you what is meant by praying always.

1. Negatively; not that we should do nothing else but pray, for that would take us off from many other indispensable duties, both civil, moral, and religious.

2. Affirmatively. 1. Our Lord means, no doubt, that there is no time or season when we can have an opportunity, but we ought to pray; we must neglect no proper praying time. He is said to dine, or eat bread with us continually, that feeds with us at our table every day, and at every meal. And from hence it is said, David told Mephibosheth, Jonathan's son, that he should "eat at his table continually," 2 Sam. 9. 7. He did not mean, he should do nothing but eat.

To pray every day, is to pray always.

2. To pray always, is to pray every day. Hence our Lord saith, God's elect cry to him day and night: which may refer, as some think, to morning and evening, without neglecting of it once, if in health, or able.

To pray in all things we enter upon.

3. In everything, according to that of St. Paul, "In everything by prayer and supplication, and giving of thanks, let your request be made known," &c. Phil. iv. 6. We should set about nothing, enter upon no enterprise, but we should seek to God for wisdom, directions, and a blessing upon. "In all thy ways acknowledge him, and he shall direct thy paths." Whether it be in temporal or spiritual matters, and then thou mayest be said to pray always.

To pray always, is to pray in every condition.

To pray always, is to have a heart always to pray.

4. To pray always, is to pray in every condition, age, or state we are in, when child, a young man, or apprentice, or a journeyman, a single man, or a married man; if rich or poor, if in health, or sick; if in prosperity or in adversity, we must pray.

5. To pray always, is to have a heart to pray, or to be in a praying frame of heart, nay, and not to neglect it, though not in so good a frame at one time as at another; we must not do as some children, who having mispent the day in play, steal to bed for fear of being chid or whipped. If a workman's tools, be blunt, he must see to set a new edge on them. If new sins are committed, we must apply Christ's blood by fresh acts of faith, and being joined by prayers and tears, sue out for a sense of pardon.

To pray always, is to pray as long as we live.

Prayer a moral duty.

6. To pray always, is never to cease or give over praying; we must not cease praying until we cease living; neither should our constant performance degenerate into lifeless formality. "I will call upon thee as long as I live."

III. I shall prove that prayer is an indispensable duty.

1. Prayer is a moral duty, or a branch of natural religion. Mankind are taught and moved by the light of nature to pray, and to sing the praises of God. When the mariners were in that storm with Jonas, though heathens, "they cried to their gods." It is a proverb, "If a man cannot pray, send him to sea." But, I fear, there is at sea more cursing and swearing than praying now-a-days.

2. But prayer is not only a moral duty, but is an ordinance instituted and appointed of God. Mind my text, "Men ought always to pray." Not only the saints, but also all men; but more especially our Lord put his disciples upon prayer, "Ask, and ye shall receive."—Again, he saith, "Watch and pray, that ye fall not into temptation," Matt. xxvi. 41. "Watch and pray always, that ye may escape all those things that shall come to pass," Luke xxi. 36.

3. That in the doing of which, God hath made gracious promises unto his people, is a great duty, but O what a multitude of precious promises hath the Lord made to the prayers of his people! Therefore prayer is a great duty.

4. That which God hath owned, and wonderfully confirmed and crowned with his miraculous appearances, is a great duty; but God hath wonderfully owned, confirmed, and crowned the prayers of his people with his miraculous appearances, therefore prayer is a great and indispensable duty.

5. If God will be sought to by us, that he would do whatsoever he hath promised to us, then prayer is a great duty; but this he hath positively said he will be.

6. If the prayers of God's people be his delight, and also a great duty, it is a great sin to restrain prayer from God; and prayer is a great and indispensable duty; but this is so.

IV. I shall show you, that prayer tends greatly to the honour of God, and to the profit of our own souls, &c.

1. Prayer is a God-honouring duty, because it is part of his holy worship; and not only so, but it ought to be mixed with all other ordinances, all duties of sacred worship ought to be mixed with prayer; nay, we should not enter upon any civil or earthly business, without seeking first to God by prayer, but much more careful we should be to begin every part of God's worship with it.

Before we preach we ought to pray, prayer ought to be joined with preaching, baptism ought to be administered with prayer; first we should look up to God. Laying on of hands must be with prayer. The Lord's supper must be with prayer. "Every thing is sanctified by the word of God, and prayer." Hearing, reading of God's word, meditation, and watching must be with prayer. And as prayer should be used in every ordinance, so also in all trials, temptations, afflictions and troubles whatever; nay, in eating and drinking, or what ever we do else, we should pray, and so we may expect a blessing from God, and all ordinances, mercies, and afflictions to be sanctified to us, and not otherways; therefore prayer must needs tend to the honour of God, and our good.

2. By prayer we acknowledge the holy and most sacred Deity, or divine being, and majesty of heaven, and that he is God only, and none else, and thereby we glorify him also in every one of his blessed attributes.

By prayer we own and acknowledge the sacred Duty.

(1.) By prayer we own and acknowledge God's omniscency, (i. e.,) that he sees and knows our hearts, thoughts, desires, and all our wants and necessities whatsoever they be, and declare hereby, that we doubt not of the glorious perfection of the divine majesty.

By prayer we acknowledge God's omniscency.

(2.) Prayer tends also to glorify God in his infinite power, omnipotency, and all-sufficiency: we declare hereby, and doubt not, but as he sees and knows all our hearts and wants, so also that he is able to supply them, and do all things for us,—“and nothing is to hard for thee,” Jer. xxxii. 17. We hereby declare, that there is nothing too hard for God to do and work in us, and for us: and though men and devils, and the powers of hell and darkness combine against us, faith and prayer magnifies the God of power, and raiseth the glory of omnipotency.

(3.) Prayer tends to magnify God's infinite wisdom, hereby we acknowledge, that as God is able to help us, to strengthen us, to pardon us, to save us in or out of trouble; so he also knows how to do it, and also at the best and most seasonable time; that he is wiser than man, though never so crafty, and can turn their wisdom into foolishness, and counterwork Satan in all his devices, and defeat all the policy of hell, and all powers of darkness.

Prayer magnifies God's infinite wisdom.

(4.) Prayer tends to glorify God's mercy, love, and infinite goodness to us; for he knows how to blast all hellish politicians in those designs of theirs, carried on with the deepest subtilties for many ages, and can bring all to nought in one moment: so his love, mercy, and pity to his people is such (which we plead with him in prayer, he being our Father) that hereby we declare that sense and apprehension we have of his goodness, that we cannot doubt of succour and pity from him. And indeed this our blessed Lord himself clearly informs us of in this parable: for if an unjust judge will avenge a poor widow that cries unto him, how much more will God (as if our Saviour should say) avenge his own elect, who is so full of bowels, love, and compassion to his children, or to them which fear him? God is good and gracious, as well as just and righteous, and he also is our Father and dearest Friend; and, as so considered, we direct our prayers to him, and this also by the rule he hath given us, “Our Father which art in heaven,” &c. Who can make supplication (with strong confidence) to one that he believes is void of bowels, love, and pity? True, the widow is said so to do, as was heard, but not to the honour of the judge, in respect of his pity to the woman, but because he would not be troubled with her.

Prayer magnifies God's love and mercy to his people.

(5.) Prayer tends to magnify and raise to honour God's faithfulness in performing of his own gracious promises, and in making good his holy covenant. “I know the Lord will maintain the cause of the afflicted, and the right of the poor,” Psal. cxl. 12. This we plead, and this we are obliged stedfastly to believe. “He is faithful that hath promised, and he will do it,” 1 Cor. i. 9.

Prayer magnifies God's faithfulness.

(6.) By prayer we glorify God, in respect of his sovereignty over us; we hereby show, that all our hope and help is in God; and also that all creatures and things are at his disposal: “For thine is the kingdom, the power and the glory, for ever and ever.” Amen. Thou mayest do what thou wilt (even according to the good pleasure of thine own will) with us, and with all the nations of the earth. “And all the inhabitants of the earth are reputed as nothing; and he doth according to his will in the armies of heaven, and among the inhabitants of the earth; and none can stay his hands or say, what doest thou,” Dan. iv. 35. And this he will make all haughty tyrants of the earth to know in due time, as well as he caused Nebuchadnezzar to know it, before he had done with him. I might also add the like in respect of the other attributes of God, but shall close at this time.

SERMON XXVI.

He spake a parable, that men ought always to pray, and not to faint &c.—LUKE xv. 1—8.

DOCT. That prayer is a great duty, and ought continually to be performed.

I am upon the fourth head proposed, viz. That prayer tends to the honour of God, and to the great profit and advantage of our own souls.

This I am upon, and have showed how it tends to glorify God in all his blessed attributes. To proceed, (7.) By prayer we confess we are poor depending creatures, and cannot help ourselves, save ourselves, nor direct our paths, nor deliver ourselves from dangers feared, and that all our wisdom, strength, and succour, is from God. and hereby we give glory to God. "Neither know we what to do, but our eyes are up unto thee," 2 Chron. xx. 12. While we acknowledge our own weakness and inability to do any thing as of ourselves, and also can, and do rely believingly upon the great God in every state and condition, we advance the name and glory of God. And thus by prayer we magnify God, or the glorious Deity, as essentially considered; so hereby also in the second place we glorify God, as he is, personally considered. (1.) We by prayer glorify God the Father in all his perfection.

Prayer tends to glorify God the Father. (1.) In prayer we acknowledge that relation he stands in to us through Christ, viz., as our gracious Father; not only a great, a wise, a holy, a just, a merciful, and a faithful God, but a tender Father also; and that as he is so considered, he is the first and efficient cause, fountain, and spring of all that good we want, and do receive from the glorious Deity.

(2.) That he is in heaven, i. e., that he is exalted above angels, men, or devils, and that his kingdom ruleth over all, and as far above all as the heavens are above the earth: what need the children of such a Father fear?

(3.) That he is a living Father, and the Father of mercy, and of all strength, comfort, and consolation, knowing the wants of all his children, caring for them, feeding, clothing, correcting, teaching, and succouring them all, and that continually in all fatherly bowels, wisdom, and compassion knowing all our necessities, and hearing all our cries and prayers we put up to him.

(3.) By our holy and reverential approaches to him by faith, filial fear, and child-like affections; and thus, (and in many other respects,) we glorify God the Father in prayer.

Prayer tends to glorify God the Son. 2. Hereby we glorify also God the Son, or lift up and advance his honour. (1.) In that we call upon his name, as he is Mediator, and so own that the Son is the same God, or one in essence with the Father, and that he is the immediate object of all divine worship. We by him come to God, believe in God, and worship God, and give the same honour to the Son, that we give to God the Father.

(2.) In that we always come unto God in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, as our only Mediator and "Advocate with the Father," 1 John ii. 1, 2, 1 Tim. ii. 5; i. e., that it is for his sake, and through his merits alone, that the Father hears and answers all our prayers, and supplies all our wants.

(3.) We glorify Jesus Christ, in that we confess we come to God for nothing but for what Christ hath purchased for us by his blood, and is laid up for us in him, as the fountain of life, that is, with the Father. "With thee is the fountain of life," &c., Psal. xxxvi. 6. "It pleased the Father, that in him all fulness should dwell," Col. i. 19. And thus we, as God hath exalted him as Mediator, do lift up his glory, "In whom are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge," Col. ii. 3.

(4.) In that we hereby also acknowledge, that we receive all things we need, by virtue of his intercession.

(5.) Also in that we in prayer confess and declare the great love, power, care, and faithfulness of our Lord Jesus Christ; believing that he both knows our wants, and is ready and able to help and save us to the uttermost, and all that come to God by him, and so acknowledge that all the divine perfections and attributes of the Deity, are equally in the Son as in the Father; he being the same one and "ever blessed God over all," Rom. ix. 5. Amen.

3. Prayer tends also to glorify the Spirit, or God the Holy Ghost.

Prayer tends to magnify the Holy Ghost. (1.) In that we confess we cannot pray acceptably, without the assistance of the Holy Spirit, nor know we what to pray for. "No man can call Jesus Christ, Lord, but by the Holy Ghost," 1 Cor. xii. 3. That is, no man can call on Jesus Christ aright, (viz., truly own and acknowledge him, believe in him, cry to him, or so call on his name as to advance his glory) who is not renewed, influenced, and assisted by the Holy Spirit. "Likewise the Spirit also helpeth our infirmities, for we know not what we should pray for as we ought; but as the Spirit itself maketh intercession for us with groans that cannot be uttered," Rom. viii. 26.

(2.) In that all fervour, life, heat, and spiritual warmth in prayer, is from and by the Holy Spirit. How cold and flat are those prayers which are not put up to God by the influences of the blessed Spirit? This we find and do acknowledge, and so magnify the Holy Ghost in prayer.

(3.) It is by the Spirit that our faith in prayer is strengthened, and we attain to a lively hope, and are also helped to wait patiently upon God, until we receive those things we ask of God.

(4.) The Holy Spirit is magnified, in that it is by him we call God Father: he is the Spirit of adoption, and so helps us to cry Abba, Father. My brethren, we pray to the Father in the name of the Son, and by the Holy Spirit; and thus glorify all the three persons of the Trinity in this great and holy duty of prayer.

Secondly, as prayer tends thus to the glory of God, so likewise it is profitable to our own souls, to others, and to the whole church of God.

Prayer tends to our own profit.

1. God hath appointed prayer as the way or means, in and by which he will supply all our wants. "If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what you will, and it shall be done unto you," John. xv. 7. That is, whatsoever may be for the glory of God, and our own good. "Every one that asketh receiveth," &c., "Ask, and ye shall receive, that your joy may be full," John. xvi. 24. O what a blessed ordinance is this, by which God gives every thing we stand in need of to us! "And whatsoever ye ask in my name, that will I do, that the Father may be glorified in the Son," John. xiv. 13; i. e., Whatsoever is according to the will of God, I will do it, signifying his oneness in essence with the Father. Compare this with 1 John. v. 14.

2. It is by prayer, our faith (and all the graces of the Spirit) is increased and strengthened: "Lord, increase our faith." This was the prayer of all the disciples, they prayed to the Lord Jesus, so did the woman of Canaan, "Lord, help." And the poor man, "I believe, Lord, help mine unbelief," or, help me against my unbelief; for that he meant. He that would obtain a stronger faith, must pray to the Lord Jesus, or to the Father in his name.

Prayer is the way to have our faith increased.

3. By prayer or crying to God, we come to have an evidence of pardon. Thus David, "I acknowledge my sin to thee, and mine iniquity have I not hid. I said I will confess my transgressions unto the Lord, and thou forgavest the iniquity of my sin, Selah. For this shall every one that is godly pray unto thee in a time that thou mayest be found," &c. Psal. xxxii. 5. 6.

Prayer is the way to have an evidence of pardon.

Confession, you heard, is one branch or part of prayer. For this (that is, for pardon of sin, or for this reason, this motive) I prayed to the Lord, and he pardoned me." And let every one that is godly, that hath sinned, do the same, and they shall receive the same blessing also, "forgive us our trespasses;" &c., apply the blood of thy Son to our souls, and give us the sense and sight of pardon, let us know that our sins are forgiven. My brethren, prayer is the way to obtain this great gospel-blessing, and therefore most profitable to us.

4. God hath made many gracious promises to his people, but the way to have those promises made good to us, is by our praying and crying to him.

"I will nevertheless be enquired of by the house of Israel, to do it for them," &c. God will bring us upon our knees, before he will give us the mercy or good things which he hath promised. And this our Lord signifies in this parable. Before his own elect are delivered from their enemies, they must cry mightily to him, and faint not. Show me that saint or godly man, who did not this way receive the good things promised from the hands of God. God promised Abraham a son, but he entreated God for that son: God promised Jacob that he would surely be with him, and bless him; but he wrestled with God, prayed and cried to him to be blessed. Thus David received the promise: and Daniel also, though God promised to return the captivity of his people, yet how did he cry to God that he would do it, even just when the time was come! Dan. ix. 2. 3. 4.

5. Prayer is the way to escape Satan's temptations, or to be delivered from his assaults, or strengthened when assaulted. Paul prayed thrice, when he had the messenger of Satan to buffet him, and the enemy prevailed not; he failed not of help and succour. "My grace is sufficient for thee, for my strength is made perfect in weakness," 2 Cor. xii. 9. Our Lord directeth us to pray, "lead us not into temptation," not into a way of temptation, nor suffer us to fall in a temptation.

Prayer is the way to be succoured in a time of temptation.

6. Prayer is the way to prevail with God to divert judgments, or to escape the wrath and rage of our enemies. Thus God delivered Jacob from the wrath of his brother Esau: he cried unto God, and prevailed: and, as the answer of prayer, God defeated the wicked design of bloody Haman against the Jews: and thus was the counsel of Ahithophel overthrown. David prayed, Lord, turn the counsel of Ahithophel into foolishness; and the Lord heard him. How were the Philistines overthrown by the prayers of Samuel and all Israel: also the mighty hosts that came against Jehoshaphat. 1 Sam. vii. 7—10.

7. Prayer, importunity in prayer, is the way to get the loaves, and to have God to avenge us of our adversary.

Prayingsouls shall be hid in the day of God's wrath. 8. Prayer is the way to be hid in the day of God's wrath, nay, and to have a mark set upon us, that the destroying angel may spare us. "Set a mark upon the foreheads of the men that sigh and cry for all the abominations that are committed in the land," Ezek ix. 5. God gave commission to the angels to slay utterly old and young, even all besides those on whom the mark was, and to begin at his sanctuary. All must fall or be cut off, besides those crying and praying persons, in the day of some of God's sore judgments. "Seek the Lord, all the meek of the earth," &c., "may be ye shall be hid in the day of the Lord's anger," Zeph. ii. 3. Moreover our Lord directeth us to "watch and pray always, that we may escape all those things that shall come to pass, and stand before the Son of Man."

Prayer is the way to have fullness of joy.

9. Prayer is the way to have or obtain fulness of joy. "Hitherto ye have asked nothing in my name; ask, and ye shall receive, that your joy may be full," John xvi. 24. This is the way to meet with God, and to enjoy the light of his countenance, and to have all our doubts, darkness, and sorrow removed. We must do as David did, even cry, "Lift up the light of thy countenance on us," Psal. iv. 6. And again, "restore to me the joy of thy salvation," Psal. li. 12. We have no more peace, no more light, no more strength, no more joy, because we pray no more. Our clouds would soon be dispelled, our fears vanquished, our doubts resolved, and our souls comforted, did we pray more than we do.

10. Prayer is profitable to us, because this is the way to be prepared to meet with God in his ordinances. My brethren, we are to approach near to God at his table this evening. Have you prayed? Have you endeavoured to prepare yourselves? This of prayer is one of the principal ways to do it. We read, many in Ephraim and Manasseh had not prepared themselves; but "Hezekiah prayed for them, the good Lord pardon every one that prepareth his heart to seek God," 2 Chron. xxx. 18, 19.

Prayer is the way to have every thing sanctified.

11. Prayer is the way to have every thing sanctified unto us. "Every thing is sanctified by the Word of God and prayer," 1 Tim. iv. 5. You cannot expect that any thing should be blessed to you without prayer. You should pray that your trading, your buying, your selling, your health, your relations, your meats, your drink, your clothes, your liberties, and lives, as well as all spiritual good things, should be blessed and sanctified to you. This is the way to have everything do us good. "In every thing by prayer, &c., let your request be made known to the Lord."

Also it is the way to know such truths we are ignorant of.

12. Prayer is the way to have God make known those truths to us, that we may yet be ignorant of: "What I know not teach thou me." God led his people of old by prayer and supplication; and this is the way he leads them still.

To succeed well in all things.

Lastly, this of prayer is the way to be directed by the Lord, and to succeed well in all our undertakings. "In all thy ways acknowledge him, and he shall direct thy paths," Prov. iii. 6.

Thus I have showed you how profitable prayer is unto us ever, to our bodies and souls, and to the whole church of God. But to proceed.

Fifthly, I shall show you what prayer it is that tends so much to the glory of God, and to our own good and advantage.

1. In respect of the persons praying, you must know it must be a gracious or godly person: "God heareth not sinners." The prayers of unconverted men tend not to the honour of God, their prayers do not glorify God: the man whose prayers are accepted, must be renewed or regenerated, or one that is in Jesus Christ. "The prayers of a righteous man availeth much," &c.,

James v. 16. Though he be a man of infirmity (or a man as Elias was, of like passion) they are the prayers of such a person that tend to glorify God, and to his own profit. The prayers of "the wicked are an abomination to the Lord. When ye make many prayers, I will not hear you, your hands are full of blood," Isa. i. 15.

Sincere prayers glorify God.

2. They must be prayers put up to God in sincerity; the person must be one that is upright in heart. "The prayers of the upright are his delight," Prov. xv. 8. They must proceed from a pure heart, a sanctified heart, a heart sprinkled with the blood of Christ; and also put up to God in godly sincerity; not hypocritical prayers, of one whose heart and tongue agrees not. "My prayer also is pure," Job. xvi.

17. Prayers are then pure, when the heart is clean, and sanctified by the Spirit.

When prayers may be said to be pure.

3. When we ask according to the will of God. "This is the confidence we have in him, that if we ask anything that is according to his will, he heareth us," 1 John v. 14. (1.) Either those things God hath commanded us to pray for. Or (2.) Whatsoever things are prophesied of, or foretold, God will do for us, or for his people: to pray for the accomplishing of such things, is according to the will of God. (3.) Or what things he hath promised to give unto us.

4. Our prayers tend to the honour of God, when our ends and aims are purely to glorify him, or to advance his name and interest in the world.

5. When our prayers are the breathings forth of the Holy Spirit in our hearts. Prayers that tend to the glory of God, and which shall be heard, are such that are put up by the assistance of the Holy Ghost. "Praying always with all prayer, and supplication in the Spirit," Eph. vi. 18. The Spirit helps us to indite those prayers that we put up by God, and also stirs up, or excites our spirits, and strengthens our faith: it is the Holy Spirit that helps us to act and exercise its own graces in prayer, and also gives us boldness to cry, Abba, Father. We must not only pray for the gift of the Spirit, but also for the graces of the Spirit: when the soul melts in prayer, and the affections are raised and strengthened, and our doubts and fears are scattered, we may be said to pray in the Spirit.

What it is to pray in the Spirit.

6. It is the prayer of faith that tends to glorify God, when we act faith in the power, mercy, goodness, faithfulness, and in the promises of God. As unbelief dishonours God, so a strong faith tends to the honour of his holy name. Thus Abraham glorified God, "He staggered not at the promise of God through unbelief, but was strong in faith, giving glory to God," Rom. iv. 20. Nothing is too hard for prayer, when it is put up by faith in God. "Let him ask in faith, nothing wavering," James i. 6. Let not a man that doubteth of the power, love, or faithfulness of God, think to receive any thing from God's hands, or of bringing any glory to him. "It is the prayer of faith that saves the sick," James v. 15.

The prayer of faith brings glory to God.

7. Prayer that tends to bring glory to God, must be fired with zeal and holy fervency. "The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much," &c., ver. 16. Cold lukewarm prayers will never do any execution upon our enemies, neither on sin, Satan, nor the world, nor stir up the Almighty to appear for our help and succour; we must cry, "And shall not God avenge his own elect, that cry to him day and night?"

Fervent prayer glorifies God.

8. It must be argumentative prayer, or prayer that fills the mouth with arguments to plead with God. This was the prayer that always prevailed with God. "I will (saith Job) fill my mouth with arguments," Job xxiii. 4. Thus Jacob prayed also, "Thou sayest I will surely do thee good," &c., Gen. xxxii. 12. Again, he saith, "O God of my father Abraham, &c., which saith unto me, return unto thy country, and to thy kindred, and I will deal well with thee. I am not worthy of the least of thy mercies, &c. See what arguments he used to prevail with God. The like did Joshua; "O what wilt thou do for thy great name?" Josh. vii. 9. What arguments did the church also make use of: "We are thy people," Isa. lxiii. 16. "Where is thy zeal, and thy strength, and the sounding of thy bowels, and of thy mercies towards me? are they restrained? Doubtless thou art our Father, O Lord, thou art our Redeemer, &c. We are thine, thou never bearest rule over them," ver. 19. Thus Jehoshaphat pleaded with the Lord also: "O our God, wilt thou not judge them? We have no might against this great multitude that cometh against us, neither know we what to do, but our eyes are upon thee," 2 Chron. xx. 12.

Argumentative prayer honours God.

9. They are prayers put up to God in the Spirit of adoption, which tend to the honour of God: we must not come to God, as unto a just, and sin-revenging God, or as unto an angry Judge, but as to our Father in Jesus Christ, or to a God in covenant with us. "Our Father which art in heaven," &c. "We have not received the Spirit of bondage again to fear, but the Spirit of adoption, whereby we cry Abba, Father," Rom. viii. 15. Such prayers God is well pleased with, and they tend to his glory.

Prayer put up in the Spirit of adoption glorifies God.

10. They are prayers put up with humility, with self-loathing, and self-abbhorrence; we must lie low before the Lord. "I that am but dust and ashes," &c., saith Abraham. "I abhor myself," saith Job;" Job xlii. 5: not like the prayer the proud Pharisee made, who boasted he was not like other men.

Humble prayer honours God.

Watching unto prayer, in and after prayer, tends to the honour of God.

11. They are prayers with watching; it is not enough to pray, but to watch as well as to pray. A man that was a great professor, who fell lately into a great sin, confessed he prayed, but he did not watch; such prayers God will not hear, nor will they glorify him, neither be profitable unto us. Satan will be too hard for us, if we do not watch as well as pray; he always watcheth against us, he sleeps not. Hence St. Paul exhorts the saints to watch unto prayer," Eph. vi. 18. "Watch and pray always," saith our blessed Lord. Watching may be considered as threefold.

What we must watch.

(1.) We must watch our hearts in all their inclinations; our hearts are deceitful, and should be watched continually. "Who can know his errors?"

(2.) We must watch the Lord in all his dispensations, we must observe his various providences, under which we, and his people are exercised.

(3.) We must watch Satan in all his temptations: we must watch before prayer, in prayer, and also after prayer, that we are not hindered from praying, nor obstructed in prayer, our souls being carried away with wandering thoughts; and after prayer call to mind how we prayed, and for what: that we may wait to receive it, we must pursue our prayers.

Prayer must be with thanksgiving.

12. Prayers that tend to the glory of God, and our good, must be with thanksgiving; we should never pray for what we want, but also give thanks to God for what we have received. "In nothing be careful; but in everything by prayer and supplication, with thanksgiving, let your request be made known unto God," Phil. iv. 6. Shall we be always a craving of God, and not make return of praise to him? Should you be asking this and that favour of your dear friend that has done much for you, and never acknowledge his former kindness done you? Sure that could not be the way to prevail with him: no, but he may say, I will find you first more thankful for what I have already done for you.

Sixthly, I shall a little farther open the matter of prayer, or show you wherein the matter of prayer does consist.

God's word shows us what we should pray for, as well as after what manner.

What we should pray for.

What it is to seek God's honour, or his glory in Prayer.

1. More generally, the main thing that we should pray for is, that God would glorify his own holy name. "Hallowed be thy name." This is the first petition we are directed to put up unto God. Now the name of God (1.) being or essence of God. The name of the God of Jacob is all one with the God of Jacob. (2.) The name of God denotes his holy attributes, his wisdom, power, holiness, goodness, justice, love, faithfulness, &c. and we must pray that God would glorify all his perfections, and blessed attributes, for his own honour, our good, and the ruin of his enemies. (3.) By the name of God sometimes is meant his word; but by whatsoever God is called, or made known to us, that is his name; and since God is made known, or chiefly manifested to us in and by Jesus Christ, our Lord Jesus is the name of God; and hence he is also called the Word of God: and we must in prayer desire God would glorify his Son, or advance the honour, and raise the glory of Jesus Christ; for his name is upon him, and his design is to exalt, extol, and make him very high. Note,

(1.) We can add nothing to the essential glory of God; but when we pray, we desire God would declare or make known his own glory, and do whatsoever may tend thereunto.

(2.) That we may be helped to do whatsoever may tend to the glory of God, or to raise the honour of Jesus Christ.

(3.) Hereby also we are taught to lie low before the Lord, and be abased to the very dust before him.

(4.) To acknowledge all things to come from God, and also to trust in him, rely upon him, and to confess that nothing is too hard for him to do.

We must pray for God's kingdom to come. Ps. xciv. 3.

2. The second thing that we should make the matter of our prayer is, that God's kingdom might come; hereby we acknowledge God is a great King, above all gods, a glorious, a just, a wise, and righteous King, and also that he hath a kingdom which is not yet come, or least-wise not in its full glory, as it shall come in the latter days. We pray that God would pull down, or overthrow Satan's kingdom, and that his own kingdom may shine forth more visibly in glory and splendour in this world, and also come with greater glory into our souls.

3. The next thing that should be the matter of our request, and humble petition unto God, is, "That his will may be done." (1.) That the will of God may be done by us, and others. (2.) That the will of God may be done on us, or we submit to whatsoever he is pleased to exercise us under.

God's will, my brethren, is the rule of all he doth, and he being infinitely good, can will nothing but what is just and righteous; and therefore we should pray we may be helped willingly and cheerfully to submit unto it in all things.

4. We should pray for whatsoever God engaged to our blessed Lord, in the covenant of grace or redemption, to give unto us.

5. And also for all those things that Christ hath purchased for us, and which are treasured up in him as our Head, blessed Trustee, and Mediator, and for all things that God hath promised to give us, and which also Christ Jesus intercedes for, or pleads with God as our Advocate and High-priest, to give unto us. But all things must be prayed for, as to measure, manner, and time, as God in wisdom seeth good to bestow them upon us; not what, nor in what measure, or at what time we think best, but to leave all to the divine will.

6. Chiefly we should pray for spiritual things, or for supplies for our souls; this being according to that directory prayer our Lord taught his disciples. There is but one petition respecting our outward wants, "Give us this day our daily bread." Certainly it is unlawful to pray for riches, or great abundance of outward things, seeing we are bid to pray to God, to give us day by day bread to eat. Solomon's request was well pleasing to God, who asked wisdom, not riches, honours, nor the life of his enemies. As undue endeavours after riches are sinful, so to pray for them is sinful. We read of one of the wisest of men that prayed against riches. (1.) If we pray for temporal things, with preference to spirituals, or in an equal degree.

Chiefly to pray for spiritual things.

(2.) Or if we pursue them by unjust means, or in an undue manner. (3.) Or ask them, that we may consume them upon our lusts. (4.) Or seek to obtain them to the hurt of others, or in neglect of the poor, or to the prejudice of the church or kingdom. (5.) Or to lay them up, and neither be willing to give them to such that need them, or not with a resolution to part with all, when God calls us so to do; then thus to pray for outward things, or endeavour after them, is very sinful, and it argues gross ignorance of the divine being, and of what is for our good (God being a pure spirit) we must desire nothing above a likeness to him. For, (1.) That which renders us most like to God, and tends most to our happiness here, and eternally hereafter, we should always chiefly pray for, and endeavour after. (2.) That which is contrary to the divine will, or a transgression of his holy word, is sinful, and to be abominated; but to love the world, and chiefly to desire the things thereof, is contrary to the divine will, and a transgression of the holy word; therefore it is sinful and abominable. "Love not the world," &c. Such that love the world above God, are such that hate him.

When we sin in praying or endeavouring after riches.

7. We should pray to be contented with our present state, and with such things as we have, not with what we once had, or with what others have, but with what we have now, though but food and raiment, or though we want that, because God knows what is best for us, and wisely orders all things for the good of our souls.

We must pray to be contented with our present state.

8. We should pray to be delivered from all evil, all temptations; that is, that we be not brought into the way of temptation, nor fall in the hour of temptation; and that we may be enabled here to glorify God, and made meet for glory for ever hereafter.

Seventhly, I shall lay down a few arguments or motives to stir us all up to be constant and fervent in prayer.

1. Prayer is the way of our access through Christ to the Father, hereby we daily visit the blessed God, it is by prayer we have access to him; and sure if we love God, we will visit him often.

By prayer we have access to God.

2. Prayer is (saith one) the golden key of heaven, but it will never open the door without faith. It is the tree of the promises, but the fruit will not fall unless it be shaken by the hand of faith.

3. They that restrain prayer from God, are estranged from God, and at last God will be a stranger unto them, and not know them when they cry to him in their distress.

4. May be many Christians receive no more from God, because they ask no more of God. "Ye have not, because ye ask not," James iv. 2, or because they ask amiss, or not such things that are according to the will of God.

5. Consider how much it tends (as you have heard) to the glory of God. Prayer gives that glory to God which is due to his holy name.

6. It argues such are converted souls that are praying souls, or that they have divine life in them, "Behold he prays," Acts ix. 11.

7. It is also an argument, that such are in a state of health that breathe freely, in like manner it is an argument, that such have healthy souls (or are in a state of spiritual health) that pray freely, or breathe forth freely their desires unto God. Some cannot breathe without difficulty, or do fetch their breath secret; so some find it hard to keep up in a constant course of prayer, and others prayers are too short, though long prayers are not always most prevalent with God.

8. Prayer is that which God delights in, if it be the prayers of godly persons, and their voice is sweet also unto Jesus Christ. "O my love, &c., let me hear thy voice, for sweet is thy voice, and thy countenance is comely," Cant. ii. 14. Will you deny God that, and Christ that, which he is so much pleased with?

9. Prayer hath done or obtained wonderful things (as you have heard) it has defeated the council of the wicked, and it also consumed the captains and their fifties, it stopped the clouds from raining for three years and a half. It opened heaven again, and it rained. O what power hath this ordinance with God, that thus shut and opened heaven! It hath made hungry lions, as harmless as lambs, nay, made them become guardians of their intended prey; it hath opened the earth, and quenched the violence of fire, the "two witnesses," Rev. xi. 6, this way smote the earth as often as they pleased. What was the fire that went out of their mouths, but the answer of their prayers? It hath stopped the sun in its race, and the moon in the valley of Ajalon, and also caused the sun to go back, as well as not to move at all; and it also hath, and can, when joined with faith, remove mountains of difficulties. Prayer is like an amazing engine, or battering ram, that beats down towers and strong holds, and lays all even before it; it makes hell quake, haughty tyrants to fear, and devils to tremble. O be much in prayer! it hath put to flight the armies of the aliens, and cast out devils, and obtained great deliverances, having opened the prison, and caused gates of brass to give way, and let out the prisoner.

10. Prayer is an evidence of the truth of a changed heart. The Spirit of grace is a "Spirit of supplication," Zech. xii. 12; and also it is the way to have all grace, knowledge, and spiritual gifts to increase, and the word to run and to be glorified. By this means the word hath a door of utterance, and also a door of entrance into the sinner's heart, causing the soul to love the word, to believe and obey it, and to contemplate thereon, and esteem it above thousands of gold and silver.

U S E.

Therefore see you pray always, and not faint; and let such that give over praying, be ashamed; indeed we should never cease praying until we cease living, and as a man dies, or lives not when he breathes not, so he dies in his soul that prays not.

SERMON XXVII.

And shall not God avenge his own elect, which cry to him day and night? &c.—Luke xviii. 7, 8.

In these words,

1. We have an account of an act done. Avenge, &c.
2. An account of a glorious agent, viz., the great God.
3. The subject for whom this act is done, viz., his elect.
4. The motive moving God to do it for them, viz., their cries, "who cry to him day and night."
5. A confirmation, it shall be done. (1.) "I tell you," Christ says it. (2.) God's will, he will do it; it is God's purpose, his decree; he will avenge his own elect.
6. The manner how, &c., speedily, suddenly, unexpectedly, as to the time when, and manner how.

Doct. 1. God's people have adversaries that wrong them, which they cannot, must not avenge themselves upon.

Doct. II. That God will at last, though he seems long first, avenge his own elect, though when he doth it, few will believe it, or then look for it.

I shall, my brethren, speak a little to both these.

I. Show how, or wherein God's people are, and have been wronged, injured, and abused.

II. Show you after what manner God will avenge them.

III. Give you a few of the reasons why God will do it.

IV. Show when he will do it.

1. Wicked men have, and do wrong the saints and people of God in their names. O what scandalous, bitter, and reproachful words have they spoken against the saints! "As with a sword in my bones, mine enemies reproach me," Psal. xlii 10. "My soul is among lions, even among them that are set on fire, even the sons of men whose teeth are as spears, and arrows, and their tongues a sharp sword," Psal. lvii. 4.

God's elect wronged in their good name.

Few think how some words cut and wound the children of God, as a spear thrust into their heart: how did the prophet Jeremiah complain, as well as "David, their tongue is as an arrow shot out! it speaketh deceit; one speaketh peaceably with his mouth, but in his heart he lieth in wait," Jer. ix. 8. Some smite openly, and others secretly. "I am in derision daily, every one mocketh me," xx. 7. "I have heard the defaming of many: report, say they, and we will report." And this made him say "I will speak no more in the name of the Lord," verse. 10. How do reproaches weaken the hands, and afflict the heart of a faithful servant of God! It is often from open enemies, and sometimes from false brethren, and that is worst of all. Moreover, how was our Saviour himself reproached, e. i., called a gluttonous person, a wine-bibber, and a friend of Publicans and sinners (as if he encouraged them in their ways of wickedness) because he kept company with them, or allowed them to come into his presence, that he might do their souls good, and preach faith and repentance to them, who came to seek such that were lost. Paul also, and other apostles, were sorely reproached. "If a man smite you on the face," &c., 2 Cor. xi. 20, 21. "I speak as concerning reproaches; which he compares to smiting on the face.—Also when he reckons up his afflictions, mentioneth this as one; "In reproaches, in necessities," &c., 2 Cor. xii. 10. And again he saith, reproached, but yet true. Our Lord also saith, "they shall speak all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake," Matt. v. 11.

2. God's people are also wronged and injured, in respect of the holy doctrine they preach, sacred religion they profess, many censuring and condemning them, as if guilty of errors and heresy, and as factious persons. "But this I confess unto thee, that after the way which they call heresy, so worship I the God of my Fathers, believing all things which are written in Moses and the prophets," Acts xxiv. 14. Again it is said to him, we desire to hear of thee, what thinkest thou of this sect, we know that everywhere it is spoken against," Acts xxviii. 22. It is no new thing for God's people to be called sectarians and such that love singularity; the primitive Christians were separates, i. e., they separated from the Jewish worship, and from the idolatries of the Gentiles; and from hence were vilified and censured as a bad and odious sort of people.

God's people wronged in the doctrine they preach, rendered heretics.

3. Their sincerity was also questioned, and they censured as deceivers and hypocrites. Thus was holy Job charged, and not by his enemies only, but by his friends also; our Saviour was called a deceiver; "We remember the deceiver said," &c. Matt. xxvii. 63. "Thou art a Samaritan, and hast a devil," John viii. 48, 52. Again they said, we know that thou hast a devil. Again "thou hast a devil, and deceivest the people." Hard words! and as our Saviour was called a deceiver, so was his servant Paul, "as deceivers, yet true," &c., Cor. vi. 8. What could they say that was worse, or more hard to bear?

God's people called hypocrites and deceivers.

4. God's people were, and still are wronged, in respect of their liberties, and just rights, as men, and as Christians, as it was some years since here, and is now in France, and othes places, contrary to the laws of God, nature and nations.

Wronged in their liberty and just rights.

5. They have been, and still are wronged by cruel threatenings, "Behold, Lord, their threatenings," &c. Rev. xiii. 6. How do the wicked belch out oaths, and blaspheme against all that dwell in heaven, or in the church of God!

6. Nay, how often have God's elect, and dear children, been wronged by persecution, spoiling their goods, gnashing at them with their teeth, yea, biting and tearing them to pieces, casting into loathsome prisons and dunghills, thinking no death bad enough for them! How have thousands been barbarously murdered, by hanging them, burning them alive, roasting them alive, pulling or flaying off their skins alive, boring out their eyes, drawing them to pieces with horses, and all other inhuman and cruel deaths which man devils could invent! These have been some of those sorrows, wrongs, and injuries which God's elect have met with from their enemies, besides, thousands have suffered in bloody massacres. thirty thousand at one time, and more than two hundred thousand at another, but about sixty years since by bloody papists, and not far from us, even in Ireland, and our own poor Protestant Country, both men, women, and children.

God's elect wronged by bloody persecutors.

II. I shall show you how, or after what manner God will avenge his own elect, for all the wrongs they have suffered.

I. By famine, sword, and pestilence. It is true, the sin-revenging God hath this way already poured out his wrath upon his peoples' enemies, as also by sudden and fearful deaths upon many of their bloody persecutors, as approved histories show, but those forementioned judgments will, in these latter days, be more dreadful than any, (except the amazing wrath and vengeance of God, that was poured out upon the Jews, to the utter desolation of the city, of Jerusalem and their temple, to avenge the wrongs done to our blessed Lord, his apostles, and dear children, for wrath came upon them to the uttermost). But this way, that is, by the sword and famine, and by the pestilence, will God destroy Babylon, and contend with all the enemies of his church and people. "Therefore her plagues shall come upon her in one day," (that is, in one year) "death, mourning, and famine, and she shall be utterly burnt with fire; for strong is the Lord God that judgeth her."

2. As leading to this, God will send dreadful earthquakes, thunder, lightning, and great hail, such that never was seen or known before, which may be daily expected to come to pass, from the God of vengeance, as a just recompence upon his peoples' enemies, or to avenge his own elect, that cry unto him.

3. God will avenge them, by setting their enemies one against another; he will take peace from the earth, and fill the wicked with rage and fury; so that they shall kill one another, as they have part already done. And power was given to him that sits thereon, to take peace from the earth, and that they should kill one another; and there was given to him a great sword. God will set ruler against ruler in Babylon. "My people, go out of the midst of her, and every man delivered his own soul from the fierce anger of the Lord; lest your hearts faint, and ye fear, for the rumour that shall be heard in the land: a rumour shall come in one year, and after that in another year shall come a rumour and violence in the land, ruler against ruler.—For nation shall rise up against nation, and kingdom against kingdom, and there shall be famine and pestilence, and earthquakes in divers places," Matt. xxiv. 7. May be this prophecy is begun; O look up! the days of vengeance draw near. "Blood e'er long shall come out of the winepress, up to the horses bridles, for the space of a thousand and six hundred furlongs."

4. God will avenge his own elect upon the tenth part of the city, or mystical Babylon, by a mighty and terrible, mystical earthquake, which will make the hearts of the enemy in that street of the great city to tremble, and there shall be slain of the names of men seven thousand, "and the remnant will be affrighted, and give glory to the God of heaven," Rev. xi. 13. And so the second woe will pass away, seven is a number of perfection; it is a certain number put for an uncertain.

5. God will put it into the hearts of the ten kings (or some of them) to hate the whore, "and to make her desolate and naked, and they shall eat her flesh, and burn her with fire," Rev. xvii. 16. They will be kings of those kingdoms that formerly gave their power to the beast, or owned the pope, and popish church; but the Lamb by his word, or sword, that goes out of his overcome them, and God's own people also shall join with them (or with some of them) and they shall be God's battle-axe, by whom he will cut down their enemies. "Come out of her my people," &c. "Reward her even as she rewarded you, and double unto her double, according to her works, in the cup which she hath filled to you, fill to her double," Rev. xviii. 4. They will be some, or all of the Protestant princes, and the saints in conjunction with them, by whom God will avenge himself and his people, on his and their adversaries.

6. In a word, God will also, in a way perhaps which we know not of, by his more immediate hand, break forth in dreadful wrath upon the enemies, and make an utter end of all the persecutors of his church and people; he will arise and devour them. "I have for a long time holden my peace, I have been still, and have refrained myself; now I will cry like a travailing woman, I will destroy and devour at once," Isa. xlii. 14. O how dreadful will that God appear,

How and after what manner God will avenge his people on their enemies.

God will take vengeance of his churches enemies, by thunder, and lightnings, and earthquakes.

A mystical earthquake upon the church's enemies.

mouth, shall The saints shall be instruments in it.

God will come forth clothed with vengeance.

when he comes forth clothed with wrath and vengeance! "He will put on righteousness as a breast-plate, and an helmet of salvation upon his head, and he put the garment of vengeance for clothing, and was clad with zeal as a cloak," Isa. lix. 17. What a man of war is the Lord! and how terrible will our God appear, when he comes forth in fury, thus armed! "The Lord will rise up, as in mount Perizim; he will be wroth, as in the valley of Gideon, that he may do his work, his strange work, and bring to pass his act, his strange act," Isa. xxviii. 21. The land shall be soaked with blood—"For it is the day of the Lord's vengeance, and the year of recompence for the controversy of Sion," Isa. xxxiv. 7, 8. And hence it is said, "He will roar out of Sion," Joel iii. 16. Little do the tyrants of the earth know what days of vengeance upon them are near, neither how they will "come on princes as on mortar, and as he that treads the clay," &c.

III. Why will God avenge his own elect, or execute vengeance upon their enemies?

Ans. 1. Because his people's enemies are guilty of blood. Shall murderers escape the just vengeance of God? nay, they have murdered the saints, the best of men; yea, they have murdered thousands, if not millions. What murderers are they who have shed the "blood of the saints, and the blood of the martyrs of Jesus!" The sentence of the moral law is, the murderer shall die. "He that sheds man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed," Gen. ix. 6. Sometimes murderers escape long, so have these, but they shall be taken at last, and with vengeance die. O it is a righteous thing with God, to avenge the wrongs of his people! "He will give them blood to drink, because they are worthy."

Why God will avenge his own elect.

2. Because vengeance belongs to the Lord, it is his right to execute it. "Vengeance is mine, saith the Lord," Rom. xii. 19. "To me belongs vengeance," Deut. xxxii. 35.—"O Lord God, to whom vengeance belongs, show thyself," Psal. xciv. 1. (God's people are not to avenge themselves; and when he makes use of them as instruments, or as an axe in his hand, it is he that is the Agent, it is God that takes vengeance, let whosoever be the instruments.)

Vengeance belongs to God alone.

3. God will avenge his people upon their adversaries, to make good his promises unto them, and his threatenings denounced against their enemies. "I will bear the indignation of the Lord," &c., until he plead my cause, and execute judgment for me," Mich. vii. 9. "Now shall she be trodden down, as the mire in the streets," verse 10. How many times hath the Lord said, he will execute his wrath, and pour out his wrath on Sion's enemies! "Thy nakedness shall be discovered (speaking of Babylon) thy shame shall be seen, I will take vengeance, and will not meet thee as a man; no, but as a terrible God," Isa. xlvi. 3. "Be strong, fear not, behold your God will come, even God with a recompence, he will come and save you," Isa. xxxv.

God will avenge his elect, to perform his word.

4. These words refer to the time of the church's deliverance, and the setting up his kingdom. "When sorrow and sighing shall fly away," verse 10. "The Lord will take vengeance on his adversaries, and he reserveth wrath for his enemies," Nah. i. 2.

4. Because they are so near and dear to the blessed God; and besides, it is for his own holy Name-sake that they suffer, and have always been exposed to the rage of their enemies. How doth it grieve a tender father, to see his dear children torn into pieces, and burned alive before his eyes! and much more the compassionate and tender husband is afflicted, and in bitterness of soul, to see his beloved wife abused and mangled in a most barbarous and inhuman manner, whilst he looks on. And how would such a father or husband avenge the blood of such relations (were it in their power) on such murderers! Now the love and bowels of our heavenly Father far exceed the love and pity of any earthly father to his children, and so doth the love and compassion of Jesus Christ to his church, which is his spouse, and endeared wife, for whom also he poured forth his own blood. O Sirs, from hence be sure he will not spare her bloody enemies, in the day of his wrath! especially considering it was alone, for his sake, they have suffered all those lamentable sorrows and miseries.

God will avenge his elect, because they are so near and dear to him.

5. God will avenge his own elect, to convince the world how grievous to him it hath been, to behold all that violence and cruelty wicked men have done unto his own people, and to discover their horrid murders, and to convince them of the detestable sin of persecution, tyranny, and oppression, and likewise to clear the innocency of his people. "Behold the Lord comes to execute judgment upon all, and convince all that are ungodly among them, of all their ungodly deeds, and hard speeches, which ungodly sinners have spoken against him."

6. God will do it, because it is the vengeance of his temple. "Her foundations are fallen, her walls are thrown down, for it is the vengeance of the Lord," Jer. l. 15. "Declare in Sion the vengeance of the Lord God, the vengeance of his temple," verse 28. Moreover, because it is the time of the Lord's vengeance. "These are the day of vengeance," Luke xxi. 22. As there are days of mercy, so the days of vengeance will come, when mercy will be turned into fury.

God will avenge his people because the wicked's day must end, and the
must begin.

7. Because the harvest of the wicked will be then fully ripe for cutting down, and the time when the wicked shall be utterly cut off, and rooted out of the earth; they shall have their time, the full time that is set for them: but when the last period is expired of their time, and the "set time also is come for God to favour Sion," and to give his people the kingdom, then with vengeance the other shall fall, that God may exalt the other.

Because of

Lastly, God will avenge his own elect, because they cry to him both day and night. This is one reason and argument which our Saviour gives, why God will do it, as it is expressed in this parable. Shall not the prayers of the Lord's people be answered? Will he never remember their sighs and cries? See what he himself saith, "For the oppression of the poor, for the sighing of the needy, now will I arise, saith the Lord, I will set him in safety from him that puffeth at him." Psal. xii. 5. What a multitude of prayers are there on the file in heaven, that shall all be answered in God's own time, put up to him by his people in every age; and besides, the cry of the blood of the slain saints, nay, their souls are said to cry to God. "I saw under the altar the souls of them that were slain for the word of God, and for the testimony which they held.—And they cried with a loud voice, saying, How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth!" Rev. vi. 9, 10. This is one, and not the least reason neither, why God will avenge his own elect; their prayers and cries shall be answered, though God seems to tarry long.

IV. When will God avenge his own elect on their enemies?

When God
his people.

Answ. 1. When the beast's forty-two months are fully expired, so long God hath determined the wicked shall have; Antichrist must have his full time to reign, but when those long months are ended, and the saints' 1260 days or years of suffering, and the whole time of their distress is run out, then the days of vengeance will begin. In a word, when the "second woe is passed away, and the seventh angel begins to sound his trumpet," then the enemy shall fall, and the "kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdoms of our Lord and his Christ," Rev. xi. 14, 15, 16. Which I, with many other servants of God, believe will suddenly be accomplished.

2. When the sins of his enemies are full. When the sins of the Amorites were full, God drove them out, and gave Israel the land of Canaan, Gen. xv. 16: so the enemies of Sion must fill up the measure of their sins, and the saints also must fill up the measure of their sufferings which are behind; and when both these are done, God will destroy the one, and deliver the other.

3. When Babylon is in great expectation of recovering her lost children, or some that fell off from her, and she begins to say, I sit a queen, and shall see no sorrow, then the time comes, "How much she glorified herself, and lived deliciously, so much torment and sorrow give her; for she saith in her heart, I sit a queen and am no widow, and shall see no sorrow; then her plagues shall come in one day," Rev. xviii. 7, Isa. xlvii. 8. The enemy shall seem very secure, just when her ruin comes. Thus was Nebuchadnezzar and Belsazzar his son, when judgments came upon them, Dan. v. 21, 22, 23.

4. A little before that very time that God riseth up to execute his judgments on his enemies, he will assemble the nations, or stir them up one against another in war, so that they shall strangely weaken one another, and waste their people and treasure. "Therefore wait upon me, saith the Lord, until the day that I rise up to the prey; for my determination is to gather the nations, and that I may assemble the kingdoms, to pour upon them mine indignation, even all my fierce wrath; for all the earth shall be devoured with the fire of my jealousy," Zeph. iii. 8. Well, and then what will follow? Mark the next words, "For then will I turn to the people a pure language, that they may all call upon the name of the Lord, to serve him with one consent." Then no more distinction of names, Presbyterians, Independents, Baptists, &c. No, all shall become one church; perhaps this may be effected at the ascension of the witnesses, Rev. xi. 11.

5. When the people of God, or the virgins seem to be all asleep, or secure, and yet by some sudden and amazing Providence are awakened, to put up a mighty cry to God, then will the time come; look not for it until you see a mighty spirit of prayer poured out upon the people of God, or many of them. Yet,

Lastly, By what our Saviour here saith, just when God begins to avenge his people upon their enemies, they will be very low in their faith and expectation, as to the time of their deliverance. "Shall the Son of Man when he comes, find faith on the earth?" They will not believe it will be then.

APPLICATION.

1. Let none despair of God's mercy touching his people's deliverance, it will come, the vision will speak; though it tarry, yet wait for it.

2. We infer, that God hath not forgotten his poor people; it is for wise ends he seems to delay his coming to avenge them on their enemies.

3. From the whole, let us all be put upon most fervent prayer, yea, pray and not faint; and also exercise faith in our prayers, touching the church's deliverance, and the utter ruin of her enemies.

4. By what hath been said we may also infer, that there is much reason for us to believe the days of vengeance are very near.

5. Let all that be yet in Babylon haste out speedily, and every one deliver his own soul.

THE

OF THE

KING WHO TOOK ACCOUNT OF HIS SERVANTS.

SERMON XXVIII.

Therefore is the kingdom of heaven likened to a certain king, who would take account of his servants. And when he had begun to reckon, one was brought unto him who owed him ten thousand talents: But forasmuch as he had not to pay, his lord commanded him to be sold, and his wife and children, and all that he had, and payment to be made. The servant therefore fell down, and worshipped him, saying, lord have patience with me and I will pay thee all. Then the lord of that servant was moved with compassion, and loosed him, and forgave him the debt. But the same servant went out, and found one of his fellow-servants, who owed him an hundred pence; and he laid his hands upon him, and took him by the throat, saying, pay me that thou owest; and his fellow-servant fell down at his feet," &c.—Matt. xviii. 23—35.

THE main scope and proposition of truth, which our Saviour designs in this parable (as our annotators do observe) is to press all men (especially his disciples) to forgive one another all wrongs and injuries done to them, upon the person offending's repentance, The scope. and acknowledgement of his faults; and this most evidently appears from the coherence, or what precedeth before, where our Lord answers a question put forth by Peter, "Lord, how often shall my brother sin against me, and I forgive him, till seven times?" ver. 21. "Jesus saith unto him, I say not unto thee, until seven times; but, until seventy times seven," or as often as he sinneth against thee, and saith, he acknowledgeth his sorrow, and unfeignedly repenteth. This, I conceive our Saviour intendeth; for by a certain and definite number, an uncertain and indefinite number is meant.

2. Our Saviour's design also hereby is to show, what a vast debt sin is, or the greatness of the evil which is in sin, and likewise the great difference or disparity there is between sin, or offences, as against God; and those offences that are committed against our fellow-creature, as so considered; for and such that

The great difference between sins as against God,

the one is set out by ten thousand talents, the other by an hundred pence; the first (as our annotators say) amounts to one million eight hundred and seventy five thousand pounds, a very great sum; yet less than this may no unforgiven sinner be said to be indebted to the justice of God. O what have sinners done, and in what a poor, miserable, and wretched state are all men naturally? Owing so much, and not having one farthing to pay. What is any debt owing to us, compared to this? It is said to be a hundred pence, a very small matter.

3. It is to let us know the infinite and boundless love, grace, and mercy of God to true penitent believers, and the horrid cruelty of unmerciful men to their fellow-creatures.

4. To show that such men (let them be who they will) that will not forgive their brother all trespasses against them (upon their repentance and due acknowledgement of their faults) God will never forgive them. And if some to whom mercy and pardon in Christ is freely offered, and they seem to accept thereof, do afterwards, nevertheless, show a cruel and unmerciful heart, God will cast them into hell; and such a wicked and merciless spirit demonstrates that they never were forgiven. But as many parables run not on all-four, so neither doth this; for evident it is, that all such whom God, through the satisfaction of Christ, forgives ten thousand talents (or let their sins be more or less,) he forgives them all the debt for ever. God never revokes or makes void his free and absolute pardons, but forgives all their sins, and will remember them no more.

These things contain the main scope and design of this parable; yet it should be well observed (as one well notes) that all the actions of the king mentioned therein, do not correspond or agree with the actings of God towards sinners. But the inference our Saviour draws, ver. 35, or that improvement he makes of it, shows the chief design or purpose of it, viz., "so likewise shall my heavenly Father do also unto you, if you from your hearts forgive not every one his brother, their trespasses."

opened. Yet I shall speak a little more distinctly to it, and endeavour (God assisting,) to open the parts thereof.

"Therefore is the kingdom of heaven likened unto," &c., ver. 23.

By the kingdom of heaven here, I understand is meant the administration of the kingdom of grace, or God's merciful dispensations and dealings with the children of men, through his Son, our Lord Jesus Christ; particularly in respect to pardon of sin. And as this is evident from the scope hereof, so with this sense our annotators and other expositors do agree.

See Pool and

bles Annota.

"Likened unto a certain king, who would take account of his servants."

Diodate and Mariorate on Matthew, &c.

Thus far it holds parallel with the great God, who doth, and will take account of all his servants, or of all the children of men; and as the parable of the talents calls them all his servants; so doth this likewise, though some men are slothful, wicked, and unmerciful servants. God, my brethren, is Lord of and over all men; and all owe to him all they are, and are able to do, to the glory of his holy name.

God will take an account of all sinners.

"And when he had begun to reckon, one was brought unto him who owed him ten thousand talents," ver. 24.

"Brought unto him." He came not, it appears, of his own free choice, to beg or entreat his lord to forgive his vast debt, or to have a little patience towards him; but he was forced to come, or was brought unto him. If we may infer anything from hence, to our spiritual instruction, it may be this, which holds with the analogy of faith, viz., that the conscience of a sinner may be awakened, and may, as it were, force a man to come or draw near to God, and to hear the word, or to pray and confess his grievous crimes, or that vast sum he owes to the justice and holiness of God, in violating the law.

"But forasmuch as he had not to pay, his lord commanded him to be sold, and his wife and children, and all he had, and payment to be made," ver. 25.

Cruel laws
debtors.

The laws of some nations we read were such, that he that was run a vast deal into debt, and had nothing to pay; was himself, his wife, and children to be sold; nay it was a law in Israel, to sell the poor debtor. "Or which of my creditors is it to whom I have sold you?" Isa. l. 1. Hence the poor widow told the prophet Elisha, "Thy servant, my husband, is dead, and thou knowest thy servant, my husband, did fear the Lord, and the creditor is come to take unto him my two sons for bondmen," 2 Kings iv. 1.

Exod. xxi. 2.

But, my brethren, in this the parable holds no parallel; for God deals not thus with any poor sinner, he neither sells any (to satisfy his law and justice) for bondmen, nor doth he exact payment or satisfaction to his justice of us, because nothing but an infinite sum can satisfy divine justice; therefore none but Jesus Christ could do this, and by his doing and suffering is full satisfaction made, who was God as well as man. Note this, that no unjust nor cruel actions of men, mentioned in any parable, can be applied to the holy God, nor is commended by Jesus Christ. Therefore in the parable of the unjust steward, our Lord only commended his wisdom in providing for himself for the future time, but not his unjust way in doing it.

“The servant therefore fell down and worshipped him, saying, lord, have patience with me, and I will pay thee all,” ver. 26.

The Lord Jesus by these words may show, that sinners, who are abominably guilty before God, when under convictions, should fall down at his feet, and entreat for pardon. But what this debtor said is not the voice of a true penitent sinner; for such beg not for time, nor entreat God to bear patiently a little longer, till he can pay him all; nor do true penitent sinners make any such promise, because they know they are not able, nor ever shall, to make satisfaction for the evil that is in the least sin, much less to pay ten thousand talents; therefore on this foot neither doth this parable run.

“And then the lord of that servant was moved with compassion, and loosed him, and forgave him the debt,” ver. 27.

We may infer from hence, that some men who are creditors, and have a vast sum owing them, do not always exercise severe justice, but are inclined to mercy, and forgive very great debts. Moreover, this may teach all Christ's disciples to forgive their brethren, and all men their trespasses, wrongs, and injuries done unto them whatsoever, even a sum or sums of money, when their debtors are poor, and have nothing to pay, and humbly submit themselves, and entreat for mercy; and if they do not thus, they must expect no mercy from the hands of God. And also we are hereby taught to do thus, our Lord intimating, that though sin (as it is against God) is a vast and wonderful debt; yet he, when a poor sinner comes to him (in and through Christ) and pleads for mercy, God freely forgives him all, without any satisfaction made by the poor sinner; nor doth God regard any promises a sinner may make, knowing how unable he is to satisfy his justice, or answer the demands of the law.

Men ought to forgive the debtors who are poor having nothing to pay.

“And the same servant went out, and found his fellow-servant who owed him a hundred pence, and laid his hands upon him, took him by the throat, saying, pay me that thou owest,” Ver. 28.

“And his fellow-servant fell down at his feet, and besought him, saying, have patience with me, and I will pay thee all,” Ver. 29.

“And he would not, but went and cast him into prison, till he should pay the debt,” Ver. 30.

This may denote two things.

1. That some persons to whom a man (who is their creditor) forgives a vast debt, through his compassion, will themselves show no mercy to others; though they are forgiven much, yet they will forgive nothing, no not a few pence that are owing them; by reason of which, the creditor makes void the pardon given to them.

A disparity.

2. But though it is sometimes thus among men, yet God, as I hinted, never revokes any pardon he hath given to any believer; God's free and absolute pardon is not revoked by the giver, nor forfeited by the receiver. Therefore this, some think, refers to a church pardon, I mean, when a man for some great offence is brought under a church censure, or is cast out, yet he acknowledging his sin, and manifesting repentance, the church forgives him, but soon after he falling upon his poor brother, in an unmerciful manner, the church revokes that forgiveness, and casts him out again, and he being never humbled (but showing he is a cruel and wicked man) is never received any more, but perishes eternally.

Object. “But this cannot be a church-forgiveness, because it is said, the Lord forgave him,” Ver. 27.

Ans. Such as the church forgives, God forgives. “Whomsoever ye bind on earth, are bound in heaven, and whomsoever ye loose on earth, are loosed in heaven,” Matt. xviii. 18; as a little before in the same chapter, our Saviour expressly saith. And though penitents after excommunication the Lord forgives, and the church forgives or absolves, so as to grant admission; yet all stubborn and impenitent sinners God binds the censure of the church upon, and therefore (as our annotators note) this is a terrible text to those that are justly and daily cut off from the communion of the church, for notorious and scandalous sins, and who persist in their wickedness.

But according to others, it may refer to a great sinner that concludes, or thinks that he is forgiven, yea, boasts that God hath pardoned all his abominable sins; but he showing (soon after) a vile heart, or a cruel and merciless spirit, God convinceth him, or declares he was never forgiven. "I forgave all that debt;" or did I not offer thee a free pardon, which thou didst seem to accept? But thou clearly showest, by thy cruel actings towards thy fellow-servant, that indeed thou wast never forgiven, but hast deceived thyself.

But I rather conclude the acting of this lord as a creditor to his servant (who was absolutely forgiven, but would not forgive his fellow-servant) cannot refer to God, but is mentioned by our Saviour to aggravate the great evil of a person that will not forgive his brother, who hath trespassed against him. Though, as all expositors agree, it may show the vastness of that debt sinners are indebted unto God.

My brethren, all persons who receive never so great favours from God, or forgiveness from his people, if they retain a wicked and an unforgiving spirit, it will move the Lord to anger, and bring eternal ruin upon their souls.

"O thou wicked servant, I forgave thee all the debt, &c., shouldest not thou also have had compassion on thy fellow-servant, even as I had of thee? And his Lord was wroth, and delivered him to the tormentors, until he should pay all that was due," Ver. 32, 34.

He that cannot, will not forgive, shall never be forgiven. "He shall have judgment without mercy, that showeth no mercy," James ii. 18. Such shall be judged according to the rigour of the law, by pure justice, and shall have judgment without the least mixture of mercy.

"Until he shall pay the whole debt."

The papists plead for their purgatory from hence. "He must pay all, but say they neither in this life, nor in hell, therefore in purgatory." O foolish assertion, and as blind a conclusion! Why not in hell? for by temporal punishment inflicted upon a cruel and merciless person, our Lord, no doubt, intimates, that all who do not forgive their brethren or neighbours, shall be cast into hell, "Until thou have paid the uttermost farthing;" that is, they must suffer eternally. For can a finite creature (by suffering) satisfy infinite justice? There is no purgation but by Christ's blood, nor any place of torment after death

Chrysostom. but hell; therefore as one of the ancient fathers (on this place) saith, "He gave the man to the tormentors until he paid the whole debt; that is, he gave him to perpetual punishment, for he shall never come out from thence again. For thus will the holy and just God deal with all, "Who from their hearts forgive not every one his brother their trespasses."

See what proportions our late annotators have noted from hence. This excellent parable (say they) instructeth us in these truths.

Annotat. 1. That as men by the law of nature, law of God, and laws of men, may be debtors to us, to our reputation, or to our estates; so are we debtors to the glory, honour, and justice of God.

2. That it is a vast debt we owe to God's honour and justice, to which no debt owing to us can bear any proportion.

3. That we have nothing to pay to God, in satisfaction for our debt.

4. That God hath a right to demand a full satisfaction for our debts.

5. That God for Christ's sake, upon our applications to him for mercy, will forgive us our debts.

6. That we are not so ready to forgive our brethren their little injuries they do us, as God is to forgive us.

7. That we ought to set before us God's compassion towards us, and free love in forgiving us, potently to move us to forgive those who have done us injuries, and to forgive them out of that consideration.

8. That we ought from our hearts to forgive men their trespasses; that is, so as not to hate them, bear any grudge or malice, or seek any private revenge upon them, nor public satisfaction beyond what they are able to give, but be ready to do them all common offices of kindness in their straits that are in our power.

9. That the not doing of this will be an evidence to our souls, that God hath not indeed forgiven us, as well as a bar against such forgiveness, or an ill omen of punishment in this life; or if not here, yet in the life to come. To this purpose our annotators speak. I shall note, and speak briefly unto three or four propositions from hence.

Doct. I. That sin is a debt, a vast debt, or that there is much, yea, great, exceeding great evil in sin, considered as a debt.

Doct. II. That sinners are debtors, and have nothing to pay, and therefore are forgiven freely, as an act of God's mercy, all their debts without any satisfaction made by them.

Doct. III. That God doth and will call sinners who are debtors to him, to an account, be they willing or no.

Doct. IV. That a pardoned person, or one that God hath forgiven, does forgive from his heart all those that have injured him; and they that do not so are not, nor shall be ever forgiven.

I shall begin with the first of these.

I. Show why sins are called debts.

II. What a great debt sin is.

III. Apply it.

I. Sin is a debt, &c. Sins and debts, my brethren, are used promiscuously, in Luke called trespasses, in Matthew called debts, "Forgive us our debts," &c.

And the reason is, not because in sin there is an obliquity and dissonancy from the law. For this is not called a debt, but obedience to the law, or holiness that we owe to God; and for non-payment of this debt, we are grand debtors to him. In sin also is guilt, i. e., an obligation unto punishment; and this is called a debt, a full payment of which we are not able to make. But because this is opened in the exposition of another parable, I shall say no more to the first thing proposed.

II. I shall show you that sin is a vast debt, or that there is great, exceeding great evil in sin, as it is considered a debt.

1st. Sin is a vast debt in respect of the quantity of it; it is ten thousand talents. Is not one million eight hundred seventy-five thousand pounds a vast debt? so much every sinner is indebted to God. Sin is compared to a debt, consisting of such a great sum; but indeed every sin a sinner is guilty of, is more than a talent; and his sins (as to their number) as "David says, are more than the hairs of our head," Psal. xl. 12.

2ndly. Sin is a great debt, in respect to the quality of it. Should a man steal the king's crown, and all his jewels, and lose them, and not be able to restore them, what a guilty wretch would he be? What would be the nature, the quality, as well as the quantity of such a debt? Or what would an offender be indebted to the king? Why, sirs, every sinner hath robbed God of his glory, his crown (as I may say) and his choice jewels, nay, hath spoiled and marred his glorious image, and can never make restitution to God of what he hath stolen or robbed him of.

1. Sin is a vast debt, or an exceeding great evil in respect of God, against whom it is committed.

Sin is in this respect an infinite sum, or an infinite evil. "Is not thy wickedness great, and thine iniquity infinite?" Job. xxii. 5.

(1.) Sin (saith Mr. Caryl) is not infinite properly, yet in a vulgar sense it may be called infinite; we call that infinite which is very great, or which exceeds all ordinary bounds, though not all bounds; for that only is properly infinite that exceeds all bounds; some sinners exceed those bounds that others are kept in.

(2.) Saith he, sin hath an infiniteness in it, in reference to the object, viz., the holy God; and so not only a great sin, but small sins, or any sin may be said to be infinite, because it is committed against an infinite God.

(3.) He shows also, sins may be said to be infinite in respect to the number of them, there is an arithmetical as well as a geometrical infiniteness in sin. Thus the septuagint render the text, "are not thine iniquities innumerable?"

(4.) He adds, iniquities may be said to be infinite, or in reference to the will or spirit of him that commits those iniquities; those sins are without bounds to which man would never set a bound, &c.

2. I may add, sin may be said to be infinite, because of the desert of sin, it deserves infinite wrath; (1.) As one notes, the desert of sin is the loss of infinite good, even God, and all the good that is in God. (2.) Sin hath made an infinite breach between God and the sinner; it puts the sinner at an infinite distance from God, and procures infinite torment.

3. Sin may be said to be infinite, because it requires an infinite price to make an atonement; none but Christ, God-man, and so an infinite person, or the most high God, could satisfy for the wrong sin had done to the Majesty of heaven.

4. Sin may be said to be infinite, because nothing but infinite power can overcome it; none but God the Spirit, which is God, can subdue it. The power of sin is not subdued without infinite power: it cannot be destroyed, or the evil root spoiled, unless infinite grace and infinite power be exerted.

See the parable of the two debtors in the supplement.

Sin is a vast debt, in respect of the quantity of it.

In respect to the quality of it.

In reference to the object against whom it is committed.

Sin infinite in respect of the will of the sinner. Burroughs.

An infinite price must atone for sin.

Infinite power must subdue sin.

We cannot hate sin enough.

5. Because it requires unmeasurable hatred : if it were possible we should hate sin with an infinite hatred ; we can never hate it enough.

Jer. Burrough's evil of sin, p. 353.

6. Sin may be said to be infinite, because it is the universal cause of all evil, as God appears to be an infinite good, because he is the universal cause of all good. And as all good flows from God, so all evil flows from sin : yet my author should have showed, that there is a grand disparity in respect of these two causes, because the one is the effect or product of a mere degenerate creature, i. e., either the devil or sinful man, and the other of an infinite God. But put all these together, and then you will say that sin is a vast debt, or an exceeding great evil, as a debt.

4thly. Sin is a great debt, because all men, yea, all the saints on earth, nor angels of heaven can pay this debt, or satisfy the justice of God for one sin, the smallest sin a sinner committeth against God ; no, none can do it but Jesus Christ alone.

5thly. Sin is a vast debt, because it exposeth the sinner to eternal wrath and vengeance ; it provokes a holy God, and merciful God, to throw the impenitent and unbelieving sinner into hell, to endure intolerable torment, and misery for evermore. That debt, which if not paid, exposeth a man to be burned alive, to be consumed to ashes, all would say was a dreadful debt : but what is such a temporal death (though the worst that men can invent or inflict) to the second death, or to lie in the lake of fire and brimstone to all eternity ?

Sinners in hell cannot satisfy God's justice, nor pay this debt.

6thly. That which can never be paid by a sinner's sufferings in hell to all eternity, is a great debt : but no sinner can pay this debt, or satisfy God's justice in lying to an endless eternity in hell-fire ; therefore it is a vast and great debt the damned in hell are always paying, but can never pay ; for if they could, there would be an end of their misery, and a redemption out of hell : but the " smoke of their torment shall ascend up for ever and ever."

They must lie there until the debt be paid, even the last farthing, but that can never be done by the sufferings of mere finite creatures.

U S E.

1. We infer, that Satan hath strangely deceived and beguiled poor sinners, in persuading them sin is a small thing : what do you think of such fools who make a mock of sin ? that sin, and say, are we not in sport ?

2. We may infer, that all unconverted or unbelieving sinners are very poor, though they are externally rich : yet if ungodly, though they are kings, they are very poor, even owe to God's justice ten thousand talents, and have not one penny to pay.

3. Moreover, I infer, that a dismal thing is it, to see men so poor and miserable already, yet run every day more and more in debt, and bring still fresh guilt upon their own precious and immortal souls.

4. Also, O what grace, what mercy, and love hath God showed to us, to find out a way, by a person rich and able, to pay all this vast debt, and who hath indeed paid it, and for ever satisfied the law and justice of God for our sins, for all the sins of his elect, or all that believe in Jesus Christ ; they are for ever discharged from this vast debt, they are freed from hell and wrath, " and shall not come into condemnation," John v. 24. " There is therefore now no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus," Rom. viii. 1.

5. We also infer, that their state is dismal, who cannot, will not forgive others ; for God will not forgive them this debt, but they must go to prison, and lie in hell for ever : and the state of all others is dreadful also, who continue in sin, and do not believe on Christ. " He that believeth not shall be damned," John iii. 36 ; Mark xvi. 17.

6. I infer, Jesus Christ, is wonderfully rich, who hath paid so vast a debt, seeing every sinner that is pardoned owed ten thousand talents ; and O how many thousands hath he pardoned, having paid all their debts ! stand and wonder !

Comfort. But O what comfort and consolation is here for believers ! you are forgiven, all this debt is blotted out, you are pardoned through Jesus Christ, and for ever pardoned ; therefore you may sing and triumph in God's boundless grace for ever.

But to proceed.

Doct. II. That sinners are debtors, and have nothing to pay; and therefore such that are forgiven are forgiven freely, as an act of God's grace and mercy, without any satisfaction made by them to the justice of God.

In speaking to this proposition, I shall,

I. Show how it appears that sinners are debtors, or greatly in debt.

II. Show what kind of debtors sinners are.

III. Show how they that believe, can be said to be forgiven freely in a way of grace, and yet Jesus Christ hath paid all their debts.

IV. Apply it.

I. A man may be a debtor many ways.

1. By owing of money; so sinners are debtors unto God, by owing him perfect obedience to his righteous law. This is meant by money; "without money," that is, without righteousness, Isa. lv. 1.

How it appears that sinners are debtors.

2. A man may be a debtor, as he is a trespasser, and offender, or a guilty person, and under obligation to punishment. In this sense also sinners are debtors unto God, for they are trespassers, offenders, and guilty persons, having broke God's law, the penalty of which is eternal death. He is a law debtor, a criminal, and is under an obligation to everlasting punishment: so that no traitor or flagitious person is more obnoxious to temporal death than every unconverted sinner is obnoxious to eternal wrath, and divine vengeance.

Man a debtor in a law-sense, or a criminal.

3. A man may be a debtor by robbery, by stealing a man's goods, or robbing him of his good name. Adam rendered God not to be believed through Satan's subtily; and thus sinners are become debtors also.

4. A man may be a debtor by violating a covenant, or by wasting his master's goods; sinners are debtors to God this way also, they have broke the covenant of their creation, and have wasted their Lord's goods, Gal. v. 3; Matt. xxv. 26, 27.

5. A man may be a debtor, by receiving kindnesses; he owes the debt of gratitude and thankfulness: and O what great debtors are sinners this way to God, and how few, pay the thousandth part of this debt and tribute of praise which is due to him for all his mercies and favours received?

II. But to proceed to show, what kind of debtors sinners are to God.

1 Sinners are ill debtors, they are not willing to be called to an account, nothing is worse to them than to hear the tidings, "give an account of your stewardship," &c. Hence it is said in this parable, "One was brought before his Lord, that owed him ten thousand talents." Hence the words intimate, as if he was forced or hauled before his Lord to reckon with him: why so sinners love not to think to be brought to the bar of God, they when awakened, trembled to think what large bills, and hand-writings will be brought against them, to hear of all the oaths they have sworn, and lies they have told, and how many times they have been drunk, and of the thefts and cheats they are guilty of, and the whoredoms they have in secret committed. and of the wrongs by a detracting and back-biting tongue, they have done to their brother or neighbour, and of the means of grace they have slighted and neglected; yea, to answer for all the evils they are guilty of. "They shall be brought forth in the day of wrath," Job xxi. 30. They will not come willingly, but they shall be haled before the Judge of heaven and earth.

A debtor is unwilling to come to give up his account.

2. Ill debtors are commonly attended with shame. Ambrose speaketh of some, who for shame and distress made themselves away, fearing more opprobrium vitæ, than mortis periculum; the reproach of life, than the pain and punishment of death. So sinners made sensible, are attended, like ill debtors, with great shame; and therefore, like Adam, hide themselves, and to cover their shame sew fig-leaves together, to clothe themselves; they have many devices to cover their iniquities, which is their shame.

An ill debtor is attended with shame.

3. Some ill debtors have many shifts and delays to put off their creditors; it is a common custom among poor debtors, to contrive ways to excuse themselves: so sinners, when charged and told of their sins, have many excuses, i. e., I was drawn in before I was aware. "The woman gave me, and I did eat." So say many now, it was this bad man, and that bad woman that enticed me to commit this and that sin; but all are guilty, who is without sin? I shall do better when God gives me grace, my heart is good; and thus they put off God and conscience, by trifling excuses and delays; but repent not, nor go to God, through Jesus Christ, for a new heart, and for forgiveness of their great debt.

An ill debtor has many delays and excuses.

An ill debtor hates his creditor, so it is with guilty sinners.

4. Some ill debtors hate their creditors, Leve alienum debitore facit, grave facit, grave inimicum, saith Burgess; a little money borrowed, makes a man a debtor, but a great deal an enemy; so that the more they owe, the more they hate. Nay, Aristotle saith, "Debtors wish their creditors to have no being; wish they were dead, so that they might be freed of their debts."

My brethren, the scripture saith, that wicked men hate God, they are afraid of him, because of the vast debt they owe, who, as an offended Judge, they know will call them to his bar. Hence they, like the fool, wish there was no God.

A debtor loves not to meet his creditor, the like it is with guilty sinners.

5. A debtor doth not love to see or meet his creditor, he will avoid it, go some by-way; so sinners love not to approach near unto God, nor that God should meet them by the reproofs of his word, checks of conscience, or by the rebukes of the rod. When God comes near to them, by touching their consciences; how are they startled, as in the case of Felix, who when he found the Lord had met him by Paul's preaching, whilst he "reasoned of righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come," Acts xxiv. 25.; it is said Felix trembled. Alas, he could not bear it, and therefore cries out, "Go thy way for this time, when I have a convenient time, I will call for thee."

As debtors so sinners are afraid of being arrested and sent to prison.

6. A debtor far in debt, and having nothing to pay (that is in the hands of a severe and just creditor) is continually afraid of an arrest, and is much perplexed and troubled in his mind, for fear of a prison. So guilty and ungodly sinners are afraid of serjeant Death; and being awakened through the convictions of their consciences, dread the thoughts of hell, or of being sent to the prison of utter darkness.

Secondly, The debt sinners owe to God, renders their case such, that they are the worst of debtors; no such debtors among men.

This appears,

No compounding the debt sinners owe to God.

1. Debtors among men oftentimes compound their debts, and so get a discharge; but no guilty sinner can do thus, for God requires the whole debt, I mean, full payment, or a complete satisfaction for the wrong they have done to the holiness of God, his law and justice, by their iniquities and abominable transgressions; all must be paid, either by him or his Surety, or to prison the sinner must go.

I mean, full payment, or a complete satisfaction for the wrong they have done to the holiness of God, his law and justice, by their iniquities and abominable transgressions; all must be paid, either by him or his Surety, or to prison the sinner must go.

2. A debtor among men, upon non-payment of his debts, is exposed but to external punishment, the worst of which that we read of, either in the scripture or history, was thus, viz., I have read, that Valentian, the emperor, would have such put to death that were not able to pay their debts. Also, Mr. Burgess mentions a most severe law, made in some countries, viz., that if he that was in debt could not pay it, the creditors might come and cause him to be cut into as many pieces as they pleased: a most severe law indeed. But what was this to a sinner's being cast into hell? for all who fly not to Jesus Christ, or plead not that satisfaction or payment the Lord Christ hath made, by believing in him, shall, by the just and righteous God, "be tormented in fire and brimstone, in the presence of the holy angels, and in the presence of the Lamb for ever and ever," Rev. xiv. 10. Or as our Saviour saith, "They shall be cast into a furnace of fire, there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth," Matt. xiii. 50.

A severe human law. Mr. Burgess's Justification, p. 110.

3. A debtor among men may escape, and oftentimes does, the hand of justice, by flying; but no sinner can fly from the omniscient and infinite God; there is no escaping his wrath this way. "Whither shall I go from thy Spirit, or whither shall I fly from thy presence?" Psal. cxxxix. 7.

4. A creditor, his heirs and administrators, assigns, &c., may all die, and none be left that have right to demand, or can recover the debts that a poor debtor may owe. But God liveth for ever.

5. When debtors among men lie in prison, they are pitied and get relief; but when these debtors come to hell, they will have none to pity them, nor can they get one drop of water to cool their tongues; no ease nor relief they have to eternity.

6. A debtor among men, by craft, and through abuse of the law, by corrupt lawyers, judges, or juries, may cheat their creditors, and that way get a discharge: but there are none can find any way by all the craft and subtlety of their own wicked hearts, or subtleties of devils, to escape the just and sin-revenging hand of God.

7. Other debtors are sensible of their sad state, and are greatly troubled; but many sinners who are notorious debtors, are insensible of their state, and never are troubled, nor think of what they owe to God's justice.

U S E.

1. How may this tend to humble sinful mortals; what signifies their boasting of their riches, considering how far they are in debt?

2. It may also move God's people to pity sinners. When you see poor prisoners that lie in prison for debt, crying out of the grates, Bread, bread for the Lord's sake; how ready are you to pity them? but how few pity these debtors; yet when these cry out under despair, in dismal horror, they are pitied, yet perhaps their condition may be much better than such who are wholly insensible.

3. Let poor debtors that see and are convinced of their poverty rejoice, provided they know whither to go for relief, and get a discharge of all their debts, even be acquitted, justified, and pardoned for ever, which is by believing in Jesus Christ. "For in him all that believe are justified from all things," Acts xiii. 39.

4. And let believers praise God, and admire his love in Christ, who hath forgiven all their debts. "Bless the Lord, O my soul, and all that is within me bless his holy name. Who forgiveth all thine iniquities; and healeth all thy diseases," Psal. ciii. 1, 3.

SERMON XXIX:

And when he had begun to reckon, one was brought unto him that owed him ten thousand talents, &c.—Matt. xviii. 24.

I HAVE showed you that sin is a great debt, and that sinners are debtors unto God, and also what kind of debtors, and that they are the worst debtors. I shall proceed.

Thirdly, I shall show you how they that believe in Christ may be said to be freely forgiven in a way of free-grace and mercy, and yet full satisfaction is made to the law and justice of God, by our blessed Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

That it is wholly of God's free-grace that sinners are forgiven, I have abundantly demonstrated, in opening the parable of the two debtors, to which I refer the reader. Let me premise one or two things as explanatory propositions.

See Supplement, p. 1, 2, 3, &c.

I. That among men debts are often forgiven, without satisfaction made, either by the debtor or his surety.

II. That though among men that debt which is freely forgiven, cannot be said to be paid; yet it is otherwise here in our forgiveness. Or neither of these things are so, in respect of our pardon.

I shall begin with the first, viz., That God doth not forgive us our debts as a simple act of his mercy and grace, without satisfaction to his law and justice, made by Jesus Christ.

To make this appear it will not be amiss to consider the nature of God's threatenings, I mean his legal threatenings denounced against Adam for the breach of the first covenant. Several worthy writers have well distinguished between legal and evangelical threatenings. Gospel-threatenings are only the denunciation of Fatherly chastisements, to keep us within the bounds of filial obedience, and are never brought upon us but in love, in measure, and only in case of need. "If need be, ye are in heaviness," &c., I Pet. i. 6. But legal threatenings denounce unmixed and unallayed wrath and the curse. Now these two vastly differ, not only in their nature, but end also.

See Vol. 2. of Metaphors, Book 4. p. 336, 337.

What legal threats are

I. As first to suppose that the gospel threatening be denounced, and yet is not executed; it clearly follows, that the obligation we lay under to them, as to such an end, is dissolved, and ceaseth, seeing what God intended to effect thereby is obtained without the rod, even by the bare threatening of it; and this without the least derogation from the truth of God, or the impeachment of his other properties, which may be suspended. But legal threatenings being of another nature, have another end, viz., the vindication of the holiness and justice of God upon prisoners or rebels, they are no ways in any wise dissolvable, but must be of necessity inflicted, that the perfections and just government of God may be vindicated, and sin be revenged; all sin being a contempt of God's authority and righteous government, casting dirt upon his glory, the punishment is a vindication of God's honour, in revenging the evil committed. Yet let this be well noted, i. e., that in case of such a proportional satisfaction (by which the honour and equity of his law is justified, his justice, holiness, and hatred of sin is demonstrated, and the end of government attained) God may relax and dispense with the threatening, as to the debtor or person offending, though not with his law, which is the case here. For by the execution of the threatening upon Jesus Christ as our Surety, and receiving full satisfaction from him, God hath given an eminent demonstration of his justice, righteousness, purity, and infinite hatred of sin, and hath fully vindicated his law from contempt, as if the offending sinners, and guilty criminals had suffered in their own persons; and hereby also is an admirable mixture of grace with justice, in our discharge.

Owen, Mr.
Charnock.

son, &c.

This being promised, I shall, with our learned writers, resume the argument, viz., that the truth of God's threatenings would not allow him to pardon sin, and save the sinner, but upon a satisfaction.

1. God having denounced death, and the curse against a sinner, the veracity and purity of his nature, and faithfulness obliged him to see it inflicted. Never (saith one) any entertained a notion of God, but they included in it, he spake truth. Could ever any threatening of God awe the conscience of a sinner? should the first and great threatening he so easily made void? Also should it be granted, that notwithstanding God's solemn denunciation of wrath, in case of sin, that yet he had taken the offender into favour, and pardoned the offence without any satisfaction, as it would eclipse the glory of his truth and justice, so the creature might imagine and say, that God either intended his threatenings for mere scarecrows, or else was subject to mutability; which apprehensions being once received, what boldness would men assume to sin, believing also that the comminations of the gospel would be no more executed for a non-reception of Christ, than those of the law; nay, that there had been no need of the spilling of the blood of the Son of God? "But let God be true, and every man a liar."

2. To suppose that God hath abrogated his threatening, pardoning sin, without a satisfaction to his law and justice, tends not only, (1.) To cast contempt on his wisdom, in giving such a law, (with such a sanction) at first, which he could disannul and dispense with, and give a more mild and gentle one, but, (2.) It would at once, also overthrow the whole scripture, for that expressly tells us, "That not one jot of the law was to perish, but all must be fulfilled," Matt. v. 18; "and that every disobedience received a just recompense of reward," Heb. ii. 2; and that without shedding of blood there is no remission; and also that "God will by no means clear the guilty, and that Christ was made sin for us, and bore our sins, the just for the unjust," Exod. xxxiv. 6, 7; 1 Pet. iii. 18. (3.) It would render all the sacrifices of the law to be mere significant things; why should such atonements be made by the blood of lambs, and goats? &c. (4.) Nay it would render the sacrifice of Christ, the antitype of them itself, to be useless, and that he offered no propitiatory sacrifice unto God.

3. If the threatening annexed to the law be disannulled, it is either by virtue of the law itself, or by the gospel, now it was not, could not by the law itself; for that was Gal. iii. 10 wholly inexorable, requiring perfect and constant obedience, or the execution of the unmixed and unalloyed wrath; nor is it released by the gospel. This the Holy Ghost clearly informs us, "Do we make void the law through faith? God forbid, yea, we establish the law," Rom. iii. 13. Think not (saith our Saviour) "that I am come to destroy the law, I am not come to destroy, but to fulfil. For verily I say unto, till heaven and earth pass away, one jot or tittle of the law shall in no wise pass away, till all be fulfilled," Matt. v. 17, 18. All the predictions of the law and prophets must be fulfilled, all the types must be fulfilled, and all the precepts of the moral law also must be perfectly kept by our Surety, and so fulfilled, and the penalty or punishment the law denounced on transgressors must be borne and suffered also by us, or one in our nature able to satisfy divine justice, and appease divine wrath, all which our Lord hath done. Nay, my brethren, the gospel is so far from making void the moral law, or repealing the penalty of it, that the very gospel itself is founded on Christ's undertaking, as our Surety, in doing what the law required, and in suffering what the law denounced; which things had not our Saviour done for us, we had never had any gospel at all. Besides, the gospel is so far from releasing or abrogating the law, as a rule of righteousness; that as the law is considered in Christ's hand, it is not only confirmed in the gospel, but in the most strict manner, it opens the evil of every lust of the heart, and it magnifies the purity and spirituality of the law. We are commanded (and it abides to be our perpetual duty) "To love the Lord with all our hearts, and our neighbour as ourselves; yea, to be perfect as our Father in heaven is perfect." Though we cannot do it, nor attain to such a pure obedience in ourselves, nor any way else, but through Christ alone, who is only the end of the law (as a covenant of works) or in respect of righteousness to all that believe in him.

4. The sum of what we say and believe about this great truth is this.

(1.) That by the sin of our first parents, all men were brought into a state of sin, apostacy, enmity, and wrath, or under condemnation, being dead in sin, and under the curse of the law; and that there is no difference as to their state by nature, between Jews and Gentiles, the elect and reprobates.

Rom. iii. 23, and 8. 7.
Eph. iv. 18.
Col. ii. 13.
Eph. ii. 1, 2, 3.

(2.) That in this state all men continue before faith and union with Christ.

(3.) That the justice and holiness of God (as he is the supreme Rector, Governor, and Judge of all the world) requires that sin be punished, and the vast debt sinners owe be paid; nay, and that God hath also engaged his veracity and faithfulness in the sanction of the law, not to leave sin unpunished. "Cursed be he that continueth not in all things written in the law, to do them," Deut. xxvii. 26. And had not infinite wisdom, being moved by sovereign love and grace, found out a way to satisfy divine justice, &c., all mankind had been lost for ever. But,

(4.) God out of his infinite and inconceivable love and grace, laid our help upon one that was mighty, namely, his own beloved Son, whom he sent to assume our nature, and to work out our redemption.

(5.) That the love of the Father, and of the Son, were alike; the Father could not be more gracious than the Son, nor the bowels of the Son exceed the Father's, being the same one God.

(6.) That the way in general, whereby the Son of God became incarnate, to save lost sinners, was by being substituted as our Surety, Sponsor, and blessed Representative, according to the decree of God, and that blessed covenant that was between the Father and the Son in eternity; that he in the room of all the elect, should answer all the demands both of the law and justice. "He made him sin for us, that knew no sin, that we might be made the righteousness of God in him, and that way pay our debts," 2 Cor. v. 21, Gal. iii. 17; Rom. v. 7, 8.

(7.) And that Jesus Christ in his saving us, or in the order to procure a free pardon for us, the scriptures say, (1.) That he offered himself a sacrifice unto God, to make an atonement for sin. (2.) That he redeemed us by paying a price or a ransom for our redemption, or remission of sin. (3.) That our sins were imputed to him, and that he bore them and the punishment of them, on his own body on the tree. (4.) And that our Lord hath answered the law, in respect of perfect obedience, and the penalty of it. (5.) That he died for sin, to expiate that, and in the room of the sinner. (6.) That God upon his Son's voluntary undertaking of his office, as Mediator, God laying our sins and sentence upon him, he hath made full satisfaction for whatsoever legally could be charged upon him for whom he suffered, or what was necessary to the wisdom, justice, and holiness of God; and all that believe in him are justified, pardoned, and shall through his merits and righteousness be eternally saved, the divine justice being satisfied, and the law fulfilled, by what he did and suffered. And this brings me to the next thing.

II. Though among men that debt which is freely forgiven cannot be said to be paid, but our debt is paid by our Surety, as I shall show, yet we are freely pardoned.

That pardon or remission of sin is wholly through the free love and grace of God, I have elsewhere fully proved, and shall but touch upon it here. There is, my brethren, nothing more evident or clearer laid down in the word of God than this, and yet not without payment, satisfaction, or atonement.

are freely pardoned, and yet Christ made full satisfaction for them!

First, I shall show you, that our debt is every ways freely forgiven, as to us.

Secondly, Answer one or two objections.

Thirdly, apply it.

First, That sin is freely forgiven, the scripture testifies. "Wherefore I say unto thee, her sins, which are many, are forgiven," Luke vii. 47. "Son, be of good cheer, thy sins are forgiven," Matt. ix. 2. "That ye may know the Son of Man hath power on earth to forgive sins," &c., Ver. 6. "Who is a God like unto thee, pardoning iniquities, and passing by the transgressions of the remnant of his people," &c., Mich. vii. 18. "Who forgiveth all thine iniquities, and that healeth all thy diseases?" Psal. ciii. 1, 2. I might multiply texts of scripture to the same purpose.

2. Yet that they are not forgiven without the satisfaction or atonement Christ hath made, is also evident by many scriptures. This appears by plain scripture testimony. "In whom we have redemption, through his blood, even the remission of sin, according to the riches of his grace." Compared with Rom. iii. 25, "Whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation, through faith in his blood, to declare his righteousness, for the remission of sins that are past, through the forbearance of God," Eph. i. 7. "As God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you," Eph. iv. 32. By these, and many like scriptures, it appears, though our sins are freely forgiven, yet not without a full atonement, payment, or satisfaction made to the justice of God for them. Yet that all our sins are absolutely, freely forgiven, further appears.

1. In respect of all immediate or mediate transactions between God and sinners, simply considered in themselves; and so pardon is free on God's part, and in that respect.

2. Pardon is free in respect of God's eternal purpose, which was to magnify the riches of grace to such he designed to forgive; for there were none but he might justly have suffered to lay for ever under the guilt of their sin, and who must have perished for ever.

3. Free in respect of the means used to effect it. Whatsoever God did in order to bestow pardon in those transactions between himself and his Son, they were acts of his own free grace towards us. (1.) His entering into covenant with his own Son, the second person of the Trinity, about our redemption, and the remission of our sins. (2.) The Father's substituting and accepting of Christ in that covenant as our Surety, was an act (as you have heard) towards us, of his own free grace and sovereign love and favour. (3.) It was an act of God's free grace to lay our sins upon his Son, as our Mediator and blessed Sponsor, whom he so substituted. (4.) Pardon is also free, in respect of the tender or offer of it to sinners in the gospel, it being "without money, and without price," Isa. lv. 1, 2.

How our pardon appears to be free to us.

4. That it is an act of free-grace, in the condonation, or in giving pardon to us, and will further appear, that nothing can be freer on the part of the persons that are forgiven.

(1.) It is granted and given to us, without any satisfaction required of us, or made by us, or by any surety we had, or could procure to pay our debt, we being not able to find one.

(2.) Without any merit or desert that was in us; for all mankind were rebels, and ill-deserving, nay hell-deserving creatures.

(3.) In regard we have it without any penal suffering or satisfaction that way made here by us, or to be suffered or made hereafter.

(4.) Without any expectation of a future recompence, by us to be made to God for our pardon and forgiveness.

And as none of these things would, so nothing else can impeach the freeness of our forgiveness: whether therefore we consider the sin-pardoning God, or the pardoned sinner, it is every ways free; it is free on God's part as to us, who forgives our sins, and on our part that are forgiven.

Object. But you say it is not without an atonement or satisfaction made by Christ.

Ans. What of this? if God provides a Surety, or one to Satisfy both law and justice, this further magnifies his free grace. Is it not an act of greater grace in a prince towards a rebel, to sacrifice his own Son (to keep up and answer the sanction of the law) in the room and stead of that guilty criminal, that so he may with honour forgive him, than if he should forgive him freely, to the violation of the said law? if God hath provided himself a lamb for a sacrifice, if he saw in his infinite wisdom this way best comported with the glory and honour of his other perfections, as well as to advance the riches of his grace; shall we cavil and quarrel at it?

If the forgiveness of our debt this ways redounds to the praise of the glory of his wisdom, holiness, righteousness, severity against sin, as well as to the magnifying of his grace, love, and rich bounty; then if he should pardon us as a simple act of mercy, ought not we to admire the perfections and methods of the holy God in our pardon, and be silent for Dr. Owen. ever? Will not sinners (saith one) be contented to be pardoned, unless they may have it at the rate of spoiling or robbing God of his holiness, truth, righteousness, and faithfulness?

Object. But doth not this doctrine render God the Father to be severe to his own Son, to substitute him in the sinner's room, to bear his wrath, and to suffer for their sins?

Ans. Christ readily, freely, and voluntarily offered himself to the Father, to become our Surety, and to pay our vast debt. Suretyship imports the obligation to be voluntary, for the law forces no man to be bound for another, much less to die for another. Had our Lord Jesus been imposed upon, or had he not freely, and of his own good will and free choice, accepted of this work and office, the objection might seem to have somewhat in it. But what saith the Son? "Then said I, lo I come, in the volume of thy book it is written of me, to do thy will, O God," Heb. x. 7. Though the Father appointed his Son as Mediator, to be the Surety of the covenant, yet hear further what he said. "The Lord God hath opened mine ear, and I was not rebellious, neither turned away my back; I gave my back to the smiters, and my cheeks to them that plucked off the hair; I hid not my face from shame and spitting," Isa. l. 5, 6. The love of the son was not less than the love of the Father. He tells us how he longed, or was straitened until he was baptized in blood and suffering. "I lay down my life; no man taketh it from me. I lay it down of my self. I have power to lay it down," &c., John x. 17, 18. My brethren, God the Father laid nothing upon his blessed Son, but what our Lord offered himself freely to undergo for his elect sake! and had it not every way consisted with his honour, and spotless holiness and glory, thus to substitute and deliver up his own Son, to satisfy both law and justice, be sure he had not, could not have done it.

Moreover, let it be considered, that if the Father had thus sacrificed his own Son, but not as a propitiatory sacrifice to atone and satisfy for our sins, but only (as the Socinians say) to make him an example or pattern of humility and patience, in doing and suffering; it might leave men room to say, God was severe indeed to his own Son, because he might have made one of his angels, or holy prophets or apostles, or some godly man, to become such a pattern of humility and patience; for some of the saints are set out as examples in this, and some other respects.

Object. But if God cannot pardon sin without a satisfaction, he is more weak and imperfect than man, who can and doth so.

Ans. 1. God cannot do many things which men can do; yet that doth not render God more weak or imperfect than they, but the direct contrary, viz., he cannot do them upon the account of his perfections; he cannot stain his own glory, nor do that which is contrary to his own nature and being, or is unworthy of him: God cannot lie, he cannot deny himself, he cannot change, which men do daily.

2. For God to pardon sin, without a satisfaction made by the debtor, or a surety, who in himself is absolutely holy, righteous, true, just, and faithful, seems inconsistent with the perfections of his nature: for he is not only just and holy, but justice and holiness itself; therefore it was absolutely necessary that satisfaction be made to him, that is the supreme governor of sinners, the author of the law, and sanction of it, wherein punishment is absolutely threatened, unless God should deny himself, or be like man, and so do what one infinitely perfect cannot do.

3. Our adversaries, who strive to obscure the freeness of our pardon, because we say it is not had without the obedience, redemption, and atonement made by our Lord Christ, are left inexcusable, and fully refuted by their own notion about pardon of sin, viz., they say that faith, repentance, and obedience, as the condition thereof, to be performed by the creature, is required of all the adult persons that God forgives; and until they answer these conditions God will suspend, nay, deny pardon to every one. Now this renders pardon less free every ways, than what we say: for seeing God doth forgive sin, and can, as a simple act of his mercy, without any impeachment of his truth, justice, and holiness; then, say I, if the freeness of pardon consisteth in such a boundless notion as these men imagine, it is certain, that the prescribing faith, repentance, and obedience, as the antecedent conditions of it, is much more contrary to such a free pardon, than God's receiving satisfaction from another.

But if it be contrary to the holiness of God, to pardon sin unless the conditions of faith, repentance, and obedience be answered (as these men say it is) let them not be offended, if we believe what God says and declares, i. e., that it consists not with his glory to remit sin without the fulfilling his law, and satisfying his justice.

The sum of what we say is this, viz. (1.) That God is just; holiness and justice is his nature; and to magnify his grace, love, and bounty, he cannot wrong or eclipse those other perfections of his being. (2.) That God, not the debtor, found the Surety; that his love was wonderful in substituting his own Son to be this Mediator and Surety. (3.) So that this demonstrates greater grace and love, than if we had been pardoned without the sacrifice or payment made by Christ. (4.) That all the blessings and benefits of Christ's undertaking are given to us freely. (5.) That the same God gives us the spirit, faith, repentance, and whatsoever is needful, in order to our being actually pardoned, justified, &c., and the satisfaction of Christ made effectual to all the elect of God. (6.) And that Christ died not only nostro bono, for our good (as the Socinians affirm) but in our stead and room; for where one is said to die for another, it is always so taken; the just for the unjust, that is, in the stead of the unjust. Christ put himself in our law-place in respect of what he did and suffered, that as a common head and Surety his obedience and suffering might be imputed to us, and accepted for us, as if we had actually kept the law perfectly, and borne the penalty thereof; yet it is our Surety's money that pays our debts, and we are in a way of free-grace wholly forgiven. It was not our righteousness, but Christ's righteousness; all was paid that we owed, not by us, but by Christ, he received all for us in a way of merit; but we have all through him, and for his sake, in a way of mercy and free-grace.

The Socinians depicted.

See Dr. Owen.

APPLICATION.

1. From hence we infer, that all mankind were by sin utterly impoverished and brought to beggary, being debtors to God's justice, owing a vast sum, and having nothing to pay.

2. That the gospel is a mystery, and the way of pardon not understood by many men, who boast of their own wisdom; and because they cannot see by their purblind reason, how that debt which is paid can be said to be freely forgiven, therefore count the preaching of the cross in this respect (as well in some others) foolishness.

3. We infer also from what hath been said, that though the debts of all the elect are paid, yet it is not here as it is among men: for when a surety hath paid the whole debt for the debtor, he may demand his discharge out of prison; and it is injustice in the creditor to keep him one hour under restraint, or in bonds. But though Christ hath paid the debts of all the elect, yet they may not be immediately discharged, or forgiven; nor may any upon it demand an immediate discharge; nor ought they to reflect on the righteousness of God, in suffering them to abide for some time under the sentence of the law.

(1.) Because the sinner found not the Surety, but God, the offended Creator, and great Rector of the world, whose will (according to his nature and sovereign pleasure) is the rule of all his actions, and the discharge of sinners (as to them) being an absolute act of free grace, he is at liberty, or may at his own choice, give forth pardon and other favours (purchased for them by his Son) when and at what time he pleaseth; for otherwise pardon of sin cannot be said (in one grand respect) to be an act of grace, nor God a free Agent in the distributions of his favours.

(2.) Nay, I might argue the equitableness of this, as it is among men, viz., may not a price (with a satisfaction to the law) for a guilty rebel in slavery in another land, and in the hands of one who is a cruel enemy, into whose hands his sovereign lets him fall for his great wickedness? and now though the ransom be paid, and the law answered (and all at the charge, and as the sole act of that prince, out of love and pity to that guilty rebel and captive) must the rebel be immediately discharged, or else his sovereign be charged with injustice? Certainly all will say, the whole transaction being an act of mercy to the guilty criminal (though in a way of righteousness as to the law) he may keep him ignorant of what he hath done, or let him lie in the enemy's hand, before he gives him the discharge which he procured at a dear rate, in love to him; nay, resolve he shall seek and cry to him for it, and acknowledge his horrid offence before he be actually acquitted and pardoned.

(3) My brethren, the satisfaction made by Jesus Christ to the law and justice of God was founded in a voluntary compact or covenant between the Father and the Son. Moreover, sinners are not only pecuniary debtors, but criminal debtors to punishment, or under an obligation to suffer eternally: and since the Son of God offered himself, and the Father accepted him to die in their stead; yet the time when, how, and by what method the sinner shall be actually discharged, must wholly be according to the agreement or result of that compact that was between the Father and the Son before the world began.

Take what a reverend writer saith on this account, viz., though Christ, as our Surety, Dr. Owen. hath made a full compensation for sin, or satisfied both law and justice, yet (saith he) sinners are not immediately acquitted; neither doth it follow, that on the supposition of satisfaction pleaded for, the freedom, pardon, and acquittal (of persons originally guilty, and liable to punishment) must immediately, and ipso facto, ensue. It is not of the nature of every solution or satisfaction that deliverance must. ipso facto, follow; and the reason of it is, because this satisfaction, by a succedaneous substitution of one to undergo punishment for another; must be founded in a voluntary compact and agreement; for there is required unto it a relaxation of the law, though not as unto punishment to be inflicted, yet as unto the person to be punished. And it is otherwise in personal guilt, than in pecuniary debts: in these the debt itself is fully intended, and the person obliged with reference thereunto; in the other, the person is firstly and principally under the obligation: and therefore when the pecuniary debt is paid, by whomsoever it be paid, the obligation of the person himself unto payment ceaseth ipso facto. But in things criminal, the guilty person being firstly, immediately, and intentionally under the obligation to punishment, when there is introduced by compact a vicarious solution, in substitution of another to suffer, though he suffer the same absolutely, which the person should have done for whom he suffers; yet because of the acceptation of another person to suffer, which might have been refused, and could not be admitted without some relaxation of the law, deliverance of the guilty person cannot answer ipso facto, but by the intervention of the terms fixed in the covenant or agreement, for an admittance of the substitution. Thus Dr. Owen.

4. This shews, that though sin be called a debt, and for which satisfaction must be made, yet it is not to be considered as a debt, (and God a Creditor, and the law as an obligation to the payment of that debt) as some men do run it: but sin is a transgression of the law, and thereby the sinner is obnoxious and liable to punishment appointed in it, which another is substituted to suffer; and according to the time and terms agreed upon between God the Father, and God the Son (as our Surety) must the sinner be acquitted, and that is not till he be united to Jesus Christ, and by faith is helped to receive or apply the atonement.

Therefore let sinners that would be pardoned, acquitted, and justified, labour to believe in the Lord Jesus Christ; for till then all stand condemned.

5. From the whole we may infer, that men while they abide in the first Adam are criminals, and are impeached both by the law and their own consciences, and cannot plead not guilty; neither can they plead mercy for the sake of mercy (as one well observes) for that were not to plead, but to beg: nor were it at all to be justified, but merely pardoned, or as if we were to be dealt with alone upon the score of grace, and not at all upon the score of righteousness; for justification is an act of justice as hath been showed) rather than of mercy. Though it is true, the salvation of sinners is both an act of grace and justice, and both these attributes meet together in our free pardon and justification. Sirs, when God pardons us, he displays his grace and mercy; and when he justifieth us, he displays and manifesteth his righteousness.

6. That though our pardon is free to us, yet it cost Christ dear.

7. Moreover, to conclude, let no man say he hath paid his own debt, because Christ, his Surety, hath paid it for him; for the Surety was not ours, I mean, of our procuring; nor was the Surety's money ours, i. e., it was not our obedience, our righteousness, but Christ's righteousness (though imputed to us, or put upon us.) Therefore let Christ have the glory; he is the pay-master, the Saviour, and we poor miserable sinners and debtors, who are forgiven and saved by him: therefore we remain obliged to give to the Son, and Holy Spirit, all honour, glory, and praise, for evermore. Amen.

PLANTING A VINEYARD OPENED.

SERMON XXX.

Hear another parable, there was a certain householder that planted a vineyard, and hedged it round about, and digged a wine-press in it, and built a tower, and let it out to husbandmen, and went into a far country.

And when the time of fruit drew near, he sent his servant, &c.—Matt. xxi. 33—44.

St. Mark hath also this parable, Mark xii. 1. Likewise St. Luke, chap. xx. 9, 10, 11, &c., and they agreeing much together in the substance of the whole parable, I shall speak to it as it is here recorded.

Year of Christ, 33.

Of his ministry, 4.

The scope of the parable.

1. The scope of this parable, or the design of our blessed Lord in it, is to show the great favours, and signal privileges God bestowed upon the Jews or people of Israel, in making them his church and peculiar inheritance under the law. For they were then his vineyard, as he declares by the prophet, "The vineyard of the Lord of hosts is the house of Israel, and the men of Judah his pleasant plant," &c. Isa. v. 7.

2. To show the horrid ingratitude, and abominable evils of that people. (1.) In abusing and slaying the prophets; and, (2.) in their laying violent hands upon the Son of God himself, and in crucifying him.

3. As it is one of those prophetic parables spoken by our Saviour, it discovers the rejection of the Jews, and God's calling of the Gentiles, as also the destruction of Jerusalem, and utter ruin of the temple; likewise the reason or cause thereof.

"A certain householder," &c.

The parts opened and explained.

This householder intends the Lord of Hosts, the God of Israel, whom our Lord calls, an "Husbandman, who planted a vineyard, and hedged it about," &c. John xv. 1. This signifieth God's choosing, and taking the people of Israel from all other people in the world into a legal covenant, and national church-state, for like as a piece of ground an husbandman designs for a vineyard, is taken out of a vast field or wilderness, and is paled or hedged round; so God secured that people from all other people of the world, for his own special use, design, and purpose, and bestowed much cost and pains upon them, in expectation of more fruit and service, or honour from them, than from all other people or nations of the world.

"And digged a wine-press in it." Mark saith, a place for a wine-fat. This may signify no more, than that God spared for no cost on the Jewish church, but provided every thing for them in respect of use, safety, and ornament, a wine-press was of use, hedging it round was for their safety; a tower might be for security and ornament both.

The church of the Jews let to the priests and Levites, &c., called husbandmen.

"And let it out to husbandmen, and went into a far country;" that is, he entrusted that church-state with the high-priest, and other priests and Levites, &c., who gloried that they had the key of knowledge, and were guides to the blind, or keepers and dressers of the vineyard. "The husbandman going into a far country," may signify no more than that glorious residence of the Holy God in heaven, that is, his throne, or the place where most of his glory is manifested (though in himself he is an infinite, and an immense Being, and is omnipresent, or everywhere) yet his glory is not everywhere to the same degree revealed or made known to his creatures.

He is said to come down on Mount Sinai, and so might be said to ascend.

"And when the time of fruit drew near," Mark saith, at the season. Luke saith, "and at the season he sent his servants," ver. 34; that is to say, after the manner of an husbandman, who when he hath bestowed much pains and cost, and the time of fruit is come, he sends to reap or receive the fruit of such or such a vineyard, so the Lord, it is said, after all he had done for that people, he looked for fruit. "And he looked that it should bring forth grapes, and it brought forth wild grapes," Isa. v. 2. The servants which God sent were his holy prophets. Mark speaks of three single servants, and Luke the same. By the first servant may be meant Moses, by the other all the prophets after him, and by the third John the Baptist, but according to St. Matthew, it may only refer to those prophets that were successively sent to the Jews, or people of Israel from first to last.

Who the first servants were that God sent.

"And the husbandmen took his servants, and beat one, and killed another, and stoned another," Ver. 35.

This clearly shows the horrid wickedness of the priests, rulers, and people of Israel, in persecuting and putting to death the holy prophets of the Lord, who were sent to reprove them for their cursed abominations. "O Jerusalem, that killest the prophets," &c. "They have killed thy prophets, and digged down thine altars, and I am left alone, and they seek my life," saith Elias, Rom. xi. 3.

"And he sent other servants more than the first, and they did unto them likewise." Ver. 36.

"Him they stoned," saith Mark xii. 4; "Him they beat and treated shamefully," saith St. Luke, intimating that they persisted in their vile and abominable spirit and practices. "Which of the prophets have not your fathers slain?"

"But last of all he sent unto them his Son, saying, they will reverence my Son," Ver. 37.

Mark saith, "Having yet therefore one Son he sent him," Mark xii. 6. Luke saith, "Then said the Lord of the vineyard, what shall I do? I will send my beloved son, it may be they will reverence him when they see him," Luke xx. 13.

By the Son is meant our Lord Jesus Christ, who is "the only begotten of the Father," or his Son by an eternal generation. My brethren, after God had sent all his prophets, he sent his Son (God here is rendered speaking after the manner of men) denoting what he might expect from them, or to discover what was their duty when they saw the Son, viz., to reverence and readily obey him, our Lord was first sent to the Jews. "He came to his own, but his own received him not," John i. 11, 12. His own by that external and legal covenant, made with their fathers.

"But when the husbandman saw the Son, they said among themselves, this is the heir, let us kill him, and let us seize on his inheritance," Ver. 38.

Mark and Luke speak just after the same manner. These words show, that many of the Pharisees and priests, &c., were certainly convinced that Jesus Christ was indeed the Son of God, though some of them, as Paul shows, were blinded, "and through ignorance did what they did." But it cannot be supposed so of all of them; therefore their sin was with fearful aggravations, and their damnation dreadful, nor is it any marvel, though they were convicted in their own consciences, that Christ was the Son of God, that nevertheless they persecuted him, and at last put him to death, for is it not so now? How have some vile wretches (who reproached, and have persecuted God's people) declared that they did believe they were in very deed the servants of God, and holy persons, and yet left so to the power of the devil, that notwithstanding they would not desist persecuting, villifying, and reproaching them? Wicked men are under the power and influence of the devil, and often sin against most powerful convictions.

Luke xx. 14.

"And they caught him, and cast him out of the vineyard, and slew him," Ver. 39.

In these words our Lord prophesied his own death.

"When the Lord therefore of the vineyard cometh, what will he do unto those husbandmen?" Ver. 40.

Mark saith, "What shall therefore the Lord of the vineyard do?" Mark xii. 9. Luke saith, "What therefore shall the Lord of the vineyard do unto them?"

This question our Lord asked, "They say unto him, he will miserably destroy those husbandmen, and will let out his vineyard unto other husbandmen, who shall render him the fruits in their season," ver. 41.

Mark and Luke speak much to the same purpose, as if Christ spake these words, and all that they say was, God forbid, and so it is understood by our annotators.

A seeming difficulty reconciled.

Mark reads it thus, "What shall therefore the Lord of the vineyard do? he will come and destroy the husbandmen, and will give the vineyard to others." This seeming difference the learned Marlorate to me doth well reconcile, whose exposition I shall here give you; he repeating St. Matthew's words, saith, Our Saviour Christ by his former question, causes the unwise to confess the truth: for they are constrained openly, and with their own mouths to grant that which he would himself. Notwithstanding the evangelists do here vary a little, the evangelist Matthew saith, that they were forced to confess this themselves; Mark saith, that Christ did simply pronounce what punishment such wicked servants should have; and Luke more evidently, as it might seem, disagreeeth from them both; for when Christ had pronounced the punishment, they did dislike it, saying, God forbid. But if we do more deeply search for the sense and meaning, we shall find no repugnance or disagreement at all. For these priests not perceiving at first, that this parable pertaineth unto them, but thinking that Christ spake indeed of such wicked and unthankful husbandmen, they by and by said, such evil and unjust persons were worthy of destruction. But when they understood this parable was spoken against them, they retracted, and denied their former sentence, saying, God forbid, that the wicked should be destroyed, and that we should kill the Messiah; and this is always the manner of the wicked: when other men's matters are in hand, they will straitway define and give judgment against them; but if the case touch themselves, they are soon changed unto another mind. Thus this learned and ancient writer. This is the way our late annotators take to reconcile the evangelists here.

"And Jesus saith unto them, did ye never read in the scripture, the stone which the builders rejected, the same is become the head of the corner," verse 42.

1. By these words our Saviour shows, how necessary it is to read the scriptures, and that ignorance of the holy scripture is a most dangerous thing. "Ye err (saith he in another place) not knowing the scripture," &c. "Search the scriptures," "They are they that testify of me," Had these men with more care read the holy scriptures, they might have known what the blessed Messiah should meet with when he came, and in what a manner he should come, and also be cut off, or die a bloody sacrifice for our sins. The stone here spoken of was Jesus Christ; the builders were the Priests, and Scribes and Pharisees, the teachers and rulers of the Jews. Rejecting this stone, denotes their rejecting of Christ, or refusing to build their justification, hope, and salvation upon him alone. "This is the stone that is set at nought by you builders, which is become the head-stone of the corner," &c., Acts iv. 11.

The head-stone of the corner; that is, the only foundation stone upon which all that are saved must build. "Other foundation can no man lay, than that which is laid, which is Jesus Christ," 1 Cor. iii. 11. The corner-stone is the chief or great glory of all the building, and which also upholds it.

Our Lord here alludes to another metaphor; before he compared the church to a vineyard, here unto a house, and so it is in several other places of the scripture. 1 Cor. iii. 9. Eph. ii. 12.

"This is the Lord's doing, and it is marvellous in our eyes," verse 42.

God laid Christ to be the foundation of our hope and salvation, and this is marvellous.

1. To lay Christ for the foundation of his church is the Lord's doing, it is that which he himself hath done; first in his decree and eternal purpose. Secondly, actually in Christ's doctrine, and in and by his obedience and sufferings on the cross; the Father laid him as the foundation and chief corner-stone. "Behold I lay in Sion for a foundation, a stone, a tried stone, a precious corner-stone, a sure foundation," &c., Isa. xxviii. 16. "This is marvellous in our eyes," i. e., that God should lay his own Son for the only foundation of his church. Moreover, it is marvellous that those who pretended to be the chief master-builders should reject the only foundation upon which they should build. But so it is; God hath for their rejecting of our Lord, given them up to blindness of mind. It is the Lord's doing, in a way of sore judgment, to leave these blind and unbelieving Jews, and ignorant builders, that he should become to them "a stone of stumbling, and rock of offence," instead of a foundation to build upon. Again, it was the Lord's doing to remove the church of the Jews, and erect his church amongst the Gentiles.

"Therefore I say unto you, the kingdom of heaven shall be taken from you, and be given to another nation, bringing forth the fruit thereof," ver. 43.

Neither Mark nor Luke speak of this, but Matthew only; by taking away the kingdom of heaven from the Jews, signifies, (1.) The removing their church state, or the dissolution of the national church of Israel. (2.) The taking away the ministration or dispensation of the gospel from them, and giving it to the Gentiles; not to one Gentile nation only, nor to make or constitute any national church among them, but to send the gospel to many nations, and to gather in some both amongst the Jews and Gentiles into a gospel and more spiritual church-state, that was to consist of lively stones, or only of converted men and women, or such that professed faith in Jesus Christ. "For to make in himself of twain, one new man (or mystical body), so making peace," Eph. ii. 15. "Now therefore ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow citizens with the saints, and of the household of God.—And are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner-stone," &c., ver. 19, 20. This was the Lord's doing, he hath cast off the Jews, and grafted in the Gentiles.

"And whosoever shall fall on this stone shall be broken," ver. 44.

Some take these words differently.

1. Some take them in a good sense, viz., fall on, or falling before Christ, by owning him, believing in him, and acknowledging him to be the true Saviour, and only foundation; and that the effects of this are such, that they are broken into pieces in the sight and sense of their sins, which always is the effect of true faith.

What is meant by falling upon this stone.

3. But others rather take it to mean stumbling on Christ, he being called a stumbling stone to some: and such that believe not thus, fall on him, and shall be broken and ruined for ever. I shall leave the reader to take which sense he thinks may be the meaning of our Lord. I rather adhere to the first. "But on whomsoever this stone shall fall, it shall grind him to powder," ver. 44. That is, such, whosoever they be, that persecute me or my members, so that I fall in a way of wrath upon them, they shall be ruined irreparably and irrecoverably, or with a final and eternal destruction; and indeed so shall all that stumble at him, or fall on him, as a stumbling stone; they shall find Christ will fall on them also, and grind them to powder (though they are not persecutors of him) and therefore I rather think by falling on Christ this is not meant; for certainly falling on him, and he falling on them, are quite different things.

What is meant by the stone falling upon persons.

And thus I have briefly opened, or given a concise exposition of every part of this parable.

From the principal things contained herein, I shall observe several points of doctrine raised.

Doct. 1. That the church of God is, and may fitly be compared to a vineyard. But because this proposition is opened in my expounding of another parable, I shall pass this by here.

Doct. 2. That the church of God, or his vineyard may be said to be let to farm by the great owner thereof. "And let it out to husbandmen," ver. 33.

In speaking to this point of doctrine I shall,

I. Show what letting out doth imply or denote.

II. Show to whom the vineyard of the Lord of hosts may be said to be let.

III. Show what fruit it is that God expecteth.

IV. Apply it.

First negatively.

1. This letting the vineyard to husbandmen doth not denote that any people have a lease sealed to them of their church-state, church-ordinances, and church-privileges; no, all are but tenants at will: we hold all our spiritual privileges at the will and pleasure of the Lord of hosts, who may give us warning, and turn us out of all when he pleaseth,

What letting doth imply. No people have a lease of the gospel.

2. It doth not imply that any people buy and pay for any spiritual blessing and good things which they possess; no, we have all freely, church, and church-privileges, the gospel-ordinances and promises, without money, and without price: we have no rent, no tribute to pay, but the tribute of praise, thanksgiving, and fruitfulness unto God; "What givest thou to him, or what receiveth he at thy hand?"

Nothing to be paid but the tribute of praise, &c.

But then affirmatively.

1. Letting denotes God's intrusting a people with the great blessing of the legal church, and also of the gospel church-state, church offices, church-ordinances, privileges, and all the treasures thereof; also it signifieth the highest act of God's rich grace and bounty to the people; for what hath the Lord which he values more than these rich spiritual favours and blessings? It is no small thing to have the gospel, and a gospel-church, grace, gifts, ministers, ordinances, and promises.

What the letting the vineyard doth imply.

2. Letting out the vineyard implies, that a church, the word of God, and all the blessings of grace, ordinances, and spiritual privileges, are not man's own proper or natural right or inheritance; no, they are but stewards intrusted with all these things, or as tenants to the great Landlord, the Lord of hosts. Though Paul calls the gospel his gospel, yet see what he saith in another place; "Let a man so account of us, as of the ministers of Christ and stewards of the mysteries of God. "Moreover it is required in stewards that a man be found faithful." 1 Cor. iv. 1, 2. All these things we are intrusted with are the Lord's goods: it is Christ's gospel, Christ's church, Christ's ordinances, &c.

3. Letting out to husbandmen signifies a mighty trust is committed to such; and to the very end that the gospel, gospel-ordinances, seasons, and all spiritual gospel-privileges should be employed to the glory of God, or that we bring forth the fruit thereof in due seasons. The Lord sent his servant at the proper time, to receive the fruit of his vineyard; they do not pay him rent (as other husbandmen do) to receive the profit and fruit themselves; no, those are not the farms of his letting out; the Lord keeps the whole possession in his own hand; therefore in this there is a great disparity. Other husbandmen receive the fruit themselves; it is only so much rent the landlord agreed to have; but Jesus Christ must receive in all the improvement we can make, all must be done to his glory; though it is true, those that are faithful, shall in a way of grace be well rewarded.

4. It signifies also, that if men do not bring forth unto God that holy fruit which he expecteth, they must be called to an account for it. He will first or last require the fruit of every gospel-sabbath, gospel-sermon, gospel-gifts, God's ordinances, and gospel-race; and they that are entrusted with most, or such as he hath been most, bountiful unto whether ministers or people, must give account accordingly, in respect of what they have received; such as have received "two talents," Matt. xxv. 22, shall be called to account about the improvement of two, and he that hath received five talents, the improvement of five; and if the vine be planted in a more fruitful hill than some others, God requires it should bring forth more fruit to his praise than others.

II. To whom may the church or vineyard of Christ be said to be let?

To whom the vineyard of Christ is let. Answ. I. Principally it may be said to be let to the pastors, teachers, and to such who are or ought to be helps of government; for the government of a gospel-church is not wholly committed to the pastor or presbyter, but it lies in the church or brotherhood. It is not said, "If he will not hear the elder, or the pastor; but if he hear not the church," &c., Matt. xviii. 17. They that Christ hath committed the care, the rule, and government of the church to, as the Jewish church was let out to the priests and elders of Israel.

2. It may in some sense be said to be let also to every member, for every member is an hired servant of Christ, and have their proper work appointed them by the Lord Jesus: they are entrusted with the gospel, the ordinances, and many spiritual gifts and privileges, and must be accountable to Christ, as well as the principal steward.

3. Moreover, in a remote sense it may be said to be let to all that accept the invitations of the gospel, and enter into the vineyard, and partake of the privileges and blessings thereof; nay, and not to them only, but to all to whom God doth vouchsafe the gospel and means of grace; they to whom the kingdom of God is given, or the ministration of the gospel, are entrusted, with which are all those nations, cities, and towns of the Gentiles, to whom the preaching of the gospel is afforded: and God expects fruit accordingly of them.

III. I shall show you what fruit it is which the Lord expecteth from those to whom he hath given or entrusted with the gospel, and the gospel-church.

God looks for fruit in respect of the quality and quantity of it.

I. He expecteth right fruit. He looked of old his vineyard should bring forth grapes, "not wild grapes." As he sows the seed of the word in his vineyard or garden, so he looks it should bring forth the fruit of the word, i. e., the fruit of faith and conversion: and such that are united to Jesus Christ, he looks that they should bring forth the fruits of the Spirit, or the fruit of good trees. For "the tree must be first made good before the fruit can be good," Matt. xii. 33. "The fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance," &c., Gal. v. 22. This is part of that fruit Christ looks his vineyard should bring forth; these husbandmen should see that the fruit they bring forth be such as becomes the gospel of Christ. It must be the fruit of holiness. "But now being made free from sin, and become servants to God, ye have your fruit unto holiness, and the end everlasting life," Phil. i. 27, Rom. vi. vi. 22. Again the apostle saith, "For the fruit of the Spirit is in all goodness, and righteousness, and truth."

What is meant by letting out the vineyard to husbandmen.

A disparity.

God will call to account for the gospel, &c.

2. Christ looks they should bring forth the fruit of good works. "This is a faithful saying, and these things I will that thou constantly affirm, that they who have believed in God might be careful to maintain good works. These things are good and profitable to men." (1.) Good works are works performed by a good man, or by a converted person. (2.) They are all such things that God hath commanded, or are materially good. (3.) Also they are performed by the influence and assistance of God's Spirit. (4.) To a right, holy, and sincere end and design, not to think thereby to obtain God's favour and acceptance, not for self-profit or vain-glory, but to honour and glorify God. "Charge them that are rich in this world, that they be not high-minded, nor trust in uncertain riches, but in the living God, who giveth all things to enjoy; that they do good, that they be rich in good works, ready to distribute, willing to communicate," 1 Tim. vi. 17, 18.

1. It ought to be according to that cost and pains God hath been at with us, in order to our fruitfulness. God doth more for some vineyards than for others. May be some are planted in a very fruitful soil, as we who live in and about this city. Some vineyards have plentiful sowings and waterings also; so that God may say to them, as to his people of old, "What could I have done more to my vineyard, that I have not done," Isa. v. 4. The fruit should be according to the fruitful seasons God sends. "For the earth which drinketh in the rain that cometh oft upon it, and bringeth forth herbs for them by whom it is dressed, receiveth blessing from God." Some have but little divine rain, now and then a shower, whilst others have the rain fall, and the sun shine upon them every day. O how fruitful should such be!

God expects fruit according to the cost he hath been at with a people.

2. Christ's vineyard should bring fruit according to the time of its being planted. A vineyard newly planted cannot bring forth so much fruit as that which is come to a good growth, or to longer standing. The apostle alludes to this, to the rebuke of the Hebrew church: "For when for the time ye might have been teachers, ye have need that one teach you again which be the first principles of the oracles of God," &c., Heb. v. 12. They had made but a poor proficiency in knowledge, considering the time they had been planted.

God looks for fruit according to the time of our standing in his vineyard.

3. Fruit in due season. God sent his servants for to receive the fruit in the season. We must do good while it is in the power of our hand, and work "while it is day," Johu ix. 4. When the wind serves the mariner, that is the proper season for him to hoist up his sails and be gone. When the sowing time is come, the husbandman is at plough, and sows his seed; he observes the season of sowing, of weeding, and of reaping, and so should spiritual husbandmen also; when the rain falls, and softens the earth, it is good for ploughing. What can we do when the Spirit is withdrawn, or withholds his sweet, softening, and fruitful influences from us? Alas, some lose the season, and think to sow, when perhaps their reaping-time, or time of cutting down by death is come.

God looks for fruit in the season of it.

4. Fruit according to that measure or degree of grace and gifts received. Some receive more grace, and greater gifts than others: some receive two talents, some five. Some have much, or a great degree of knowledge, and others are entrusted with the riches of this world, by which means they are enabled to do much more for the church, the ministry, and poor, than others; and God expects fruit from them accordingly. "As every man hath received the gift, even so administer one to another, as good stewards of the manifold grace of God,"

God looks for fruit according to the degrees of gifts received.

whether they are spiritual gifts or abilities, or temporal gifts, God looks for fruit, and the increase of all he bestows upon his people.

5. Fruit according to those places or stations wherein God hath set us, whether pastors, deacons, fathers, or masters of families, or ancient members. Such that should be as fathers and mothers in Israel, God looks for more fruit from them than from others. Indeed all believers, or the trees of the Lord being full of sap, or should bring forth much fruit. "Hereby is my Father glorified, that ye bring forth much fruit, and so shall ye be my disciples," John xv. 8. So it will appear we are the disciples of Christ, or "Trees of righteousness, the planting of the Lord, that he may be glorified," Isa. lxi. 3.

Fruit according to our places in God's vineyard.

APPLICATION.

1. I infer, my brethren from hence, that we have more to care for, work, and labour for, than our own families. For the vineyard of the Lord is let out to us, he hath entrusted us with his vineyard or garden, to dress it, water it, and weed it, and to keep up the walls thereof, and to see it goes not to decay in our hands.

2. Also know, if through any fault or neglect of ours, it runs to ruin or decay, we shall be called to an account for it one day.

3. This severely reproves such that regard not the affairs of God's church. What, say some, shall I wrong my family to support the church? (God forbid there should be any such persons among you;) and let such know that God's family should be equally (if not more,) regarded than their own. Consider here a few things.

(1.) Will any wrong their own souls, or the church of God, to enrich themselves and their children? Shall they have great portions, and Christ be put off with next to nothing?

(2.) Is not the soul to have the preference above the body? Is it not more noble, more precious? And so ought not more cost and pains to be bestowed on that than on our outward man, or on children?

(3.) Cannot God blast what we have of the things of this world, or turn them into a curse, if we neglect his vineyard? nay, hath he done this formerly? See what the Lord by the prophet saith: "Ye have sown much, and bring in little; ye eat, but have not enough; ye drink, but ye are not filled with drink; ye clothe you, but ye are not warm; and he that earneth wages, doth it to put it into a bag with holes," Hag. i. 6. "Why, saith the Lord of Hosts, because of mine house that is waste. "And ye run every man in to his own house. I smote you with blasting," &c. "I will curse your blessings; yea, I have cursed them already, because ye lay it not to heart," Mal. ii. 2. Many complain of badness of trade, and how they waste their substance, and are grown poor; but the cause of this, I fear, is not laid to heart, may be the church and interest of Christ is, and hath been neglected.

(4.) Should not our love run in that channel that God's love, and Christ's love runs in? "He loves the gates of Sion more than all the dwelling places of Jacob," Psal. lxxvii. 2. Though he loves, and highly approves of family devotion, and the care of our own families, yet he prefers the public worship of his church above all family worship, and the care of his vineyard above the care of our own families or houses.

(5.) Should not the example of holy men of old be observed by us, and imitated? they are left as a pattern for us. What saith holy David, "The zeal of thine house hath eaten me up." I am afraid many among us may rather say, the zeal of our own house hath eaten up our thoughts, our talk, our time, our strength, and our treasure too, and but little of it hath been eat up with zeal for God's house.

(6.) May it not be just with God to let our houses and families fail and sink when we are careless, and regard not the vineyard or house of God, whether that flourishes or decays, stands or falls?

(7.) Suppose God should say, because you have slighted and neglected my house, my vineyard, my worship, my ministry, my ordinances, my poor, or have not sought first of all my kingdom, "Therefore shall the kingdom of God be taken from you, and given to another nation, bringing forth the fruit thereof." Thus he dealt by the Jews, or people of Israel.

Exhort. Be exhorted to labour after fruitfulness, and to be more concerned for the vineyard of the Lord of hosts.

Take a few motives to press this upon you.

1. Consider God looks for fruit. "And he looked that it should bring forth grapes," Isa. v. 2. He expecteth this from us, considering the great things he hath done for us. What could he well in an ordinary way do more? What peace have we? What a time of liberty? What a clear ministration? What showers and shinning from heaven have we had, above all people in the world?

2. Do you not glory of that union you have with Christ, and doubt not but you are married to Christ? Why consider, "We are married to Christ, that we should bring forth fruit to God," Rom. vii. 4. May it not be feared, that many of you are deceived, and have not attained as yet to that blessed union, since you are so barren?

3. Consider that barrenness under fruitful seasons, fruitful showers, and fruitful shinings, exposeth persons to God's curse. "But that which beareth thorns and briars is rejected, and is nigh unto cursing, whose end is to be burned," Heb. vi. 8. But I will say with the apostle, "I hope better things of you, and things that accompany salvation, though I thus speak," ver. 9.

4. Know however, that good fruits, fruits of righteousness are a certain evidence of the Severe reproof to such as neglect Christ's vine-

growth of grace, and of our union with Jesus Christ. "Show me thy faith without thy works, I will show you my faith by my works," James ii. 18.

5. Nothing glorifies God more than much fruit, nor commends religion, and puts a glory upon it more (to convince a blind world,) than love, charity, humility, a contempt of the world, and a holy and heavenly life and conversation; and this also becomes the gospel of Christ, and the house of God for ever. Phil. i. 27.

One word to you that are sinners, or such as yet are unrenewed.

1. Consider, you must become good trees before you can bring forth fruit to God; you must be united to Jesus Christ, and be born again. All the fruit which unconverted persons bring forth is but the product of nature, and but dead works, it not being the fruit of the Spirit, nor of their being spiritually quickened.

2. Here is a prize put into your hands, a vineyard for you to take and improve for God. What do you say, are you willing to become husbandmen, the Lord's husbandmen, to work in his vineyard? I will tell you, though his wages is called a penny, it will be more in value than the crowns and kingdoms of this world.

3. Never think to become fruitful to God, unless you are joined to the Lord, nor honour him as you ought, until you join yourselves to his church, or enter into the Lord's vineyard.

Shall a choice plant or flower be suffered to grow in the common field, where it is in danger to be trodden down, or plucked up by every traveller? No, it ought to be transplanted into some vineyard; so should you that are good trees be set in God's vineyard, that you may be cared for, and preserved from all dangers.

But so much now.

SERMON XXXI.

Jesus saith unto them, Did you never read in the scriptures, that the stone that the builders rejected, the same is become the head-stone of the corner? This is the Lord's doing.—&c., Matt. xxi. 42.

I TOLD you by builders here, our Saviour meant the Scribes and Pharisees, and masters of Israel. Who the first builders were.

2. He may refer also to any particular person, who is compared to a builder. "Every wise man that hears Christ's sayings, and doth them, is likened to a builder," Matt. vii. 24.

3. Moreover, gospel ministers are spiritual builders; they build not only their own souls upon Jesus Christ, but others also; and not only particular souls, but churches also. "According to the grace of God given unto me, as a wise master-builder, I have laid the foundation," &c., 1 Cor. iii. 10.

Note from hence,

Doct. I. That the ministers of Christ are spiritual builders.

Doct. II. That Jesus Christ is the only foundation, upon which all wise builders build themselves and others.

Doct. III. That some ministers or builders reject Christ, who is the foundation and chief corner-stone.

Doct. IV. That the laying of Christ as the foundation and head-stone of the corner, is the Lord's doing.

Doct. V. That Jesus Christ being laid for a foundation, and yet rejected by some of the chief builders, is a marvellous thing in the sight of God's people.

I shall begin with the first of these.

Doct. I. That the ministers of Christ are spiritual builders.

First, Let me premise some things, viz.

1. That God himself is the chief master-builder. "He that builds all things is God," Heb. iii. 4. He that built all things must needs be the great and chief builder. (1.) God built this world, the heavens, and the earth, and the whole fabric thereof; it was he that laid the foundation of the earth, and spread forth the heavens as a curtain. (2.) Our bodies and souls are of God's framing. "He is God our Maker—thou hast made us, and not we ourselves." Again it is said, "We are all the work of thy hands." (3.) The angels also were made and framed by the Lord; it was he that gave them being. (4.) It was the Lord also that formed the blessed body of our Lord Jesus Christ. Therefore the great God is the chief Master-builder.

2. God is the chief spiritual Builder, in that Christ as Mediator was but his servant, by whom he builds his church, and ministers are his under-workmen. Also all that wisdom and skill they have, is given them from the Lord. "According to the grace of God which is given me as a wise master-builder, I have laid the foundation," &c., 1 Cor. iii. 10.

3. In that they ought not to do anything, but by his order and special directions, nor otherwise than according to the pattern he hath given them in his word; not one nail nor pin must be put into the building, without his direction.

4. In that the great God laid Jesus Christ for a foundation. "Behold I lay in Zion for a foundation, a Stone," &c., Isa. xxviii. 16.

5. In that both matter and form of the building is contrived, appointed, and ordered by God himself, of what form, of what materials, what kind of stones, how hewn, squared, and polished by his word and Spirit. All is the Father's own appointment.

Secondly, I shall proceed, and show you how fitly ministers may be compared to builders.

1. A builder ought to be a man of wisdom, or one skilful in the art and mystery of building: so ought every minister to be endowed with wisdom in the mystery of spiritual building. An ignorant builder is not to be employed in any ordinary building, much less in the king's palace; but great care should be taken, that no ignorant preacher should be employed in building the souls of men, and church of the living God. What ignorant builders were they that called themselves master-builders in Israel, who knew not on what foundation to build, but rejected the chief Corner-stone?

2. A wise master-builder takes special care, first of all to lay a right foundation, and to lay it widely also. Moreover, he must know what matter, or with what materials he must build thereon, that the superstructure may suit or agree (in some degree at least) with the foundation. So should all spiritual builders see what kind of materials they lay into the spiritual building: and as Christ is a living foundation, so the stones that build up his spiritual house, should be also spiritual stones. "Ye also as lively stones," &c., 1 Pet. vii. 5, 6. Their care about laying a good and sure foundation, ought to be for divers reasons.

 (2.) Because if they are built upon a false foundation, or a rotten foundation, the soul, and all that is built thereon, will fall and perish for ever; nay, and the fall of such will be exceeding great also, as our Lord himself shows us, Matt. vii. 27.

(3.) Because in this consisted the folly and ruin of those Jewish builders. This parable shows how they rejected Jesus Christ; "Yet other foundation no man can lay," 1 Cor. iii. 11. But on this foundation they did not, would not build, not on Jesus Christ, not on his merits and righteousness, no, but upon their own legal inherent righteousness.

3. A builder sometimes before he can build, bath an old building to pull down, and much rubbish also to remove, before he lay the foundation; like as the poor Jews had, that rebuilt the material temple. So it is here: (1.) For there was the Jewish church to be pulled down, it being grown old; and belonging to the old covenant, it must stand no longer. (2.) There was the rubbish of false doctrine, that was among them, about justification, to be removed also. This was in the apostles' way, and made them to work hard to remove and take it quite away. The Jews were hardly brought to renounce their old church-state, and church-membership, which took in the carnal seed; they pleaded they had Abraham to their father. And as difficult it was to take them off of their own righteousness, circumcision, and other legal rites and ceremonies. Alas, these blind builders would by all means build on the rubbish of their own good works, when indeed they had none, for their works were evil. Moreover, Christ's ministers now have much work to do, to remove the rubbish that lies in their way. Blessed Luther was raised up to remove the rubbish of the Popish church about justification, and it was the main business he was to do, and he laboured hard, and like a wise builder. The opposition he met with from Popish work-mongers, was very great; and what rubbish he removed in the day time, Satan by his ministers strove to throw in his way by night.

We also in our days have not only like rubbish to remove, in respect of justification, and other doctrinal truths, but also in respect of self-constitution and discipline, which Luther concerned himself but little about. (1.) We have the old popish doctrine in a Ministers of the Gospel are builders.

A sure foundation ought to be laid.

See the simile opened, Matt. vii. 24, 25.

Gospel builders have much rubbish to remove.

new disguise, lying in our way, about justification; many now striving to mix with Christ's righteousness, their own faith, obedience, and good works. (2.) The Popish constitution of the visible church, and many popish ceremonies, and stones of Babylon also lie in our way. How do some argue for a national church, and others for the fleshly seed to be church members, being ignorant of that twofold covenant God made with Abraham. (3.) We have also the rubbish of many errors, and damnable heresies, to remove; some denying Christ to be the Son of God, or of the same essence with the Father; also his satisfaction: some build on the light within, and others on the power of the creature. Moreover, many of late strive to overthrow at once the very foundation of the Christian religion, declaring that there is nothing mysterious in Christianity, the better to establish their wild notions, of crying up only natural religion, ridiculing the doctrine of the gospel about imputative righteousness, and magnifying depraved reason above the revelation of Christ in his blessed word; so that spiritual builders, Christ's ministers, have hard work, in withstanding these Sanballats, besides other rubbish they have to remove.

4. A builder's work is hard also, in hewing and squaring timber and stones for the building, some of which are rugged, knotty, and very cross-grained; so ministers (who build with proper material) find many sinners like knotty timber, or rough stones, viz., obstinate, stubborn, proud, and self-conceited, and of a scragged and perverse spirit or temper. Not one stone indeed can, without the hand of the Almighty God, the great Master-builder, be fitted for the building. My brethren, the ministry of gospel is to "bring hills and mountains low, and to fill up, or exalt valleys; to make the crooked straight, and rough things plain:" which is not easily done. O what unmortified spirits, cross and contradicting spirits do ministers meet with? They are Christ's axe, or instruments in his hand. "I have hewed them by the prophets," &c. The word of God is the hammer, by which rocks are broken to pieces, Hos. vi. 5; Jer. xxiii. 29.

5. A builder prepares his materials first, and makes everything ready before he raiseth the superstructure: so should Christ's spiritual builders. "Prepare thy work without, and make it fit for thyself in the field, and then build thy house," Prov. xxiv. 27. (1.) Ministers must not lay stones into the building, as they come out of the quarry, or as they come into the world: let them be dug out of what pit or quarry soever, they are by nature the offspring of dead Adam, and children of wrath. "Look unto the rock from which ye were hewed, and to the hole of the pit whence ye were digged," Isa. li. 2. "Thy father was an Amorite, and thy mother an Hittite," Ezek. xvi. 3. (2.) They must lay no unconverted persons into God's temple; they must be born again; not baptized and then taught, or made disciples; no this is contrary to the directions and pattern given in the mount. "Go, disciple all nations, baptizing them," Matt. xxviii. 18, 19; i. e., such that are first taught, or made disciples: to act otherwise is to pervert the order of the great commission. Our Lord would have his ministers to build with such materials, that there might be no need of the axe to hew them (I mean use means or pains to renew them) after they are laid into the building. The building of Solomon's temple was a type of this. "And the house, when it was a building, was built of stone made ready before it was brought thither: so that there was neither hammer, nor axe, nor any tool of iron heard in the house, while it was in building," 1 King v. 7. But can this be expected by some builders now, who build with materials, or subjects incapable to be either hewed or squared, I mean infants, or such who only are once born, not being capable subjects of faith and repentance? and if they lay such stones in the building, will there not need both the axe and the hammer of the word afterwards?

6. I told you a builder is to consider the quality or nature of the foundation; if it be a rich and costly one, the materials ought to bear some proportion thereto. Now the foundation on which we build, is a precious stone, far exceeding the rich sapphire, sardius, or beryl; nay, a living stone, elect, precious, of infinite worth and value: therefore ministers must see they build not thereon unhewn wood, brick, or rough stones, but gold, silver, and precious stones, that there may be a suitableness between the foundation and the superstructure; they must be lively "stones that build up the spiritual house," 1 Pet. 2; i. e., men and women that have a principle of divine life in them, such that are born again, born of God, or new creatures.

7. A master-builder knows how many principal pillars, main pillars, the palace is to have, which he is to build for the king; and he knows also the proper placing of every one of them; so a minister ought to know the number of fundamental principles.

Ministers work hard like builders, in hewing and squaring timber and stones to build God's temple.

The word

Matter of a building must be prepared and made fit without.

The church must be built with precious living stones.

A Minister should know the number of the fundamental principles of salvation.

(1. Fundamentals of salvation, or all the essentials of the Christian religion, which every believer should be established in, nay and is established in, or he can be no true Christian: for he that errs in any fundamental point, or in an essential of salvation, is an heretic, and without repentance cannot be saved.

(2.) Moreover, he ought to know how many essentials, or fundamental principles there are contained in the constitution of a true regular gospel church, and also know how, and where to place them in order; for if a church want but one essential principle, it is defective, and no complete congregation, according to the primitive constitution: if it hath six, as it appears it hath, and wants but one, it is imperfect; the six are these, viz., "Repentance, faith, baptism, laying on of hands, the belief of the resurrection of the dead, and the eternal judgment," Heb. vi. 1, 2; Heb. v. 12; Acts viii. 12, 17; Acts xix. 6. These are called fundamentals, or foundation principles. But certainly "baptism, and laying on of hands," are not fundamentals of salvation: for can none be saved, but such that are baptized, &c.? evident it is, the penitent thief was saved, but he was not baptized. These six principles therefore, as here laid down, are fundamentals of a gospel church: and as some are such, so they all belong to babes in Christ, or are the A B C of a Christian man, in order to his regular admittance into the church. True, a church may be materially a true church, and formally true, too, (i. e., they may give themselves up to the Lord, and to one another, as a congregation, to walk together in the fellowship of the gospel) who may not be baptized, nor own laying on of hands; but then they must be considered, not a complete gospel church, but in some things defective, in respect to its constitution and regular gospel form, or as wanting a pillar, &c. A house may be a real house, though it may want a principal post it stands on; it may be pretty firm, and may stand though one be missing; however, it is not so safe, to want one principle of the doctrine of Christ.

8. A builder of a great and famous house, hath not only his rule, but the mould or pattern of it also, he works by rule: so a minister hath the rule of God's word, the rule of the holy gospel, and also the pattern of the first apostolical churches: the church at Jerusalem was a pattern for all churches, being the first church planted, or built after Christ's ascension, and the pouring forth of the Holy Spirit.

9. A builder must see that all the building be well and fitly framed together, and all fastened upon, and fixed to the foundation: so a minister must endeavour, and see that all the saints or members of the church, are well knit or united one to another by the Spirit, and bonds of love, and well fastened and united by the same Spirit to Jesus Christ. "And are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ being the chief corner-stone. In whom all the building fitly framed together, groweth unto an holy temple in the Lord. In whom you also are built together for an habitation of God, through the Spirit," Eph. ii. 20, 21, 22.

10. A builder gives special directions about the door into the house, and that the way be plain to the house, that strangers may readily find it; so ought a minister to make known what ordinances are initiating, or which tend to the letting into a visible church. Now all protestants generally agree, that baptism is an initiating ordinance, and that no unbaptized person should be let into a gospel-congregation.

Lastly, a builder, after the foundation is laid, and he has raised the superstructure, goes on to finish or perfect the whole building; so ought every minister to see to perfect the whole work, or to press the saints to follow peace and holiness, even to go on unto perfection, that every member may be presented blameless in Christ Jesus.

APPLICATION.

1. Bless God for Christ, in that he is laid for a foundation. How safe is that house, and that soul that is built upon him. What a precious and durable rock is Jesus Christ? How happy are true Protestant churches which are built upon Christ? how firm do they stand? and on what a rotten foundation is the Popish church built upon, that is built, as they say, upon Peter? but it is built indeed upon the traditions of men, or upon the sands, or without a foundation, it having sprung out of the apostacy; and the Pope may as well be said to be its foundation, as its head; for he that is the head of the true church, is the foundation thereof.

Also the number and fundamentals of a visible church.

Ministers must do all by the rule of God's word, &c.

A spiritual building must be fitly framed.

Ministers should show the door into the church.

Ministers must build the saints up in their most holy faith.

2. It may inform also, of the great danger of rejecting Jesus Christ, the only foundation of the church, of our faith and salvation; and what do they less than reject Christ, the chief corner-stone, that rock on which he hath built his church, who deny his Godhead? "Thou art Christ, the Son of the living God," Matt. xvi. 16. God of the essence of the Father; the Son of Man, or Man of the seed of David, God-man in one person. On this Christ thus owned, thus believed in and confessed, is the church of God built; and what do they less than reject this foundation, who build their salvation on morality, on a sober life, or on the light within, or on their own inherent righteousness, or on the mere mercy of an absolute God, and are ignorant of, or own not Christ the Mediator?

The great danger of rejecting the corner-stone.

3. Also do not such reject this corner-stone, that believe not in Christ, or that refuse the offers of grace, or that live in a continual neglect of the means thereof, and defer the business of salvation out of love to sin, or this world?

4. Moreover, it informs us, what a great blessing faithful gospel-ministers are to a people, and to the church of God. Can a house be built without builders, or such who are skilled in that art and mystery? so how can souls believe without a preacher sent of God, or churches be built, unless God raise up some men, endowed with wisdom and skill in gospel mysteries, who well know both the matter and form of a true church, and how to build it by the rule Christ hath left? And how should such builders be encouraged and honoured for their work sake, they being labourers together with God, and stewards of the mysteries of Christ?

The blessing of gospel ministers great.

1 Cor. iv. 1.

5. It may also be for caution to ministers to take heed what doctrine they preach, and what materials they lay into the building; not wood, hay, or stubble, but gold, silver, and precious stones. The day is coming that will try or declare "every man's work, of what sort it is," 1 Cor. iii. 13.

6. What comfort may this afford also to all such that are truly built upon the Lord Jesus Christ? such churches are precious churches, and souls blessed souls; their state is happy, and their standing is sure. There are many other uses that might be made, which I will leave to you to make.

I shall proceed to another proposition, viz.

Doct. That Jesus Christ is the chief stone, or the only foundation of God's spiritual building.

I. I shall prove this proposition.

II. Show what use Christ is of, considered as a foundation, and as a chief corner-stone.

III. Show who reject Christ, as the only foundation, and chief corner-stone.

IV. Apply it.

1. I shall prove that Jesus Christ is the only foundation, and chief corner-stone, upon which the souls of all true believers are built, and the true church is built.

Christ the only foundation.

1. He is called the foundation-stone. "Behold I lay in Zion, for a foundation, a stone, a tried stone, a precious corner-stone, elect, precious," Isa. xxviii. 16. In another place he is called the chief corner-stone; "Behold I lay in Zion a chief corner-stone, elect, precious," 1 Pet. ii. 6. Now all know the foundation stone is the chief stone of all the building, because take away the foundation-stone, and the whole building presently is overthrown, and falleth down to the ground.

2. Because there is no other foundation but Christ alone. "Other foundation can no man lay, but that which is laid, which is Jesus Christ," 1 Cor. iii. 11. Therefore such that build not upon Jesus Christ, build without a foundation; "Like a man that builds an house without a foundation," Luke vi. 48.

II. I shall show what use Christ is of, in the spiritual building, or show what Christ as a foundation does denote.

First, Jesus Christ is of the same use to the spiritual building, as a foundation is to a material building, which is well laid.

1. A foundation for a building that is well laid, is deeply laid, such dig deep; so Christ was deeply laid. (1.) In the eternal decree and purpose of God. God designed from everlasting to lay the Lord Jesus Christ, as the foundation on which all his elect should build (and on whom he would build every believer, and his church also) yea, the whole Trinity were concerned in deep counsel, to lay Christ as Mediator, on whom all that are, or shall be saved, were to build, or be built by God himself. (2.) And such that will build on him, must dig (as it were) deep into God's eternal purpose and decree, and there they will find Christ laid for a foundation.

The foundation is laid deep.

2. A foundation also is actually laid, when the builder is fixed in his purpose, and hath dug deep, and finds firm ground, or safe building, he then lays the foundation-stone; so the Father finding in his eternal wisdom, and according to that counsel held in eternity, good, safe, and firm building on his own Son as Mediator, he laid him for the foundation. (1.) In that holy covenant and compact that was between God the Father, and God the Son, before the foundation of the earth was laid; he foreseeing the fall of man, laid Jesus Christ in the covenant of redemption, or covenant of grace and peace, as the only foundation. Hence the Father saith, "Behold, I lay in Sion, for a foundation, a stone," &c. He had laid him in his decree, and in that holy compact, and therefore he in the execution of the same decree and covenant, actually also laid our Lord Jesus Christ, as the foundation-stone, &c. This I have spoken to in opening the parts of this parable; therefore I shall proceed.

3. Jesus Christ laid himself for a foundation. (1.) In his doctrine. "Upon this rock I will build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it;" that is, upon myself, as thou hast confessed me to be the Christ, "The Man Christ Jesus; Jesus, the Son of the living God." Thus he hath laid himself for a foundation, on which we must be built. (2.) Christ laid himself for the foundation also, in his actual obedience, and his death, in bearing our sins, and that wrath that was due to us for them, and so satisfying the justice of God; or on his active and passive obedience, or on what he did and suffered, we must build our justification, pardon of sin, and salvation.

4. The ministers of Christ also lay Jesus Christ for the foundation; as Paul saith, "According to the grace of God, which is given to me, as a wise master-builder, I have laid the foundation." This is a ministerial laying of Christ for the foundation. Paul preached Jesus to be the foundation, and chief corner-stone, upon which he taught all he preached to build their faith and hope of salvation.

5. Every true believer, by the Holy Spirit, may be said likewise to lay the Lord Jesus Christ for the foundation; he refuses all other foundations, and will build upon nothing else but Christ alone. And thus Christ is laid as the foundation of the spiritual building, nay, and a believer lays Christ deep also. (1.) Deep in his judgment and understanding. (2.) Deep in his faith, trust, and dependance. (3.) And deep in his love and affections.

Secondly, Christ, as the foundation, is of great use, not only in respect of what a foundation is to a house, but also for direction.

1. In respect of what kind of foundation he is, viz., a precious stone. This shows the excellency and glory of this foundation, and also what a glorious fabric God intends to raise and build upon him. If you see a master-builder (who builds a house for a mighty prince) to lay the foundation with precious stones of an inestimable value, as jasper, sapphire, emerald, chrysolites, beryl, onyx, or the like; you presently say, O what a rare, a costly, and glorious house will that be, which he designs to build on such a foundation! for he concludes there will be some proportion or suitableness between the foundation and the superstructure. So it is here. Hence the new Jerusalem (a figure of the church) as the foundation, is laid with precious stones; "So the twelve gates were made of twelve pearls, and the city paved with pure gold," Rev. xxi. 21.

2. The Lord Jesus is not only called a precious stone, but also a chosen stone; for like as a wise builder chooseth out stones that are most fit for the foundation, both for beauty and duration, so the wisdom of God chose Christ as a most fit foundation stone in every respect.

3. Christ is also a tried stone, "Behold I lay in Sion for a foundation, a stone, a tried stone."

(1.) Stones are tried by a wise master-builder, and then laid in the foundation, so the wise God and Father tried the Lord Jesus Christ by his infinite wisdom, and found none in heaven nor earth fit for this use and purpose, but Christ only.

(2.) The Lord Jesus also came under actual trial. (1.) The devil tempted, and tried and strove to mar and spoil him, and to render him unfit for a foundation for sinners Matt. iv. 1, 2. to build upon, by those temptations our Lord met with when he was baptized and led into the wilderness; but he abode as firm as a rock not to be pierced. (2.) The instruments of Satan also tried him. How was he tempted and tried Christ actually laid for a foundation.

The Father found good ground in laying Christ for the foundation.

Ministers lay Christ for a foundation.

Believers also lay Christ for a foundation.

Christ as a foundation is for direction to the builder.

Christ a tried stone and by whom tried.

by wicked men, by their hellish spite and malice, but abode unmoveable, breaking all Satan's tools to pieces. (3.) The Father also actually tried him, by hiding his face from him. (4.) Divine justice likewise tried him, by drawing forth her glittering sword against him; and this at God's command. "Awake, O sword, against my shepherd, and against the man that is my fellow, saith the Lord of hosts, smite the shepherd," &c., Zech. xiii. 7. But he bore this trial also and remained untouched or unshaken, or a firm and sure foundation. (5.) Moreover many thousands of poor believers have tried this foundation-stone, both before he came in the flesh, and since also, by venturing their precious souls upon him, and they all found him a firm and sure foundation. (6.) The whole universal church had tried him by building on him, and found he never failed her. And, my brethren, no sinner, though he had never so great guilt on his conscience, and tempted by Satan to say, there was no hope; and though sometimes ready to give way unto his unbelieving heart, utterly to despair, yet in believing and casting himself upon the Lord Jesus, he had help, or found this stone was a sure and firm foundation to him. No storms, no floods, no earthquakes, nor attempts of men, sin, the world, death, nor devils, could ever shake or move this foundation-stone.

Thirdly, Jesus Christ, as the foundation-stone, is of great use in the spiritual building, in that all the precious stones that tend to build up this spiritual house, are united to him (like as stones are cemented and united to a material building) or being fitly framed, are knit together for a habitation of God through the Spirit.

Fourthly, Christ, as a foundation, bears up, supports, or sustains the weight of all the whole spiritual fabric, as a foundation doth the whole superstructure. Christ bears up the whole, and every part, every member, or every stone or piece of timber laid in the building, for as the whole church relies upon him, and is sustained and borne up by him, so is every particular believer also. Every saint depends upon Jesus Christ for redemption, reconciliation, justification, pardon of sin, adoption, final perseverance, and eternal life; and likewise for every grace, and for increase of grace, for strength in weakness, and for succour in times of temptation, and for courage in times of amazing trials, and indeed for all supplies for the soul, and body also.

Fifthly, as the foundation of a building supports all the materials and whole fabric thereof, so it doth also the rich furniture of it: all is sustained by the foundation, though never so great a weight be put therein, so the Lord Jesus Christ bears up and sustains all the spiritual furniture of his church, and of every true Christian; every grace is supported by him; and he is the foundation of every ordinance, and of all spiritual gifts, and of all the promises, all the promises run primarily to Christ, and the elect in Christ, "For all the promises of God are in him yea, and in him Amen, to the glory of God the Father," 2 Cor. i. 20. The success and blessing of the word wholly depends upon Jesus Christ; preaching, prayer, not any duty hath any efficacy in it or them, without Jesus Christ.

III. I shall show, that Jesus Christ, the foundation-stone of the church, far excels all material foundations.

1. Other foundations are laid with many stones united and cemented together: but Christ our spiritual foundation is but one entire stone, which adds to its wonderful strength. God hath not laid in Sion for a foundation, stones in the plural, no, but only one single stone; we build on none, on nothing, but Christ alone.

2. Material stones laid for foundation, are but of little worth, comparatively to this, though they should be precious stones. Jesus Christ is more worth than ten thousand worlds, he is God over all, blessed for evermore. They are lifeless stones, by nature congealed, &c. but Christ is a living stone, an active and lively stone; having life in himself, being filled with the Holy Spirit, he sends forth life, or a vital principle to cement and unite all the stones of this spiritual building to himself as the foundation.

3. Other foundations, it is true, may be laid upon a rock, but this foundation is a rock, "Upon this rock will I build my church," Matt. xvi. 18. Christ the rock of ages, rocks are firm and unmovable, but how unmoveable then is this rock? rocks also are strong, permanent, and durable; but how strong, how permanent and durable then is this rock, this foundation?

4. Other foundations may be shaken and decay; length of time makes them moulder, by which means the building is in danger, and will fall, but "Jesus Christ is the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever," Heb. xiii. 8. "I am God, and change not," Mal. iii. 6. Can he that laid the foundation of the earth decay, "And thou, Lord, in the beginning (speaking of the Son) hast laid the foundation of the earth, and the heavens are the works of thine hands; they shall perish, but thou remainest; and they all wax old, as doth a garment, and as a vesture shalt thou fold them up, and they shall be changed; but thou art the same, and thy years fail not," Heb. i. 10, 11, 12.

All believers, like stones, are united to Christ the foundation. Eph. ii. 21.

Christ supports the whole church and every believer, as a foundation the building.

Christ the foundation-stone, far excels all foundations.

5. A foundation is oftimes found faulty or defective, and therefore it is digged up, and another laid, but no fault, nothing defective can be found in Christ, as a foundation; and therefore he shall abide, and no other be ever laid, for as man cannot, so God will not.

6. Another foundation, though very firm, may by an earthquake be shaken, and be removed out of its place; but my brethren, Christ is such a foundation that can never be shaken nor removed, the greatest revolutions, mutations, and changes, turnings and overturnings that can come, cannot overturn this foundation-stone. Commonwealths, national constitutions, and all false churches shall be shaken and brought down, and that quickly too; but Jesus Christ, the foundation of the true and invisible church built upon him, shall abide for ever.

7. Another foundation cannot preserve the house that is built upon it; but Jesus Christ is able, doth, and will, preserve that soul that is built upon him. "I know whom I have believed, and I am persuaded he is able to keep that which I have committed to him unto that day," 2 Tim. i. 12. O blessed souls that build upon Jesus Christ! "They shall never perish, neither can any pluck them out of my hands," John x. 28.

8. The ground on which another foundation is laid may sink or give way; but the ground on which Christ our foundation is laid can never give way, because the ground on which he is laid is the eternal decree and unchangeable purpose of God, "The foundation of God stands sure." The absolute decrees of God are compared to mountains of brass. "I will not alter the thing that is gone out of my mouth," Psal. lxxxix. 34, 38. So much as to this.

Question. But of what use is Christ to the spiritual building, as he is called the corner-stone?

Ans. 1. The corner-stone of a building is the medium by which the walls are united, pull down the corner-stone, and the sides of the house are divided or separated the one from the other: so by Christ both God and man are united; he is our days-man, that lays his hand upon both; he, as Mediator, unites God to us, and us to God. Moreover, he united Jews and Gentiles in one body to make one spiritual house; and he, like a corner-stone, cements and joins all believers together in the bands of love.

2. The corner-stone of a building is for direction; the under-workmen are to take their rule from thence, and all other stones must be laid level and even with that, so Jesus Christ is our rule, or a believer's direction, in respect to his doctrine and holy example; all must lie level and even to the doctrine and pattern of Christ the chief corner-stone.

3. The corner-stone sustains the house against all threatening shocks or storms whatsoever, if the corner of the house gives way, down it goes. "The wind smote the four corners of the house, and it fell," Job i. 17. But how fast is the spiritual building! what wind, what storm can smite this corner? Christ is every corner-stone of the house, and so defends it from all winds, out of every quarter of the heavens. If it blows from mount Sinai, it cannot hurt our corner; if divine justice beat upon the house, yet will it stand; but the storm that justice once raised, is laid by Jesus Christ, nor can any storm raised by Satan, or in the conscience of a believer, endanger the soul, because the corner-stone secureth all.

4. The corner-stones are the strongest for bearing, and the fairest for beauty; they are oftimes curiously wrought, and that adds a comeliness and glory to the house; so Christ, as he bears all the whole spiritual building, being the corner-stone, he is the beauty and glory thereof: for what a curious wrought stone is Jesus Christ the Mediator and corner-stone of God's building!

Know that Christ far excels all corner-stones; for they may be marred or drop out, and the building be in danger; but Christ cannot, no enemy can touch him, nor can his beauty be marred or decayed.

APPLICATION.

1. This informs us that the love of God (as also his wisdom) is infinite and inconceivable in his giving, contriving, and laying Jesus Christ for the foundation for his church, and every believer to build upon.

2. We may infer, that God designed in and by Jesus Christ to build his elect upon sure basis, and not to build us in the second Adam, as he did in the first. O what a vast difference is there between the nature of the first covenant and the second! The covenant of grace made between the Father and the Son "is ordered in all things, and sure," 2 Sam. xxxiii. 5. Our standing is firm; we are built upon a durable foundation.

3. We infer, that the state and condition of all that are in Christ is such that they need fear no adversary, no storm, no temptation; no devil can destroy them, or overthrow their precious souls.

4. Also it may inform us, who are true ministers, viz., such that build the souls of sinners upon Jesus Christ, or lay Christ for the only foundation.

Exhort. Since Christ is the foundation and the Corner-stone, that bears up the whole building, and is the beauty of it, let him have all the glory. The church and every believer ought to exalt and magnify the Lord Jesus Christ. O see you do this; "For worthy is the lamb that was slain, to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honour and glory, and blessing," Rev. v. 12.

Trial. Let us examine ourselves; are we built upon Jesus Christ? It behoveth every soul well to weigh and consider what foundation they build their hope of salvation upon.

1. Hast thou rejected all other foundations; dost thou not build on purposes and resolutions, what thou wilt do or become hereafter? nor on any thing thou hast already done; nor on man, because of their great learning or parts, and take what they say upon trust.

2. Dost thou prize and esteem Jesus Christ above all things? a hypocrite hath something or other that lies nearer his heart than the Lord Jesus Christ.

3. Dost thou count all things loss for him, even all thy external privileges, a name among men, thy estate, thy own righteousness, &c.?

4. Dost thou accept him as a Prince to rule in thee, and govern thee, as well as a Priest to offer up the atoning sacrifice to save thee? art thou taught and led by him also, as the great Prophet God hath raised up, by whom he hath revealed his whole mind and will to his people?

Quest. What must I or a poor sinner do to build upon Christ?

Ans. 1. Let all thy sins go, resolve no longer to live in sin; for every sinner who walks in a course of wickedness, and yet says he believes in Christ, trusteth in Christ, his faith is nothing but presumption, and he is one that builds not upon Jesus Christ.

What a sinner must do, that would build upon Christ.

2. Let also thy former hopes of heaven go, and whatsoever was gain to thee, count it but dung that thou mayest win Christ, and build upon him, and be found in him.

3. Consult not with flesh and blood (as Paul saith he did not); do not say, "I will, first bury my Father, or bid them farewell that are at my house;" or first get leave of my father, mother, husband, wife, or friends: no, but resolve to follow Christ, though thou lose the love of all thy relations.

4. Yet consult what building upon Christ, and following Christ may cost thee: this thou art directed to do by our Lord himself, and it is great wisdom to weigh this well; for some for want of this have when troubles arose, been offended at Christ, and come to nothing.

See the parable opened, "who begins to build a tower," &c.

5. Be much in prayer, and attend with diligence upon the word of God. Faith is absolutely necessary, no man can build upon Christ without faith; "and faith comes by hearing the gospel preached," Rom. x. 17. It is the ordinary way by which God works faith in the soul; for who is it that buildeth upon Jesus Christ, but he that truly believeth in him? believing is building.

6. Dig deep to find what righteousness doth agree and suit with the law, justice, holiness of God: labour to see the evil of sin, and to know what it is that satisfieth, or hath satisfied for sin, and for the breach of the law; and labour to see the fulness of that grace that is in Christ, and what the Father hath made him to be to every one that believeth in him.

SERMON XXXII.

The stone that the builders rejected, the same is become the head-stone of the corner ; this is the Lord's doing, &c.—Matt. xxi. 42.

FROM hence note,

Doct. Some that pretend to be builders, do reject Christ, the chief Corner-stone, nay the only foundation.

IV. I shall briefly hint a few things, to discover who they are that reject or refuse Jesus Christ, the only foundation.

1st. Such reject Christ, that build their hope of finding mercy, and being saved, upon an absolute God, or upon the simple mercy of God (or as considered in himself) being ignorant of that Mediator who is between God and man; for hath not God given encouragement to any sinner to depend upon him, or to trust on his simple mercy, as in himself, and apart from Christ? Can they expect pardon of sin, justification, or eternal life, without coming to him by Jesus Christ? O, saith Luther, I will have nothing to do with an absolute God, (or to that purpose) that is, with God, as considered in himself, or without approaching to him by the Mediator. "No man cometh to the Father, but by me," (John. xiv. 9.) saith our Lord Jesus Christ; no, nor can they, for out of Christ "God is a consuming fire," Heb. xii. 29. This was the blindness of the Jews, they cried, "we have God to be our Father;" that is, though they were ignorant of Christ, the way to the Father, as Mediator, yet they called him their Father, and yet at the same time rejected the Lord Jesus Christ. If you ask a Jew now, how he hopes to be saved, he will tell you his hope is in God, thinking an absolute God (or God as in himself) will save him, being ignorant of the justice and holiness of his nature, neither knowing how, or by what means justice is satisfied.

Objection. Is not God a gracious and merciful God?

Ans. Yea goodness, grace, and mercy, is one of the attributes of God or a glorious perfection of his. Nay, goodness in God is that which renders his glorious Majesty the only object of the love and affections of all his saints. For had he not been a good and gracious God, a God full of love and mercy, he had never sent his only-begotten Son, to be our Surety and Saviour. What could show or demonstrate greater love and mercy? "God so loved the world, that he gave his only-begotten Son," &c., John iii. 16. Yet (as you have often heard) God is just, as well as gracious and merciful, and not one dram of mercy will he let out in a way to darken or eclipse his justice and holiness; therefore all that will find mercy with God, must come to him in Christ, who hath satisfied the law and justice of God; for without a complete satisfaction, wrath would consume us. "God will in no wise clear the guilty," Exod. xxxvii. 7; that is, as a simple act of mercy. Mercy, my brethren, hath its proper channel in which it flows forth, and the Mediator Jesus Christ is that channel; therefore such who come not to God by Jesus Christ, reject the only foundation and head-stone of the corner. To confirm this take two or three arguments.

Argument. 1. If nothing but the blood of Jesus Christ can satisfy the justice of God, or without a satisfaction no man can be justified, pardoned, or saved; then unless sinners plead that satisfaction made by Christ's blood, and his merits, they cannot be justified, pardoned, or saved; but the former is true, ergo, &c.

2. Arg. If any should come to God, and not by Christ, justice would plead against them, and have a stronger plea to condemn them, than mercy can have to justify, pardon, and save them; then all that would be justified, pardoned, and saved, must come to God by Jesus Christ, but the former is true, ergo, &c. This I have, in speaking to another parable, made evident.

3. Arg. If God should, as a simple act of his mercy (or as an absolute God) pardon a guilty sinner, it would reflect upon the honour of his wisdom, and love to Christ (as well as on his justice in laying our sins upon his own Son, and punishing him as our Surety;) then God will not, cannot in honour, &c., pardon any guilty sinner, as an act of simple mercy, or as an absolute God: but the former is true, ergo, &c. For might not Christ say, "O my Father, why didst thou make my soul an offering for sin, to satisfy thy justice, since

Who they are that reject Christ, the chief Corner-stone.

The ignorance of the Jews.

Though God is gracious, yet he is just.

Arguments tending to force sinners to come to God by Christ only.

thou hast pardoned this and that sinner, as a mere, or simple act of thy mercy, without respect or regard had to the redemption through my blood?"

2ndly. They reject Christ the chief Corner-stone, that build their hopes of heaven upon an outward conformity to the ten commandments only, or to the moral law of God. Thus the Jewish builders (of whom our Lord here speaks) rejected the head-stone of the corner; it was, my brethren, this way Israel sought after righteousness, to justify them in the sight of God; they trusted in the law, and in their obedience to it, for justification. "Behold thou art called a Jew, and retest in the law, and makest thy boast of God," Rom. ii. 17. Thou thinkest God is well pleased with thy righteousness; but what saith the Holy Ghost? "But Israel which followed after righteousness, hath not attained to the law of righteousness; wherefore? because they sought it not by faith, but as it were by the works of the law; for they stumbled at that stumbling-stone," Rom. ix. 31, 32, 33. The very stone which they should have built upon, they stumbled at. Let me give you an argument here to confirm this particular.

Conformity to the moral law will not justify.

Arg. If the Jews by seeking justification by their conformity to all the precepts of the moral law, did thereby reject Jesus Christ, and instead of building on him, stumbled on him; then all who now seek justification by a conformity to the law, or by their own righteousness, or a holy life, do also reject Christ, the chief Corner-stone: but the former is true; ergo, &c.

Object. But some may object and say, that the Jews and Pharisees were not sincere, but hypocritical in their obedience.

Ans. 1. It is not true of some of them, though perhaps the greatest part were hypocritical: yet some others, as Paul, when a Pharisee, acted no doubt in moral sincerity.

2. The argument against justification by our obedience to the law, lies not in the want of moral sincerity, but in the imperfection of that obedience, and also for want of a satisfaction for the sinner's breach thereof.

Object. But did not Christ direct the young man to keep the ten commandments, when he asked what he should do to inherit eternal life?

Ans. 1. Our Saviour might bid him keep the commandments, to show that they must be all perfectly kept, either by man himself, or by his Surety, or none could inherit eternal life.

What meant by Christ's directing the young man to keep the commandments.

2. Also it might be to convince him, that he did not keep them perfectly, and so could not be saved that way, viz., "he did not love the Lord his God with all his heart, nor his neighbour as himself;" in that he loved his possessions above God, and would not sell all he had, and give it to the poor, by which it appeared he broke the sum both of the first and second table.

3. Our Lord might put him upon keeping the commandments, to try him, or to discover his great ignorance of the way of salvation, which was by believing in him, cleaving to him, &c.

Object. The young man said, all these things he had done from his youth up, and our Lord does not gainsay him.

Ans. The young man understood the keeping the commandments according to the Scribes and Pharisees exposition of the law, viz., as only forbidding the gross and overt acts of sin, in respect of murder, adultery, &c., not thinking that he, by the inward lusts, and evil motions of his heart had broken them. However, one thing he lacked, and that was faith in Christ; he would not part with his own righteousness, and count it but dung, nor sell his great possessious to follow Christ.

Thirdly. They reject this Corner-stone, that build upon their faith, repentance, Gospel obedience, or inherent righteousness, or whatsoever it be, whether in obedience to the law without, or the law or light within.

Fourthly. Such reject the head-stone of the corner, and only foundation, that deny the Godhead of Christ and his satisfaction, they that deny his divinity; for no mere finite creature could satisfy infinite justice; and they also who deny the man Christ Jesus, and render his blood, and the shedding of it to be mysterious blood, and count that blood shed on the cross but as the blood of another man: these also certainly reject this chief Corner-stone.

They that trust to anything short of Christ, reject him.

Fifthly. All that presume, or that presumptuously pretend to rely upon Jesus Christ, they reject this Corner-stone, or the way of building upon him, because they have no true faith: there is (I told you) no building on this foundation without true faith; these men do but dream they build upon Jesus Christ, it is but in fancy.

They that presume, reject Christ the chief Corner-stone.

If the only way by which sinners build on Christ, is by faith, or by believing (which faith always sanctifieth and purges both the heart and life of him that obtains it); then such sinners who say they trust in Christ, and yet live in sin and a wicked course of life, do but presume on him, and so through ignorance and love to their lusts, reject the Lord Jesus Christ: but the former is true, ergo, &c.

They that despair reject Christ.
Sixthly. All that despair of mercy, help, and pardon, through the obedience and merits of Christ, reject the head-stone of the corner, or refuse to build upon Christ. Of these there are two sorts.

First. Such who despair, through unbelief, and grow thereby resolute and very desperate. "And they said, there is no hope," Jer. xviii. 2. Well, and what then? what will they do? we will walk after our own devices, and we will every one do the imaginations of his own heart. They despair of ever being pardoned and saved, and therefore resolve to pursue their own horrid lusts. There is no hope; that is a desperate conclusion. But we will walk every one after his own devices; that is a desperate resolution: they find their sins great, and so think it is impossible God should pardon them; and their hearts so vile, and lusts so strong, that it is impossible they should overcome them, or get a conquest of them, and therefore wilfully go on and harden their hearts against God.

Quest. From whence is it, that this sort despair of all hope, and so reject Jesus Christ?

Ans. 1. It is (yon hear) from the power of sin, and that power Satan hath got in them, and over them. "Having eyes full of adultery, that cannot cease from sin: hearts they have exercised with covetous practices, cursed children," &c., 2 Pet. ii. 14.

2. These find not only an indisposition in them unto that which is good, but also an averseness, a hatred, an enmity in their carnal minds to all things truly and spiritually good. And from hence they say, "There is no hope." And also say to God, "Depart from us, we desire not the knowledge of thy ways," &c. May be in times past they might have some kind of desires after Christ, but those desires are now quite gone, Job. xxi. 14.

3. It may not only rise from that natural proneness they find in their hearts to evil, but also from that wonderful and inordinate love they have to earthly things, and to the lusts of the flesh. "Whoredom, and wine, and new wine, take away the heart," Hosea iv. 11.

4. It may arise from the sense they have of that great insufficiency they hitherto have found in the means of grace, as to them. They have perhaps heard many sermons, and have sat under an able and powerful ministry, and yet are never the better, but as vile as ever: also have (may be) had strong convictions, but those convictions are gone off; nay, perhaps have heard, that some sinners were converted by some of the sermons they heard; and from hence give up all hope, and fall into despair, and grow desperate. Many that were bid to the marriage-supper, refused to come, but pleaded to be excused.

5. Laziness, or a slothful spirit may have seized upon them; they love not to resist sin, temptations, and to be found in prayer: hearing of the word, or self-examination, is grievous to them: slothfulness casteth into a deep sleep, their hands refuse to labour.

6. Or it may rise from their great ignorance of the infinite mercy of God in Jesus Christ; they are so vile and abominable, that they think God will not pardon them, though God saith, "His thoughts are not as their thoughts." May be they have sinned against much light and knowledge, and also against solemn vows, promises, and resolutions, when under great afflictions, and yet after all are as bad as ever, if not worse.

7. No doubt it riseth from Satan's temptations: he tells them there is no hope for them, and they believe him, and yield to his suggestions.

Lastly, It rises before from prevailing unbelief, which is the soul-damning sin. Though God hath assured the greatest sinner he shall find mercy if he return to him, in and by Jesus Christ; and he that believes not, the Holy Ghost says, makes God a liar; yet they do not believe, nor give credit to what the Holy God says. The state before of all such persons as these is very dismal.

Secondly, There is another sort of despairing persons, who also refuse Christ, or do not build upon him. They despair, but yet go mourning all the day long; and will not dare to run into sin, nor give over holy duties, but yet cannot, dare not rest on Jesus Christ. These are most to be pitied, for their condition is not so bad as the other. Alas, these look for some previous qualifications in themselves, and would fain get somewhat to commend them to God, not well observing that all absolute promises run to sinners, as sinners, as awakened and undone sinners. Moreover, they do not see how the wrath of God is appeased, and his justice satisfied in Jesus Christ: they poor souls have nothing to do but to throw themselves upon Jesus Christ; but not believing this, and not knowing that Christ hath borne all the guilt of their sins, they build not on him, but through despair refuse him.

APPLICATION.

1. We may infer, that though God hath laid Christ for a foundation, yet but very few do truly build upon him.

2. See what unbelief or infidelity is in the heart of sinners. God says, Christ is the only foundation upon whom they must build; and Christ says, "On this rock I will build my church," Matt. xvi. 18; and again saith, "No man cometh to the Father but by me," John. xiv. 6. And the apostles declare that there is no "other name given, by which men must be saved," Acts iv. 12. And the Holy Ghost says, he that builds not upon the Son, or that believeth not on him, shall be damned, and that the wrath of God abides upon him," Mark xvi. 16; Job iii. 36. Yet for all this they will build their hopes of pardon, justification, and eternal light upon something else, and not upon the Lord Jesus Christ.

3. See also from hence, the different temptations of Satan, and what devices he has to destroy the souls of men: some he persuades to presume, though vile and ungodly, and others to despair, though sober and praying persons. But here a question may arise.

Quest. Which is the greatest sin, presumption or despair?

Ans. 1. Both are damnable, but certainly presumption destroys more than despair.

I shall add somewhat briefly to each of these evils.

1. Presumption casteth horrid reproach upon the word of God, and the ministers thereof: the word declares, that unless a man be born again, he cannot be saved; and that without holiness no man shall see the Lord. But these persons are unrenewed, carnal, and live unholy lives, and yet presume upon God's mercy, and on Christ's merits, not doubting but they shall be saved, and so give (as it were) the word of God the lie.

Whether presumption or despair is the greatest sin.

2. Nay, such that presume cast contempt upon God himself, "and make God a liar;" for such that disbelieve the word of God, disbelieve God himself; therefore presumption is an abominable sin.

But despair doth more; for that doth not only cast contempt upon the truth of God (by disbelieving his promises) but also upon his mercy, his power, and faithfulness. The voice of despair is, that God is not only not to be believed in his blessed promises of pardon of sin in and through Jesus Christ, but also that their sins are so great that God cannot forgive them, though Christ saith, all manner of sins, and blasphemies against the Father and the Son, shall be forgiven unto men. And thus they give our blessed Saviour the lie also.

despair of God's mercy
in Christ.

3. They that despair do cast disparagement also upon the great sacrifice our Lord offered up to atone for sin, and so lessen the virtue of his most precious blood, as if God's justice was not sufficiently satisfied for all sins, nor Christ's blood sufficient to wash away the guilt and pollution of their iniquities; and so they reflect upon the efficaciousness of Christ's blood, merits, and righteousness.

4. Such that presume or utterly despair, give more credit to the devil, than they do unto the holy God, and are guilty each of them of the great sin of unbelief; and whosoever dies in either of these sins they cannot be saved, but shall perish for ever.

Exhort. I. O then you poor sinners, whether you are such that presume upon or despair of God's mercy in Christ, labour to believe and build upon this foundation, and trust not in lying words, nor on any vain confidence; nor yet despair, but throw your souls by a true and lively faith upon the Lord Jesus Christ; and if you experience the effect of the faith of the operation of God upon your souls, you need not fear your faith is presumption, nor have any cause to doubt or despair of your interest in Christ. But know assuredly, that that faith or confidence any man pretends to, who lives in any known sin, or that is not regenerated, is a false and counterfeit faith. What is the faith of a swearer, a liar, a drunkard, good for? or a whoremonger, a covetous person, a proud person, or a back-biter, &c. Alas, if such say they believe and rest on Christ, upon the merits and righteousness of the Lord Jesus Christ, they do but deceive themselves; for they believe not, but only presume, and their faith and hope at last will be but as the spider's web. They build alas without a foundation.

2. O rob not God of the glory of his grace, love, mercy, goodness, power, truth, and faithfulness.

3. Render not (O thou despairing soul) God guilty of perjury, who hath sworn, that He “ desires not the death of him that dies. but rather that he would return and live,” Ezek. xviii. 23. Wilt thou not believe God upon the highest testimony that ever was, or can be given to undone sinners? thou art a burdened sinner, a sensible sinner, a sick and wounded sinner, a thirsty sinner, and a lost and weary sinner: why pray consider, this being so, and how the promises run to you, and such as you are. “ Come to me all ye that labour, and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest,” Matt. xi. 28. “ The whole need not a physician, put such that are sick,” Matt. ix. 12. “ I came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance,” Mark ii. 17. That is, such that see they are sinners, and find they are sick and wounded.” The Son of Man is come to seek and save that which was lost, Matt. xviii. 1, i. e., such who are lost in their own sight. “ Ho every one that thirsteth, come to the waters,” Isa. lv. 1. But for encouragement consider further.

Persuasions to build upon Christ. I. What, art thou weary, and wilt not have rest? What, art thou wounded, and wilt not have a plaster, or balm to cure thy wounded soul? What, art thou hungry and wilt not eat? or thirsty, and yet refuse drink? What, art thou condemned, and yet refuse a pardon? What, art thou polluted, and wilt thou not wash in that “ fountain which is set open for sin, and for uncleanness?” Zech. xiii. 1.

2. Is the Father willing, the Son willing, and the Holy Ghost willing to save thee, and art thou not willing to be saved?

3. Wilt thou honour Satan more than God, believe the devil, and make God a liar, or render him not to be believed? nor his word nor his ministers believed? Wilt thou throw away, and destroy through unbelief, nay murder thy own precious and immortal soul? hast thou a mind to have all thy sins bound with chains upon thy precious soul for ever? for unbelief does and will do this. For the Lord's sake, for his glory and honour sake, and for the sake of thy own soul, labour to believe. O cry, “ I believe, Lord help my unbelief.

4. What, wilt thou reject such a tried stone, such a sure foundation? O what a multitude, that were as great sinners as thou art, have built upon the tried stone, and have found it never failed any one of them.

5. What other ground had ever any soul to build on Christ, rest on Christ, than what thou hast; is not the word of God enough, the promise and oath of God warrant sufficient or ground enough so encourage thee to believe and build upon the Lord Jesus Christ.

6. Wilt thou say there is no hope, when God hath given thee such ground of hope? Thou thinkest thy sins are too great and too many to be forgiven; but God saith, “ My thoughts are not as your thoughts,” &c. Isa. lv. 8. Though thou art the man of iniquity yet return to God by Christ Jesus; hear what he says, I will abundantly pardon, multiply pardon. “ Where sin abounded, grace hath much more abounded,” Rom. v. 20.

7. Is grace upon the throne? does grace reign, and wilt thou not draw near to such a throne?

8. Doth God say in Christ, he is reconciled, well pleased, and that fury is not in him, and wilt thou say there is no hope? Have adulterers, murderers, yea, such that shed innocent blood, found mercy, and wilt thou say there is no hope? remember David, Manassah, &c.

9. Have the worst, the greatest, and blackest of sinners been pardoned, even blasphemers, persecutors, nay, such that murdered the Lord of life and glory, and wilt thou say still there is no hope?

10. Is it not better for thee to venture thy soul upon Christ? Trust in him, and if thou must perish, perish even at the foot of Jesus Christ; thou canst but be damned if thou shalt as sure be damned, as if thou wast in hell already. But pray what sinner was ever damned, that did believe in Jesus Christ? Hath not God said, Christ said, the Holy Spirit said, “ Whosoever cometh to Christ shall in no wise be cast out?” John vi. 37. And that “ he that believeth on Christ shall not perish, but have everlasting life,” John iii. 16.

Comfort. This may administer comfort and sweet consolation to believers, who are built upon Jesus Christ.

The safety of believers. 1. It is an evidence of God's eternal love to you that have received Jesus Christ, and are enlightened by the Spirit, though others refuse Christ, reject Christ, because they neither know him nor love him; but ye know him, and know how to build your souls upon him, or rather how you are built upon him by the Holy Spirit.

Matt. vii. 25. 2. Satan cannot shake the foundation of your faith, and hope of heaven. Let the floods come, and the winds blow upon the house, it will stand, for it is built upon a rock.

Terror. Bewail all such that reject Christ as the Foundation and chief Corner-stone.

What a sad and woful condition are all such in! Let them build upon another foundation never so confidently that they shall be saved, yet they shall certainly be damned; for they build but on the sand, or without a foundation, because there is no other foundation but Christ alone.

Let all therefore take heed they do not reject Jesus Christ, God-man, that one blessed Mediator, neither in respect of his person, office, or doctrine. But O what multitudes are there in these days who seek to destroy (as much as in them lies) the foundation, which could they indeed effect, what would the righteous do? But Christ is laid so deep, so well, so sure, that none can destroy this blessed Corner-stone, though men may reject him; and in so doing they will perish for ever, as the Jews did.

SERMON XXXIII.

This is the Lord's doing, and it is marvellous in our eyes.—Matt. xxi. 42.

QUEST. What is the Lord's doing?

ANSW. 1. The laying Christ for the foundation, and the chief Corner-stone of the spiritual building.

2. The casting off the Jews also, and all other who reject the Lord Jesus Christ as the chief Corner-stone.

“And it is marvellous in our eyes.” Whose eyes?

ANSW. Even in the eyes of all believers, all the godly stand and admire at this thing; yea, and the holy angels wonder also to see God to lay his only beloved Son for a foundation, to raise fallen man and build him up again to such a height of glory and happiness, as is amazing, and believers themselves stand astonished at this, crying out, “O what manner of love is this,” 1 John iii. 1, 2. O how low was Christ laid, and how high are we thereby raised! Note from hence, Doct. That the salvation of lost sinners by Jesus Christ, as it is of God's doing, so it is also a wonderful and marvellous thing.

In speaking to this proposition,

I. I shall show you how this is of the Lord's doing.

II. Apply it.

I. By the Lord in this place is meant God the Father, it is his doing. “Behold, I lay in Sion for a foundation, a stone,” &c., Isa. xxviii. 16. “All things are of God,” 2 Cor. v. 18; that is, of God the Father.

1. As an act of his infinite love, sovereign mercy, and goodness to mankind, and not to the fallen angels. Love and sovereign grace was the efficient and first moving cause hereof. “God so loved the world, he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish but have everlasting life,” John iii. 16. This is wonderful love, marvellous love, “For verily he did not take on him the nature of angels, but the seed of Abraham,” Heb. ii. 16. There was no love, no pity showed to the fallen angels, no Redeemer found for them, though they were more glorious creatures than man. But this marvellous love was manifested to man, even to God's elect, who were in the first Adam. “In this was manifested the love of God towards us, because that God sent his only begotten Son into the world, that we might live through him.—Herein is love, not that we loved God, but that he loved us, sent his Son to be a propitiation for our sins,” 1 John iv. 9, 10.

1. It was the Lord's doing, as it was an act of his infinite wisdom, our redemption by Jesus Christ was the contrivance of the marvellous wisdom of God the Father. It was “he that devised the means or way that his banished might not for ever be expelled from him.” And hence it is said, “Deliver him from going down into the pit; I have found a ransom,” Job xxxiii. 24. The love God had to poor sinners, moved or stirred him up to find out a way to magnify his own glory, and redeem them from sin, wrath, and misery: and such wisdom is marvellous in our eyes; yea, it is the top glory, or highest act of infinite wisdom, as I shall show you by and by.

3. It was the Lord's doing, as an act of his Almighty power. Jesus Christ is the wisdom of God, and the power of God. “Christ is called the

In whose eyes this is marvellous.

Christ being laid for a foundation, an act of God's love.

Salvation by Christ an act of God's wisdom.

Salvation the act of God's power.

arm of the Lord, and the man of his right hand, whom he hath made strong for himself."

My brethren, that this is the doing of God the Father, is evident; for he indeed is the first and principal Author of our salvation, and therefore the apostle saith, "And all things are of God, who hath reconciled us to himself by Jesus Christ," &c.

1. God the Father first proposed this thing to his Son (who lay in his bosom from all eternity) to undertake the work of our redemption, which God the Son readily consented to, and struck hands with the Father, and entered into covenant with him to become our Surety and Saviour before the world began.

God the Father proposed this thing to his Son in eternity.

2. God the Father (as one well observes) is held forth as the chiefest injured person, against whom our sin was primarily committed, to whom the first creation was ascribed: he was our Creator and glorious Sovereign; and therefore should not God the Father be the contriver of our recovery, but another, how would it eclipse his glory, divine love, goodness, and wisdom?

The Father the chief injured person by our sin.

3. It was God the Father, who well knew what was necessary to be done in order to build up or raise fallen man, what was consistent with the honour of his holy majesty, and would promote and raise the glory of all the blessed attributes and perfections of the glorious Deity.

The Father well knew what was necessary to his own glory.

4. We read often how our salvation is ascribed to the grace of God the Father; how often Christ himself is called the gift of God. "Hast thou known the gift of God?" &c., John iv. 10.

Salvation is ascribed to God the Father.

"He that spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all," Rom. viii. 32. As election is ascribed to the Father, and the gift of Christ is attributed to the Father; so all spiritual blessings which we have by Christ, spring from the Father. "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ; according as he hath chosen us in him before the foundation of the world," Eph. i. 3, 4.

How often is God the Father called our Saviour? "Blessed be the Lord God of Israel, for he hath visited and redeemed his people," Luke i. 68. And hence he is called, "the Father of mercy, and the God of all comfort," 2 Cor. i. 3.

5. Whatsoever Jesus Christ did, God the Father determined to have done; and therefore "this is the Lord's doings." "Him, being delivered by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God, ye have taken, and by wicked hands have crucified and slain," &c., Acts ii. 23. Moreover, it was no other thing than what God "declared by the mouths of all the holy prophets from the beginning of the world, should be done," Acts iii. 18.

The laying of Christ for a foundation was in the thoughts of God, as held forth and manifest to his people in all ages of the world, and many ways also made known, not only by visions, but by types and sacrifices also; so that we may say, "Many, O Lord our God, are thy wonderful works, which thou hast done, and thy thoughts towards us," &c., Psal. xl. 5.

6. The Father chose Christ for a foundation. "To whom coming, as unto a living stone, disallowed indeed of men, but chosen of God, and precious," 1 Pet. ii. 4. The Father chose and appointed his own Son to be Mediator from eternity, that so he might be the foundation, and bear up the whole new creation, and so have the glory. Moreover, the Father prepared him a body (as I have often showed you) "A body hast thou prepared me," Heb. x. 5. The Father also sent him into the world. "Say you of him whom the Father sanctified and sent into the world, thou blasphemest, because I said, I am the Son of God," John x. 36. All these things prove that the work of redemption by Jesus Christ is primarily the Father's doings.

Yet take one or two further demonstrations to evince this, and I will proceed.

7. Whatsoever our Lord Jesus Christ is made unto us, it is expressly said, that he is so made unto us by God the Father.

What Christ is made to us, it is by God the Father.

(1.) Was he made a Priest? God the Father made him a Mediator, and, as so considered, a Priest. "No man taketh this honour unto him, but he that was called of God, as was Aaron: so also Christ glorified not himself to be made an High Priest, but he that said unto him thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee," Heb. v. 5. (2.) Was he made sacrifice for sin? The Father made him this sacrifice. "When thou shalt make his soul an offering for sin, he shall see his seed," &c., Isa. liii. 11. (3.) Were our sins laid upon him? The Father hath laid them on him. "The Lord hath laid on him the iniquities of us all," Isa. liii. 6. (4.) Was he bruised? Why it was the Father hath bruised him, and put him to grief. "Yet it pleased the Lord to bruise him, he hath put him to grief," ver. 10. (5.) Was he raised from the dead? This was done also by God the Father, though he being God, could himself take up his life again; but it behoved the Father, as an act of justice (he being his prisoner) to discharge him out of prison, when he had paid all our debts. Hence it is said, "He was raised from the dead by the glory of the Father," Rom. vi. 4. "Whom ye crucified, whom God raised from the dead," &c., Acts iv. 10. (6.) Was he exalted at God's right-hand? It was the Father that exalted him. "Whom God exalted at his right-hand, as a Prince and a Saviour, to give repentance unto Israel, and remission of sin," Acts v. 31. (7.) Is he a King? God the Father gave him that power and authority. "Yet have I set my King upon the holy hill of Zion." (8.) Is he a Prophet? It was the Father that raised him up also, and invested him with that office. "A prophet shall the Lord your God raise up unto you of your brethren, like unto me; him shall ye hear," &c., Acts iii. 22. (9.) Is he a Shepherd! God the Father constituted him a Shepherd. "Awake O sword against my shepherd, and against the man that is my Fellow," &c., Zech. xiii. 7, 8. (10.) Is Christ a Saviour? the Father appointed and sent him to save us. "God sent him to bless us, by turning every one of us from our iniquities," Acts iii. 26. "He hath raised up an horn of salvation, in the house of his servant David," Luke i. 69. (11.) Our election in Christ is of God the Father, the Father gave all that shall be saved to Jesus Christ. (12.) The Father sends the Spirit also in Christ's name. (13.) It is the act of God the Father to impute the righteousness of Christ to us, and to justify us, or to pronounce us righteous through Christ's righteousness. In a word, all things are of God, &c. "Jesus Christ, of God the Father, is made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption." And thus "this is the Lord's doing," the Father's work, that all may rejoice in, and give glory to God the Father. "Thou art my servant, O Israel, in whom I will be glorified," Isa. xli. 3.

APPLICATION.

1. Learn from hence to know assuredly, that God the Father is full of love and bowels of compassion to his elect, as Jesus Christ our blessed Redeemer. O do not think the Son hath more love, more grace, more pity to us than God the Father.

2. And therefore let us learn from hence to ascribe equal glory to the Father as unto the Son, and to the Holy Ghost; they being essentially considered one and the same God blessed for evermore. Amen.

3. From hence we may learn to plead with God the Father to bless us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ Jesus, and to enable us to build in a right manner upon him, since the Father laid him for a Foundation; and he that builds all things is God.

4. Do not look upon God the Father in Christ Jesus, as an angry God, but as a tender and dear Father, and come to him in the name of Christ with holy boldness, and learn to delight in him, and make the Father an equal object of your soul's affections.

5. And let us all strive after holiness, because it was the design of God in this work, to magnify his own holiness; all the acts of God's doings, in and about Christ, and our salvation, lay us under the highest obligation to oppose sin and all ungodliness. He gave his Son not to save us in, but from our sins. "Even to deliver us from all iniquity, and to purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works," Tit. ii. 14.

6. Is the laying of Christ as a Foundation, and the whole of our salvation, the Lord's doing? Then this reproves such that reject this Corner-stone, or build upon any other foundation. Moreover, learn from hence to know that this is a firm and sure Foundation, it being the Lord's doing, or the work of the mighty God himself.

7. Yet let all take heed they do not lessen the glory and honour of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of God, in magnifying the glory of God the Father; for though you have heard that it is the Father's doings, and that he is the first and prime Author of our redemption, and of all divine grace, and gracious operations; yet equal glory belongs to Jesus Christ, "and all are to honour the Son, as they honour the Father." Jesus Christ is our Surety, our common Head and Representative, he is our Redeemer; it was Christ that bought us, that redeemed us; he was both the Priest and Sacrifice; it is he that is the great Paymaster, the only Mediator between God and man; he it was that made our peace, that made an end of sin, and that brought in an everlasting righteousness. He is our wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption; he is our strength, our life, our food, our Physician, our Bridegroom, Christ is the Shepherd that sought us, the Fountain in whom we are washed, and the Foundation upon whom we and the church is built; so that all will for ever be undone, that reject him.

Quest. What is marvellous in our eyes ?

It is a marvellous thing that Christ should be rejected.

Answ. (1.) That God should lay his own Son for a Foundation. (2.) That the chief builders should reject him ; both these things are marvellous in the eyes of all God’s people, that the sheep should reject their Shepherd, the subjects cast off their Sovereign, a people despise their God, and murder his only begotten Son, and chiefest Prophet, and their only Teacher. As the love, wisdom, and goodness of God is to be admired in sending his Son : so also is the horrid sin, ignorance, and folly of men, whether Jews or Gentiles, in rejecting him. What, reject the Son of God, the Lord of life and glory, the Foundation-stone, the blessed Messiah, and only Saviour : “ he astonished O ye heavens !”

I shall chiefly speak unto this in respect to the first of these, but shall comprehend both.

Doct. That God’s laying Christ for a Foundation, is a marvellous thing ; and strange it is that any should reject this Corner-stone.

I shall endeavour (in speaking to this point of doctrine) to do three things.

I. Show what things they are that are counted marvellous.

II. Show how or in what respects our salvation by Jesus Christ may be counted marvellous.

III. Apply it.

1. Some things are really marvellous in themselves, many things in nature being above the comprehension of man.

1. Some things are only marvellous to ignorant people, who by reason of the weakness of their judgment and understanding admire them, which other men can give a reason of, and look upon as no wonders at all. But salvation by Jesus Christ is really wonderful and marvellous in itself, and in the eyes of all the wisest men and saints of God that ever lived on the earth.

2. A thing is counted marvellous, and wondered at, that is rarely seen, or perhaps not once in a hundred years ; yet it hath been seen or done before, and so is not so great a wonder.

3. A thing is counted marvellous that is far above the reach, reason, or comprehension of men of the greatest wisdom, and deepest judgment ; they can give no human reason for it, being wholly supernatural, or without any natural cause, as the eclipse or dismal darkness of the sun at the crucifixion of our blessed Saviour, or the sun’s standing still, or going back several degrees.

4. A thing is counted marvellous that is a new thing, never heard of, nor done before ; nor could it ever enter into the heart of man that such a thing should ever be, or come to pass.

5. A thing is counted marvellous in respect of the effects it hath on the subjects for whom it is done. As when strange, wonderful, yea amazing love and good will is showed to a virgin in prison, and in a dismal and miserable condition, tending to her perfect freedom, and to raise her to the highest honour ; and yet after all that amazing love and good-will, his love is slighted and rejected, though the poor damsel was a slave, and the prince that comes to redeem her, comes also to court and marry her ; and yet after all, she despises him, and rejects the offer of love and good-will. Would not all wonder at her, and say what a marvellous thing is this ? thus it is in this case.

6. Or when a kingdom is exposed to utter ruin, by a merciless enemy, and bloody tyrant, who is about to destroy all with fire and sword, and just at the very nick of time a more powerful prince offers his help to save and deliver that kingdom for ever from such desolation ; and yet his love and great pity is utterly rejected, and they suffer themselves to be undone and destroyed for ever : would not all nations that heard of such a thing, wonder at the folly and madness of the people of such a kingdom ? thus it is here.

II. I shall shew how, or in what respects our salvation by Jesus Christ, may be said to be marvellous in our eyes.

1. Our salvation by Christ is marvellous, because God hath done a thing in order to save our souls, that could never have entered in the hearts of men or angels, both in respect of that amazing and marvellous love and wisdom that is displayed therein. “ God so loved the world,” &c., John. iii. 16. So loved, or with such an amazing, marvellous, infinite, and unexpressable love “ that he gave his only begotten Son,” gave him to be a sacrifice, and to die a miserable and ignominious death, and to be made a curse for us. And what were we ?

Wherein the marvellousness of this does consist.

why his enemies, yea, such that had enmity in our hearts and minds against God; we that wererebels, who hated him, and had given up ourselves to the rule and government of the devil, having cast God off, rejecting the authority of our Maker, and merciful and only Sovereign. "Yet God commendeth his love towards us, in that while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us," Rom. v. 8. Is not this marvellous love, and wonderful in our eyes? "Ye that were sometimes alienated, and enemies in your minds by wicked works, yet now hath he reconciled," Col. i. 21. My brethren, it is counted a strange and marvellous thing for a man to lay down his life for his friend, or for his dear wife or child; all would say he shows wonderful love for them, who (though so near to him) yet deserved to die, having committed some grievous crime, but he will die for them, and in their stead. Such love is marvellous love. "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lays down his life for his friend," John xv. 13. But what saith the apostle, "But Christ died for us, while we were enemies," Rom. v. 8. He died for the ungodly, "For when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son," ver. 10. The loving-kindness of God is called "marvellous, and many are his marvellous works," Psal. xxxi. 20, Psal. xcvi. 1. But this exceeds them all, and it is therefore marvellous in our eyes.

2. That which adds to the wonder, and makes it yet more marvellous, is this, that God, who thus commends his love in giving his Son, and Christ Jesus who laid down his life, well knew (being omniscient,) that those persons for whom he died (and who were so unworthy of the least favour,) would, after he had done this thing, (for a time) slight and contemn his person, and this his infinite love to them, and shut their doors against him, resist his Holy Spirit, and grieve and wound his tender heart, and prefer their lusts above him; and yet notwithstanding all this, he would, and did die for them. O how strange and wonderful is this in the eyes of all that know and contemplate thereon!

3. The marvellousness of this divine grace and salvation appears yet further, in that although there is no other way of salvation, or for sinners to escape eternal damnation, and this is also clearly revealed in the gospel, and confirmed by the highest evidence; yet it is not received by multitudes, but they will seek salvation some other ways, and believe not in Jesus Christ, but reject him the chief Corner-stone.

4. Also, in that although the fullest and clearest evidence is given by the blessed Jesus, that whosoever believe in him, or build upon him, shall be pardoned of all their sins, though never so great and many, and for ever acquitted, justified, and accepted in Christ, and be adopted sons and daughters of God, and made kings and princes, and at last be crowned with endless glory. Yet all this is disbelieved, slighted, and contemned generally by all, or for the greater part of sinners, to whom there is a revelation made of this salvation.

5. Is it not a marvellous thing, that when God hath laid a Foundation for sinners to build upon, that cast him more (or is more worth and precious to him) than ten thousand worlds, and a Foundation so firm and sure, that all the devils, and powers of darkness can never shake nor remove, or pull down them that build thereon; and yet sinners do reject this Foundation and Corner-stone, and will not build upon the Lord Jesus Christ? But many, like the Pharisees, will build upon the sands of their own legal righteousness, preferring their own wisdom above the wisdom of God, because it lies above their natural reason, i. e., that a sinner can be made righteous, and justified by another's righteousness, as imputed to him.

6. Is it not a marvellous thing, to see the King and only Potentate of heaven and earth, who hath thousands of thousands of angels ministering to him, to lay aside his glorious princely robes, and offer himself to die a cruel and ignominious death, for a few cursed traitors, beggars, and rebels? Or is it not marvellous to see him that was God (co-equal with the Father) to die for such sinful creatures, and to take them, who in themselves are as base and contemptible as carrion, worms, into union with himself, and lay them in his bosom, and set them down with himself in his throne for ever? Rev. iii. 21.

7. Our salvation by the Lord Jesus Christ is marvellous, because it is a great mystery. This I shall endeavour to prove, and clearly evince.

1. That which is so mysterious, that the wisdom of man cannot conceive of, or comprehend, is a marvellous thing, and great mystery; but our salvation by Jesus Christ is so mysterious, that the wisdom of men cannot conceive of it, or comprehend it, ergo.

Our salvation is a great mystery, or very marvellous.

To confirm this argument, take several texts of scripture. "But we speak the wisdom of God in a mystery, even the hidden wisdom—which none of the princes of this world knew; for had they known it, they would not have crucified the Lord of glory. But the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God; for they are foolishness unto him, neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned," 1 Cor. ii. 7, 8, 14. "Without controversy great is the mystery of godliness, God manifested in the flesh," &c., 1 Tim. iii. 16.

But to proceed to a few arguments to demonstrate the mysteriousness of our salvation by Christ, and from thence how it is marvellous in our eyes.

Arg. 1. "That which the wise men of the world count foolishness, because it lies above their corrupt human reason to comprehend it, is doubtless a great mystery, and therefore marvellous; but our salvation by Jesus Christ is counted foolishness, because it lies above their corrupt human reason to comprehend it, ergo, it is a great mystery. The minor is proved by what Paul saith, "The preaching of the cross is to them that perish, foolishness; but unto us that are saved, it is the power of God," 1 Cor. i. 18. The preaching of the cross; that is, justification and salvation by the obedience and sufferings of Christ upon the cross, or by that blessed one that was hanged on the tree. The men of reason of our age call it a contradiction, that a debt fully paid, is yet freely forgiven, and a mock payment, and so foolishness, and seem to charge the holy and wise God with folly, who saith, "He pardoneth iniquity, transgression, and sin; and yet will by no means clear the guilty," Exod. xxxiv. 7.

Arg. 2. That work which was the glorious contrivance of the infinite wisdom of God, yea, the deepest, the most profound part of his wisdom, or chiefest act of all his doings, must needs be a mystery, and a marvellous work; but such is the work of our salvation by Jesus Christ, therefore it is mysterious and marvellous.

Arg. 3. That work which non-plusses all the wise men of the world, and is so hid from them, that their wisdom perishes and is confounded, is a marvellous thing: but the work of our redemption doth thus non-pluss and confound the wisdom of the men of the world; therefore the work of redemption is a mystery, and very marvellous. "Therefore behold, I will proceed to do a marvellous work, and a wonder among the people, even a marvellous work and a wonder; for the wisdom of their wise men shall perish, and the understanding of the prudent men shall be hid," Isa. xxix. 14.

Arg. 4. That work, art, or mystery, which the most knowing, and the greatest artists who study it, confess is so deep, mysterious, or so great and marvellous, that they can arrive but to a small measure of the knowledge of it, after their uttermost search and pains, and diligence, is a great mystery, and very marvellous: but the work of redemption by Christ, the apostles themselves, who were the most knowing, and the greatest spiritual artists in this mystery, after their uttermost care, diligence, and search into it, confess they knew but little of it, or knew but in part; therefore redemption by Christ is a great mystery, and so very marvellous. "For now we see through a glass darkly," &c. "Now I know in part," &c., 1 Cor. xiii. 12.

Arg. 5. That which both angels and saints too greatly wonder at, and count a marvellous thing, is very mysterious and marvellous; but both the angels and saints too greatly wonder at, and count the redemption of sinners by Jesus Christ a marvellous thing; therefore the redemption of sinners by Jesus Christ is very mysterious and marvellous. "He was seen of angels," 1 Tit. iii. 16, that is, with wonderment. "Which things the angels desire to look into," 1 Pet. i. 12. The word signifies, a bowing down the head, a stooping to pry or look into, as they cannot fully understand, but admire at. And then as to the saints, my text saith, "It is marvellous in our eyes."

Arg. 6. That work which no man can understand, know, or rightly conceive of, unless it be made known to him by Christ through the influences of the Spirit, in a supernatural way, is a great mystery, and very marvellous: but no man can understand, know, or rightly conceive of the mystery of Christ, the faith of Christ, or redemption by Christ, but by the influences of the Spirit in a supernatural way; therefore these things are mysterious, and very marvellous "No man knoweth the Son but the Father, neither knoweth any man the Father save the Son, and he to whomsoever the Son will reveal him," Matt. xi. 27. As all saving knowledge of the Father is through Christ, so the knowledge of Christ the wise and prudent know not, nor any but such that Christ by his Spirit reveals the knowledge of these mysteries unto. "It is given to you to know the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven," &c.

Arg. 7. That thing, or glorious design which the holy God saw necessary (it being so deep a mystery) in manifold ways and methods gradually to reveal and make known to the sons of men, must needs be very mysterious: but our

The apostles confessed they knew but little, or in part, the mystery of redemption.

Angels and saints admire the mystery of our redemption.

No man can know the mysteries of the gospel, but by the supernatural revelation of the Spirit.

God made use of manifold ways to redemption by Jesus Christ God saw necessary (it being so deep a mystery) in manifold ways and methods to reveal or make known to the sons of men; ergo, it is very mysterious, &c. How was it first made known by promises, then by types, and then by sacrifices, offerings for sin, and also by prophecies, even many ways, and by many gradations, though the clearest manifestation of it is by the gospel? and in that also God is pleased to make use not only of the word but of the sacraments, that we might be better able to understand and conceive of it: but after all, the Spirit must reveal these mysteries to us, or else in a saving manner we cannot know them; and when we do so know them, we still stand and wonder, and cry out, "It is marvellous in our eyes." Hence the apostles, to whom it was revealed, laboured "to make all men see what is the fellowship of the mystery which was hid in God; who created all things by Christ Jesus, to the intent, that now unto the principalities, and powers in heavenly places, might be known by the church the manifold wisdom of God," Eph. iii. 9, 10.

Arg. 8. That work, that love, that wisdom which the glorified saints shall admire, when Christ personally appears, and to all eternity, must needs be a mysterious thing, and very marvellous; but the glorified saints, when Christ comes, and to all eternity, shall admire at this work, this love, and at this wisdom; therefore it is a mysterious thing, and very marvellous. "When he shall come to be glorified in his saints, and to be admired in all them that believe," 2 Thess. i. 10.

Arg. 9. That redemption-love, redemption-grace, is full of mystery, and is marvellous, may appear further, by considering the many mysteries and wonders contained therein.

Redemption-grace full of wonders.

(1.) Is it not a marvellous thing, that a woman should compass a man, as the Holy Ghost words it? "For the Lord hath created a new thing in the earth, a woman shall compass a man," Jer. xxxi. 22. A woman that knew not a man, should conceive and bring forth a child; of her the Messiah shall be born, or in her formed and created, the body of Christ not being begotten by man, but created of God, yet of the flesh of the virgin: is not this "a new and marvellous thing," that a virgin should be a mother, and yet remain still a virgin? What, be the mother of him by whom she was created? Is it not above reason, though not above our faith, and so wonderful a thing, that he that made the world, should be born of a woman? In this, as one well observes, our Lord was the Antitype of Melchisedec, without father, as man, and without mother, as God.

(2.) Is it not a marvellous thing, that the "Ancient of days" should become a child of a day old; and that "he whose goings forth were of old, even from everlasting," should be born in time

The wonders of Christ's incarnation.

(3.) That blessedness itself should be brought under a curse for sinners, and vile rebels: "Christ was made a curse for us, that the blessing of Abraham might come upon the Gentiles, through Christ Jesus," Gal. iii. 13, 14.

(4.) That he that was the Heir of both worlds, Heir of all things, should be "laid in a manger; and that he who is God over all, should have "no where to lay his head."

(5.) Is it not a marvellous thing, that he that was so rich, that he in whom the fulness of the Godhead dwelt bodily, should become poor, and that through his poverty we are made rich?

(6.) That death should be vanquished and destroyed by death, and that we could not live, unless he that was God, as concerning the flesh should die? Is it not a marvellous thing, that the physician should die for his patient, and that unless he that was God died, man could not be healed; or that the blood of the Saviour should be shed, and applied to cure the wounds of the sinner? that a man should die, and yet by his own power raise himself again to life; or that he that was the Prince of life and glory, should be put to a contemptible and ignominious death?

(7.) Is it not a marvellous thing, that the offended God should give his only begotten Son to die for offending sinners, and that he that built heaven and earth should be laid for a Foundation for poor sinners to build upon? "This is the Lord's doing, and it is marvellous in our eyes."

He that built heaven and earth, is laid for a foundation to build his church.

(8.) Nay, and is it not a marvellous thing, that the divine Person of the Son of God should be united to the nature of man, or he assume to himself a real body, and human soul, and yet be but one Person? and that our nature should be exalted above the nature of angels, and that a man should be God's fellow, or equal to him, and sit at his right hand, angels, powers, and principalities made subject to him? nay, that he that is God should be a Man, and a man be the Most High God? For by means of the hypostatical union, the divine and human nature in Christ makes but one person; the Son of God did not take into union with his divine Person, the person of any man (who had a distinct subsistence of himself, in soul and body) but only the nature of man: for the human body and soul of Christ subsisted only in and by means of this divine Person being hypostatically united to it. So as the soul of man is the vital principle of his body, and an essential of the man; so the divine Person of the Son of God is the vital principle of the whole human nature, and an essential part of the true Christ; the human nature never subsisted, nor could, without the divine nature and Person of the Son of God so united to it: "and this is the Lord's doing, and it is marvellous in our eyes."

Man's nature exalted above the nature of angels.

Such that followed after righteousness obtained it not.

(9.) Is it not a marvellous thing, that those that followed after righteousness, should not attain to righteousness, and such that followed not after righteousness, but were wicked and ungodly, should attain to the righteousness which is by faith?

But how comes this about, that the righteous Jews and Pharisees attained not to righteousness? the apostle answers, "Wherefore? because they sought it not by faith, but as it were by the works of the law, for they stumbled at that stumbling-stone; as it is written, behold, I lay in Sion a stumbling-stone, a rock of offence; and whosoever believeth on him shall not be ashamed," Rom. ix, 32, 33. They sought it as it were by the works of the law, or by their own works of obedience (as many do now) and not by Christ's righteousness, as it is received by faith alone.

The wonders of justification.

(10.) Is it not a marvellous thing, that a vile sinner that hath no righteousness of his own, should be made righteous, by the righteousness of another imputed to him? And is it not a greater wonder (since the holy God hath so clearly, in his word, revealed that this is so) that so many men, who pretend to be men of wisdom, reason, and learning, should not give credit to, nor believe this divine testimony, but account this foolishness, and seek (as the Jews did) to be justified by their own works, faith, and obedience?

The wonders of faith.

(11.) Is it not a marvellous thing, that a sinner must believe unto righteousness, i. e., to believe he hath that righteousness put upon him, which he hath not inherent in him, or that the righteousness of one man, or his robe, should be the righteousness and robe to cover many thousands? yea, to believe, when every thing seems to be against it, and to see no more reason it should be so, than Abraham had to believe Sarah should conceive with child, when she was old and past bearing children? or to believe in hope against hope, or such things that are above common human reason, and utterly impossible, and contrary to sense? yea, and to believe when we neither see nor feel, but only act, in believing by a divine Spirit, not doubting of the testimony and revelation God hath given of these things? "This is the Lord's doing, and it is marvellous in men's eyes."

The effects and operations of grace are marvellous.

Lastly, the effects and operations of grace are also marvellous, viz., that God should make men wise, by teaching them to become fools, or showing them that is folly they count great wisdom, and that the way to live is to die, and the way to see is to be made blind, and the way to be rich is to be made poor, and the way to honour is to be abased, and the way to be exalted is to be humbled, and the way to have all things is to have nothing, and the way to the crown is by the cross. "This is the Lord's doing, and it is marvellous in our eyes."

APPLICATION.

1. This reproves the men of reason, such who affirm, that there is nothing mysterious contained in Christ's gospel, or that which is above reason (we say it is not against reason) but if it be not above human reason to believe many things contained in the gospel, why doth the apostle say, "Without controversy great is the mystery of godliness?" &c. 1 Tim. iii. 16. True, it is not above divine reason, or the actings of faith; for it is not reasonable we should believe what the blessed God reveals and bears testimony to the truth of, though we cannot give a natural demonstration how such and such things should be so.

2. Let none think it is easy to understand or comprehend the great mysteries of the gospel, and of the Christian religion; nor contemn it, because they cannot comprehend those mysteries by their natural reason.

3. What I have said may also stir us all up to labour after the saving knowledge of these gospel mysteries, and to say with the apostle, "I determined not to know anything among you, but Jesus Christ and him crucified," 1 Cor. ii. 1. And not to regard any notions, any arts or sciences, learning or languages, in comparison of Christ, and him crucified; and to condemn all the men of reason, with all their vain flourishes and philosophical principles, by which they strive to ridicule and cast reproach upon the holy doctrine of Christ and his apostles.

4. Let them likewise take heed they do not slight and despise the infinite wisdom, love, and goodness of God the Father, of our Lord Jesus Christ, lest they raise the wonder, for what is or can be more marvellous than to see men condemn and utterly reject this unutterable gift and grace of God, and refuse to build upon Jesus Christ, and reject this chief Corner-stone? Dare any slight this love, this marvellous love, or reject this Christ, this precious Jesus? What will become of such, that so do, in the end? and who can wonder at their just deserved damnation?

5. But let none of us be wise in our own conceit, or one think we know anything as we ought to know, since the mighty apostle knew but in part. But let us all say, "O the depth of the riches, both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! How unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways are past finding out!" Can men trace the Almighty, or find out the reason of his doings! Is he only to be considered as a Rector, and not as a Sovereign Benefactor, that distributes his favours and gifts of grace as seemeth good in his own eyes? What if he will be found of them that sought him not, and cast off such who did not duly seek him, and make the fruitful womb barren, and she that had no husband (but was barren) to be the mother of many children? "Canst thou by searching find out God, canst thou find out the Almighty unto perfection? It is as high as heaven, what canst thou do? Deeper than hell, what canst thou know? The measure thereof is longer than the earth, and broader than the sea," Job xi. 7, 8, 9.

6. This may serve also to discover what a vast difference there is betwixt a true believer, and a graceless sinner. (1.) The one believes and adores the manifold wisdom of God; a believer makes that an article of his faith and steadfast belief, which his senses and natural reason cannot see nor comprehend. And though he cannot as yet reach to a full knowledge of those great debts, yet he prys into them, and acknowledges his ignorance, and questions not the truth of the divine revelation thereof. But the antichristian and graceless sinner, because these things are such as his carnal reason cannot comprehend, he judges them foolish, as well as the preaching of a crucified Christ was to the learned Greeks of old, and so stumbles upon this stumbling-stone, instead of building on it, and expecting to be saved alone by him. "I have written to him the great things of my law, and they were counted strange things," Hos. viii. 12; that is, things not to be believed nor regarded, but to be esteemed as idle stories. Some of this sort cannot believe that sin is so evil a thing, or the greatest plague of all plagues; but it is looked upon a small matter by them. Moreover, they cannot see how Christ should be the most desirable and most amiable object in heaven or earth: no, they see no beauty, no comeliness in him to desire him; they cannot believe that there should be so much sweetness, peace, joy, delight, and satisfaction in the ways of God, nor in the enjoyment of God's favour, and the light of his countenance.

The difference between a believer and an ungodly sinner.

1 Cor. i. 23.

Question. But what may be the cause or reason why some men ridicule, slight, and condemn these mysteries, and count them as idle stories, mere fictions and dreams of men's imaginations?

Ans. 1. It is because the devil, the god of this world, hath blinded their minds; they are deceived and led away by Satan's delusions: many of them being left of God, are given up to believe a lie.

2. These things are counted strange things, nay, foolishness to them that perish, because they are without the Holy Spirit, by which these things are only seen and discerned; they having no other spirit in them, save the spirit of mere natural men.

2 Cor. iv. 3, 4.
Why the gospel is counted a strange thing by some men.

3. Because these things suit not with that legal covenant and covenant-principles, which they (and all mere natural men) are born under: and as they agree not with the covenant of works, so they neither suit nor agree with the pride of their carnal hearts, the gospel wholly striking at the root and foundation of all they build upon, debasing man to the very dust.

4. Because the mysteries of the gospel, its light, principles, precepts and worship, are directly contrary to, or quite differ from the religion, ways, and worship of the world. If a man of another nation comes into a kingdom or city, which hath other habits or garbs of a quite different fashion, how is he gazed on, and wondered at! Thus how was Joshua the high-priest, and those with him admired! "Hear now, O Joshua the high-priest, thou and thy fellows that sit before thee; for they are men wondered at: for behold I will bring forth my servant the Branch," Zech. iii. 8. What, build such a temple, be at such pains, such expense, run such hazard, and expect no secular advantage! this the ignorant and unbelieving Jews wondered at: and so it is now. What, build all your hopes of heaven upon a man that was crucified, upon his obedience, upon his death, one that was so mean and contemptible in the eyes of the world; and throw away that that was gain to you, and be exposed to a thousand sorrows and difficulties in the world besides? God here intimates, that like as Joshua was wondered at, who erected the type (I mean the material temple) so when Christ the branch came, he would be much more wondered at. "I and the children thou hast given me, are for signs and wonders in Israel," Isa. viii. 18.

Sirs, they who only seek to establish natural religion, because they cannot comprehend the gospel mysteries, do count them strange and idol stories: though I must confess I much wonder also that some Christians, who have much greater light and better principles, should wonder at any part of moral and natural religion, and cast contempt upon it; I mean that of singing the praises of God. But no more as to that here.

"And to close, O cry with David, open my eyes, that I may behold the wonderful things of thy law," Psal. cxix. 18.

SERMON XXXIV.

Therefore I say unto you, the kingdom of God shall be taken from you, and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof, Matt. xxi. 42.

I HAVE opened every part of this parable, and have prosecuted one or two propositions from hence.

The church of the Jews I showed you were principally meant by this vineyard, who brought not forth the fruit thereof; and "therefore (saith our Lord) the kingdom of God shall be taken from you, and be given to another nation bringing forth the fruit thereof," Ver. 43. From whence observe, Doct. 3. That a people may sin away the kingdom of heaven, both the gospel, and gospel church-state, and all the blessings thereof.

I. I shall, in speaking unto this point of doctrine, lay down two or three explanatory propositions.

II. Prove the doctrine.

III. Prove the kingdom of God is the greatest loss.

IV. Show what sins must endanger the losing the kingdom of God.

V. Apply it.

The gospel shall abide to the end of the world.

Prop. 1. The gospel shall never be utterly removed out of the world, though it may be taken away from this or that nation, or from this or that people (there is no need to give you proofs of this), the gospel hath been continued, and shall be continued to one nation or another, and shall be "preached to all the world before the end comes," Matt. xxiv. 14.

The invisible church is never taken away.

Prop. 2. That the universal or invisible church cannot be removed or taken away: that it is built upon a rock, so that the gates of hell shall not prevail against it. "Lo, I am with you always to the end of the world," Matt. xvi. 18; Matt. xxviii. 20.

Prop. 3. That it is not for every small declension, nor for some degrees of barrenness, for which God takes away the gospel and the kingdom of God from a people; neither is he soon provoked to do it. We read of great sins and decays in some gospel churches, and yet their candlesticks were not soon removed, Rev. 2, and 3 chap. But,

II. That the kingdom of God, or a visible church-state, may be lost or taken away from a people.

A particular people or nation may lose the kingdom of God.

1. The Jews had the kingdom of God with them; but at last it was utterly taken away from them; they lost it, and are without it to this day; they were God's visible church; they had all the legal ordinances and statutes committed to them; after which they had the highest gospel privileges that ever any had, they had the personal presence and ministry of Jesus Christ afforded them; they had the extraordinary apostles, and extraordinary gifts and mi-leges that ever any had, they had the personal presence and ministry of Jesus Christ afforded them; they had the extraordinary apostles, and extraordinary gifts and mi-rales among them, and gospel churches; and yet they sinned away the gospel. Indeed the legal church-state could not properly be said to be sinned away, because the date of its standing was expired, and that could not abide longer (it being a typical church) when the anti-type of it was come, that ceased. No, it was the gospel and gospel church that was taken from them.

2. The seven churches in Asia are another proof of this proposition. Alas, what are become of those famous churches? In those very places and nations where the kingdom of God once was, and where those churches once flourished, is now nothing but thick darkness, nothing but barbarism and Mahometan deformity, and the blasphemous Alcoran instead of the sacred gospel of Jesus Christ.

III. I shall prove that the loss of the gospel and kingdom of God is the greatest loss a people or nation can suffer.

1. Because the gospel of Christ is the chiefest treasure that any people can be intrusted with or possess: for is God the chiefest of beings? and is Christ the chiefest of blessings? Why then, pray consider, the gospel hath the ever-blessed God in it; where the gospel comes, God comes. Moreover, the gospel hath Christ in it, Christ is the subject, and the sum, and substance of the gospel. True, men may have God as a Creator, and as a Preserver, who have not the gospel; and they may have God also as a just Judge, a God to condemn them, but no God as a Redeemer, or as a Father; no, those blessings come by Christ alone, and are enjoyed in and by the gospel, the gospel is the field where our chiefest treasure lies hid.

The gospel is the chiefest treasure.

2. Is the sun, my brethren, the chiefest blessing of this world, or of this nether creation? yea, doubtless you will say it is so. Why then, know, the gospel is the great light of the world; where there is no gospel, there is nothing but dismal spiritual darkness. Jesus Christ is indeed the Sun, our spiritual Sun: all light is from him, and the church is that firmament in which the sun of righteousness is fixed; and when the firmament is vanquished, the sun is vanquished also. "Their sun," saith the prophet, "shall go down no more," &c. That is a promise to the church in the last days; but of what church can that be said that is in being now? God threatens a people that their sun shall go down at noon. If light is sweet, and the choicest of blessings, then to be utterly deprived of light is the greatest loss or the sorest judgment: but what is natural light to spiritual light, or the natural sun to the Sun of righteousness?

The gospel is our sun to give us light.

3. Is rain a great blessing, and to be utterly deprived of it a dismal judgment? Why then pray consider, the gospel is the heavenly rain; "My doctrine shall drop as the rain," Deut. xxxii. 2. Ministers are compared to clouds; but woe to that nation to whom God shall say, "I will command the clouds that they rain no rain upon it any more," Isa. v. 6. Without rain how dry, barren, and unfruitful is the earth? So without the divine rain, how barren and unfruitful are our souls? It is the gospel-rain that softens our hard hearts, and that causes us to bring forth fruit unto God.

The word of God is the spiritual rain.

4. Is the saving knowledge of God a great blessing, and the way of salvation by our Lord Jesus Christ? O then what a blessing is the ministry of gospel? for it is thereby that we come to know in a saving manner the holy God, or God in Christ. How destitute are the Heathen and Pagan nations of the way of salvation? They know nothing of Jesus Christ: they may know there is a God by the things which are made, even his eternal power and Godhead; but they know not what a just, a holy, a good, gracious, and a merciful God, God is; nor how sin came into the world; neither how hateful it is to God, and how contrary it is to his pure nature, nor what an estate man is in thereby; nor the way by which the justice of God is satisfied, his wrath appeased, and he reconciled unto poor sinners. These things are only known by the revelation of the gospel, and such who have not the dispensation thereof are wholly in darkness, and ignorant of these things. "These things are written, that ye may know that Jesus is the Christ, and in believing ye might have life through his name," John xx. 31. Therefore to lose the gospel, or to have the kingdom of God taken away from a people, must needs be the greatest loss.

No saving knowledge of God without the gospel.

5. The gospel is the mighty arm of God, or an instrument of his power to the salvation of all that believe on Jesus Christ. "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation, to every one that believeth, to the Jew first, and also to the Greek; for therein is the righteousness of God revealed," Rom. i. 16, 17, &c. Where no gospel is preached, the power of God is not revealed, nor the righteousness of God made known, nor the means of faith in Christ. "Can men believe on him of whom they have not heard?" Rom. x. 14. Faith cometh by hearing the word of God preached; but when the gospel goes from a people, they lose the instrument of God's power, and the ordinary means he hath ordained to work faith in the souls of sinners, and therefore this is the greatest loss.

The gospel is the power of God.

6. The loss of the gospel, or taking away of the kingdom of heaven, is the greatest loss, because it is a soul-loss, or the greatest judgment. God may bring the sword, the plague, or famine upon a nation, and yet that people may be happy still, and abide still the people of God: how dreadful was that famine and judgment, when the women Lam. iv. 10. did boil and eat their own children? but such a famine, such a judgment, is but small to a spiritual famine; a famine of the word which they feel, who have the kingdom of God taken away from them. "Behold the days come, saith the Lord, that I will send a famine in the land, not a famine of bread, nor a thirst of water, but of hearing the word of the Lord." And what dreadful words are, these, "they shall wander from sea to sea, and from the north to the east; they shall run to and fro to seek the word of the Lord, and shall not find it." "From the north to the east:" we are in the north, and it looks as if the north shall lose the gospel and some will go into the east, hoping to find it there, where it first began to shine forth, but all in vain: what a loss is it when people have a craving appetite, and hunger after bread, and are ready to faint and die, but can find no bread, no food to sustain their perishing souls.

7. The loss of the gospel or kingdom of God is the greatest loss, because when the gospel goes, God goes, and Christ goes, and all spiritual good, and divine blessings are taken away from that people; "and woe to them when I depart!" 1 Sam. iv. 21. Such may cry, Ichabod, the glory is departed, and also may say with the church of old, "the crown is fallen from our heads, woe to us that we have sinned;" Lam. v. 16. The gospel is the symbol of God's presence, and when he departs, fearful judgments succeed and break in upon that people.

The removing the gospel a sign of God's direful wrath to a people.

8. The taking away the kingdom of God is a sign of God's direful wrath and vengeance on a people, and that he hath left them utterly to blindness of mind, and to hardness of heart. When the gospel was taken away from the unbelieving Jews, it is said, "wrath came upon them to the uttermost."

IV. For what sins does God take away the gospel from a nation or people?

Unbelief causes God to remove the gospel.

Rom. x. 3

in vain, and chargeth God with cruelty in sacrificing his own Son, and Christ with folly in dying to save sinners. This is the evil of unbelief in those men's hearts, who believe not the revelation of the gospel, but magnify natural religion above that religion and way of salvation revealed in the gospel; it is indeed to affirm the sacred gospel to be a mere feigned story, consisting of lies and falsehood; therefore it is no marvel that God for this sin takes away the gospel from such a wicked and unbelieving people.

Charnock.

is apostacy when a people depart from the true apostolical faith, and embrace errors, heresies, and superstitions. This was the cause why God took away the gospel and the church-state from the Romish church. What a glorious church was that which was at Rome, in the primitive time! but in process of time they departed from the true and ancient faith; and through that great and general apostacy Christ left them, and the gospel and kingdom of heaven was taken from them, and they became the kingdom of Satan and a most abominable barlot, being called the whore that corrupteth the earth, and so remain to this day, being a people bathed and hated of God.

For apostacy God removes the gospel.

Decay in love to Christ may cause it.

Pray observe, that for those sins which Christ threatens a people, to take away their candlestick if they repent not; those very sins cause him to do it, i. e., to take the kingdom of God from them; but for leaving first love, and declining in zeal and holiness, Christ threatened to remove the church of Ephesus. "Remember therefore from whence thou art fallen, and repent, and do thy first works, or I will remove thy candlestick out of his place, except thou repent," Rev. ii. 5. Ergo. God may remove his works. Pray observe, that for those sins which Christ threatens a people, to take away their candlestick if they repent not; those very sins cause him to do it, i. e., to take the kingdom of God from them; but for leaving first love, and declining in zeal and holiness, Christ threatened to remove the church of Ephesus. "Remember therefore from whence thou art fallen, and repent, and do thy first works, or I will remove thy candlestick out of his place, except thou repent," Rev. ii. 5. Ergo. God may remove his gospel and kingdom from a people, for waxing cold and carnal, though they do not utterly apostatize from the true faith of the gospel, but retain the truth firm in the notion of it.

4. When a people grow weary of the gospel, either upon the consideration of the strictness of the doctrine, or discipline thereof, or because of the charge and burden of it, they are not willing to be at the cost and pains of bearing up the church-state, nor in supporting the ministry. "Ye have said also, behold, what weariness is it! and ye have snuffed at it, saith the Lord of hosts; and ye have brought that which was torn and lame, and the sick," &c., Mal. i. 13. They thought the worst they had, good enough to give to the Lord, or a small matter, the halt and the lame, &c., and not the male of their flock. So when a people, through covetousness, will part with but little to support the house of God, God may take the gospel from them. See how he threatened this people for this sin and great wickedness. "Behold, I will corrupt your seed, and spread dung upon your faces," &c. Mal. ii. 3. "Ye are departed out of the way, ye have caused many to stumble," &c. The people of Israel grew weary of the heavenly manna, and counted it light bread. Sirs, This is a God-provoking evil, i. e., when the word is slighted and contemned, and men prefer the world above it, and grow weary of it.

5. When a people bring not forth that fruit God expecteth from them, but instead of bringing forth grapes, they bring forth wild grapes. "And when I looked that it should bring forth grapes, it brought forth wild grapes. And now go to, I will tell you what I will do with my vineyard, I will take away the hedge thereof, and it shall be eaten up, and break down the wall thereof, and it shall be trodden down," &c., Isa. v. 4, 5. That is, I will utterly forsake them, and lay my vineyard waste. Lukewarmness and barrenness, if continued in, will cause the Lord to spue a people out of his mouth, as he threatened the church of Laodicea, Rev. iii. 16. So here. "Therefore shall the kingdom of heaven be taken from you," &c.

APPLICATION.

1st. From hence I infer, that ignorance of the worth of the gospel is an abominable evil, many know not what a prize they have in their hand; and God may therefore let such know the worth of the gospel, by the want of it. He knows how to raise this price and esteem of spiritual blessings. How little is plenty of bread, after a long time enjoyed, valued! but when famine comes, O how is the coarsest corn prized! We are full fed, but I fear are grown wanton, and weary of the heavenly manna.

2ndly. Let us learn from hence, to fear this dismal judgment, viz., the loss not only of our liberty, but of the gospel itself, being unchurched, or utterly left of God. Consider these few things following.

1. Hath the Lord given us a lease of the gospel, or hath he promised us that he will never take away the kingdom of God from us? No, we have no lease, nor any such promise, and therefore let us fear lest our sins strip us of all these spiritual and good things which we now enjoy.

Sad signs of approaching judgments on this nation.

2. Did not God some few years ago shew us what he could do? and was not the gospel in our own apprehension near gone, or going? O what fears then filled our souls? well, but he soon scattered those fears, and in a marvellous way appeared for us, and hath given us such a time of liberty, that perhaps no nation for many years had the like: but have we thankfully improved these signal blessings? alas no, but are become certainly more dead, cold, and carnal than ever.

3. Consider what hath befallen our neighbour nation, I mean the people of God there: have you not heard, nor read, what carnality, deadness, and formality was among our protestant brethren in France, just before God took away the gospel from them, and gave them up to the wild-boar of the forest? O what contentions and divisions were among them? and how was the life and power of religion gone? and is it not as bad, or worse now at this very time with us, than it was with them?

Consider, (1.) What errors and heresies are amongst us; can any people or age parallel the like? was ever the blessed Jesus more dragged, and trodden under the feet of vile mortals? how is his holy and sacred person contemned, his Godhead impudently denied by many, both by public preaching, and books printed and published.

(2.) Nay how is all revealed religion despised, and natural religion magnified, as sufficient to bring men to happiness? was the sacred Bible ever in any nation had in contempt and ridiculed, as it is at this very time, in this city and nation?

(3.) Nay, did Atheism ever so abound amongst any people, as it does here and what multitudes are corrupted and paganized (as I may say) already, though done in a secret and satanical manner, by diabolical craft and subtlety?

(4.) Was ever sodomy so common in a Christian nation, or so notoriously and frequently committed, as by two palpable evidences it appears to be, in and about this city, notwithstanding the clear light of the gospel which shines therein, and the great pains taken to reform the grand and abominable profaneness that abounds? is it not a wonder the patience of God hath not consumed us in his wrath, before this time? was ever swearing, blasphemy, whoring, drunkenness, gluttony, self-love, and cursed covetousness at such a bheight, or abounding to such a degree, as at this time here? were there ever such unnatural monsters known, who to enrich themselves, care not how they ruin the whole land, and the trade thereof, notwithstanding all the laws made to restrain and curb their hellish practices.

(5.) And amongst professors, was pride and earthly mindedness ever known to abound among any religious people, as at this day they do here? or were there ever greater divisions, or contentions heard of among a people professing Christianity? or were ever the faithful ministers of Christ more slighted, despised, and trod upon, or more neglected, at least some of them, as they are here, and in many parts and places of this nation? was there ever among any people, clearer and more powerful preaching, and fewer converts, or less practice of true godliness? What spiritual blindness, and hardness of heart, and damnable heresies, are multitudes left, or given up to? And also are not a greater number carried away with a strange giddiness in their heads, who run after, and cry up foolish and nonsensical notions, as if they loved husks and mere chaff, better than the pure milk of the word, and the sound and orthodox doctrine thereof, whilst a multitude of others only please themselves with the form and shell of godliness, without the power thereof?

(6.) Is not that little heat, life, and divine power which now attends the word, a sad symptom that our sun is going down, and that the shadows of the evening are drawn long upon us?

(7.) In a word, was any people ever known to be so unholy, unfruitful, and barren, who had such fruitful showers, and fruitful seasons, and so long together as we, who live in and about this city and nation, have had, and still have? Now all these things being considered, and laid to heart, may we not fear the kingdom of God may be taken from us, and given to another nation, bringing forth the fruit thereof?

Lastly, what a multitude of able ministers hath the Lord taken away in a few years past? and how few are raised up in their stead, with their spirit? Certainly this is a dismal sign, that God is about to remove the gospel from us: "When the Lord gives out his word, great is the company of them that publish it," Psal. lxxviii. 11. But when he takes them away, what may we expect? It is observed by worthy writers, that when God removeth his most eminent servants, fearful judgments soon were let in upon that people, among whom they had preached.

4. Since the gospel is so great a blessing, and the removal of it so sore a judgment, let us praise the Lord we have it yet continued to us: how few nations have it? and amongst those few, how few enjoy it in such a clear and glorious ministration as we have of it? It may be said of God's Israel in England, as of that of old, "Happy art thou (O England) who is like unto thee? a people saved by the Lord, who is the sword of his excellency," &c., Deut. xxxiii. 29. O that our sun might never go down any more; sad will it be with us, if on a sudden darkness should cover us, and our day be turned into night.

5. This may awaken sinners to cry to the Lord, to enlighten their dark minds; what, shall any abide in darkness whilst the sun shines in such a bright and glorious manner? if the gospel goes not but remains, and still shines brighter and brighter, yet it is all one to you who are blind, and so unconcerned, that you cry not to have your eyes opened: the Spirit of God only can do this, and therefore see you do not resist the Holy Ghost, nor sin away all his blessed motions, and soul-enlightening influences, until he will strive with you no more.

6. Let us all learn by what hath been said, to prize and improve the gospel while we have it. Let us say with our blessed Lord "I must work while it is day, the night comes when no man can work," John ix. 4. Should England be humbled for its sins, and God's people reform their ways, and improve the gospel, and the gospel-seasons; may be God will not deprive us of it, but forgive our sins, and heal the land; the only way is to consider how we are fallen, and repent, and do our first works, lest God remove our candlestick out of its place. Sirs, as one observes, the eclipse of the gospel is a greater loss and judgment, than the loss of our trade, the massacring of our wives and children, or chains of slavery and captivity a thousand times: we had better have our childrens' brains dashed against the walls, our houses burned, and our substance taken away, than for God to take the gospel from us. What a dolesome land would this be, should our enemies prevail, and popery be let in upon us? The glory of England lies in the gospel, in this it excels all nations of the earth; and when the gospel goes, our strength and glory goes also: it is likewise (as one observes) the ornament and honour of that nation or kingdom where it is; and if it be removed from this nation, what can we think, but that God designs the utter ruin and destruction of it? Moreover, should God take away the gospel, it may never be restored to us again any more; O what a long night would England then see! and yet should it be so, there may great light break forth in other nations, who have long sat in darkness: O how long hath Asia (where the seven churches were once planted) been without the gospel!

Lastly, let us all cry to God night and day, and plead with him, that he would not take the kingdom of God from England, nor send a famine among us, though we may fear it; for what a multitude are there here who hate the gospel, and the true worship of God, and strive to promote errors, and damnable heresies, and popish rites and superstitions also! nay, such we have in our bowels, who had rather popery was let in among us, than part with their errors and false ways, or rather than the purity of the gospel, and gospel-worship should spread amongst us, to the vanquishing of all their notions and idols. O cry that God would not depart from us, but yet dwell in our land, that it may remain a land of vision!

THE

SERMON XXXV.

For the kingdom of heaven is like unto a man that is an householder, who went early to hire labourers into his vineyard. And when he had agreed with the labourers for a penny a day, he sent them into his vineyard.—Matt. xx. 16.

THE evangelist Matthew has only recorded this parable, the occasion of which seems to be from what was said in the last verse of the foregoing chapter, viz., “but many that are first shall be last, and the last shall be first.” The Jews who were first called into covenant, and a church-relation with God, shall be cast off, and the Gentiles shall have that great privilege allowed them, and have the preference of the Jews; yet when the fulness of the Gentiles is come in, the Jews who were first shall be called, and so the first will be last.

The chief design of our Saviour in this parable appears to me as followeth.

1. To discover the early love God showed to the people of Israel, in choosing and constituting them his visible church, or before any other people in the world.

The chief design of this parable.

2. To discover the rejection of the Jews, and calling of the Gentiles.

3. To show that those whom God calleth into his vineyard, he expecteth faithful service of, to the glory of his rich grace.

4. To let all men know, that salvation is not of merit, or by works, but of grace, and that God acts towards his creatures alone from his own sovereignty; he that laboured but one hour, had the same reward with those who had borne the burden and heat of the day, and wrought twelve hours.

5. To show the evil and envious temper of the Jews and Pharisees towards the Gentiles; God calling the Gentiles to equal privileges at the latter end of the world with them, which seemed much to disturb their haughty and proud spirits.

2ndly. I shall endeavour to explain the several parts with the greatest care possible, according to that small light and knowledge received (though some hint as if the scope only of this parable ought to be attended, and no particular exposition given of the several parts, of which they give no reason.)

The parts explained.

“The kingdom of heaven is like,” &c.

The kingdom of heaven may mean the sovereign dispensation of God’s favours, or those blessings and privileges bestowed upon the sons of men, particularly in calling whom he pleaseth into his visible church, to labour therein.

“Is like unto a man that is an householder.”

The man refers to the great God (who is sometimes compared to an householder, and sometimes to an husbandman) his household is large, the whole world being his, and he provides for them all. “The earth is the Lord’s and the fulness thereof,” Psalm. xxiv. 1.

“Who went early in the morning to hire labourers into the vineyard.”

What meant by going out early, &c.

By the Lord’s going early in the morning to hire labourers, I understand is meant, his calling the Jews in the early age of the world, the vineyard of the Lord then, was the Jewish church. “For the vineyard of the Lord of hosts, is the house of Israel,” &c. Isa. v. 7.

“To hire labourers.”

Some would have our Lord refer here only to the Jews, under the dispensation of the law, that they had heaven promised them, on the condition of works of obedience, and the Gentiles only in a way of free-grace; but certainly this is an error, or a great mistake, for the way of salvation under the law and gospel, both to the Jews and Gentiles, is one and the same, being wholly of free-grace, through Jesus Christ. The covenant of works, it is true, was a conditional covenant; do this and live. But the law was not given on Mount

What meant by hiring of servants.

Sinai, to give life and salvation to the Jews, but rather to show how impossible it was for fallen man by the law to obtain eternal life. Therefore by hiring, here I understand nothing is more intended, but God’s free promise of grace and glory, through our Lord Jesus Christ, to all that believe in him, and faithfully serve him; and he that accepts of God’s call upon the terms of free-grace, may be said to be hired; for if it were such an hiring as the papists, and some others talk of, then salvation, as Paul shows, is of works, and not alone of grace. “Now to him that worketh, is the reward not reckoned of grace, but of debt,” Rom. iv. 4.

“When he had agreed with the labourers for a penny a day, he sent them into the vineyard,” ver. 2.

By labourers, as some signify, may principally be meant eminent persons, as the priests under the law, and ministers under the gospel; but I rather conclude, that our Lord means all persons who are called, and accept of that call, to work in his vineyard; and as to such he may be said to have agreed with them, they accepting of the terms propounded, either sincerely, or at least in show or appearance; for many are called who are not chosen, so not sincere persons.

“And he went out about the third hour, and saw others stand idle in the market-place.”

As God was said to go out early in the morning to hire labourers, which may refer to the beginning of the Jewish church in Abraham’s day; so the third, the sixth, the ninth hours, may refer to the succeeding times, in the days of Moses and the prophets.

Moreover, some think that our Saviour by the third hour, means such that are called in the morning of their days; and those at the sixth hour such who are called about the noon or middle of their days, and such at the ninth in their elder age; and the eleventh hour refers to such that are not called until old age, when they are just ready to go out of the world, but I do not think that this is directly and primarily intended here.

“And about the eleventh hour he went and found others standing idle, and saith unto them, why do ye stand here all the day idle?” ver. 6.

“And they said, because no man hath hired us; and he said unto them, go into the vineyard, and whatsoever is right that shall ye have,” ver. 7.

Who are meant by them called at the eleventh hour.

The calling these at the eleventh hour (all expositors, I think, generally conclude) refers to the calling of the Gentiles at the closing, or evening of the days of the Jewish church-state; the latter days, or the evening of days, not that the Gentiles were called into the Jewish church, no, but into the gospel church, the date or standing of the first being expired; and indeed the Gentiles, until the gospel-dispensation came in, might say, God, had not hired them; that is, had not called or offered grace to them, nor ever received them to be a distinct church; but then they were hired, called, and accepted as labourers in the gospel vineyard, and partook of equal privileges with the Jews that believed. “That the Gentiles should be fellow-heirs, and of the same body, and partake of his promise in Christ by the gospel," Eph. ii. 6.

"So when even was come, the Lord of the vineyard saith unto his steward, call the labourers, and give them their hire, beginning from the last unto the first," ver. 8.

"And when they came that were hired about the eleventh hour, they received every man a penny," ver. 9.

"But when the first came, they supposed that they should receive more, and they likewise received every man a penny," ver. 10.

It is concluded our Saviour alludes to the common hire that was given to labourers by the Jews; in those days, the Latin for a penny; as Marlorate notes, was Denarius, which is a kind of Roman coin, worth a groat; that is, (saith he) three French shillings and sixpence, as Gulielmus Budæus supposeth; and it is likely this was the reward of those times of a day's labour. My brethren, as you have often heard that parables run not always on all-four, but that there is oftentimes great disparity; so let none think that murmuring Jews received the same penny with gracious gospel-believers; for as there is a vast difference in the nature or quality of the talents, Matt. xxv., (as I shall show, God assisting) as well as in respect to the quantity of them; so also there is in respect of the penny here mentioned, (which the first labourers are said to receive,) and that which the last received; and for want of considering this, some run into great mistakes and errors.

The penny may not be the same in kind or quality.

My brethren, the Jews had their penny, or that which God promised them, viz., their legal and external privileges, the land of Canaan, and all the outward blessings of that legal covenant God made with Abraham, and his natural seed as such; yet they that believed (amongst the Jews,) received the same spiritual blessings, even free justification and eternal life, which was the same, and not more than the Gentiles had; but none of this sort of them murmured at the rich bounty of God to the poor Gentiles.

"And when they had received it, they murmured against the good man of the house, saying, these last have wrought but one hour, and thou hast made them equal with us, which have borne the burden and heat of the day," ver. 11, 12.

If by the penny, our Saviour refers to rewards above, then (as I said) the penny cannot be the same in kind; for the unbelieving, murmuring Jews had not eternal life, but fell short of that; but if it refers to gospel-privileges, or the blessings of grace, they were offered to both Jews and Gentiles alike, though first to the Jews, and then to the Gentiles. But the Jews, when their Messiah came, expected more than Christ offered to them, namely, a deliverance from all their external enemies, and great glory and prosperity in this world; but when they saw Christ would give no more to them (that had been his covenant-people a long time,) than he gave to the Gentiles, they murmured. But I conceive, that the main design of our Lord should chiefly be minded in these words, which was to show, that the unbelieving Jews were not contented with what the Lord had given to them, or offered to give them, nor with that favour, grace, and bounty he showed to the Gentiles.

"But he answered one of them, and said, friend, I do thee no wrong; didst thou not agree with me for a penny?" ver. 13.

Did I promise thee more than what I have given thee, or do not offer to give thee? Thou knowest the terms which were proposed to thee in the covenant I made with thy fathers. I have done thee no wrong, I am not worse than my word. My brethren, God performs the promises which he made to the Jews; and it was a hard case (since he had been so rich in his bounty and goodness to them) that they should be offended, and murmur at his goodness to the Gentiles.

"Take that thine is, and go thy way; I will give unto this last, even as unto thee," ver. 14.

These words are as a key, as I conclude, to open the mystery; for by those words it appears, the Lord turns these servants off, or out of his vineyard, without giving them more than they had.

The Jews not contented with their penny were rejected.

"Go thy way," I have done with thee, thou art an evil servant. It was for the sin of unbelief, and murmuring of the Jews, that God cast them off, they being not contented with what they had, nor was offered equally unto the Gentiles with them, viz., the spiritual blessings of grace, justification, pardon of sin, and eternal life.

"Is it not lawful for me to do what I will with my own? Is thine eye evil, because mine is good?" ver. 15.

The blessed God vindicates himself in his just and righteous proceedings with the Jews two ways.

1. That he agreed with them for a penny, which perhaps may denote those external privileges and blessings they had, and the promise of Christ, whom he sent and first offered to them; and for their rejecting of the Lord Jesus, he cast them off, or for their unbelief.

2. By showing that he may do what he pleaseth with his own, he being Master of his own favours; and therefore since he acts in a way of sovereignty, according to the good pleasure of his will, it is abominable for them to charge him with injustice in bestowing his bounty to others, or to whom he thinks good.

“So the last shall be first, and the first shall be last.” This shows that the Gentiles, who were last called into the vineyard should first in a most eminent manner enjoy the blessings of the gospel, with the free and rich grace, love, and bounty of God. And the Jews, that were first the peculiar people of God, and had the first offer of Christ, for their unbelief were cast off, and be the last that shall partake of the gospel-privileges, and of God’s special favours. “Blindness in part hath happened to Israel, until the fulness of the Gentiles is come in, then all Israel shall be saved,” &c. Rom. xi. 25.

“For many are called, but few are chosen,” ver. 16.

1. These words show that many who were called, hired, or received of the Jewish people into their visible church, and vineyard of God, were not chosen and approved of God.

All the Jewish nations were taken into that vineyard; “but though the number of the children of Israel be as the sand of the sea, yet but a remnant shall be saved.”

And so also many who are hired or called of the Gentiles, and do partake of the outward privileges of the gospel church; yet but a few by God’s eternal decree of election are ordained to everlasting life. For as the first may refer to the Jews and Pharisees, who were a proud, confident, and conceited people, looking with disdain upon all others, and were but very few of them chosen; so the first may also refer to such as are proud and conceited, and self-confident people among us, looking upon themselves to be the only true church, and despised of others; yet those that they disdain, like as the Pharisees did the Publicans of old, may first and before them partake of God’s special blessings; for very few amongst the first sort in either sense may be chosen. “For not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble are called; but God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise, and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the mighty; and base things of the world, and things that are despised, hath God chosen; yea, and things which are not to bring to nought things that are: that no flesh should glory in his presence.” 1 Cor. i. 26. 29. By things the apostle means persons, such as wise men count fools, and learned men count ignorant, and the honourable esteem base and contemptible creatures.

And having thus briefly opened all the several and distinct parts of this parable by way of exposition, I shall take notice of nine points of doctrine from some particular parts thereof.

Doct. 1. That the legal church of Israel, and gospel church also may fitly be, and are compared to a vineyard.

Doct. 2. That God hires all the labourers whom he brings unto his vineyard.

Doct. 3. That God hath some faithful servants or labourers in his vineyard.

Doct. 4. That is an abominable sin, for sinners to stand all the day long idle in the market-place.

Doct. 5. That God calls some into his vineyard early, even at the third hour, or in the morning of their days, and others not until old age.

Doct. 6. That no man shall lose any thing by being truly religious, or faithful labourers in God’s vineyard.

Doct. 7. That the Jews were not pleased with the blessings and favours God bestowed upon the Gentiles, but expected more than God was pleased to give them; and for their obstinacy, unbelief, and murmuring, they were rejected and turned off with their penny, and so shall be the last that partake of God’s gospel-blessings and favours.

Doct. 8. That God acts towards the children of men in a way of sovereignty, and gives his special grace and favours how and to whom he pleaseth.

Doct. 9. That many who are called or hired by the external preaching of the gospel, are not chosen to eternal life, nor approved of by the Lord.

I shall, God assisting, speak briefly to all or most of these propositions.

Doct. 1. That the legal and gospel-church also may be, and are compared to a vineyard.

Having in opening one or two parables, already showed how fitly the church of God may be compared to a vineyard, I shall be very short in speaking to this, and do little more than hint the general heads, by way of parallel.

1. A vineyard is a piece of ground taken out of a wilderness, or other common ground, designed by the owner thereof for some special use, both in respect of profit and pleasure : so the people of Israel, or the whole nation of the Jews, God severed or separated from all other people and nations of the world, to be a peculiar people to himself, and made them his visible church under the law. "For thou art a holy people unto the Lord thy God, and the Lord thy God hath chosen thee to be a special people unto himself, above all people that are upon the face of the earth," Deut. vii. 6, &c. But this being a typical church, it ceased when the antitype came, and then God severed a people out of that national church of the Jews, and out of the Gentile nations, to be his gospel-church, which consisted of holy and regenerated persons, though not taking any one particular nation, as a nation, into such a church-state (as he before did the nation or commonwealth of Israel) and from hence it appears, that the gospel-church, or churches, are not national, but congregational, all not consisting of the carnal seed of believers, but of the true spiritual seed.

In what respects the church may be compared to a vineyard,

2. A vineyard is walled or fenced in, to separate it from all other waste ground, and to secure it from beasts or other enemies, that otherwise might spoil it : so God hath fenced in, and secured his gospel-church from all enemies that may arise against it, to spoil and lay it waste from without. Every attribute of God, with his angels that encamp about his people, and also his special providence, is a wall, or walls of security to his church, together with his special constitution, and the peculiar discipline thereof.

The church fenced in, and how.

3. A vineyard is planted with choice plants, or sowed with precious seed : so the church consists of choice spiritual plants, and is sowed with the precious seed of divine grace. "The men of Israel are his pleasant plants," Isa. v. 7. "Hence called the trees of righteousness, the planting of the Lord, that he may be glorified," Isa. xvi. 3.

4. An owner of a vineyard employs under-workmen to plant, sow, and prune, and water it ; so hath God under-workmen. "I have planted and Apollos hath watered," 1 Cor. iii. 6.

5. The ground of a vineyard is digged, dunged, and well manured, before it is planted : so is the vineyard of the Lord of hosts. "Break up the fallow ground of your hearts, and sow not among thorns," Hos. x. 12, &c. This is done by the special convictions of the Spirit. What said the vinedresser about the barren fig-tree ; "I will dig about it, and dung it," &c.

See the parable of the barren fig-tree, in the 4th book.

Divers things are included in special convictions. (1.) A disquieting sense of sin, in respect of the guilt of it, with respect to the law of God, nature, and holiness of God, or that great evil that is in it, as it is opposite to God, and a resisting of his will. (2.) Great and bitter sorrow, not only for the guilt, but filth also that is in it. (3.) Terror of conscience, it pricks them at the heart, and its wounds are deep. (4.) A continual restlessness and longing after healing, pardon, ease, peace, &c. (5.) If they for a time go off, they certainly come on again, if they are the special convictions of the Spirit ; and (6.) they end in convictions of righteousness.

6. In a vineyard are divers sorts of plants, some old, and some young, being newly planted, and some that flourish and grow exceedingly, and others that seem to decay ; and some more, and others less fruitful : so in the church of God are some old and experienced Christians, and some that are babes in Christ ; and some also grow in grace, grow in faith and love abundantly, and others, through Satan's temptations, the snares of this world, and the corruptions of their own hearts, seem to decay and wither in their souls, or flourish not for some time ; but if right plants, they recover again, and bring forth much fruit to God ; "they shall revive as the corn."

Divers sorts of plants in God's vineyard.

7. It is observed that some young trees, or branches, bear and bring forth more fruit than some old trees ; so it is in Christ's vineyard, some young converts are more zealous, more humble, more spiritual, holy, and lively than many that have been a long time planted therein ; yet not withstanding the promise is, that the "trees of the Lord shall bring forth fruit in old age, they shall be fat and flourish ; they that are planted in the house of the Lord, shall flourish in the courts of our God," Psal. xcii. 12, 13, 14.

8. A vineyard must be often watered, and needs pruning and dressing also ; so must the vineyard of Christ, and therefore God causes showers to fall daily upon it, and makes the spiritual clouds likewise to distil dew and sweet rain upon it. "My doctrine shall drop as rain, my speech shall distil as the dew, as the small rain upon the tender herbs, and as showers upon the earth," Deut. xxx. 2. And also the vineyard of Christ needs the pruning of God's rod, and mortification by the Spirit, and the careful discharge of holy discipline.

9. A vineyard is continually watched, lest any break in to spoil it, rob it, hurt or annoy it; so God is said to watch "his vineyard of red wine, both day and night, lest any hurt it," Isa. xxvii. 2. 3. He himself watcheth it, and he hath set his ministers upon its walls to watch it also. "The Lord is thy keeper, the Lord is thy shade upon thy right-hand. The Lord shall preserve thee from all evil, he shall preserve thy soul," Psal. cxxi. 5. 7.

No idle persons ought to be suffered in a vineyard, but all sent therein, as servants ought to labour: so in the vineyard of Christ, neither pastors nor people should be idle, but every one labour to promote the glory of God, and the good, comfort, peace, and well being of the church; and as it is grievous to the owner of the vineyard if he see it is barren, or doth not answer his cost, pains, and expectations, and it provokes him also, if it abides barren, to lay it waste; so the Lord was grieved for the barrenness of the vineyard of old. "Forty years long was I grieved with that generation. I looked it should bring forth grapes, and it brought forth wild grapes. Go to, I will tell you what I will do with my vineyard; I will take away the hedge thereof, and it shall be eaten up; and break down the wall thereof; and it shall be trodden down, I will lay it waste," &c. Isa. v. 6. 7.

APPLICATION.

1. Admire God's distinguishing love, in choosing you, and separating you from the barren wilderness of this world, to be a peculiar people to himself. "For who maketh thee to differ from another?" &c., 1 Cor. iv. 7.

2. From hence we may infer, that the church and the world are distinct, and such as would confound them together may from hence be convinced of their ignorance and folly. "A garden inclosed is my sister, my spouse, a spring shut up, a fountain sealed," Cant. iv. 12. "Come out from amongst them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing, and I will receive you," 2 Cor. vi. 17.

3. Wonder that God hath not laid his vineyard in England waste long before now, considering how barren it has been: O what hath he done to make us fruitful! but may he not say, "I looked it should bring forth grapes, and lo, it brought forth wild grapes?" We are planted in a fruitful hill, London; London and Bristol, what fruitful hills are you? what precious soil have you been? Canaan certainly never flowed with such milk and honey, as England doth: what a patient God have we? that the wild boar is not let in, and our strong wall broken down, and we laid waste?

4. Let us labour to become more fruitful, and so prove and demonstrate ourselves to be plants of God's right-hand planting: shall such an husbandman plant a vineyard, and graft us into such a vine, and afford us such fruitful seasons, and we after all bring forth no fruit to him? then we may expect to be taken away, or plucked up, as not being Matt. xv. 13. planted by the heavenly husbandman. The plants of God's planting are united to a fruitful stock, not only implanted in his vineyard, but into the true vine. Were we well rooted in faith and love, and better established and settled in the vineyard where we are planted, willing to bear and forbear one with another, and live in love, or were better united to one another, we should flourish more than we do.

But I shall proceed to the next proposition at another season.

SERMON XXXVI.

The kingdom of heaven is like to a man that went to hire labourers into his vineyard, &c.
—Matt. xx. 1.

Doct. 2. The blessed God hires all the labourers whom he brings into his vineyard.

In speaking to this truth,

I. I shall show you what hiring here doth denote or signify, both negatively and positively.

II. Lay down several explanatory propositions about this hiring.

III. Show what may be contained in the penny or reward which God agrees to give to his faithful labourers in his vineyard.

IV. Apply it.

I. What hiring doth denote.

First. Negatively. It doth not denote or imply, that the labourers can procure merit, or deserve anything, or that penny which is here mentioned.

What being hired doth not denote.

1. Because the new or gospel covenant is not a conditional covenant, as the covenant of works was, which was given on Mount Sinai; for there was a mutual restitution between the Lord and the house of Israel, with promises of earthly blessings upon their obedience, and threatenings of God's displeasure for their disobedience. But the new covenant contains in it (as to us) only the free promise of God, for the sake of Christ, or upon his merits. "In thee shall the families of the earth be blessed," Gen. xii. 3; that is, in Christ all the elect shall be blessed with grace here, and glory hereafter. "I will be their God, and they shall be my people," Jer. xxxi. 33. "A new heart will I give you, and a new spirit will I put within you; and I will take away the heart of stone out of your flesh, and will give you a heart of flesh," &c., Ezek. xxxvi. 26. These are free and absolute promises; is there anything required of us, as a federal condition, which we must on our part perform, that we may receive these favours? No certainly, who will say there is?

2. It appears, the new covenant is not a conditional covenant as to us, (though Christ for us, in bringing of it in, was obliged to perform meriting and federal conditions) because it is positively said, that the new covenant is not according to the old: and as I conceive it is not according to it, chiefly in this respect. "Behold the days come, saith the Lord, that I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel. Not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers, in the day I took them by the hand, to bring them out of the land of Egypt, which my covenant they broke," &c.

Hiring doth not denote previous qualifications, and federal conditions by us to be performed.

Object. This only refers to the Jews, when they shall be called in the last days.

Ans. God forbid it should only refer to them; but (1.) As Mr. Pool well observes upon these words, the apostle's application of this very place of scripture to gospel saints, in Heb. viii., puts it out of doubt, that this promise refers to the gospel times, and so belongs to all the called of God, whether Jews or Gentiles. Again, Paul shows, that "the Gentiles are fellow-heirs of the same promises," Eph. ii. 13. (2.) Nor is it said to be new, or not according to the old, in respect of the notion of a Testament, for the old bore the same notion; nor (3.) because it was revealed after a new manner, &c., but because it was not primarily made between God and us, but between God the Father and God the Son, for us, and without any federal conditions, which the old consisted of; nor a promise of an earthly penny, or earthly promises, but is established upon better promises, viz., spiritual and heavenly promises, and only made to God's elect, not to them that believe, and to their fleshly seed as such, but only to God's elect seed. And in these respects it is not according to the old covenant made on Mount Sinai.

3. Because (as I have often said and proved) salvation is only of grace, even from the first to the last; it is God's free gift. "The wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life." See how the apostle varies in his expressions, death is the true and just hire of sin; sinners shall be paid their wages in doing the devil's work: but he doth not say (as one notes) that eternal life is the wages of our righteousness, but it is the gift of God. He varies the phrase on purpose to show, that we attain not eternal life by our own merits, or by our own works or worthiness, not that we deserve it as our just hire, for labouring in God's vineyard.

See our Annotations on this text.

4. Because was it our just due, as the reward of our work, or a due debt (as it is among men that are hired to work in a vineyard) we should have whereof to boast; but our salvation is of God's free grace; that all boasting might be excluded. "Where is boasting then? It is excluded. By what law? of works? nay, but by the law of faith." The apostle farther argues in the case from Abraham: "If Abraham was justified by works, he had whereof to glory, but not before God. For to him that worketh, the reward is not reckoned of grace, but of debt," Rom. iv. 2; that is, works to that end, i. e., that he may be justified and saved for his own work, or for labouring in God's vineyard. Compare this with what our apostle saith in another place: "By grace ye are saved, through faith, and that not of yourselves, it is the gift of God; not of works, lest any man should boast." Again he saith, "Not by works of righteousness, but according to his mercy he saveth us," &c., Tit. iii. 5. Whatsoever cometh to us, or we have by works, we have as a just debt, and not by grace. "If it be of grace, then it is not of works: otherwise grace is no more grace. But if it be of works, then it is no more grace: otherwise work is no more work," Rom. xi. 6.

We have nothing as a debt, but all of grace.

5. Hiring doth not denote desert, because the terms of the gospel are quite different from the terms of the law. The terms of the law run thus: "He that doth these things shall live in them; or do this and thou shalt live." But the gospel saith, "He that works not, but believeth on him that justifies the ungodly," &c., Rom. iv. 5. "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved," Acts xvi. 31. The one requires doing, and the other believing only, and not doing, or working for life: though it is by our works that our faith is known to be true faith.

6. Hiring doth not imply desert, because when we have done all, our Saviour teacheth us to say, "We are unprofitable servants," Luke xvii. 10. But he is certainly no unprofitable servant, whose works commend him to God, for which he deserveth the penny, or Phil. iii. 8, 9. wages of everlasting life: besides, the apostle utterly in this case disclaims and renounceth all his own works and righteousness.

7. This hiring cannot denote, that labourers in Christ's vineyard have the reward as just desert, because we have all grace here, and shall have glory hereafter, for Christ's merits, or as the just reward of his works and complete obedience; and indeed none else could deserve anything at God's hand, because all our powers and abilities, or what we are, or can do, is of and from the Lord, what we are and can do is his. And this further appears by what we have in this parable; he that wrought but one hour had as much as he that wrought six, nine, or the whole day.

So much in the negative.

Secondly. In the affirmative, I shall show in one or two things what hiring doth denote.

1. Hiring is to be taken in the same sense, that the buying which our Lord speaks of is to be taken, viz., "buying of wine and milk," &c. As the one is buying without money and without price, so the other is our being hired without expecting anything by way of desert for our labour.

2. Hiring may denote the terms of the gospel, which God offers to sinners, which they are to accept of.

(1.) They are required to hear the gospel preached. "Hear, and thy soul shall live," Isa. lv. 3. Hearing is that which is required of us, and the promise is hire or reward, as an act of God's own free grace: yet know, it is God that must give us an hearing ear, and open our hearts, as he did the heart of Lydia, that we may attend upon the world preached.

(2.) To believe in Christ. This God requires of us, and the promise is our hire, or that which is our encouragement, which is our being saved. Yet faith to believe is also God's gift. Thus the hire here is but to be brought to accept of Christ, of life, of righteousness, and of eternal life alone, in a way of free-grace: and such who do thus truly and sincerely receive Christ, embrace Christ as he is offered in the gospel, may be said to be hired: and such God sends into his church or vineyard to work, or to serve him in a way of holiness and righteousness, discharging all those duties he requires of them, to show forth his glory, and to be made meet for the eternal kingdom.

II. I shall lay down several explanatory propositions to open this mystery a little further, and more fully.

Prop. 1. That he that is hired into a man's service, must renounce the service of all others. No man can serve two masters, who have direct and contrary interests and designs to carry on: so he that will, or is helped to accept of Jesus Christ, and enter himself into his vineyard, must renounce all his sins, and sinful ways, and also the inordinate love of this world. "A man cannot serve God and mammon."

Prop. 2. He that is hired, and wholly gives himself up to another man's, i. e., to seek, and endeavour, and labour alone to promote his interest, honour, and designs in the world, is no more his own man; his strength, wisdom, time, and all he hath is his to whom he hath hired himself, and not his own; he is not any other man's servant: so that person that Christ hires, or who accepts of the Lord Jesus as his Lord and master, and voluntarily is helped to give himself wholly up to him, he is no more his own, he is no longer to live unto himself, nor seek his own glory, nor to promote any other interest, but the interest of Christ, and his glory only. "His servants you are whom ye obey," &c., Rom. vi. 16.

Prop. 3. There is in hiring a mutual agreement between the Lord Christ and believers. Christ accepteth of them to be his servants, and believers

To have anything on our merits, is to detract from Christ's merits.

A servant hired into the vineyard, renounceth all other masters.

A believer hired into the vineyard, shows he is no more his own, but the Lord's.

Christ and believers ac-accept of Christ to be their Lord. Every believer saith, I love my master, and promises freely, heartily, and sincerely to serve him, Christ says, I receive thee into my house, into my family, and I will provide for thee, own and acknowledge thee to be my servant, and one that I have accounted faithful, and do accept of to dwell with, and this mutual agreement passeth between Jesus Christ and every believer, before a believer is taken into the vineyard, and hath wrought or laboured there. We accepting or receiving Christ, and believing in him, are hired, and have received earnest money, viz., the Holy Spirit, and we are justified and adopted; for no man that is a servant of Christ, but is his son, his child also; for he ought not to serve God with a servile spirit, nor be attended with servile, or bondage fear, who hath received the spirit of a son, and so serves only with filial fear. "For you have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear, but ye have received the Spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba, Father," Rom. viii. 15.

Prop. 4. A nobleman may covenant or agree, to take a person into his service (as a hired servant) from whom he expecteth true and faithful service, though he be weak, feeble, and able to do but little work, so Jesus Christ knows that we are weak and impotent persons, "and without him we are able to do nothing," John xv. 5. Yet what we are enabled to do, he expecteth we should do it with a ready mind sincerely, because we love him, and so serve him with all fidelity and constancy, nay, and work in his vineyard also, they that are accepted by the Father, called and justified, it appears from hence, ought to come into his church. "Take (saith our Lord) my yoke upon you, and learn of me," Matt. xi. 29. Such Christians, therefore that look upon themselves to be hired, and yet refuse to go into Christ's vineyard, are worthy of the most sharp rebuke; it is not enough for such to say, why, I do what service I can for Jesus Christ in the market-place, which is the world; but they must go into the vineyard. "He sent him into the vineyard." There are but two places to be in, while we are in this body, viz., either the world (called here the market-place) or the church, the vineyard of Jesus Christ.

Prop. 5. The reward is first propounded to each person a man hires, and it is a motive to him, and a great encouragement; so it is here, because "they know their labour shall not be in vain in the Lord." Our Lord told his disciples what they that served him should have, though they serve him from a principle of love, yet may eye, "or have respect to the recompense of reward, as Moses had," Heb. xi. 26. True, Christ's merits, Christ's righteousness gives us a right, or is our title to the life eternal; yet the promises are great motives to every true Christian to labour and endure hardness for Christ's sake as in Jacob's case, he served Laban fourteen years for Rachel; and though his work was hard, and he suffered in winter many cold blasts, and in the summer the scorching heat of the sun, &c., yet those years seemed to him but a few days, such was the love he had to her, who was his hire. Thus it is with every true labourer in God's vineyard, Christ being his hire, his reward, all the years of his service, though hard to the flesh, are looked upon as nothing; he finds Christ's yoke easy, and it is that help he meets with from Christ for ever, that causeth his yoke to be easy, and his burden light, to every true Christian.

III. The next thing I proposed to speak to was, to show what is contained in the penny which is said to be given to Christ's labourers.

I have before showed, that as there is a great difference between the vineyard of God under the law, or the national church of Israel, and the gospel-church, so there is also between the hire, wages, or promises made to the labourers, who wrought in each of them, though the hire or reward of all God's elect in Christ, under the law or gospel, are one and the same. But the promises made unto the whole house of Israel, considered as a legal church, were external or earthly blessings, which penny or reward God gave them, and kept up the fence or wall of their vineyard, until by their sin God cast them off, and laid it waste.

But to proceed. God's faithful and approved servants have a glorious penny or reward promised them.

1. God himself is their hire (as was hinted) and was from the beginning of the world, of all who truly believed in him, and faithfully served him. "And Abraham said, Lord God, what wilt thou give me?" this may seem a strange question, because in the very verse before it is said, "After these things the word of the Lord came unto Abraham in a vision saying, fear not Abraham, I am thy shield, and thy exceeding great reward."

Might not one have said to him, what art thou not content with what God hath promised thee? is not God himself enough? what canst thou have or desire more? but he might have replied, if the promise of God be not performed, or if he withhold me from the promised seed, through whom I know I am to have God to be my God, and no otherways, all my hope will be frustrated. "And he said, Lord God, what wilt thou give me, seeing I go childless?—Behold, to me thou hast given no seed," Gen. xv. 2, 3. Lord God, I know it is in thy Son that thou wilt be my God: it is in my seed that I and all that believe shall be blessed; if Isaac be not given from whose loins my Saviour is to proceed, what wilt thou give? I see his day, and this rejoices my soul; but until thy promise is made good, that I have a son, all that thou hast given me cannot satisfy me, and God therefore renewed his promise, ver. 4. "He that comes forth out of thine own bowels, shall be thine heir.—And he believed God, and it was counted to him for righteousness;" that is, the object of his faith, or Christ that should (as concerning the flesh) proceed out of his loins, should be his righteousness, in whom he should be blessed, justified, and God be his God, in a special and peculiar covenant. God was not the God of Abraham, nor of any man on earth, so as to be his exceeding great reward, and portion for ever, any other way but in Christ only. And this way Abraham foresaw he came to have a special interest in God; and now this is that which I say, viz., God himself, in Jesus Christ, is our hire, or our reward. And O what a penny is this, believers do not serve God for nought! hence David also saith, "The Lord is the portion of mine inheritance, the lines are fallen unto me in pleasant places, I have a goodly heritage," Psal. xvi. 5, 6. "The portion of Jacob, is not like them, for he is the former of all things," Jer. li. 19.

What a penny or reward God is.

2. God, giving himself to us, gives all that he, and all he hath, so far as he is communicable to creatures; his love to delight in us, his mercy to pity us, his power to uphold and strengthen us, his faithfulness to preserve us, his word to direct us, his promises to comfort us, and his angels to guard us, and to minister to us, grace to adorn us, and heaven to crown us.

3. These things being considered, it appears that Jesus Christ is our hire, or the Reward of all God's chosen servants, not only as God, but considered as he is Mediator, "My Lord and my God." Ours as a Redeemer, or to be a ransom for us, a Priest to atone for our sins, and to make our peace; a King to subdue our enemies, and rule in and over us; a Prophet to teach, to guide, and lead us, and a Physician to heal us, a Fountain to wash us from our uncleanness, a Sun to enlighten us, and a Shield to defend us, and a Bridegroom to espouse us, so that we may say, "My beloved is mine, and I am his," Cant. ii. 16. "Who of God is made unto us, wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption.

4. The Holy Spirit is our hire, or is comprehended in this penny, by which we are united to Christ, quickened, regenerated, and have the image of God formed in us, and to be an earnest of the whole inheritance, and a seal of the promises, and of all covenant blessings, and a witness of our sonship, and of eternal life.

5. Grace, or the fruits of the Spirit, and further increase of it, is part of our hire, or included in this penny.

6. Also all the blessings and privileges of the gospel, as justification, pardon of sin, adoption, free access to the throne of grace, communion with God, peace of conscience, final perseverance, and eternal glory when this life is ended. "Fear not, little flock, it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom," Luke xii. 32. And from hence it appears, our reward is very great, and not a debt, but of mere grace, or of infinite love and favour.

APPLICATION.

1. This may inform us, that believers work not for life; we do not work that we may live, be accepted and justified, but because God hath accepted, called, and justified us. Hiring in the gospel-covenant, is an act of God's free grace to his chosen, not to all that are called, and seem to be hired or accepted, but only to such that he hath chosen. "Many are called, but few are chosen."

2. This in the second place shows, they err exceedingly, that seek to be accepted by their own works or obedience; for this is to render salvation to be a debt. What, will you dare to bring in your faith, obedience, inherent righteousness, or good works, as a federal condition of your acceptation with God, and justification before him, or in his sight? Will you have God indebted to you, and plead for wages for your work sake, through Christ's merits, in procuring such terms for you? I hope none here have received such unsound notions, which so much tend to eclipse the free grace of God in Jesus Christ. God hath first a respect to our persons in Christ, and then accepteth our performances or obedience, discharged also in his own strength. We can do nothing until we are first quicken'd by Christ, and are united to him by his Spirit : therefore no good works can precede our union with him, justification and regeneration. Doth Christ send dead men, dead sinners, to work in his vineyard, or such that hate him, or have enmity in their minds against him ?

3. Be exhorted you that are sinners ; (1.) To look to Christ, that he may become a precious Jesus to you, and you enabled to believe in him, by receiving the Spirit of him. (2.) And then make haste into his vineyard ; he accepteth all that come to him. " He that comes to me, I will in no wise cast him out," John vi. 37. Are any of you willing to be hired ? do you want a Master ? Let me tell you there is a Master that wants servants, and he likes not those that stand idle all the day in the market-place : you cannot have a better Master.

As to motives to stir you up to enter into Christ's service :

1. Consider, that you must be hired, i. e., called and accepted of Christ, and renounce all other masters before thou goest into the vineyard. Art thou willing to renounce and forsake all, and embrace Jesus Christ, and become his servant ? Thou canst not say thou hast no call, or no man shows a willingness to hire or accept of thee ; for Christ shows to whom the gospel is preached, his willingness to receive such sinners. What say you that seem to be called in the third hour, I mean you that are young, or you that are about the middle of your days ? Are you willing to be hired this day ? Shall a poor worm be helped to prevail with some of you ? What, not one soul cleave to my great Master ? What, none accept of Jesus Christ, not one ? O that one, though it be but one would say, I can stand here idle no longer ! What do you say, what answer shall I return ? shall I tell Jesus Christ, that there is not one in this great assembly that either loves him, or cares for his service, who is not yet come into his vineyard ? Young-men, are you willing to renounce the service of sin ? I fear you are hired already, but is it not pity, sin and the devil should have the morning and flower of your days, and you put off Christ until you are old ? What do you old sinners say ? What is your purpose and resolution ? will you forsake your old masters, your sins and folly, and cleave to Christ ? You will repent it one day, if you refuse thus to do. Let the time past suffice, that you have wrought the will of the Gentiles.

2. Consider, that there is not such a Master in the world, none so honourable, so great, and glorious ; all kings are subject (or shall be) to him, and lick the dust of his feet ; he is the only Potentate, Lord of lords, and King of kings.

Christ is the best Master in the world.

3. He exceeds all in love, goodness, and rich bounty, he espouseth all such that accept of him and his service.

4. He is rich, and clothes all his servants in glorious and noble robes, and puts chains of gold about their necks, and crowns on their heads.

5. He keeps also a very noble house, he feeds all his servants with fat things, nay, with the bread of life, and delights theirs souls with the strongest consolations.

6. He gives the best wages ; for rewards of grace far exceed all rewards of debt or merit, they are indeed the desert and merits of his own blood ; and by that you may perceive his wages, though freely given to sinners, must needs be very great, since they deserved such a price : the Father himself, and all true happiness is comprehended in the wages he offers to you ; and therefore you will say, you cannot deserve such wages.

7. Besides, he is able to defend you from all evil ; and when you die, your joys will be unspeakable. Will you accept of this Master ?

8. His service is not hard, his commandments are not grievous ; his yoke, you heard, " is easy," &c.

Secondly, This shows the ignorance, folly, and madness of such sinners, who refuse to accept of Christ, and of his service, and prefer the service of sin and Satan above it, who will eternally destroy their souls. O what a difference is there between the service of Christ and the service of sin, and the wages Christ gives, and the wages of sin ! Will you choose the wages of unrighteousness, and be damned for ever ? O lay your hands upon your hearts, and come to some fixed resolution this day, for Jesus Christ's sake, and for the sake of your precious and immortal souls.

The folly of sinners.

Thirdly, We also learn from hence, That the happiness of Christ's servants is very great. O happy, happy, eternally happy are you that are true Christians, or the faithful servants of Jesus Christ ! Rejoice and be glad, for great is your reward in heaven ; be content with your present portion of earthly things, you that are poor in this world, since you are rich in faith, and heirs of a kingdom.

The happiness of believers.

SERMON XXXVII.

For the kingdom of heaven is like unto a man that is an householder, who went early to hire labourers into his vineyard.—Matt. xx. 1—15,

1. I HAVE showed you why the church of God is compared to a vineyard.

2. What hiring of labourers doth denote.

I shall now proceed to the next point of doctrine proposed.

Doct. 3. That God hath some faithful servants or labourers in his vineyard.

In speaking of this, I shall

I. Premise or note one or two things about servants, &c.

II. Show what is necessary, or required in faithful servants or labourers.

Christ chooseth whom he pleases to be his labourers. 1. That a master chooses whom he pleaseth to be his servant, they are persons chosen by him; so the Lord chooseth whom he pleaseth to be his special servants, as an act of his own sovereign pleasure. God made choice first of all of Abraham, and then of the whole house of Israel to be his servants under the law; and then in the gospel-time he chose the twelve apostles, and others, even such that he was pleased to call into his gospel-vineyard, both among the Jews and Gentiles also.

2. A servant ought to know his work, or what business his master hath appointed him to do; so every servant of Christ ought to know what his business or work is: "for the Son of Man is as a man taking a long journey into a far country, who left his house, and gave authority to his servants, and to every man his work, and commanded the porter to watch," Mark xiii. 34.

3. Those servants that are hired, or called into a vineyard, ought to have wisdom or skill in that proper employment they are set about. Moreover, the work of labourers is commonly hard, and calls for strength and diligence also: so likewise such that Christ chooseth and calls into his vineyard, ought to be endowed with spiritual wisdom in the mysteries of the gospel, and to understand what their own work is, and in what manner and time every thing is to be done.

Quest. What is the work which all Christians ought to be found doing?

Some labourers in the vineyard are officers, viz., elders, deacons. Answ. Their work is to be considered according to their respective places and stations where they are set by our great Master, the Lord Jesus Christ. Some are officers, or in places of higher and greater trust, as elders, teachers, and deacons, yet all are labourers.

The work of elders.

1. The Elder's or Pastor's work is to study the word, to show himself approved. "A workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth," 2 Tim. ii. 15. And that he may also give to every one his portion of meat in season.

2. He is to strive to plant more fresh, and choice plants in the vineyard, and also to strengthen and cherish such plants as were before planted.

3. He must be very laborious and constant in preaching the word. "Let the elders that rule well, be accounted worthy of double honour, especially that labour in the word and doctrine," 1 Tim. v. 17. Again he saith, "Meditate on these things, give thyself wholly to them," &c. 1 Tim. iv. 15. "Preach the word, be instant in season, and out of season, reprove, rebuke, exhort with all long suffering and doctrine," 2 Tim. iv. 2.

They ought to be disentangled from all worldly affairs, and be very painful labourers in the vineyard.

5. They must watch it also, to prevent the evil seeds of error from springing up therein, and to give warning of approaching dangers, and to see no servant of Christ neglects his work, duties, or business; or if any plants seem to wither, they must strive to recover them if possible.

6. They must know as much as in them lies the state of the vineyard, and of all that are planted therein, and water them continually with comfortable and consoling doctrine.

1 Cor. v. 4, 5, Acts. 6. Thus Apollos was said to water those that Paul planted, and if any rotten plants or branches he discovered, they are (after all due means be used) to see they are cut off by the axe of excommunication.

The work of a deacon.

1. The Deacon's work is to take care of tables, viz. (1.) To see the Lord's table be provided for. (2.) To see the poor's table be provided for, and, (3.) the minister or pastor's table also.

2. They are to take special care to see that the aged widows who are poor, are not neglected; and also that none of the poor are idle, and so put the church to an unnecessary charge; and are also to know the state of all the poor.

3. Moreover, the deacons are to be helps in government. Some think Paul calls the deacons elders, when he speaks of "elders, that rule well," 1 Tim. v. 17, (as our annotators observe) though others judge he means ministers who are aged, and not able to preach the word, yet capable to help in ruling or governing the church; but some others think there were men ordained elders, that were not gifted to preach, but to be helpful in discipline, or in the government of the church; but we read neither of their qualifications, or how to be chosen (nor of their peculiar work, distinct from pastors, nor any such elders chosen in any particular church in the apostles' days) can see no ground for any such an office, or officers in the church.

4. Deacons should see to the poor, that are sick, lame, or past their labour, and such that are out of employment, being reduced to straits. The deacons are the fathers of Christ's poor, and therefore should be tender-hearted men.

5. They also should see that there is an equality in contributing to the necessary charges of the church, and to stir up and exhort the rich, and all that are able, to a free and cheerful contributing on all occasions.

2ndly. All are to be labourers that are called into the vineyard.

1. Every one has a particular spot of precious ground to dress, keep, and take of, viz., his own soul. "Only take heed to thyself, and keep thy soul diligently," &c., Deut. iv. 9. Every one is to watch his own heart, and see that no corruption, like weeds, spoil the growth of grace, and so deface or dishonour the king's vineyard, and spoil its glory. Some men's hearts are like the vineyard of the slothful, viz., "All grown over with thorns, and nettles have covered the face thereof," Prov. iv. 23.

The work of every person in the vineyard.

Let every one consider, (1.) What a sum was given to purchase this little spot of ground, i. e., the soul, namely, the blood of the Son of God. (2.) What precious seed Christ has sowed therein. (3.) Likewise the mighty charge given to every one of us, to watch and keep it; "Keep thy heart with all diligence, for out of it are the issues of life," Prov. iv. 23. (4.) "Consider the account which must be given of the soul at the great day, or when we come to die. (6.) If it be barren, consider how it is near unto cursing, and its end will be burned.

2. All that have families, have them to take care of; and there is no small work lying in a right discharge of all duties in that respect, both towards children and servants. Relative duties must be carefully minded, as duties of husbands to wives, wives to husbands, parents to children, and children to parents, masters to servants, and servants to masters. The families of Christians should be as little churches, where the worship of God must be kept up, as reading, prayer, exhortation, and singing of psalms. If we are not true worshippers of God at home, in vain is all our worship abroad.

3. Every one ought to take care of the whole vineyard. As every member of the natural body is useful to the body, so every "member of the mystical body should be of use to the whole body," 1 Cor. xii. 15—22. (1.) We must pray for the whole church. (2.) We must strive to visit, comfort, and strengthen every one that is weak or cast down, and sympathize with each other. (3.) See that we always worship God with the church, that God may have a whole church-obligation; the neglect of this grieves the church, and is dishonourable, it is a reproach to them that absent themselves to worship elsewhere, and also to that congregation that suffers it. (4.) All must labour to support the house of God, and labour to bear and carry burdens in his vineyard, which is very hard labour, to some especially. (5.) To provoke one another to love and good works, and to maintain peace and unity. So such as to the first thing proposed.

II. I shall show who are Christ's faithful servants.

1. They that love the Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity, who give themselves up to him and to his service, from a principle of love to him. Love constrains them, draws them into his vineyard, who follow him for his own sake. "Behold, we have forsaken all, and followed thee," Matt. xix. 27. They love his person, not only the merits of Christ, but also the person of Christ. Some espouse the portion instead of the person; and as faithful men and women hate that, so doth Christ. One notes, that such persons live in a kind of adultery; and as the proverb is, such who marry those they love not, will love those they marry not. Faithful servants love Christ above father or mother, son or daughter; and he that doth not thus, cannot be a servant or a disciple of Jesus Christ. They have a greater love to Christ than to their dearest relations on earth, and will rather displease them than Jesus Christ, or refuse to follow him, and rather incur their frowns than forsake Christ. They love Christ above themselves, nay, more than their natural lives; for they deny themselves and follow him, and choose rather to die than to deny him. They love Christ above heaven, or anything in heaven. "Whom have I in heaven but thee? neither is there any on earth that I desire besides thee," Psal. lxxiii. 25. The interest of Christ lies near their hearts who truly love him. Some will let the vineyard of Christ go to ruin before they will waste their substance to support and uphold it. But are these faithful servants? Why doth Christ give riches to some of his people, but to strengthen and uphold his interest, and support his poor?

Who are faithful servants of Christ.

An approved servant of Christ is humble. 2. An approved servant is one that serves Christ in all humility. A servant is a name of subjection, or one of an inferior rank; yet a true Christian esteems it a greater honour to be a servant of Christ, than to be an earthly prince. Paul glorified more in the name of being the servant of Christ, than in his being an apostle. Paul, "a servant of Jesus Christ, called to be an apostle." A man may be an apostle of Christ, but not an approved servant; for Judas was an apostle. How humble was he that called himself "less than the least of all saints?" Eph. iii. 8. Christ's faithful servants wear one and the same garment; they "are all clothed with humility," I Pet. v. 5. It is a contradiction to say, such and such are proud Christians; for he that is not humble and lowly in heart, is no true Christian. "God resisteth the proud, but giveth grace to the humble," James iv. 6. God sets himself in battle against such as are proud, defying and beating them down before him, so far is he from giving grace unto them.

A faithful servant of Christ is sincere. 3. From hence it appears that every faithful servant of Christ is sincere. or serves him with a perfect heart. Men may do that which materially is good and right in the sight of God, but not be accepted, because it is not done with a perfect or sincere heart.

4. A sincere servant of Christ is one that serves him believingly. He can trust Jesus Christ, or take his master's word. Will a master keep such a servant that will not believe nor trust him? A word or promise of Christ is enough to support a sincere and faithful servant. He can and doth trust in Christ for righteousness to clothe him, for grace to adorn him, for the Spirit to guide, lead, strengthen, sanctify and comfort him; for power to resist sin, to resist Satan, and to bear afflictions; for as he received first grace from Christ, so he trusteth in him for fresh supplies of grace: and as Christ was the author of faith in him, so he looks to him, to finish it also; he can commit both soul and body to the care and keeping of Jesus Christ; he aims at the honour of his blessed Master in all he doth, and seeks not himself.

5. A faithful labourer or servant of Christ is universal in his obedience; he doth not choose his work, or is only for the easiest part of it, but ready to obey him, as faithful Abraham did in the hardest matters, even when it was to sacrifice a beloved Isaae. "Ye are my friends, if you do whatsoever I command you." I assure you, as if our Lord should say, that it will appear you love me (when you are universal in your obedience to me) and that I do accept of your obedience, yea, and of you also, as my dearest friends whom I love.

6. A faithful servant of Christ is constant in his duty, and abides always in the place where the Lord hath set him, though his fellow-servants may little regard him, or esteem him, nay, slight and disesteem him; yet he keeps up in his duty, and attends his master's service, knowing he serves the Lord Christ. Will a servant (placed by his master to work in one of his vineyards) leave that vineyard in a pet (because some of his fellow-servants have offended him) and go to work in another, without his master's authority? no sure, as the righteous hold on his way, so he keeps in the station where he was placed, until his master doth dismiss him.

7. A faithful servant of Christ is contented with the lowest place and station in God's house, though it be but to be a door-keeper. "I had rather be a door-keeper in the house of God, than to dwell in the tents of wickedness," Psal. lxxxiv. 10.

If some have not honour, or much notice taken of them, they are uneasy, and are not content with their place in the vineyard, which discovers they are not sincere labourers.

8. A faithful servant, one that Christ loves and approves of, doth all he doth to the glory of his blessed name, or to raise his honour, exalt and magnify his master. "I honour my Father," John viii. 49, (saith our blessed Saviour) so thus doth all his sincere servants also.

(1.) They seek not their own glory, but his. "I seek not mine own glory, there is one that seeketh and judgeth." Thus Paul, "I am resolved Christ shall be magnified in my body, whether it be by life or death," Phil. i. 20.

(2.) They ascribe all they have received to Christ. "Thine, O Lord, is the greatness and the power, and the glory, and the victory, and the majesty: for all that is in heaven, and in the earth, is thine; thine is the kingdom, O Lord, and thou art exalted above all," 1 Chron. xxix. 11. And again he saith, "For all things come of thee, and of thine own have we given thee," ver. 14. What wisdom, what knowledge, what grace, what riches, or what hearts to do good they have, they acknowledge it is all of God, of Christ. "What hast thou which thou didst not receive?" 1 Cor. iv. 7.

(3.) If he doth more than others, he ascribes it to God. "But I laboured more abundantly than they all;" Paul when reproached, speaks of what he had done, but not arrogantly glorying in himself, "Yet not I, but the grace of God which was in me." Paul was something in the act, but the Spirit was the great Agent; he ascribes that which he did to God, wrought in him, aiding and assisting him in the doing of it. A sincere servant of Christ sees, and says, he hath done more to Christ's dishonour than ever he did to his glory, or more against him than for him.

(4.) They acknowledge they can do nothing without Christ, no not so much as think one good thought, though through Christ they are able to do all things.

9. A true faithful servant, if he be a minister, declares the whole mind and will of Jesus Christ; he speaks the word of Christ faithfully. "I have shewed you all things, how that so labouring ye ought to support the weak, and remember the words of our Lord Jesus, who said, it is more blessed to give than to receive," Acts xx. 35. Certainly it calls in question the faithfulness of a servant of Christ, if he forbears to declare any thing he knows is the will or command of his blessed Lord. Some perhaps through fear of displeasing men, may show their unfaithfulness in this matter. But what doth our apostle say further in this respect? "I kept back nothing (saith he) that was profitable for you, but have showed you, and taught you publicly, and from house to house," Acts xx. 20. And again he saith, "Wherefore I take you to record this day, that I am pure from the blood of all men. For I have not shunned to declare unto you all the counsel of God," ver. 26, 27. Whatsoever he had received in command from Christ, whether it was matter of faith or practice, he declared with all faithfulness, that so he might have the testimony of a good conscience towards God, and towards them; and if any perished under his ministry, he declares that he was pure from their blood. He would preach nothing but what was the counsel of God, neither omit the preaching of any thing that was the counsel of God, his care being not to please men, but God. "For if I seek (saith he) to please men, I am no more the servant of Christ." Moreover, if they are not ministers, but only members, every one that is faithful will neglect no duty, no part of his work, nor plead the neglect of others as an excuse, or why he may omit his. It was a high commendation of Gaius; "Beloved, thou dost faithfully whatsoever thou dost to the brethren, and to strangers," 3 John 5. A faithful servant will stick to his master's service.

USE.

1. This should stir all up, to examine ourselves about the sincerity of our hearts, and of our faithfulness unto the Lord Jesus Christ, and also whether through temptations we have neglected any part of our duty: and if upon a search we have, let us humble ourselves before the Lord, and confess our fault with shame to him, and speedily reform in what we have been remiss, and not be overcome any more: and to the end we may do this, let us cry mightily unto the Lord for strength, and watch against our own hearts.

2. But if we find our hearts do not reproach us, but that in all faithfulness we have acted towards God and man: what cause of joy and rejoicing may this administer unto us?

3. From hence we infer also, that Jesus Christ hath many who pretend they are his servants, but are not, or at least are unfaithful servants; not labourers, but loiterers, and rather seek themselves, or prefer their own interest above the interest of Jesus Christ.

4. And by what hath been said, you may know who are sincere and faithful labourers in Christ's vineyard.

But no more at present.

SERMON XXXVIII.

And he went out about the third hour, and saw others standing idle in the market-place.—
Matt. xx. 3.

THOUGH the third hour refers more directly to those in Moses' time who were hired into God's vineyard, yet (as was hinted) it may be applied to the early age of our natural lives. God calls some in the morning of their days.

From hence note,

Doct. That God calls some idle ones into his vineyard, in the days of their youth.

Some are called, i. e., converted when young, and brought as members into the church; and others are not only converted, but also called in their youth to be ministers; for labourers may refer to both these.

Some not only converted, but called in their youth to be ministers.

In speaking to this truth,

I. I shall lay down several propositions by way of premise, for the better explaining this point of doctrine.

II. Show that it is the great duty, and true interest of young men to obey the call of Christ, to come to him, and enter into his vineyard in the morning of their days.

III. Show what those things may be that seem to hinder young persons thus to do.

IV. Apply it.

Prop. I. That all young persons who do not enter themselves into Christ's service, are looked upon to be idle persons.

Idleness may be considered two manner of ways, or there is a twofold idleness.

(1.) Bodily idleness.

(2.) Spiritual idleness.

It is the last that is chiefly meant here: for let men be never so industrious or diligent about the affairs of this world, in their particular trades and callings; yet if they neglect soul-matters, or are not truly religious, or enter not themselves into Christ's vineyard, they are in the esteem of God, idle persons. Now take the character of one that was idle, in an external sense.

1. He is a person that loves not to labour, he will not (as we say) lay his bones to work, but is slothful: so he who in a spiritual sense is idle, loves not spiritual labour, he loves not prayer, reading God's word, nor to strive to mortify his sins, or to get an interest in Christ; he will not attend upon the means of grace, that he may obtain faith in the Lord Jesus, and get a changed heart, and so become truly religious. And as bodily labour is grievous to an idle person, so are these things grievous and unpleasant to all persons who give way to spiritual idleness.

2. It is looked upon to be a shameful thing to be a slothful or an idle person; such expose themselves to reproach: so, and in like manner, what is a greater shame, than for a man to be vicious or irreligious, or to lead an ungodly life? "Sin is the shame of any people," Prov. xiv. 34. (1.) Is it not a shame to a man to do that which is abominable in the sight of God, to despise God, rebel against God, and violate his holy and righteous law; to strike at God, or smite him with the fist of wickedness, or to contemn him, and cast dirt in his very face? What do sinners less, that yield to the devil, and to their own wicked hearts? sin is called a despising of God, a hating God, a resisting of God: would not all cry out strange, to see a child hate and despise his tender father? but O this that I spoke of is much worse, it is warring against God. (2.) Is it not a shame for a man to esteem his own evil lusts above God himself, and above Jesus Christ, and all the beauty and glory that is in him, and more than all those spiritual blessings he hath purchased by his blood. (3.) Is it not a shame to a man to be clothed in filthy and loathsome rags, or roll himself in abominable, nasty, and detestable filth; what do sinners less than this, who love and live in sin and wicked ways, "a wicked man is loathsome, and cometh to shame," Prov. xiii. 5.

3. Idleness is not only a reproachful or shameful thing, but it is also hurtful, yea, very destructive to the person that gives way to it. "Slothfulness shall clothe a man with rags," Prov. xxiii. 21. What poverty and sorrow have many brought upon themselves, through idleness? so those that are spiritually idle, or careless of their precious souls, bring ruin upon themselves; they are poor and miserable in this world, and shall be eternally miserable in the world to come, whilst the diligent hand maketh a godly man rich. Religion and true piety raiseth not only to honour, "but righteousness delivers from death." Prov. x. 2.

4. Such as are slothful or idle persons bring want upon themselves, which they cannot escape. "So shall poverty come on thee as one that travaileth, and thy want like an armed man," Prov. vi. 11. Nay, such shall beg in harvest, and have nothing," Prov. xx. 4. Even so those that are spiritually idle shall want that which is truly and spiritually good; they shall neither have bread to eat, nor a garment to clothe them; when they come to die they shall beg, but have nothing; God in their extremity will not regard their cry. "Then they shall call upon me, but I will not answer; they shall seek me early, but they shall not find me," Prov. i. 28. Nay, God said, he will laugh at their calamity, and mock when their fear cometh upon them. O how deplorable will their condition be at death, and in the day of judgment, all and because they refuse to labour, and are idle. The sluggard will not plough because it is cold. These idle persons cannot abide to encounter with difficulties, they love their ease; and so their hearts, like unto fallow ground, is all grown over with thorns, weeds, and nettles.

Idleness exposeth to utter want.

5. And as the body is pinched, and suffers by idleness, so the souls of these persons are also pinched, nay, starved through spiritual idleness. What a sad condition was the soul of the prodigal in, "who fain would have filled his belly with the husks that the swine did eat," Luke xv. 16. Such persons, by means of their idleness not labouring for bread (I mean, the bread of life that perisheth not) never come to taste or eat of that which is bread, or to know what is truly good, and hence are said to feed upon ashes, and upon the wind, &c.

As idleness starves the body, so spiritual idleness starves the soul.

6. Illness puts men oftentimes upon temptations, and on indirect and unlawful ways to provide for their necessities; many through idleness, take to thieving, stealing, nay, commit murder, and so are hanged, and come to a woful and miserable end: so spiritual idleness hath put many upon very unlawful and indirect ways, to have the wants of their souls supplied; they love not the hard doctrine of self-denial, regeneration, and mortification of sin, but rather choose to adhere to the devil, and suck in false doctrines, or corrupt opinions. Some think to be supplied by a false Christ within them, as if the improvement of natural light could save their souls: others think to be saved by what Christ hath done without them, who never regard, nor labour to find the work of grace, and a thorough change within them; nay some have by horrid delusions robbed Christ of all his glory, even of his very deity (so far as they are able to do it) and some of this sort have also been instruments to murder and destroy multitudes of souls of men and women, whom they have corrupted by their damnable errors and heresies. Dread the effects of spiritual idleness!

Prop. 2. God observes all such persons that are spiritually idle, his eye is upon them; if you are out of his service, or are standing in the market-place where God comes to hire his labourers, but regard not to be hired, but rather abide idle, or only employ yourselves in your own earthly business, or comply with Satan in doing his work: the Lord Jesus seeth you, his eyes are upon you; "he saw others standing idle in the market-place." Nay, furthermore observe, that God is said to go forth about the third hour; that is, in the morning: this may shew, that he takes notice of the younger sort, to see who among them are idle, or refuse to be hired by him, but rather adhere to Satan, and like his service better than the service of God. Young men and women perhaps think Christ overlooks them, or winks at them whilst in their youth; no, no, God comes to see who at the third hour are idle. Indeed we should at the first hour, or as soon as the sun is risen, begin our daily work, even in our childhood give up ourselves to Christ. It is sad that Christ hath but from a few a whole day's work; most lose two or three hours in a morning. Do young people think God sent them into this world to pick straws, or to gather cockleshells? God overlooks indeed childish things in little babes, who are not come to understanding, but think as children: but when they come to be capable to discern between good and evil, they ought to consider wherefore God sent them into this world; he expects they should enter themselves into his service, and go into his vineyard, and not stand idle in the market-place.

God's eye is upon all young persons, and sees who of them stand idle in the market-place.

"He went out about the third hour," &c., which may denote God's providential dispensations; as his eyes are said to run to and fro in the earth: or else to his sending out his ministers to call such or such young persons, in such or such congregations or assemblies of his people, whither they may resort with their parents; but perhaps think not that Christ's eye is upon them, to hire and send them into his vineyard.

Prop. 3. That the dispensation of the grace of God is compared to a day, even to an artificial day, which is twelve hours: and pray remember young a fixed time. men, that one fourth part of the day is gone, who are called at the third hour ; it is nine of the clock.

1. A day is a certain time : so many hours, God, my brethren, allows men a certain, a prefixed time to work in, and to provide for eternity.

The day of grace the time of light. 2. A day is set in opposition to the night, and it signifies a time of light : so the time of gospel-grace, or the day of Christ's patience, is the time of light, of spiritual light ; and as all that would work must work whilst it is day, there being no working in the vineyard when the night cometh, so we must work in Christ's vineyard, until our day, or the time of our natural lives is gone. " I must work the work of him that sent me, whilst it is day ; the night cometh when no man can work," John ix. 4.

3. It is day when the sun riseth, and night when the sun is set : so and in like manner it is our spiritual day, whilst the gospel-sun shines, and the means of grace are continued unto us or the ministration of the gospel is taken away, and vouchsafed no more unto a nation or to a particular person.

The labourers go home when the day is done. 4. When the day is done, the labourers go home, out of the vineyard or field : so when the day of our natural lives is ended, our working time is ended, and we are called out of this world : and wo to them whose day is gone, but their work is not done. But whether our work be done or not, when death comes, we must away.

5. Ignorance of that work which is to be done in such a precise day, is very dangerous, if the work appertains to a man's happiness, whilst he remains in this world ; so is the danger exceeding great, to be ignorant of the day of our visitation, on the improvement of which our eternal happiness depends ; lose this time, and we lose our souls. " O that thou, even thou at least, in this thy day had known the things which belong to thy peace ! but now they are hid from thy eyes."

6. The day brings great light with it, and makes a glorious discovery of things and persons, and of dangers to be avoided, and of advantages to be improved ; so what wonderful and glorious discoveries doth the gospel light make of God himself ? true, the heathen by the moon-light of natural conscience, know that there is a God ; the visible things that are made show that ; but they know not what God is, nor the manner of his existence, and though they may know what is sin, I mean against God as Creator, yet they know not how, nor by whom sin came into the world, by simple light of their consciences ; neither do they know the evil that is in it, nor how it is expiated, for it is by the revelation of the gospel that we come to know Jesus Christ the Redeemer. Poor pagans know not of that Saviour whom God sent into the world, they know not the way to be saved, they are in the night ; their light compared with the light of the gospel day, is darkness ; we have a glorious light, who behold the sun up, and shining bright upon us ; we discern, or may, how to be made happy for ever, and how to escape eternal wrath to come, which others, know not ; and therefore what a mercy is it, that it is day with us, while almost all the world are in the night, either of paganism, Mahometanism, or Antichristianism.

7. The light of the day is comfortable. " Truly the light is sweet, and it is a pleasant thing for the eyes to behold the sun," Eccles. xi. 7. And if it is, my brethren, so sweet to see the sun in the firmament, or to behold natural light ; O how much more sweet and pleasant is it to behold the Sun of righteousness, or to behold the glory of God shining forth in the face of Jesus Christ ! how lovely is it to behold the king in his beauty, or to see God's reconciled face in the Lord Jesus Christ, or to see our interest clear in him, to know Christ is our Christ, our Saviour, and that God is fully reconciled in and through his blood, and that our peace is made for ever.

8. It is the sun that makes the day ; so and in like manner it is Jesus Christ, the sun of righteousness, that makes the day of grace ; when he riseth and shines by his gospel on a people, it is day with them ; but when he takes away the gospel, it is night, and the sun is set.

Some days are clearer and brighter than others. 9. Some days are brighter than others ; we find by experience some days prove cloudy ; so some gospel-days are clearer or more bright than others ; our fathers saw much more light than they that went before them, and perhaps we see greater light than they ; but our children that come after us may see much greater light than we have ever yet seen. " For the path of the just is as a shining light, that shineth more and more to a perfect day," Prov. iv. 18.

A bright day may be overcast. 10. Sometimes we have seen a bright day overcast, and dismal storms and tempests have risen : so though our day seems at present very clear and bright, yet we know not how soon it may be overcast, and fearful storms and tempests may rise. Methinks I hear it already thunder a great way off, and a cloud as big as a man's hand to appear. O what a disunal day may be near, and yet many stand idle, as if the day would never be gone, or that storms would never arise!

11. A day hath its morning, noon, and evening: so likewise hath the day of grace, it may be eventide with many poor souls in this assembly.

12. There is one great disparity here, i. e., an artificial day cannot be shortened, it contains twelve hours, and not less nor more; and also a natural day cannot be shortened, it contains twenty-four hours, and no more nor less; but the day of gospel-grace may be shortened. God threatened the people of old, that night should be unto them. "Night shall be unto you, that ye shall not have a vision; and it shall be dark unto you, that ye shall not divine; and the sun shall go down over the prophets, and the day shall be dark," Mich. iii. 6. O that this may never be England's portion! "Behold the days come, saith the Lord God, that I will send a famine in the land, not a famine of bread, nor of thirst of water, but of hearing the words of the Lord. And they shall wander from sea to sea, and from the north to the east, to seek the word of God, but shall not find it," Amos viii. 11. I hope the day the Lord refers to here is past: no doubt it is that dismal day that hath overtaken poor Israel, I mean, the Jews. O what a long night have they seen! it hath been night with them near fifteen hundred years. But what a famine we may see, the Lord only knows: however, God can shorten our day of grace as he pleaseth.

The day of gospel-grace may be shortened.

13. The day suits not some men, they are for the night; the thief and the whorish woman are for the "twilight, for the black and dark night," Prov. vii. 9: so sinners are for the night; they love not the light, but rebel against it; they love darkness rather than the light: so doth also the deceiver and cunning impostor; he loves not the light of truth. Some men had rather popery, or anything came, than to have the gospel preached in the power of it; they desire to be indulged in their sins, and seek to have smooth things preached unto them, as if they had a mind blindfold to go to hell.

Some men wait for the night.

Lastly, There are many signs by which men know it draws towards eventide, or that night approaches.

1. As first when the heat of the sun is much abated, or gives but little heat after it hath for a time shone very hot: even so when the gospel-sun affords but little heat, or when the preaching of the gospel hath very little effect upon sinners' hearts, after a time when multitudes have found the blessed heat and influences thereof; and if this be so, may not we fear it draws towards night with us? O what a multitude of sermons have been preached, and hardly one sinner converted!

Some signs by which it is known the evening draws on, or night is near.

2. When the shadows of the evening are stretched out, or grow long, this sign I fear is upon us; for how long is the shadow above the substance, or a profession exceeding the power of religion?

3. When the labourers go home; and alas how many of our most able and choice labourers have we lost in a few years, and but few raised up in their stead! When a king calls home an ambassador of peace, what can be expected but war will follow? God no doubt hath a controversy with this nation, and not only against England, but against other nations also.

4. When the evening wolves begin to lurk out of their holes, and prey upon the sheep; the truth is, I think, no day abounded with evening wolves more than our day hath, and at this time doth: should I give you the characters of evening wolves, you would perhaps be of my mind, that we have abundance of these wolves, who boldly are got out, and have made a spoil of God's vineyard, and devoured many unwary souls.

But to proceed.

Prop. 4. "This world is like to a market-place where there are many idle persons, not yet sent into God's vineyard."

1. A market-place is no working-place; but here it is such a market-place where persons stand idle, but may be hired into Christ's vineyard. This world is no place for Christ's servants to work in; no, he calls them out of the world into his Church; these two are distinct places.

2. In a market-place nothing grows, but thither divers commodities are brought and offered to sale. This market-place may refer to the place of concourse, whither spiritual things are brought and offered by the ministers of Christ, by the commission he gave to them; "Go into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature," Mark xvi. 15.

3. There are many idle persons in the market-place, who are not yet hired or called into the vineyard, or who do not accept of Christ, nor enter themselves into his service.

SERMON XXXVIX.

And he went out about the third hour, and saw others standing idle in the market-place; and he said, go into the vineyard, &c.—Matt. xx. 3.

DOCT. God calls some in the morning of their days into his vineyard; and it is their indispensable duty to obey his call, &c.

In opening of this proposition,

I. I shall endeavour to prove, that it is the indispensable duty of young persons to enter themselves into Christ's service.

II. Apply it.

Man naturally a rebel to God. I. Because until they enter themselves into the service of Christ, they remain idle; nay more, they are rebels against him. Sirs, we were born rebels to God, or in a state of enmity against him; and until our hearts and minds are changed, we abide in that rebellion: and is not this a horrid, unseasonable, and abominable thing, or piece of wickedness!

1. Consider what a Prince you have cast off, and revolted from, even the great God, and your most lawful Sovereign, from whom you received your very breath and beings: is it a light thing to be an enemy to God our maker, and oppose his will, despise and reject his authority?

2. Consider, what a master it is you serve (while you remain in your sins, or in a natural state) it is the devil, who is the the cursed enemy of God, and your sworn and implacable enemy also, and one that seeks to cut your throats, or to murder and for ever to destroy your precious souls, and your bodies also; "Who walketh about, seeking whom he may devour," 1 Pet. v. 8. And next to Satan you serve another enemy, that Rom. vi. 23. is, sin, which is as bad and bloody an enemy as the devil: strange that you should be fond of his service, whose wages is eternal death! all men naturally serve their lusts. "For we ourselves also were sometimes foolish, disobedient, deceived, serving divers lusts and pleasures, living in malice and envy, hateful, and hating one another," Tit. iii. 3. And not our sin, but this evil world also, which hath by its deceits and subtle snares, destroyed millions of souls.

3. Consider, that Jesus Christ died to redeem us out of the hands of these enemies; his precious blood was shed "to redeem us from all iniquity. We had sold ourselves, but are redeemed without money," Tit. ii. 14. See what the apostle Peter saith, "For as much as ye know that ye were not redeemed with corruptible things, as silver and gold, from a vain conversation received by tradition from your fathers. But with the precious blood of Christ, as of a Lamb without blemish, and without spot," 1 Pet. i. 18, 19. And now you young men, will you condemn such love, such redeeming love as this is, and despise such grace and favour, and choose to abide slaves of sin and Satan?

Act. iv. 12. 4. Consider, that there is no other way to be delivered from the woeful condition you are in, but by Christ; you must accept him, embrace his gracious call, and own him to be your Lord and Master, to rule in you, and over you (as well as a priest and a Saviour to die for you) and until you accept of his call, and are hired into his service, you remain the servants of sin and the devil. "For to whom ye yield yourselves servants, his servants ye are," Rom. vi. 16. Is it not sad to think, that you have served the devil to this very day, and liked or approved of his service, and disapproved of Christ, and of the service of Christ?

5. Consider, that Jesus Christ hath made choice of you, I mean, young men and women, to be his servants: as under the law, "The firstling of the flock, and the first ripe fruits were the Lord's." He commandeth you now in the days of your youth, to remember your Creator, to remember he made and formed you for his own glory, and that he is your Sovereign, and that you came into this world to this end and purpose: and remember also, that your chief and only happiness consists in having him to be your God, and in loving and living to him. Consider, that to remember thy Creator, is to esteem, or to set thy choice and chiefest affections upon him, and not a bare, thinking of God, to think now and then upon Jesus Christ; but to have high and worthy thoughts of him, and of those glorious perfections that are in him, and what a fit object he is of thy love and affections, and of all trust, worship, praise, and adoration: and O remember what knowledge God hath of thee, and what power over thee, and also what great love unto thee.

6. Consider that this God, and blessed Jesus, is come this morning (by his poor and unworthy servant) to call you young men into his service, and to hire you into his vineyard; he esteems of you, and well accepts your persons, and your service, who shall embrace his call, and hearken to his voice: I say, you will be by him kindly accepted, as he had respect to Abel, and to his offering. But if you do not give him your hearts, and fall in love with Christ, no service you can perform will be regarded by him. Sirs, if an earthly prince should send his servant (or messenger) to you, to call and bring you to his court, with promises to confer great honour upon you, would you not presently go and wonder that he should vouchsafe such favours to you? and will you not think that this is far greater favour, and better news? what is the highest honour which an earthly prince can confer on us, to that honour God confers? what, to be an adopted son to the great God of heaven and earth, and become "an heir of God, and of a crown of glory that fadeth not away," Rom. viii. 17. Certainly you would not think yourselves too young to accept of the offer from an earthly king (I mentioned) and will you think you are too young to become the servants of Christ, and put him off until old age, and resolve at present (nay, until then) to serve your lusts, and the devil? Certainly you would be ashamed to send such an answer to him. Well, what answer then is it we must give, should he call for your reply? shall we say, here are, Lord, some third-hour persons, that stand idle, or some young men and women? but they say in their hearts, and by their hearts, and by their practices, that they will not obey thy call, nor accept thee to be their Master, to serve thee, nor renounce their old master; they slight and contemn all thy favours, and those honours thou offerest to them, thinking the service of sin and the devil better, would you like such an answer to be returned from you to the Lord Jesus Christ?

Christ calls and hires persons by his ministers.

What answer may be given to Christ from some young persons.

7. Consider, that you have lost three hours of your day already, it is nine o'clock: O let that time suffice, in which you have wrought the will of the Gentiles, in walking in lasciviousness, lusts, excess of wine, revellings, banquettings," &c., 1 Pet. iv. 3. Is it not infinite grace that God will pass by your former rebellion, and vanities of childhood? nay, perhaps some of you are 20, 25 years of age, and so have lived many years in those abominable evils, to the dishonour of God, and to the utter ruin of your souls, if God's great love and goodness prevent it not, but if you now hear his voice, and accept of his call, all you former sins he will forgive, and blot out for ever.

8. Consider the advantages of your early age; religion now is most likely to make the deepest impression, and holy habits to be sooner acquired: your minds are now most at leisure, and not so engaged or lured with multitude of worldly thoughts, cares, and projects about earthly business, which others find by woful experience. That ground that hath lain long barren or unploughed, is hard to be broken up, or is not so easy to manure. A plant set out the last year, is sooner plucked up than an old tree; a colt is sooner broke than if you let him run wild till he becomes an old horse; you can bend a twig sooner than a great arm of a tree: also we put our children to learn any art or mystery when young, because youth can learn sooner than elder persons. And may not all these things convince you, that this is the best time to learn the mystery of religion and godliness? moreover, they are young maidens princes choose to marry, and young men that they choose for soldiers; not such that are old; who cannot endure hardness, nor tedious marches: and would you have Christ espouse you when you are old, and choose you for his soldiers, when you are not capable or fit for any service at all?

Youthful days have advantage above old age.

9. Consider, what a good master Jesus Christ is; do you think you can find a better? is not he worthy your best days, who spent all his days to open a way for you to enter into his service, and bought you with his own blood, that you might not be the servant of sin, of the devil, nor of this wicked world. Is it not a great honour to be the servants of the Lord Jesus Christ, and to be chosen, accepted, and hired by him? moreover, is not his pay, his rewards of grace enough to win your hearts? you shall have him, and all his riches for your hire; his righteousness, his grace, his glory for ever, if you will consent this morning to go and work in his vineyard: nay, hear further what he himself saith, "if any man serve me, let him follow me; and where I am, there shall my servant be: and if any man serve me, him will my Father honour," John xii. 26.

10. Consider, will it not be a great dishonour and indignity to Jesus Christ, to find others preferred before him? will you cast such contempt upon him, and say in your hearts, you cannot love this Christ; no, I love the lusts of my own heart better, the pleasures and delights of the world better. You dare not say thus with your mouths: but pray take heed that this be not the voice of your hearts, and of your ways and works; for all that refuse the call of Christ, and continue in their sinful and evil courses, speak this forth to all the world; for actions speak louder than words.

11. Know, O young man, that though thou, my text says, art standing idle in the market place, yet thou art in some respect mighty busy and active; but what soever thou dost employ thyself about, thou dost but rob God of his just-right until thou art hired by him, and comest to be his servant; for thou art his creature, he made thee for himself; and hath not he redeemed thee also? What wast thou made for, or why redeemed? to what end was it? know assuredly, that that portion or part of time thou dost devote to the service of sin, or to this world, thou dost go about directly to frustrate the design of God, both in creation and redemption: it is (as one observes) to snatch away sacrifice from God's altar, and to offer it to an abominable idol. Some sacrifice their youthful days to the idol of pleasure, and others to the idol of earthly honour, and some to the idol of money: and shall Satan be first served? and wilt thou rob God to serve the devil?

12. Consider, that the whole day is the Lord's, and it is a mercy thou art not in hell, for wasting three or four hours of it as thou hast done: we are all day labourers. Men that hire servants or labourers by the day, are not satisfied unless they begin to work early in the morning: and will God pay thee a whole day's work, that comest not into his vineyard until nine or ten of the clock? We ought to begin in the morning; the first fruit of time is the Lord's, the first of the called, the first fruit of the ground and trees was the Lord's; and the fat or best of the sacrifices. We are to begin the first day of the week, and the part of every day with the Lord; all shews that we must first begin in the morning of our days to serve the Lord. But O how doth the Lord Jesus outdo all other masters, to accept some labourers, who have lost many hours of the day, and yet give unto them as if they had worked the whole day!

13. Consider, that the first of thy days is the chiefest part of time; the faculties of thy soul then have more vigour, beauty, and strength, as the face of youth is most beautiful, and their strength most firm and excellent, and then, as was hinted, such are most capable to engage in any great and noble undertaking, as to run a race, or to fight a battle, youth is full of activity, beauty, and agility, the memory strong; they excel in capacity, quickness of fancy, and vivacity of spirit, and shall not the highest and most noble and sublime enterprize in this world, be set about at this time, and wholly be dedicated to the Lord?

14. Consider, that God saith, "It is good for man to bear the yoke (of Christ) in his youth," Lam. iii. 27; that is the best time to take this yoke, though it be not pleasant to the flesh, it is profitable and also very honourable. Some think the Lord only here refers to the yoke of afflictions, others to the yoke of the law, or legal yoke; but it is not good to be under that yoke long, I mean, the yoke of legal terror and bondage; but it is good to hear Christ's yoke. "My yoke (saith he) is easy, and my burden is light," Matt. xi. 29, 30.

There is, it is true, a twofold yoke.

1. The yoke of convictions.
2. The yoke of obedience.

It is chiefly the latter, no doubt, which our Lord intendeth; yet they that never come under the first, will never rightly come under the last. Let me hint a few things about the yoke of Christ.

(1.) It is a holy yoke, it binds or obliges us to holiness, in subjecting to all the commands and holy precepts he requires us to submit unto; the end and design of precepts, promises, and threatenings, is partly to promote holiness. "Having these promises, dearly beloved, let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God," 2 Cor. vii. 1.

(2.) It is a spiritual yoke, a soul-yoke, it binds the soul, in all faculties, in obedience to the Lord Jesus, not but that the body, as well as the spirit, ought to bow to this yoke. We are obliged "to present our bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which Vain youth, in some sense is not idle.

We are not our own.

We ought to work the whole day in Christ's vineyard.

The youthful days the chiefest days

What a yoke Christ's yoke is.

is our reasonable service," Rom. xii. 1. And the great motive to this obedience is the mercies of God, even his mercy in free justification, pardon, adoption, &c.

(3.) It is a strict yoke, it requires a most exact circumspect walking with God or a strict conversation, to walk by the exact rule of God's word, and by the holy pattern and example Christ hath left for us. "As many as walk according to this rule, peace on them, and mercy, and upon the Israel of God," Gal. vi. 16.

(4.) It is a just and reasonable yoke; is it not a righteous, a just, and reasonable thing, that the child should obey and honour his father, and a servant serve and honour his master, and subjects serve and honour their wise and faithful sovereign? but much more just and reasonable it is that the creatures do serve and honour the Creator, and the redeemed their most gracious Redeemer.

(5.) It is an abiding and lasting yoke; when once put on, or took unto us, we must never cast it off; we must never cast off obedience to God, and to our Lord Jesus Christ.

Christ's yoke an abiding yoke.

(1.) It is easy to the souls of such that dearly love Jesus Christ; love to him makes hard things easy. "And his commandments are not grievous." Who said this? why one that was a true lover of his Master.

How Christ's yoke is easy.

(2.) It is easy comparatively.

(1.) It is an easy yoke in comparison of the law, that was a very hard yoke, which the poor Jews were not able to bear; what a multitude of precepts had they, and some very hard and chargeable also?

(2.) It is easy in respect of the yoke of the devil, for that dreadfully galls the neck (I mean the conscience) of all who have any due sense and feeling in them.

It may be somewhat hard at first, but it is much easier afterward; such that are accustomed to it, find it very easy.

Quest. But why is it good to bear this yoke in our youth?

Ans. (1.) Because the earlier this yoke is taken up (as one notes) the easier it will be. Anything, saith he, is the more easily compassed by the earliness of the undertaking; of all that were possessed with evil spirits in Christ's time, it is observed, that none were so hardly cured, as they that had been possessed from their youth. Satan will not easily quit his hold, especially where he hath had long and quiet possession. How seldom doth grace graft upon a withered stock? That question of Nicodemus is not improper here, can a man be born when he is old? O how few are converted in old age! evil habits are not easily broken, rooted prejudices against religion are hardly extirpated.

Mr. Mead on

(2.) It is good to take up, and bear Christ's yoke betimes, because it is commanded; "Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth," Eccl. xii. 1; this is the sacred precept, and the commandment of God is holy, just, and good. "First seek the kingdom of heaven and his righteousness," &c. Is it not good to yield to the will of God? whatsoever God requires is good; that is, it is right and seasonable to do it, and evil to neglect it.

(3.) It is hereby we come to draw God-ward, Christ-ward, and heaven-ward, no drawing unless we take the yoke on us; when we are hired into Christ's service, we come under the yoke, as servants are said to be under the yoke. A solemn vow lays great obligation on him that makes it. "I have sworn, and will perform it, that I will keep thy righteous precepts," Psal. cxix. 106. As it is reasonable that we begin with God, or dedicate to him (at his command) the prime of our days, so by putting on this yoke we see a necessity to work and labour all our days in his vineyard. When a virgin hath granted her full consent to become a man's wife, she dares not think of any other lover. "I have vowed (saith David) and cannot go back."

(4.) It is good because it is profitable. "He is a blessed man that God chooseth, and causeth to approach unto him, that he may dwell in thy courts; he shall be satisfied with the goodness of thy house, even thy holy temple," Psal. lxxv. 4. "Godliness is profitable unto all things," 1 Tim. vi. 6; and it is great gain. Is it not good to have our souls rich, or to have store of spiritual riches? Is it not good to have chains of gold put about our necks, and a crown on our heads? My brethren, grace doth this, it enriches, it adorns, and renders us truly honourable. "The godly are the most excellent in all the earth," Psal. xvi. 3. And from hence, "Jabez was more honourable than his brethren," Chron. iv. 9, 10. Is it not profitable to be richly clothed, to have in youth the best robe put upon us, as well as gloriously decked with jewels? You young maidens, what think you, that love bravery, or fine and rich attire? When once you become truly religious, you will be richly adorned, yea, with ornaments that are comely in the sight of God, and in the eyes of Christ, so that he will be ravished with your beauty, as he speaks concerning his spouse; "Thou hast ravished my heart, my sister, my spouse; thou hast ravished my heart with one of thy eyes, with the chain of thy neck," Cant. iv. 9.

It is the highest honour to be truly religious.

(5.) It is good therefore, because it is honourable; grace makes us like God, and can there be greater honour than that? Such that put on this yoke, or come to Christ, and take his yoke on them, "They put on the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness," Eph. iv. 24. Every one of these resembles the son of a king. "Since thou wast precious in my sight, thou hast been honourable, and I have loved thee," Isa. xliii. 4. What is it to have honour of men? "They that honour me, saith the Lord, I will honour," 1 Sam. ii. 30. Wicked men are a base and ignoble sort of people. True honour begins in religion, when we enter into Christ's vineyard, and are accepted in his sight. "I will be with him in trouble, I will deliver him, and honour him," Psal. xci. 14, 15. Is it not an honour to be a son or daughter of God, to be espoused to Christ, to walk in communion and fellowship with the Father and the Son? these things render it good to bear the yoke in our youth.

Christ remembers our love.

(6.) It is good, because early love to Christ will be remembered by him. "I remember thee, and the kindness of thy youth, the love of thine espousals," &c. Jer. ii. 2. What most intimate acquaintance did some (who closed with Christ in their youth) arrive at with God and Jesus Christ! as Moses, David, Josias, John, Timothy, &c.

Christ's yoke frees us from the devil's yoke.

(7.) It is good, because hereby young men will be freed of the cruel yoke of sin and the devil. Satan's yoke is unbelief, and that binds all the guilt of thy sins to thy soul, yea, binds thee down under the bitter curses of the law, and under the wrath of God, nay, binds thee over to eternal wrath, or everlasting burning. Now is it not good to cast off such a yoke, and put on a yoke that will free thee of all that evil and danger which doth attend thee, or thou art exposed to?

Christ's yoke is a marriage yoke.

(8.) It is good to bear the yoke in thy youth, because it is that which binds thee to Jesus Christ, to draw with him; thou wilt hereby become Christ's yoke-fellow. Faith unites the soul to him. Sirs, this yoke is a marriage-yoke; and is it not good to have such a husband in thy youth? Christ is a beautiful person, and he is clearly for espousing such that are young; and will you not marry him until you are old, out of present love to sin, the devil's yoke?

15. Consider, this may be the time in which the Holy Spirit strives with thee; now he labours to bend thy rebellious will, and work grace in thee; and pray observe, (1.) It is the Holy Spirit that hires thee, and brings thee to consent to go into the vineyard; it is he that changes sinners' hearts, and makes them willing to fly all youthful lusts and vanities. (2.) Thou knowest not how long he may strive with thee; and if once he utterly departs, all hopes of thy being saved will be gone for ever. (3.) It is horrid ingratitude, and a most wicked thing to resist or quench the Spirit; besides, the danger is great, when a fire is almost quenched, it is hard to kindle it again. Can a sinner kindle this fire again? you may sin away all the good motions of the Holy Spirit, lose your convictions. The yoke of sin "is broken, because of the anointing," Isa. x. 27. Consider, under the law, they who gathered not manna in the morning, found none all the day. If when you have seasons, and want hearts, the time may come when you may have hearts, and want seasons; when you have a mind to be saved, God may have no mind to save you.

The Holy Spirit hires us into the vineyard.

16. Thou must now at the third hour enter into the vineyard, because thou art likely thereby to do the more service for Christ, and so bring the more glory to him, and be prevented to do more against him. (2.) To begin with Christ with the first, and to hold out with the last, is the glory of a Christian. Shall the flower of life, which is of Christ's setting, be of the devil's cropping? Such that rightly, or in sincerity, set out at the beginning of their days, shall hold out to the ending of their days; that is a lying proverb, a young saint, an old devil. A man may seem an early saint, and prove at last little better than a devil; but he that was ever indeed a saint, shall never cease to be one. (3.) Consider, this is the way to prevent bitter sorrow in the time to come. Job's youthful sins lay heavy upon him; and they made David cry, "Remember not the sins of my youth," Psal. xxv. 7. Youthful sins will be bitter first or last, and many times the sins of youth are the sorrow of old age. It is sad (saith Cayl,) when young sins, and old bones meet together. Indeed sins of youth, though pardoned, being great, may be presented to a child of God as not pardoned, through Satan's subtlety. Know assuredly, that so long as thou neglectest the service of Christ, thou chooseth the service of the devil; all men are either the servants of Christ, or the servants of Satan.

17. Youth is the most proper season for religion. Infancy is too soon, then we were too young to work; and old age is too late, then we are generally past our labour; that is called the evil day; besides, they that refuse to embrace Christ's call in youth, may be hardened in sin when they are old. Therefore consider, delays are dangerous, God's patience may be wearied out, or thy life may be cut off; how many little graves mayest thou behold? I have heard of a young man, who passing through a church-yard, beholding many small and short graves, was so smitten, that he went home very sorrowful; his master seeing him, asked him what was the matter, O said he, sir, I think of dying; tush, said his master, thou art a lusty young man, why dost thou talk of death? Ah, replied he, I saw this day many small graves where such lie buried that were not so old as I am, O I fear death; or to this purpose he spake, and as I remember, upon it was converted.

Youth the proper time to work for God.

How uncertain is life? our days are compared to a shadow, and to the flower of the field. A tile from a house may knock out our brains, or be as fatal as a disease; nay, a bit of bread may end our days as soon as the pestilential fever. A seaman (as one no-teth) being asked where his grand-father died? he said, at sea. Well, Mr. Mead. and where did your father die? he said, at sea also: then replied he, I wonder you dare venture to sea. Why, said he, I pray where did your grand-father, and your father die? he answered, in their beds; why, replied the seaman, I wonder then you dare go to bed.

Consider, O young man, that thou never indeed dost live until thou dost believe in Christ, or art quickened by him; many are dead whilst they live.

18. Religion will sweeten all other things to thee, which thou dost enjoy: what is health, and no Christ; riches, and no Christ, a good wife, and no Christ, or children, and no Christ? and hereby also thou wilt learn how to use the world, and wisely to improve what God gives thee to his honour, and thy eternal comfort.

Lastly, This will be a great evidence of thy sincerity, it may furnish thee with better arguments in this case, than perhaps an old disciple may meet with. "I thy servant feared the Lord from my youth," 1 Kings xviii. 12.

SERMON XL.

And he went out about the third hour, and found others stand idle, &c.—Matt. xx. 3.

THOUGH the early age of our lives may not primarily be meant by the third hour; yet I have begun to improve it that way, to stir up young people to enter into Christ's service, and have laid down many arguments to press it upon them.

I shall now come to consider some questions and objections that young people commonly bring in.

Quest. What would you have us who are young do? You talk of hiring us, and sending us to work in Christ's vineyard; but pray what is it to be hired?

Ans. 1. Negatively. It is not only to live a sober moral life; for morality is found in the field of this world: true religion doth not consist in mere acts of morality; though this is required of all, and such who do not thus live, are not fit to dwell among men, but ought to be punished by the just and good laws of nations.

What to be hired is not.

2. Moreover, to be hired into the vineyard, is not to learn the articles of the true religion, or to have much head-knowledge. Men may talk religiously, and live wickedly; they may have God in their mouths, but sin and the devil in their hearts.

3. It is not barely to submit to this or that external ordinance, and to be of this or that sect of religion, or be visible church-members; for all these things you may do, and Christ never yet to this day have hired you.

2ndly. In the affirmative; (1.) It is wholly to give yourselves to the Lord, to be his covenant children and servants: such that take hold of the Lord Jesus Christ by faith, and who being united to him, are become new creatures, and are made able to renounce the service of sin and Satan, fleeing all youthful lusts, hating that which is evil, and falling in love with Christ, setting a great value on him, and esteeming him above father or mother, or life itself, such are hired; or whosoever do sincerely espouse Jesus Christ, may be said to be hired by him.

(2.) And being thus hired, it is your duty to go into the vineyard, or to join yourselves in communion with a true church of Christ, and so lead a holy gospel-life and conversation, in contempt of all the sinful honours, riches, pleasures, and evil customs of this world.

Object. But does not this tend utterly to spoil and mar all the pleasures, sweet delights, and comforts of our youthful days?

Answ. 1st. What do you mean by the pleasures and delights of youth? for either they are lawful delights and pleasures, or else sinful; if lawful, and your hearts are not inordinately set upon them, you will not be deprived of such pleasures: religion debars no man or woman of any lawful comforts or delights of the world; but if you mean sinful unlawful delights and pleasures, it is true, the grace of God will utterly spoil them, nay, and make them to become bitter to you; and to such a degree, that you will loath and hate them as much as you ever loved them: and to make you willing to cast all such delights

1. Consider, that all sinful pleasures are brutish, sensual, and devilish, being such delights and pleasures which are so abominable to God, and dishonourable to yourselves? would you unman yourselves, and choose to be brutish? no man, unless he offers violence to his reason, but would abhor and condemn such delights and pleasures. Many of the heathens, by the help of the light of nature, have shewed their abhorrence of a vain, filthy, and sensual life; and will any of you plead for it, who have greater light to convince you of the evil that is in these things?

2. Consider, that sinful pleasures are soul-debasing pleasures; the soul is your most noble part, it being high-born, it is capable of communion with God, and to be filled with true spiritual delights and pleasures, such that saints and angels in heaven are ravished with, do you not believe that the delights and joys of heaven excel all earthly pleasures and delights whatsoever? why they, as to their nature, are spiritual, and a taste of them Christ gives to his faithful servants in this world, though the fulness of those joys is reserved for hereafter. And now will you subject your precious and noble souls to brutish lusts, which defile and pollute them, and utterly mar all its beauty, and refuse the other?

3. Sinful pleasures, know, O young man, are forbidden fruit; you cannot touch them, but you violate God's holy law. Will you carouse, sport and play with the old serpent, and condemn God in your hearts? these things God calls youthful vanities, and for which Eccles. xi. 9. he will bring you to judgment.

4. Sinful delights and pleasures are the devil's bait to catch fools, and destroy their souls; with this bait he caught Eve, the fruit she saw was pleasant to the eye, the devil, no doubt, suggested to our first parents, that God denied them that which was the most sweet, and most desirable fruit in all the garden, and rendered all things he allowed them worth little, in comparison of that; and so he strives to do still, and hath laboured to do ever since, as if God was a hard master, or loved not his creatures, or knew not what was good, and therefore he represents himself more kind to them, when all his whole design is to make poor mankind as miserable as himself, if possibly he can do it.

5. Sinful pleasures are deceitful, and hence they are called deceitful lusts, Eph. iv. 22. Satan suggesteth that there is that goodness, that sweetness, that delight and pleasure in such ways, that is not to be had any where else, no not in God himself; when it is all a lie, and an abominable abuse of the Holy God, which all who have tasted of his love can bear witness to, and declare and testify, the pain and anguish that attends all sinful pleasures, or follows them, shows they are deceitful delights and pleasures; and such "who follow lying vanities, forsake their own mercies," Jonah ii. 8. See here they are called lying vanities, they are vanities, and a lie; such young people that are taken with them, believe lies. Consider what they deceive, or strive to deceive poor creatures of. (1.) They deceive them of true peace, true joy, and comfort; even "Joy unspeakable, and full of glory," 1 Pet. i. 8. Those joys none can taste the sweetness of, until false and deceitful delights and pleasures become bitter to them, by means of that change of heart they obtain of God: for a carnal and sensual heart can taste nothing sweet but carnal and sensual things. (2.) What honour do they deceive you of? and (3.) Of what riches? (4.) They deceive or cheat you of your best days, and of the best opportunities and advantages to arrive at true happiness. Why is there a prize in the hand of fools? (5.) They deceive you of your reason, and render you mere fools, or void of understanding: See what Solomon saith of one that followed an adulterous woman ; “ I beheld among the simple, I discerned among the youths a young man void of understanding, passing through the streets, near her corner, and he went the way to her house,” Prov. vii. 7. O young men, you that are for merry meetings, to carouse it among your ungodly companions, and lay the reins loose upon the neck of your lusts, see here your character ; God calls such young men void of understanding, and if you were not such, you would never contemn God and Christ, out of love to sinful vanities, nor seek ways to murder your own precious souls. (6.) They deceive you of all the blessings purchased by Jesus Christ, and of that crown and kingdom he hath in store for all that love and serve him.

6. Consider the shortness of the time of the enjoying all your foolish vanities, they may not last one day ; you may be sporting to day, and in hell to-morrow : and will you, for the sake of these things, slight those joys and pleasures that are at God’s right-hand for evermore ?

7. Consider the shame they oftentimes bring upon poor deceived mortals in this world, besides that eternal shame in the world to come : you think with Jacob in another case, you have got beautiful Rachel, when it is blear-eyed Leah in her room. You cry out as if you had found a rich diamond, when it is but a sorry flint stone, cut diamond-wise ; and these things will bring eternal shame upon you. You think none hardly so wise as yourselves, and yet know not how to take one good and safe step, but are posting down to the chambers of death. O what a sentence will one day pass upon you ? Go ye cursed into everlasting fire. “ God will then bring to light all the hidden things of darkness, and make manifest the counsels of the hearts,” 1 Cor. iv. 5. Your secret acts of wickedness shall then be laid all open. O do nothing now but that which you are willing all men should see and know of ; for it will be made manifest then to your horror and everlasting shame, and confusion of face. Two things will follow sinful pleasures.

(1.) Pain. (2.) Shame.

These things will abide for ever, though the pleasures were gone long before.

8. And from hence it appears, that sinful delights and pleasures (as I told you) are dangerous, nay, soul-damning ; they are like the way of the harlot. “ Her house inclines to death, and her path to the dead,” Prov. ii. 18. Again it is said, “ Her house is the way to hell, going down to the chambers of death,” Prov. vii. 27.

9. Sinful pleasures satisfy not ; they rather disquiet and distract, than satisfy ; there is sweet peace and satisfaction in leaving and loathing them, but none in the enjoying them : ask your own experiences, but if you have not found them so yet, ask such who gave up themselves, through madness and folly, to them, whose eyes God hath opened. Ask Solomon, and he will tell you much more.

Secondly. Consider the nature of spiritual delights and pleasures, which come to be enjoyed, in casting off, and abhorring of those pleasures you speak of.

(1.) Spiritual delights, to rejoice in God and in Christ, and in his love and favour, suit with the soul, or most sweetly gratify the inward man : you young men that love the vanities of this world, you never yet tasted that which is truly good, nor ever will till you taste of God ; then you will know how good he is, and how sweet his love is.

The nature of spiritual joy and delight in God.

(2.) Spiritual pleasures, and inward joys, are of a soul-raising, soul-ennobling, and of soul-exalting nature. “ I will set him on high, because he hath known my name,” Psal. lxxxii. 14. To have communion with God, and to lie in Christ’s bosom, is a soul-ravishing, and a most sublime thing.

(3.) Spiritual pleasures are real, not seeming or deceitful, but substantial, such that the soul filled with them, is not able to express ; and as they are real, so they are increasing, and durable, they will be much more than now they are, when all the bitter of sin, of sorrows, and temptations (we meet with in this world) are gone : for if there is so much real and sweet joy and consolation experienced by us now, who believe, whilst we meet with so many bitter things, what will that peace and joy be, when we shall have all sweet, and no bitter ? Furthermore, how have many found the worst of bitter things in this world (that a child of God can meet withal) turned into sweet, by the enjoyment of Christ’s love, and gracious presence ?

(4.) Spiritual joys and delights bring no shame along with them ; no, they are far from having any such effect, for they cause boldness and confidence at all times ; and when we are most reproached, such can always, and in every place, lift up their heads and show their face. “ And hope maketh not ashamed, because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost,” Rom. v. 6.

(5.) They are commanded, as all others are forbid : God allows freely these delights. "Delight thyself in the Lord, and he shall give thee the desires of thy heart," 1'sal. xlvii. 4. "Commit thy way to him, and he shall bring it to pass," ver. 5.

(6.) They are soul-satisfying : Moses found more delight and satisfaction in bearing the cross of Christ, or suffering reproaches for Christ, than in all the pleasures of sin for a season. "They shall be abundantly satisfied with the fatness of thy house, and thou shalt make them drink of the rivers of thy pleasures," Psal. xxxvi. 8. See here, O you young men, there are rivers of pleasures, both to drink in, and to swim in.

What do you say now, will you be hired, and go into Christ's vineyard.

Object. Every man must have a time to sow his wild oats, some allowance to please himself in his youthful days.

Ans. Thou hast sowed too much of that seed already, which thou callest wild oats ; and pray consider what a crop you are like to reap of them.

1. A crop of filth, yea, most abominable filth and pollution ; for it is a most odious and hateful sort of seed. Youthful lusts defile and pollute the whole man. Sin is fitly compared to a leprosy, or to filthy running sores, that stink and are corrupt, or to a "filthy sepulchre." Do you not read how David cried out, "that his wound stunk, and was corrupt, because of his foolishness." "For my loins are filled with a loathsome disease, and there is no soundness in my flesh," Isa. i. 5, 6 ; Matt. xxiii. 27 ; Psal. xxxiii. 5, 7. Now all this was the effect of his sowing the seed you call wild oats.

2. You will reap a crop of inward guilt more than you will be able to stand under, when God awakens your sleepy consciences. O how will you roar out in distress and anguish !

3. Ofttimes many have also hereby reaped the crop of want and poverty in this world, like as did the prodigal, by wasting all he had upon harlots.

4. You will, if you go on, at last reap a crop of God's divine wrath and vengeance : for you do but hereby "treasure up wrath against the day of wrath," Rom. ii. 5. They that sow to the flesh shall of the flesh "reap corruption," Gal. vi. 8. If you like these crops, go on and sow your wild oats ; but O that you would be more wise ! May be you are convinced of your folly, but yet object.

Obj. Many have begun to be religious, but have come to nothing.

Ans. 1. A profession of religion, taken up upon false principles, or for base ends, is the cause that some turn with the dog to his vomit. Where there is not uprightness, there will not be long perseverance. "The righteous shall hold on his way, and he that has clean hands shall grow stronger, and stronger," Job xvii. 9. Because some imitate a true Christian, or counterfeit Christians come to nothing, doth it follow a true Christian may come to nothing also ? Or because an artificial motion may fail, must a natural motion fail likewise ? The sole of your shoe wears out, but the sole of your foot grows thicker and harder, and wears not out by going barefooted ; because there is not life in the one, but there is life in the other. Hypocrites fall, but the upright in heart remain unmoveable. "The ways of the Lord are right, and the just shall walk in them, but transgressors shall fall therein," Hos. xiv. 9.

2. You may thank the Arminians for this objection, who affirm, a man may be a child of God to-day, and a child of the devil to-morrow. Can a child cease to be the child of the Father that begat him ? True, he may offend his Father, but cannot cease being his child. Can such that are truly united to Christ, that living root, wither and be cut off ? or because some do, who were only in him by an external profession, or in appearance only, and not in reality. "Because I live, ye shall live also," John xiv. 19. Are not all Christ's sheep put into his hands to be preserved unto eternal life ? or is not the covenant of grace sure, and well ordered in all things ? or is not the love of God unchangeable ? "I will put my fear into their hearts, and they shall not depart from me," Jer. xxxii. 40.

Obj. The service of Christ is too hard and difficult for such unexperienced young persons as we are, and tends to dull and besot, or breed melancholy thoughts in our minds, and render us fit for no business.

Ans. 1. Doth not Christ say, his "yoke is easy and his burden is light ?" Matt. xi. 29, 30. You take notice of the duties of religion, or hardness of some precepts, but consider not the promises, which assure us of strength and continual support. It is no matter how heavy the burden is, if God gives us strength to bear it.

2. This objection is made by such that never tasted that the Lord is gracious. Those that work in Christ's vineyard are allowed to drink of the wine which is the fruit of the true vine, which is so cheering and reviving, that it delivers them from all that dulness, and those melancholy thoughts of which you speak, and reuders such who taste thereof, more capable and fit for any business, than such can be who are under the accusation of their own guilty consciences, and the dread of God's eternal wrath, not knowing, when it is morning, but that they may be in hell before evening.

good is in religion, will never dis-praise it.

3. You should make a trial of an excellent cordial before you condemn it, or to say it has no virtue in it. How should such know the comforts and consolations of God, who never tasted of them? Those that obey Christ's precepts, and apply his promises, will never say his service is hard, or his commandments are grievous.

It is base to condemn the ways of God without making tria of them.

4. The sorrows and dejections of spirit that some Christians are under, are rather for the want of more strict godliness, and not for being religious, and professing of godliness; or else through ignorance of some cheering and soul-reviving principles. Sorrow for sin brings joy, if it proceeds from true grace and right principles, or from evangelical repentance.

5. Consider what your easy way in gratifying the flesh will bring you unto in the end. Is it not better to walk in a hard and strait way, that leads to the possession of a crown, than in a green and pleasant way that leads to shame and utter ruin and destruction? Is it not much better to be sometimes a little sad and heavy here for a moment, than to cry and howl in hell under horror for ever hereafter?

6. Besides, is not the work and toil you take in finding, and in seeking the world, harder than the service of Jesus Christ? How do you weary yourselves for very vanity! Moreover, what lawful pleasures and comforts of this life doth religion deprive us of?

Obj. But is it not hard to pull out a right eye, and cut off a right hand? Such things as these we are told religion puts upon us.

Ans. 1. Would you not rather have an eye pulled out, or a hand cut off, than to die a bitter, languishing, and miserable death? when by bearing that pain and loss, you shall live a happy life, without feeling more pain, or knowing sorrow.

Better have corrupt members cut off than lose our lives.

2. Or is it not better to pull out a right-eye lust, or a right-hand lust, than to have your whole body and soul cast into hell?

Object. We shall be reproached and scoffed at, and had in derision, and who can bear such things?

Ans. 1. Was not our blessed Saviour reproached? And were not holy Job and David made the song of drunkards? "And now am I (saith Job) their song, yea, I am their by-word," Job xxx. 9. And saith David, "When I wept and chastened my soul by fasting, it was to my reproach," Psal. lxxix. 7, 8, 12. "I am become a stranger to my brethren—I have borne reproach, shame hath covered my face.—They that sit in the gate speak against me, I am the song of drunkards."

2. Shall Jesus Christ suffer such hatred, shame, reproach, and spitting on for you, and do you think it too much to suffer a little shame from wicked men for his name sake, "The reproaches of them that reproached thee are fallen on me." "I gave my back to the smiters, and my cheeks to them that plucked off the hair," Psal. lxxix. 9. "I hid not my face from shame and spitting," Isa. l. 6. Which is hardest, the cross Christ bore, or that which we bear?

Christ suffering reproaches for us should teach us to suffer reproaches for him.

3. Which is better to suffer, shame for Christ's sake in this world, or eternal shame in hell, in the world to come, for the sake of your youthful lusts and vanities.

4. Did not "Moses esteem the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures of Egypt, and rather chose to suffer afflictions with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season?" Heb. xi. 25, 26. And did not Paul say, "He took pleasure in infirmities, reproaches, and distresses for Christ," 2 Cor. xii. 10. And hath not our Lord pronounced them blessed, "Blessed are ye when men shall revile you and persecute you, and say all manner of evil against you falsely for my sake," Matt. v. 11. And thus the apostles rejoiced that they were counted worthy to suffer shame for Christ.

5. Which is the best, to bear shame for Christ, or to have Christ to be ashamed of us in the great day, as he says he will be ashamed of such? Mark viii. 30.

Acts v. 41.

Will you count that hard and grievous, that all wise and good men have rejoiced in! alas, the Spirit of grace and glory resteth upon such that are reproached for Christ and religion sake.

1 Pet. iv. 14.

Object. There are such diversity of opinions, what way shall I choose! were there but one religion, I might soon resolve what to do.

Ans. Because there are many religions, will you be irreligious, or of no religion at all?

There is but one true religion.

No necessity of being of this or that sect.

2. It is a mistake, there is but one true religion, though many true Christians differ about small circumstantial things in that religion, yet all that are truly godly do agree in all the essentials of Christianity as one man. Such who shut out of heaven all that in every thing are not of their opinion, or of their church, seem to be void of charity, if not of true religion itself.

3. It is not of such absolute necessity that thou must be of this or that sect, provided thou art a regenerated person, and holdest the head, nor being guilty of any capital error, and also walkest up to the top of thy light, and in nothing seekest to stifle the convictions of thy own conscience, and improvest all means to inform thy judgment, and canst say with the good man of old, "What I know not teach thou me.

4. Search the scripture, which is a perfect rule, and the only rule both of faith and practice; and be of that sect which thou art persuaded is nearest in their own church-state and communion to the primitive churches.

Object. This word repentance you talk of, I do not like; it is a melancholy word, or very unpleasant, what, rend the heart, and be always weeping.

Repentance is a sweet word.

Ans. It is one of the sweetest words that is contained in the book of God.

For,

1. Consider, the law affords not a word of this, that admits of no repentance, but all the transgressors of the law of Moses died without mercy.

2. Consider, it is the effect of God's infinite love to open a door for repentance; neither could it be had without the shedding of the blood of the Son of God, "For as there is no remission without the shedding of his blood," Heb. ix. 22, so there is no evangelical repentance without it.

3. Consider that repentance carries in it pardon of sin; and would not a condemned criminal, brought to the place of execution, think it a sweet word to hear his prince's free pardon read to him? being bid to repent, and throw himself down at his sovereign's feet, would he not accept it as an act of his grace! why thus it is here.

4. Repentance is a choice gift, and vouchsafed but to a few, as the effects of God's distinguishing love and favour; his unconceivable goodness is the spring and motive of it. "Him hath God exalted at his right-hand, to be a Prince and a Saviour, to give repentance unto Israel, and remission of sins," Acts v. 31.

5. Would you not have your evil hearts and minds changed, to love the Lord your God, rather than have the enmity in your wills and carnal minds against God, remain in you? for this is the greatest part of repentance, it is not legal terror; no, that repentance which ariseth from thence is a melancholy thing indeed, and caused Judas, and some others under despair to hang themselves. But to see our sins laid upon Christ, to behold him pierced, and to look up believingly, trusting through his blood for remission, and from thence to mourn bitterly for sin, to see what he endured for our sakes, and to be grieved that ever we offended God, or caused Christ Jesus to endure so much misery for the sake of our sins, is a sweet repentance.

6. Is repentance unto life a melancholy word? what, forsake your sin and live; repent, and you shall not perish; repent, that your sins may be blotted out; are these unpleasant words? "Then hath God also to the Gentiles granted repentance unto life," Acts xi. 18. God granted, it is a gift given and granted of God, and it is called repentance unto life, because God hath appointed that it should precede our entrance into life, for as none can see God without holiness, Heb. xii. 12, so none shall see life without repentance; though it is not our repentance that brings us hither, neither is it our title to eternal life. No, no; but where there is no true repentance, there is no true faith, for true faith and true repentance are twins, they are always born together; though repentance appears first, yet it proceeds from faith, all grace is infused into the soul (in the seed) when one grace is infused.

Faith and repentance are twins.

Great blessings accompany repentance.

7. Consider what it is that accompanies true repentance. Would you have the guilt of sin removed, would you have your sins cast into the depth of the sea, or blotted out, or cast behind God's back, and put away from him and you, as far as the east is from the west, or the north from the south? would you have the heavy burden that lies upon you (if you are a convinced sinner) taken off? would you have your wounded souls healed, and have rest and peace for ever; why all these things attend or accompany faith and evangelical repentance, though not from the worth of these graces, no, but for the worth and sake of Christ's merits only. Faith and repentance do not purchase them, but faith and repentance always do accompany them. It is in this way faith always leads the soul, no man is eased of his weight until he feels it; he that never repenteth is never pardoned,

8. I told you that there is more sweetness, more ease and comfort ten thousand times in leaving and loathing of sin, than there is in the committing it. Which do you think is best, the pleasures of sin, or peace of conscience; why do you think that unpleasant now, which you and all men (awakened at death) would esteem above ten thousand worlds, what would some men give for true repentance on a death-bed? Why should that be unpleasant in God's time, which you would prize in your time, but cannot find it? God's time is now; "To-day if you will hear his voice," and repent. Your time perhaps will not come till you can live no longer. You would leave your sins when you can sin no more, or no more commit those sins that you loved. Ah, how few have repentance at death, and how hard is it to know true repentance then, when there is no time left for a trial or experience of the nature thereof.

9. That which there is an absolute necessity of is vain to dispute about, or cry, O it is difficult. You must, O young men, repent or perish, "I tell you nay, except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish," Luke xiii. 3, 5.

Repentance is of absolute necessity.

Would a man, whose house is all in a flame over his head, say, it is too hard a work for me to get out, though if he strives to break through the flames, he may save his life; no, no, he will venture through the midst of danger to escape death. And shall any say, the work of repentance and mortification is so hard and difficult, they will not set about it; yet it is said, if they do not repent, if they are not born again, they cannot see the kingdom of God but must perish in hell for ever. "If ye live after the flesh, ye shall die," Rom. viii. 13; that is, be damned. As God hath ordained and determined that no man shall be saved, but he that is regenerated, so there is a moral necessity of it; no unholly person can taste the joys of heaven (could he enter into that holy place) because they are spiritual.

Object. There are multitudes (say what you will) that mind not religion any more than we, nay, not so much, for they will not hear the word preached; and some of them are counted very wise men.

Answ. Because multitudes walk in the broad way, and go in at the wide gate, will you also? Moreover, know that the greatest part of mankind shall certainly perish. Also such that the people of this world call wise men, God calls fools, because the God of this world hath blinded their eyes, are you not willing to have your eyes opened?

Object. But may we not believe and repent, and go into the vineyard hereafter, even at the eleventh hour?

1. God calls you at the third hour, he may not call some others until the eleventh; but what ground have you to hope God will call you at last, who refuse his call now and resolve to live in rebellion against God all your days, or until you are old?

2. Because some have escaped, who suffered shipwreck, will you therefore wilfully run your ship upon a rock? Besides, we read but of one in all God's word, who found mercy at last. O therefore do not presume, and trust to latter repentance!

3. Hath not God said, that he will not hear them who call upon him in their distress, who refused to hearken to him when he called them? see Prov. i. 25,—27. Say not therefore that you are too young, for if you are old enough to be damned, are you too young to be saved? Be assured, if you make a good beginning, you have a blessed ending; the fire which was laid on God's altar never went out. Grace may be shaken in the soul, but it cannot be shaken out of the soul; it may be a bruised reed, but such reeds shall not be broken: he that is the Beginner and "Author of our faith, will be the Finisher of it. And he that hath begun a good work in you, will perform it until the day of Christ," Phil. i. 6.

SERMON XLI.

And he went out about the third hour, and saw others standing idle in the market-place; and he said, Go ye also into the vineyard,—Matt. xx. 3, 4.

DOCT. That God calls some, hires some, and sends them into his vineyard, in the morning of their days.

That it is the indispensable duty of young men to obey this call, I have proved, and answered many of their objections.

I shall now proceed to the application.

First. We infer, That great is the folly, ignorance, and vanity of youth; for alas! very few regard the call of Christ. "Childhood and youth are vanity," Eccl. xi. 10.

No age is more subject to folly and vanity than childhood and youth. "Folly is bound up in the heart of a child," Prov. xxii. 15. Moreover, the way of young people is very filthy; and hence it is said, "Wherewith shall a young man cleanse his way?" Psal. cxix. 9. All bring polluted hearts into the world with them, and quickly they by their actual sins add much more filth unto it. "They go astray from the womb, telling lies."—"I saw among the simple ones a young man void of understanding," Prov. vii. 7. One, what but one? Certainly it signifies, that young men generally are vain, simple, or without spiritual understanding.

Let me show wherein the sin and folly of youth lies, appears, or doth consist.

Wherein the sin and vanity of youth doth consist. First. The sin and vanity of youth is intimated in my text, viz. idleness; morning sinners stand idle in the market-place. It holds good in the mystical sense, as well as in the literal. Many young people love not to labour, but the worst of idleness they are most prone to, they love not to labour for their souls; they care not to take pains to search their own hearts, they think it is a long while to night, and that they shall have leisure time in the afternoon to prepare for an eternity; towards night is time enough, they say, to make ready to go to bed, but night comes upon thousands of them before it is noon.

Young men rash and inconsiderate. The sins and vanities of youth consist in that rashness and inconsiderateness which attends their spirit and age; they are like a wild ass's colt. How hard is it to persuade young people to think of their souls, or to believe they are in a state of wrath, and dead in sins and trespasses? would to God you would be brought to consider the woful condition you are in. O ye young men and women, know assuredly, that if you are not renewed, nor converted, you are enemies to God, yea, under the curse of an angry and incensed God. O will you be so inconsiderate as not to lay it to heart! O how unconcerned do you seem to be! Besides, you do not appear as if you gave credit to what is said unto you, neither regarding your danger, nor your duty. Shall I put you upon asking your souls a few serious questions?

Proper questions for young men to ask their souls. 1. Say, Am I born again or not, regenerated or not?
2. Is my soul in a saved and safe state or not?
3. What will my sins bring me unto in the end, if I persist in the ways I now take?

4. What, O my soul, is sin? how evil is it? Is it not the plague of all plagues?
5. Whose influences am I under? Who is it I am led by? Do I follow the dictates of the good Spirit of God? or am I led by the devil, who labours to destroy my soul?
6. What is my state by nature, and what would become of me, if I should die this night?
7. What is the only way to be saved, or how may I attain unto eternal life?
8. What is man's chiefest good, and what is the only way to be happy in life and death?
9. How shall I stand at God's tribunal, in the great day? and in whose righteousness must I be found, if I stand the judgment, and am not sentenced to eternal flames?
10. Am I able to dwell with everlasting burnings, or in devouring fire; the fire that cannot be quenched, and the gnawing worm that never dies?
11. Is not Jesus Christ worthy my acceptance?
12. What is my main business which I should mind, or wherefore was I sent into this world? and have I answered hitherto man's last end?
13. Is not the love of God the Father, and the love of Jesus Christ, better than all the pleasures of sin, or earthly vanities?
14. Are not the company I keep, and the people I love to converse with, the enemies of my immortal soul?

15. Had I not better displease my earthly parents, who are ungodly, and close with Christ, though they turn me out of doors, than for Christ to shut me out of heaven, and thrust me into hell?

O how few young people either consider of, or ask their souls questions of this nature! do they not rather say, "Who will show us any good?" How may I attain to earthly honour, and raise my condition and grandeur in the world? or how may I attain to riches? or what may I do to have many merry days, and fill my heart with earthly joys and pleasures, and vanquish sorrow and sadness from my thoughts, that my heart may cheer me in the days of my youth? Such things as these poor inconsiderate youths think upon. And when enticed by Satan and his instruments, and the evil of their own hearts, to pride, sports, and pleasure; how soon (though unadvisedly) do they yield, and like the young man, straightway follow? See, O young man, your character and shameful folly and madness, and labour to be more wise, and to get serious thoughts of God, of eternity, and of your own souls, and how uncertain your life is, and abide no longer under stupid ignorance, but observe what God commands you to do.

Thirdly, The sins and vanities of youth appear in those strong inclinations that are in them, to gratify their sensual appetites, and lay the reins loose on the neck of their lusts; they are more governed by fancy and imagination than by solid reason, or merely by sense, like brutish animals, not knowing what faith is, nor what it is to live above, in the enjoyment of true peace and felicity. How ready are they to be taken with pomp and vain glory! if religiously inclined, and not savingly enlightened, then they are swelled up with pride and ambition, and aspiring thoughts, admiring themselves, and contemning others, as if they were wiser than every body, and seek to be had in admiration, loving the applause of men. And if irreligious, then they scoff at, and jeer all that are virtuous, or truly godly, and affect the honour of this world, and glory in their strength, beauty, or great wit, or natural, or acquired parts and accomplishments. Youth is naturally inclined to have a high opinion of themselves.

Youth inclined to gratify their sensual appetites.

Fourthly, The sin and vanities of youth consist in their obstinacy; they commonly are very head-strong "as a bullock unaccustomed to the yoke," not regarding the good advice and counsel of their pious parents. They are indeed much like some young scholars, who having got a little learning, think they equal the greatest critics, or most profound men for parts and learning in the world, or old experienced ministers. These are like some, who having learned a little of the art of navigation, take upon them to steer a ship at sea, and will not be ruled by a skilful pilot, and so run the ship on some rock or sands where she is split to pieces: and hence it is that some young men, though perhaps gracious, are so quarrelsome, headstrong, contentious, peevish and ungovernable; there is no dissuading them out of their opinion, but they are "wiser in their own conceit, than seven men that can render a reason," Prov. xxvi. 16.

Young people obstinate and self-willed.

Fifthly, The sins and vanities of young men lie in their choleric, and violent passions. Children are observed to be very peevish, and youth full of wrath and anger, if crossed in their way. Not that all young people naturally are alike in these respects; no, no, a good nature, and a good education, makes a vast difference in some, above what is in others: general rules do not always Youth prone to anger, and hence of passion.

Sixthly, Levity is another sin that cleaves commonly to youth. O how full of vanity are they in their behaviours, loving vain garbs and fashions, foolish and antique dresses, though it exposes them to shame, snares, and temptations; loving foolish sights, frothy songs (and some of them obscene pictures) and idle romances, and to delight in mirth and music. Also how vain and wanton are they in their talk and discourses, and in their demeanours and deportments, and behaviour! these things are some of the vanities of youth, which religion teacheth utterly to flee.

Levity a sin of youth.

Seventhly, The sins and vanities of youth partly consist in the "Lusts of the flesh," or uncleanness, and also in gluttony and drunkenness, nature being in its full strength and vigour, and they not having principles of grace to restrain and subdue their inordinate desires. What filthy and unclean thoughts continually possess them? and how subject are they to be overcome, to commit actual fornication and uncleanness, and lose their chastity! which sin, thousands (it is to be feared,) in these days are overcome by. Moreover, great drinking, gluttony, are the inlets to this abominable sin, which some committing in their youth, bewail in their old age, and go mourning to their graves; but the blot will never be taken away. And this sin also is the inlet ofttimes to theft. How many are put upon stealing to gratify their lusts, and the lusts of lewd women, and so many of them brought to shameful deaths?

8thly. Lying is also another sin to which youth are inclined. How from the cradle do many show a proneness to this abominable evil! "The wicked are estranged from the womb, they go astray as soon as they are born, speaking lies," Psal. lviii. 3. God positively saith, "That all liars shall have their portion in the lake that burns with fire and brimstone." Yet how guilty are multitudes of them of this soul-damning sin, which they learn of the devil, "who is a liar, and the father of it," John viii. 44. Many young people, to avoid the anger of parents, or masters, contrive lies, dreading their displeasure more than the wrath and vengeance of an offended God. But ah! is it not better to take shame for a fault here, than to be put to eternal shame hereafter?

9thly. Prodigality likewise is another sin, and vanity young people are prone to; they will not grudge at any expense to please and gratify their sensual appetites (it is said, the prodigal spent all he had on harlots,) and those who waste not their substance that way, yet do it by drunkenness, gluttony, or by rich and costly apparel.

10thly. Inconstancy is another youthful sin and vanity; how fickle and unconstant in their promises, resolutions, and purposes are some young people? One while all of a fire in their love and affections, and presently stone cold. New things strangely take with them, as new fashions, new notions of religion; and it is a marvel if they are not for new preachers. Also, a small matter offends them; they are soon hot, and soon cold, or not steady and established in their minds, or not settled in their affections and judgments. In the morning of their days, they are too much like the early clouds, and morning dew, that passeth away. So inconstant and fleeting is their goodness, and their desires, purposes, and resolutions.

Lastly. Their evil appears also in delays and excuses about setting themselves upon minding eternal things; they are subject to put the evil day afar off, and defer repentance, and the seeking Jesus Christ to another day, saying, it is time enough to mind such matters.

Quest. What should we that are young do, to avoid these and other sins, and youthful vanities and pollutions?

Ans. I know some give many directions, but alas, all signifies but little until you get changed hearts. Common grace, and good education, may, it is true, restrain or bridle youthful lusts, but the way is to obtain special grace; to root out your vicious habits, or pull up the evil roots of sin so far as possible, is the most effectual way and course you should take; it is to be hired by Jesus Christ, to accept of his call, to receive him by faith into your hearts, love, and affections.

Secondly. If it be so hard for youth to obey Christ's call, (they being prone to so many evils) then what cause have you that are old Christians (who from your youth have been truly religious,) to bless God, and to admire his grace to you, which wrought so effectually in your souls! O what evils have you been helped to avoid! Besides, you are arrived to the honour of being old disciples, and have attained to great and long experience of God's goodness. Use hath made you perfect in the way and work of godliness; that which is hard to others (nay, impossible to such who are not renewed,) is easy to you.

Thirdly. And you that are young, that are truly gracious, have likewise cause to praise God that he hath overcome you, and given power to you, to resist all the temptations of the devil, and to mortify the corruptions of your hearts, and to feel the power of converting grace.

Fourthly. Be exhorted to take heed and beware still of all youthful lusts, lest some weeds spring up again from the body of sin; for in you still are some remainders of the evil root; and this made holy Paul to cry out, "O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from this body of death?" Rom. vii. 24. And hence the same apostle exhorted Timothy "To flee youthful lusts, to follow righteousness, faith, charity, and peace with them that call on the Lord, out of a pure heart," 2 Tim. ii. 22. That more especially which I would exhort you to, is that you labour after humility, strive to be lowly-minded! Ye young men, who are gracious, and subject still to be conceited, and lifted up with pride, watch your own hearts when any foolish people praise or admire you to your faces; for such are but the devil's instruments, Satan stirs them up so to do, that he may cause you to fall under his condemnation. He fell by pride, and that way many young men have fallen also, and come to nothing.

Fifthly. From hence also I may see cause to exhort you that are parents to see you discharge your duty towards your sons and daughters; take heed you train not up your children for the devil, by indulging them in any evil way, to gratify their inordinate lusts and desires, through the fondness of your affections, by sending them to dancing schools, or balls, or to keep company with profane and debauched young people, or to feed their proud and ambitious inclinations. Is this the way to train them up in the way they should go, "and to bring them up in the fear and admonition of the Lord?" Eph. vi. 4. To please your children in things that are evil and hurtful to their souls, is but to hate them, and prove yourselves their worst enemies, instead of showing true love to them.

The fond love of parents re-proved.

Bring them up to read their mother-tongue. Whatever you do not for them, neglect not this, that they may be able to read God's holy word, and put them upon praying to God betimes, to renew and regenerate their souls, and instruct them into all the principles of true Christianity; and be sure bring them, if possible, under the clear preaching of the gospel, and have a watchful eye over them, as such that must be accountable for their souls. And the like care take also of your servants, I mean, in bringing them to attend on God's word, and exhort them to lead a holy life. O cherish every good motion, and soberly answer any serious question about religion they may ask you, as well as you can.

The duty of parents to children and servants.

Take a few motives to press you to these duties.

1. Consider, God hath entrusted you with the care and charge of your children's souls. Ministers have the charge of your souls committed to them; but the care and charge of your children's souls is more your business than theirs, until they are converted, and come into the vineyard, and so are under their eye, and holy watch.

2. You take great care (whilst under your wing,) to feed and clothe their bodies; and when their clothes are worn out, you will provide them new ones; and when they are sick, you will send to some physician. And will you not much more take care that their precious souls are fed, clothed, and healed? You would not (when children,) see them fall into the fire, but cry out, and strive to save their natural lives; and will you not strive and do what you can, that they may not fall into everlasting burnings, or cry out to God to save their souls? Would you let hungry lions tear them in pieces, and you not help them if you can? and will you suffer the devil, that roaring lion, to devour them, without crying to Christ to deliver them from being a prey to him, and so be destroyed for ever?

3. Consider, that all godly parents ever took care of their children in this case. "I know (Abraham,) saith the Lord, that he will command his children, and his household after him, that they should keep the way of the Lord," Gen. xviii. 19. Joshua likewise said, "I and my house, will serve the Lord," &c., Joshua xxiv. 15. And thus all the godly ever did; and therefore it should be our care to do the like, and follow their example.

The godly always took care of their families and the souls of their children.

4. Consider, how Eli, for his neglect, or being remiss in his duty, provoked the Lord, and was severely chastened; God charged him with despising him. "They that despise me, shall be lightly esteemed," 1 Sam. ii. 30. What had he done? Why, he did not severely rebuke and restrain his sons from committing those great sins they were guilty of, to the dishonour of God, and reproach of his people.

1 Sam. ii. 14, 15, 22.

5. Remember, (as I hinted,) you must also give account for the souls of your children, and if they perish, and you warn them not, will not God require their blood at your hands?

Sixthly, Young men, will you resolve to give yourselves up to Jesus Christ? Will you be hired this day? O know, that as it is your duty, so it is your true interest so to do, in respect of honour, riches, joy, peace, and safety.

Take a few directions in order to your entering yourselves into Christ's service.

1. Strive to understand, or be informed what your condition is, whilst you are strangers to God and Christ, and in the state of nature; know, you that are the children of believers, as well as you that are children of ungodly parents, are all naturally in the same state and condition. "All are dead in sin, and children of wrath by nature," Eph. ii. 1—3. And that no external ordinance, nor act of your parents, or as done by yourselves, can put you into the covenant of grace, or make you the children of God; no, it must be done by God himself; it is his own work by his Spirit upon the soul, that makes the difference.

The children of believers in no better state by nature, than others.

2. Though you are young, and may be ignorant of God at present, yet "labour to know the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom he hath sent." See David's advice. "And thou my son Solomon, know thou the God of thy fathers, and serve him with a perfect heart. No service performed to God will be accepted till you arrive to a true and saving knowledge of God in Christ, who though he is a just and holy God, yet in his Son he is reconciled; all that know not God shall perish. "My people perish for want of knowledge." It is not enough for you to be taught to live sober, moral lives; no, no, but God promised "to give his people pastors after his own heart, that should feed them with knowledge and understanding," Jer. iii. 15. Ignorance is dangerous. "They know not me, saith the Lord," Jer. ix. 3.

The knowledge of God in Christ absolutely necessary.

3. If God hath not yet given you his special grace, yet labour to live sober lives, and improve your natural powers, and all helps you have in order to put a curb upon all inordinate and unruly lusts and passions, and be sure avoid wicked and profane company.

4. Be much in reading of God's word, and in prayer; God will be found of them that seek him. And be also frequently under the ministry of the word, and hear such who preach Christ; Christ being the great Subject they continually insist upon. Faith comes by hearing. But it is Christ then that must be preached. How shall they believe in him, of whom they have not heard?

5. Never rest notwithstanding on bare hearing, nor be satisfied until you find faith, and a changed heart wrought in you.

6. Be obedient to your parents in all things in the Lord. Disobedience to parents is a most abominable evil. O see you have their consent in marriage, when you think to change your condition; but seek the kingdom of God first, and espouse Christ, and then you will strive to choose the better yoke-fellow, I mean, one that is a believer; for it is a sin, or a breach of God's holy precept, to marry with idolators, or with profane persons: for as this was forbid under the law, so it is under the gospel also; nay, this was one of the sins of the old world, for which God brought the flood upon it. Make conscience of serving your parents, and carry it with all due reverence to them, and cherish them when they be old, I mean, relieve them if they are poor, if you ever expect to be blessed.

7. Take heed you do not stifle your consciences about convictions of sin or duty, but keep your consciences always tender, and never go to the uttermost bounds of your liberty, lest you exceed; and beware you do not, above all things, quench the Spirit of God.

8. Observe God's providences well, and improve always the deaths of young people; be sure think often of eternity, and of the shortness and uncertainty of your days on earth, and observe religiously the Lord's day. O sequester that wholly unto him!

9. Labour to take the call of Christ, and go early into his vineyard. Join yourselves in communion with some true church of Jesus Christ; but be sure see that you are hired, and first approved of the Lord Jesus Christ; for some are grafted in the visible church, that never were grafted truly and spiritually into Christ, and such will become withered branches, and "be cut off, and cast into the fire," John xv. 2, 3.

6. "Many are called, but few are chosen." O that you may be helped to receive instruction, and follow these few directions! so may you be happy, and God have glory, to whom be praise, honour, worship, and true obedience for ever. Amen.

SERMON XLII.

Take that which is thine, and go thy way; I will give unto this last, even as unto thee. Is it not lawful for me to do what I will with my own? is thine eye evil because mine is good?

So the last shall be first, and the first last: for many are called, but few chosen.—Matt. xx. 14—16.

THESE words close this parable, and from hence we may note, Doct. That the Lord gives or bestows the blessings of his grace and divine favours according to his own sovereign pleasure, and rich bounty; and though he doth thus, yet he is just and righteous.

In speaking to this proposition, I shall,

I. Prove the truth of this point of doctrine.

II. Show, that though he doth thus, yet that he is just and righteous.

III. Apply it.

I. That God in his distributing or bestowing his blessings and divine favours, acts according to his own sovereignty,

1. Appears in his decree of eternal election and predestination, which was indeed from eternity. "For whom he did foreknow, them he also did predestinate, to be conformed to the image of his Son," Rom. viii. 26; Eph. i. 4: that is, with a knowledge of approbation; or did approve of, or set his heart upon them, or fixed his eye of pity, good will, love, and favour upon them, for otherwise he foreknew all men and things. Election is an act of God's sovereignty, or the good pleasure of his will; for which he passed by the fallen angels, and only sets his heart upon, and chooses some of the lost sons of Adam. Election necessarily pre-supposeth some chosen, and the rest passed by.

Question. Did God pass an eternal decree of reprobation on angels or men, as a simple act of his sovereignty, without any respect had to their sin or disobedience?

Ans. Some are bold to affirm he did, but I am not of that opinion; for though the decree of election was before the world began, yet the execution of it is in time, and the angels that sinned were reprobated. Reprobation was not the cause of their sin; but, as I conceive, sin was the cause of their being reprobated; and so the reprobation, or rather preterition of the greatest part of mankind, refers to their fallen state, or considered as ungodly men. "Turning the grace of God into wantonness, denying the Lord God, and our Lord Jesus Christ," Jude 4. But though reprobation, as an act of God's justice, refers to the creatures of sin and disobedience, or foreseen wickedness, and hence said to be "endured with much long suffering," Rom. ix. 22, yet election to everlasting life is an absolute act of God's sovereign grace, without any respect had to our foreseen faith, holiness, or obedience, because election is the cause of our faith and holiness, and not faith or holiness the cause of election. "As many as were ordained to eternal life believed." Again it is said, "We were chosen in him before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy, and without blame before him in love," Eph. i. 4.

curring cause of reprobation.

Faith and holiness no cause of election, but
election.

Object. But doth not the apostle say, the children being not yet born, neither having done any good or evil, that the purpose of God, according to election, might stand, not of works, but of him that calleth? Rom. ix. 11.

Ans. 1. I see no absolute cause to carry the sense of the words to refer to reprobation, but only to election, which is said to be not of works, but of him that calleth.

1. Because man's destruction is positively said to be of himself: though if it be as some men affirm, that election and reprobation refers not to mankind in their lapsed state, but as considered in innocent Adam, then it must follow that man's destruction refers not to the fallen state of sinful man; but they that affirm this, will be hard put to it to prove it, though both proceed from the absolute will of God, who might have let all mankind perish under the guilt of original sin. A reverend divine shows, there is difference between election and reprobation in three or four things; he hints this to be one, i. e., that reprobation is an act "to appoint those certain men to whom the justice of God should be made manifest," viz., ungodly men, Jude 4.

2. Because it will be for the wickedness of men they shall be judged and condemned at the great day; God will not, as I humbly conceive, say to the ungodly in that day, I made you on purpose to glorify my justice, and to damn you, to make my power and pleasure known; no, but as you have rebelled against your Maker, and justified your father Adam, it is for your breach of my law that you come under my curse and wrath; and for your contemning and slighting my grace, I pass the sentence against you.

This I conclude always ought to be our care, viz., to maintain to the utmost the absolute free and sovereign grace and love of God to his elect in their salvation (it being in every part of it, without anything foreseen in them) and yet that sin is the cause of man's condemnation, otherwise his destruction cannot be said to be of himself. If election was not absolutely of God's free grace, it must be of our works; for it cannot be partly of our works, and partly of God's grace. This the apostle shows plainly, "Even so then at this present time there is a remnant, according to the election of grace." "And if it be of grace, then it is no more of works, otherwise grace is no more grace; but if it be of works, then it is no more of grace, otherwise work is no more work," Rom. xi. 5, 6. There is no mixing grace and works together, for one would destroy the nature of the other.

(2.) And if it was of works, or of foreseen faith, then it would be of the will of man. "But it is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that showeth mercy," Rom. ix. 16.

(3.) If election and salvation was not alone of God's sovereign grace, it would be uncertain, depending wholly upon the inconsistent and wavering principles of the creature. My brethren, had it stood upon Adam's will and obedience, it had been more firm than to stand upon our depraved wills, power, and obedience, distinct from Almighty, sovereign, and irresistible grace in Christ, to secure our standing. For Adam had free will to do good in the state of innocency, but O how soon did he fall, though he had no depraved nature, and but a young devil to encounter withal!

3. Election is wholly bottomed upon God's sovereign grace, because whatsoever is supposed (by our opponents) to be the condition of it, lies under God's decree to give unto us, as well as the election of our persons unto eternal life. God decreed to give his Spirit to his elect, to renew them, to sanctify them, and his grace, particularly faith to believe, and strength to persevere. "You have not chosen me, but I have chosen you, and ordained you, that you should go and bring forth fruit, and that your fruit should remain," John xv. 16. Is it the fruit repentance? is it faith? is it obedience? or is it holiness? we are ordained to bear all this fruit, and that our fruit shall remain also, and never fail. "They shall not cease bearing fruit," Jer. xvii. 8.

Secondly, that God bestows his blessings and divine favours on whom he will, as an absolute act of his sovereign pleasure, and free grace appears, because he says, "I will have mercy on whom I will have mercy, and I will have compassion upon whom I will have compassion," Rom. ix. 15. He might justly have condemned all, and it is from the arbitrariness of his will and inclinations, he hath mercy on any. Moreover, this of God's having mercy, necessarily refers to man fallen, and so under sin and misery; the elect are not only made vessels of divine goodness, but "vessels of mercy which he had afore prepared to glory," Rom. ix. 23. And hence also God saith, "my word shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I send it," Isa. lv. 11.

Thirdly, Because Paul says, "by grace ye are saved, through faith, and that not of your selves, it is the gift of God," Eph. ii. 8. I have also in opening other parables proved, that repentance is God's free and sovereign gift, Acts v. 31, 2 Tim. ii. 25; and faith is the gift of God, as it is said here, and not of ourselves: also regeneration is wholly of God's own will; "which were born not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God," John i. 13. Likewise saving knowledge is God's sovereign gift. "To you it is given to know the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven, but to them it is not given," Mark iv. 11. Effectual vocation is wholly of God's sovereign grace. "And hath called us with an holy calling, not according to our works, but according to his own purpose and grace, that was given us in Christ before the world began," 2 Tim. i. 9. Justification is of God's sovereign grace. We are justified freely. Adoption also is an act of God's sovereign grace, he vouchsafes that high privilege, not in common to all, but only to so many that he pleaseth. So also eternal life is given as an act of God's sovereign grace. "As thou hast given him power over all flesh, that he should give eternal life to as many as thou hast given him," John xvii. 2. To as many, is plainly restrictive, and limits the gift to a certain number. "Not by works of righteousness that we have done, but according to his mercy he saved us," Tit. iii. 5.

Fourthly, That God doth bestow his special favours and divine grace, as an act of his sovereignty, appears yet further, because no man hath any right or title to God's peculiar love and favour by nature; neither can any purchase, merit, or deserve it of them.

Fifthly, All things indeed whatsoever God doth, he acts and does in a way of sovereignty. He was not obliged to create the world, that was only an act of his sovereign pleasure, and so was his forming so many creatures, and no more, giving some only a mere sensitive life, and to others a rational life. Moreover, all his acts of providence are acts only of his own sovereignty; he distributes only common favours to some, and special favours to others; riches to some, poverty to others; he raises some to high honour, and gives them crowns and kingdoms; and from some to whom he gives crowns and kingdoms, he takes away those crowns and kingdoms at his own pleasure: if he takes away health, and liberty, riches, and honour from men, or nations, who can say unto him, what dost thou? He smites men with spiritual judgments, and temporal death, even as he pleaseth; he destroyed the world, and consumed cities to ashes in a moment, as he saw good; all is at his will and pleasure. Shall God be charged with injustice, in taking away from the Egyptians their ear-rings of gold and silver, and jewels, and in giving them to the Israelites; or in taking away, and dispossessing the seven nations of Canaan of their whole land, and even all they had, and which was perhaps left them by their father as their own proper inheritance, and giving it to his own people? no, certainly, "For the earth is the Lord's, and the fulness thereof."

God hath mercy on whom he will have mercy.

God creating this world, did it as an act of his sovereignty, and so he acts in all the ways of his providences.

See Mr. Cole on God's sovereignty.

May I not do what I will with my own? Will you deny him the power and liberty which every man lays claim to, and would vilify him that should deny it? "The Lord makes poor, and the Lord makes rich: he bringeth low, and listeth up: he setteth some among princes, and to inherit the throne of glory, whilst others sit on the dunghill, or roll in the dust," 1 Sam. ii. 7, 8. The world is not governed by chance, nor is the blind idol fortune, the dispenser of honours, estates, kingdoms, crowns, or want and poverty to men; but every one hath his portion of the Almighty, he sets the bounds of their habitations: things come upon men not from second causes, or by the uncertain rolling about the sphere of human mutability; but by God's ruling and overruling providence, who cast the world into hills and mountains, and made the estates of some men to differ from others. Shall any censure God's government, as if it was not equal, because some have such vast treasures, and others want bread to eat? God would be just and holy should he bring in an enemy upon the nation, and give its riches unto them, and make us, and all who dwell therein, hewers of wood, and drawers of water, or send fire to consume our cities and houses, or an universal plague, and take away all our lives. "All nations tremble before him, whom he would he slew, and whom he would he kept alive," Dan. iv. 35. "The Most High doth according to his will in the army of heaven, and among the inhabitants of the earth; and none can stay his hand, or say unto him, what dost thou?" Job xxxiii. 13. Is he to be judged at man's bar? He giveth no account of his matters. If he will raise up some men to show his power, and make known his wrath upon them, or to be a plague and scourge to his people and nations, none are to censure him. "I kill, I make alive," Deut. xxxii. 39. "He hath mercy on whom he will, and whom he will he hardens," Rom. ix. 18.

All spiritual blessings come from God's sovereignty.

Sixthly, Moreover, in God's giving forth his choicest blessings in the ways of his providence, did he not always act in a way of sovereignty? as elsewhere in this book I have showed. (1.) In his choosing and calling of Abraham, and making known Jesus Christ unto him, and his entering into covenant with him, and in giving himself to be his God, and in leaving the rest of the world in his days, in darkness, and gross idolatry. (2.) In choosing the children of Israel, and giving them his laws and ordinances, and letting all other nations remain ignorant of his mind and will, church and true worship, for near 2000 years. (3.) Also in the gospel-day did he not choose a few fishermen (mean and contemptible persons) and make them his disciples and apostles, refusing to call the Scribes and Pharisees, and learned Rabbins amongst the Jews? and what reason doth our Lord give of these things? pray see that notable text, Matt. xi. 25. "At that time Jesus answered and said, I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, because thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hath revealed them unto babes: even so Father, for so it seemeth good in thy sight," Matt. xiii. 10. Also it is said at another time, the disciples came unto him, and said unto him, "Why speakest thou to them in parables? he answered and said, because it is given to you to know the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven, but to them it is not given." They are not the persons my Father and I set our hearts upon, they are none of God's elect, they are not to know these things. In both these places our blessed Saviour shows, that in these things God only acts in a way of sovereignty, it is his own will and pleasure so to do. "May I not do what I will with my own?"

Seventhly, what reason, but only that of God's own sovereign pleasure, can be given, why in this latter age of the world, he gives the gospel to one nation and not to another, and that so few have the clear light thereof in any kingdom of the earth, as we have it; and why have some cities and towns in England a clearer ministration of the gospel than many others? or why are some wrought upon under the word, where it is truly and powerfully preached (their hearts being opened) and others never feel its power and divine efficacy? Doth not this wholly rise from the sovereign love and grace of God to some, which is not afforded to others? also why are some learned men, men of great natural wisdom, and acquired parts, left so ignorant of Christ, and of the glorious doctrine of the gospel, and of the divine power of grace upon their hearts? whereas many poor, mean, and ignorant persons have great light, wisdom, and knowledge given to them. Moreover, doth not the Apostle ascribe the whole success and increase of his ministry unto God? "I have planted, and Apollos watered, but God gave the increase," 1 Cor. iii. 6. And again he saith, "We have this treasure in earthly vessels, that the excellency of the power might be of God, and not of us." "Who maketh thee to differ from another?" 1 Cor. iv. 7.

That so few nations have the gospel, is an act of God's sovereign will and pleasure.

Lastly, is it not said, "Of his own will begat he us, by the word of truth?" Jam. i. 18, not of our will, but of his own will and sovereign pleasure; see John i. 13. "Which were born not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God."

But to proceed to the next thing proposed.

II. I shall show, that though the holy God doth all things according to his own will or sovereign pleasure, yet he is just and righteous.

1. Because he is perfectly just and righteous in his nature, yea justice, truth, and goodness itself; so that it is absolutely repugnant to the rectitude of his pure and spotless nature to do anything that is not just, righteous, and good; no, he could as soon cease to be God, as to do otherwise.

2. It might further be demonstrated from God's own infinite blessedness which he possesseth in himself before the world, or any creature was made: he did not (saith one) make them for any need he had of them, but for his own pleasure they were and are created, &c., and if he need them not, there could be no need or reason why he should make them such, or to such an end as not merely overvalued, and their end attained, without doing wrong to any. The motives of which men are induced, or swayed to do wrong, are chiefly two.

1st. To attain something they have not, (to make them more happy) as Ahab slew Naboth for his vineyard, and Athaliah all the seed royal to get the throne.

1 Kings xxi. 13.

2 Kings xi. 1.

Exod. i. 10.

1 Kings xii. 27, 28.

Or. 2ndly. To secure what they have. Pharaoh oppressed the Israelites, lest growing mighty, they should shake off his yoke, and get themselves out of his service; and as Jeroboam set up calves to keep the people at home, and firm to himself. And the Jews put Christ to death, lest the "Romans should come and take away their place and nation," John xi. 48.

These two things share the parentage of all oppression, and wrong-doing in the world, neither of which are compared with the great and blessed God, for all things are his already, he possesseth heaven and earth, and all the hosts of them, with an absolute power, and right to dispose of them; and what can be added to that which is infinite.

3. Such is his infinite power, privilege, and sovereignty, that all creatures are absolutely under subjection to him, and he hath the same power over them all, as the potter over his clay; "Who maketh one vessel unto honour, and another to dishonour," Rom. xi. 21. "Shall the thing formed say unto him that formed it, why hast thou made me thus?" ver. 20. Shall silly mortals arraign the wisdom, holiness, and sovereignty of God at the bar of their depraved reason? shall they dispute with their Maker? they may argue with their fellow creatures about their human affairs, but not with their Creator, who gives no account of his matters. God may choose some of the lump of mankind, and reject others, and give no account of his so doing to us; for such is the absolute power of God over all his creatures, whom he also found marred in his hand, that he may do whatsoever he pleaseth with them. Nay, my brethren, what mere mortal can be blamed for bestowing his own acts of bounty as he seeth good? and to deny that power would make him very uneasy, and render him unhappy, and little to value what he hath. And therefore to deny God this power, and freedom, and perfection, is to rob him of one of the chiefest jewels of his crown (if I may so say) for shall earthly princes, nay, every sorry man, have power to bestow their favours on whom they please; and shall God be denied this liberty, to whom all nations and creatures are more in subjection, than the smallest dust under our feet is to us? "for all nations are to him less than nothing, and vanity." let the Almighty but withhold his sustaining influences, and they all would fall themselves; though he remains the same, and changes not for ever.

God appeals to men about his righteous acting towards all.

Cole.

4. Consider how our Lord appeals to men everywhere in his word, about his righteousness and justice with which he is clothed; and observe well the constant rule and measure of the dispensations of his providences, all that he does in time is done in judgment, wisdom, and righteousness, being all done according to the counsel of his own will, not without deliberation, or rashly. "He lays judgment to the rule, and righteousness to the plummet," Isa. xxviii. 17. "Who ever perished being innocent, or where were the righteous cut off?" Job iv. 7. Alas, there is none righteous in themselves: to slay the innocent, the Lord ever showed his abhorrence. To justify the wicked, or condemn the righteous, are both an abomination to God; that is, it is hateful to him, or contrary to his holy nature.

5. The justice and righteousness of God is further evidenced by his holy law, it result- ing from the perfect rectitude of his holy nature, 'The law is holy, and the commandment holy, just, and good," Rom. vii. 12. The precepts of the moral law are good, therefore commanded; and hence the law is but, as it were, a written transcript of God's holy nature; and how is holiness, and exact justice and righteousness, both commanded and commended in the law of God?

6. The righteousness of God is also manifested in his punishing all unrighteousness and injustice of men. "It is their own wickedness that corrects them." No man is destroyed but for his own iniquity. Moreover, God doth not, will not spare to correct his own elect when they sin, or do unjustly.

God's law shows he is just and righteous.

7. Because he will "judge the world in the great day, in righteousness, by Jesus Christ," Acts xvii. 31. It will then be evinced to every man's conscience, though God bestows his bounty, and choicest favours, as an act of his sovereignty, and refuses to do that for some which he does for others; yet that there is no injustice, nor unrighteousness in him.

8. I might further argue, from the consideration of that state and condition all men naturally are in, by means of sin, being rebels against God, and walking in the very steps of their father Adam, deserving nothing but wrath, and the displeasure of God. Have any a right or title to the grace and peculiar favours of God, or can they do any thing to oblige him, or lay him under obligation in justice to bestow his favours upon them? Do not all mankind naturally hate the holy God; nay, is there not enmity in their wicked and carnal minds against him? O if so, what an amazing wonder is it, he shows mercy unto any, and more, that he hath compassion on so many! it wholly riseth from his infinite love let according to Every man deserves God's wrath.

It is wonderful favour any are saved the divine will, without any desert or motive in us, to stir him up so to do; nor was he under any constraint or necessity arising from his nature, to save any fallen sinner of Adam's race, any more than to show pity upon the fallen angels; neither doth God's sovereign grace displayed to some men, make the case of the rest worse, as I have showed in opening another parable. For all had inevitably perished, if Almighty power, and sovereign love, had not been extended to a few; had not God plucked some out of the fire, all had been burned, all would have thrown away and subjected themselves to sin and the devil, and so have perished for ever. "Friend, I do thee no wrong," &c. "Is it not lawful for me to do what I will with my own; is thine eye evil, because mine is good." Does God do any wrong to those guilty rebels he condemns, because he has mercy on a few that deserved the same punishment.

See the parable of the talents, Matt. 25., opened.

APPLICATION.

1. From hence let proud mortals learn wisdom, and strive to humble themselves at the foot of God, what signifies their vain and presumptuous confidence? also let none trust in latter, or death-bed repentance. Tears cannot procure grace, neither do you know you shall then have any sense of your misery, who have slighted God's mercy.

2. Let none condemn the doctrine of God's sovereignty, nor go about to arraign his wisdom at their bar, God will make all know one day, that he is just, in having mercy upon some, and not upon all. Shall God be censured if he extends not equal grace and favour to all men alike: O how may this severely reprove such bold and daring persons, whose notions intimate, that God may not do what he will with his own.

3. Let all bow before the Most High God, and acknowledge his sovereignty over them, and cry, "If God peradventure will give them repentance, to the acknowledging of the truth," 2 Tim. iii. 25. All men are bound to submit to God their Maker, to bow their knees before him. "He is the Lord, and worship thou him," Psal. xlv. 11. He directs you to fear his name, to forsake your sins, to hear his word, to believe in his Son, and let every one seek to him for help to do these things; and though they are not sure they shall obtain his special favour, yet peradventure they may; but if they go on, and make no improvement of the means he directs them to use, what can they expect but his eternal wrath? "For who ever hardened himself against God, and prospered?" Job ix. 4.

4. Exhort. Be exhorted to come to Christ, to believe in him: hath he not promised such shall find rest to their souls? Christ is tendered to sinners, as sinners, to such who are sick, or are sensible sinners: if thou art righteous in thine own eyes, thou wilt not go to Christ, thou seest no need of him as the Physician of thy soul.

Object. I am (I fear) not humbled enough, I must see myself utterly lost, and be broken more than I am, before I go to Christ.

(1.) Ausw. A man may be under legal humiliation and brokenness of heart, and yet never come to Christ, but rather flee from him.

(2.) All humiliation, before faith is wrought in thee, signifies nothing: true sorrow for sin rises from a sight and sense of the love and pardoning grace of God in Christ. O look to him, believe, and then mourn!

(3.) Thou must not plead thy brokenness of heart, but a broken Jesus: come, acknowledge thyself a sinner and a rebel, but yet put God in mind of what Christ hath done, and plead his free pardon, and full proclamation to all that fly to him for mercy, through a crucified Saviour.

5. What I have said may tend to vindicate the holy and righteous proceedings of God with sinners; though their eyes are evil, yet his are good: "Wisdom is justified of her children." No humble sinner but will acknowledge God is just and righteous, though he is condemned.

6. Let all tremble before the mighty God, and fear to offend him; for he cannot but punish their iniquity, because he is just and righteous; sin shall not go unpunished, and let such know who fly not to Christ, and plead not his atonement, who bore our sins on his own body, upon the tree, they must bear the weight of it themselves for evermore.

7. Moreover this doctrine reproves such that ascribe the power of converting grace to the will of man, as if the will of man determineth the whole success of preaching the gospel, and that it is not determined by the sovereign will of God; or as if the grace of God was at the disposing of the will of sorry and impotent men, and that God must wait upon the creature, to see whether his love, his grace, and favour shall be effectual or not, to the great end he manifesteth it.

8. But to return to the poor sinner; O come and be persuaded to put in for a share of God's sovereign favour! what though but a few are chosen, nay, but twenty in this great city (where perhaps are many thousands) yet how knowest thou but thou mayest be one of the twenty? Our Lord commands us to strive to enter in at the strait gate. The people of Nineveh had not that encouragement to repent as you have. Jonah was not sent to preach repentances, and pardon to them upon repentance; no, he comes with no promises of mercy, but that in forty days they shall be destroyed; and yet God executed not his conditional threatening; for had it been absolute, they had perished as Jonah declared; yet he no doubt knew not this, as appears by the discontent that took hold of him, thinking he should be branded for a false prophet.

Object. If I knew I was elected, I would do as you say.

Ans. 1. Suppose you were sick, would you not go to a physician, unless you knew God's decree, whether you should live or die?

2. You begin at the wrong end of the work; would you be at the top of the ladder before you set your feet on the first round? see that you are effectually called, and so you may know you were elected.

Quest. But why doth God act in a way of sovereignty?

Ans. 1. If God did not show special favour to some, none would be saved at all, as I just now told you.

2. God acts thus, because so ran his eternal love and decrees; according to his love, his purpose before time, or in eternity, so he acts in time.

"For many are called, but few are chosen," ver. 16.

This is given as the grand reason of God's acting after this manner, by our Lord himself. And this the blessed God declares by the prophet, "The Lord appeared to me of old, saying, yea, I have loved thee with an everlasting love, therefore with loving-kindness have I drawn thee," Jer. xxxiii. 3. It is, that his purpose according to election might stand.

3. Because a seed is given unto Christ, and then he was sure of before he laid down his life, or else he might have shed his blood in vain; and to the end his death might not be in vain, God singled out some whom he gave to his Son, and for whom Christ in a special manner died, and not for their good only, but in their stead also, so that them, he says, he must bring, and none of them he must lose, John x. 16.

4. It is that God may magnify his love and mercy to some, and his wrath and divine justice upon others; he will have glory in them that perish, as well as in them that are saved. "God made all things for himself, yea, even the wicked for the day of evil," Prov. xvi. 4. Not an innocent person, not man in his perfect state, but lapsed or sinful man, or wicked and ungodly men he made for the day of wrath.

5. It is, that all believers may have strong consolation, and ascribe for ever the glory of their salvation to God's rich and distinguishing grace alone, and that they might admire his love and sovereign pleasure, manifested unto them in Jesus Christ, to all eternity; to whom be glory, honour, and praises, for ever and ever, Amen.

THE
MARRIAGE SUPPER OPENED.

BOOK III.

SERMON I.

And Jesus answered, and spake again to them by parables, and said, &c. The kingdom of heaven is like unto a certain king, that made a marriage for his Son. And sent forth his servants to call them that were bidden to the wedding, and they would not come. Again, he sent forth other servants, saying, tell them which are bidden, behold, I have prepared my dinner, my oxen and my fallings are killed, and all things are ready, come to the marriage. But they made light of it, and went their ways, one to his farm, and another to his merchandize.—Matt. xxii. 14.

BRETHREN, I shall in speaking unto this parable, take my usual method, viz.,

1. Give the scope of the parable.
2. Open every part of it particularly.
3. Raise several propositions from divers chief things that are contained therein.
4. Make application of each proposition.
1. As to the chief or main design or scope of the parable.

1. Our blessed Saviour hereby strove to convince the Jews of God's great love unto them. And not only of his love to the Jews, but it tends to manifest his infinite love and goodness unto the Gentiles also, and of God's gracious calling of them, upon the Jews rejecting of his Son. Brethren, what an amazing condescension is here showed, that the great King, or Almighty God, the Creator of all things, should send his own Son to become a Surety for, and a Suitor to the lost children of Adam.

The scope of the parable opened.

Here is no marriage offered, nor designed, for the fallen angels; God did not send his Son to espouse angelic nature, "Verily, he took not unto him the nature of angels, but the seed of Abraham," Heb. xi. 16. Look what nature the Son of God took hold of, that nature, or those of that sort, he came to espouse and to marry unto himself for ever; and that was the nature of man.

2. We, by the design and scope of this parable also, may see Jesus Christ discovereth to all the world, the horrible sin and ingratitude of the Jews, who had the first offer of his great love and mercy; he said himself, "He was not sent but to the lost sheep of the house of Israel." That is, not first sent, for he was also sent to be God's salvation to the ends of the earth, "He came unto his own, and his own received him not," John i. 11; they rejected him, and barbarously murdered him, instead of espousing him.

3. This parable seems to show the cause or reason of the ruin, rejection, and utter destruction of the Jewish nation, and the city Jerusalem; or what was the cause why wrath came upon them to the uttermost?

4. It also discovers that many who have the outward ministration of the Gospel shall perish eternally; though many are called, by the external preaching thereof, yet but few are chosen; the gospel comes in word only to the most of those who have it, and in power to none but those who are elected unto eternal life, they are such only that are ordained to everlasting life, that believe.

5. The design and scope of this parable, shows also, it was the gracious purpose of Acts xiii. 48. God, upon the rejection of the Jews, to call the Gentiles.

6. Moreover, it discovers that great unworthiness of poor sinners, whether Jews or Gentiles, to have this most gracious offer of Christ made unto them. For,

1. Those Jews, which were called and invited to this marriage, who came, were such that lay in the streets and lanes of the city, which were "the poor, the maimed, the halt, and blind; such who were mere beggars, the baser sort, such that were utterly unworthy to come into the presence of such a king's court, and much more unworthy to have an offer to become the spouse of Jesus Christ, or to be embraced in his arms.

2. And those of the Gentiles, who were effectually called, were such that were found in the high-ways, and under hedges. "And the Lord said unto his servants, go to the high-ways and hedges, and compel them to come in."

7. It shows also that every man and woman, that rejects the offers of grace, (though not such that were elected) shall be left without any excuse at the day of judgment, they shall be all speechless; and it will be manifested unto their own consciences, that it was for their own horrid wickedness, and refusing to accept of Christ, that they shall be cast and condemned at that day; they preferring the things of this life, viz., their sinful profits and pleasures, above Jesus Christ, or eternal life and glory in heaven.

St. Luke hath this parable, chap. xiv., and, in some things, is more large and full than Matthew, which has occasioned some to think, that our Saviour spake the same parable twice, upon different circumstances, or reasons; let that be how it will, I purpose to speak unto this parable, with respect had unto both the evangelist, and not give a distinct exposition. But to proceed,

The parts opened.

1. By the kingdom of heaven, here, I understand, is signified, the proceedings and equable, or righteous, dispensation of God in the dispensation of the gospel, with the children of men, in order to their entrance to the kingdom of glory.

What meant by the King.

2. By the certain King, is, no doubt, meant the great God and King of heaven and earth, the King of kings, and Lord of lords.

What meant by the King's son.

3. By his Son, is intended, our Lord Jesus Christ, who is the Son of God, by an eternal generation, as well as by that wonderful conception of his in the womb of the virgin, and as so considered, he became a more fit and suitable match, and Bridegroom, to espouse and marry sinners, being "flesh of our flesh, and bone of our bone."

Eph. v. 30,

What meant by this marriage.

Psal. xlv. 11, 12, 13.

4. By the marriage, is, meant, the soul's union with the Lord Christ, or that divine and spiritual marriage with him, according to the nature of the covenant of grace, it being evident, that in divers places of the holy scripture, that our union, by faith, with the Lord Jesus Christ, is set forth by a marriage; he is called a bridegroom, and the church his bride, he an husband, and believers his spouse or wife. "I have espoused you to one husband, that I may present you a chaste virgin unto Christ," 2 Cor. xi. 2.

5. "I have prepared my dinner." Luke calls it a supper, "A certain man made a great supper, and bade many," Luke xiv. 16. Both signify the same thing this great feast represents.

1. (As some conclude) the marriage itself, because our feeding upon Jesus Christ by faith, or our first receiving him, is our espousing of him. I will not deny, but in a more strict sense, this may be held forth hereby.

2. Yet more comprehensibly, it may signify those rich and heavenly dainties, or all those spiritual varieties God has provided for all those who believe in him, or that come to this marriage; which I purpose hereafter more particularly to open.

Some think our Lord may allude "to the marriage supper of the Lamb,"

Who the persons are that were invited to this dinner.

Who the servants first sent were.

Who the others next sent were.

Rev. xix. But I can see no reason for that; none certainly, that are invited to that supper, will refuse to come; nor can that refer to the soul's first espousing of Jesus Christ.

6. The persons that were first invited to this marriage feast, to eat of the king's dainties, or espouse Jesus Christ, were the Jews, who refused generally to come.

7. The servants, that were first sent to call persons to the wedding, may, and doubtless doth, signify the holy prophets, and John the Baptist, unto whom the Jews, or people of Israel refused to hearken.

8. "Again, he sent forth other servants," ver. 4; which may intend the holy apostles, and other faithful ministers of the gospel, in the primitive times.

9. By the oxen and fatlings being killed, and all things being ready, may refer to the sacrifices that were under the law typically, but to Christ and the gospel feasts chiefly; they were types of Christ, and of his bloody sacrifice, but the Antitype being now come, every thing is more perfectly completed, and so all things made ready; that is, God is ready to receive all that comes to him by Christ, he is ready to give Christ to the souls of sinners.

Jesus Christ is ready to espouse them, and all of them, that come to him by faith. Justification, pardon of sin, and adoption, &c., is ready, Christ being now actually slain, or crucified for us.

10. By their making light of it, ver. 5, is showed the Jews slighting, and contemning the grace, glorious privileges, and blessings of the gospel.

What is meant by their making light of it.

“And went their ways, one to his farm, and another to his merchandize.”

This signifies, that it is for the sake and love of the world, that sinners do reject Jesus Christ is more particular; pray see what he saith, “and they all with one consent began to make excuse,” Luke xiv. 18.

The first said unto him, “I have bought a piece of ground, and I must needs go and see it, I pray thee have me excused.”

“And another said, I have bought five yoke of oxen, and I go to prove them; I pray have me excused.”

“And another said, I have married a wife, and therefore I cannot come.” The

Two first seem more modest in their answer, they pray to be excused; the last said pretemporarily, I cannot come.

We may perceive what is the cause that men and women refuse to accept Jesus Christ.

1. Wordly cares, incumbrances, secular business, or the concernments of this life, in providing earthly things.

2. The riches or love of wealth, or earthly honour.

3. But it appears that sensual satisfaction, or the inordinate love of pleasures, is that which hath the greatest power over men, and which drowns and swallows up the spirit and soul of mortals; for this sort say, they cannot come.

11. “And the remnant took his servants, and intreated them spitefully, and slew them,” ver. 6.

This refers unto that cruelty which the Jews used towards the holy prophets, the apostles, and ministers of Jesus Christ.

What is meant by slaying the servants.

They slew many of the prophets, and cut off the head of John the Baptist; and also persecuted unto death divers of Christ's own disciples; they stoned holy Stephen, and slew James with the edge of the sword, Acts vii., and xii. 2.

12. “But when the king heard thereof, he sent forth his armies, and destroyed those murderers, and burnt down their city,” ver. 7

This no doubt containeth a prophesy of the Roman armies, who made such a fearful slaughter of the Jews, which fell out about fifty years after the death of our blessed Lord; and by this city is meant Jerusalem, which was burnt and consumed to ashes, as also was the holy temple. Let men boast if they will, in persecuting the saints, that they do not execute the law upon them, yet it is clear they are murderers; let them do it by law, or without law, as cursed murderers, God will judge them, and many times, for this great evil, he brings temporal punishment and death upon them in this world.

13. “Then he saith to his servants, the wedding is ready, but they which were bidden, were not worthy,” ver. 8.

These were the Jews; they were first bidden. “He came to his own, and his own received him not.

Luke is here more particular: “The master of the house being angry, said unto his servants, go out quickly into the streets and lanes of the city, and bring in hither the poor, and the maimed, and the halt and the blind,” Luke xiv. 21. The rich and honourable ones, the Pharisees and lawyers, utterly rejected the offers of grace by Jesus Christ. Therefore God sent his ministers to call the poor, even such who were accounted the base things of the world, even mean, low and contemptible persons, set forth here “by the maimed, halt, and blind.” Which may also denote the sense that those persons have of themselves, who do receive Jesus Christ, even such that are lost and utterly undone in their own eyes. “I am sent to the lost sheep of the house of Israel.” The poor, is said, had the gospel preached unto them, and they received it. The maim, and halt, and blind, therefore signifieth the worst of men, such as the Publicans, harlots, or great sinners; not only low and mean in the world, but such as were lost and undone in their own sight, or helpless ones; such who could not help themselves, but stood in need of the charity of others, denoting, that those who refused to come unto the wedding, saw no need or want of a Christ, or of his righteousness to clothe them, nor of his eye-salve to give them sight, nor of his flesh and blood to feed them, nor of his wine to cheer them.

14. "As many as you find, bid to the marriage," ver. 9.

Luke saith, "Bring in hither the poor," &c. Not that ministers can bring them by any power of theirs, no, none can bring them but Christ himself, John x. 16, it is he that must bring them in, or bring home the lost sheep, by laying them on his shoulders, or by exerting his own most mighty and irresistible power, by the operations of his own Spirit upon their hearts, Eph. i. 18—20.

But ministers are to do what they can, they are to invite them, press them, entreat and persuade them to come.

15. "So those servants went into the highways, and gathered together all, as many as they found, both bad and good; and the wedding was furnished with guests," ver. 10.

They brought in all they could persuade to adhere unto them, though some were not true converts: the net of the gospel and visible church, take good and bad, some wise and some foolish virgins.

Luke saith, "And the servant said, it is done as thou hast commanded, and yet there is room," Luke xiv. 22.

A faithful ministry will do what the Lord commands them to do, "and yet there is room." Let as many as will come unto Christ, yet there is still room for more; in God's heart is room enough for millions of souls; and in God's house there is not only bread enough, and to spare, but room enough also.

Matt. xx. 10. "And the Lord said unto the servants, go out into the highways and hedges, and compel them to come in, that my house may be filled," Luke xiv. 23.

This last commission, no doubt, refers to Christ's sending his servants to invite or call in sinners, of the Gentiles, though the Jews were first to have salvation offered unto them, yet the grace of God is extended further, even to the Gentiles also, that so Christ might be God's salvation to the ends of the earth. The Jews were such that dwelt in the city, i. e., were in covenant with God, according to that covenant of peculiarity made with Abraham, and his fleshly seed, as such. But the Gentiles were said to be afar off, or out of the city or church of the Jews, as strangers and stragglers, or poor outcasts, such that lay in the highways, and under hedges.

"Compel them to come in."

There hath been long contention amongst Christians and learned men, what our Saviour meaneth by his compulsion; some would from hence infer that outward force and violence is hereby intended, even to pull them in by head and shoulders, or drive them by whips and cudgels, or by penal laws, or by fire and faggot to frighten them; which certainly is far from the sense of the text, for the will of man admits of no violence or external force, by the civil magistrates; so that outward compulsion, hath no colour of foundation from hence; for neither Christ or his apostles ever used any such way, to make men Christians, or to receive the truth.

Those that refused to come in, or would not embrace the gospel, they were only "to shake off the dust of their feet, as a witness against them."

Therefore this compulsion only denotes the powerful arguments they should use, together with those efficacious influences and operations of the Spirit, which Christ put forth with the preaching of the gospel; it being by the ministration of the word, that he makes the souls of obstinate sinners willing; they are said to compel them, whereas indeed it is Christ by them; they are but instruments in Christ's hand in the doing of it: "We have this treasure in earthen vessels, that the excellency of the power may be of God, and not of us," 2 Cor. iv. 7. The gospel hath to do with men as rational creatures, and as such Christ is presented unto them, and arguments are used to persuade them to accept of him, but because all men are naturally blind, and their wills are stubborn, and obstinate, "ye will not come to me, that you may have life," John v. 40.

Christ, by the preaching of the gospel, and operations of his Spirit, enlighteneth their understandings, and bows and inclines their wills. And this is that which is only meant by compelling them to come to the wedding. Neither can this seem strange to any that observe divers places of scripture, where the same word is used, it is said Christ "Compelled his disciples to go into a ship;" Matt. xiv. 22; ἠνάγκασεν, but it is evident, he

What meant the highways and hedges.

What is meant by compelling them to come in.

No external violence to be used in the conversion of sinners.

used no sword, staves, or whips, or pecuniary mulcts to force them. Also, it is said, the two disciples compelled Christ to stay with them, "They constrained him, saying, abide with us, παρεβιάσαντο," Luke xxiv. 29. Moreover, it is said, Peter compelled the Gentiles to do as the Jews, Gal. ii. 14. Why compellest thou the Gentiles to live as do the Jews? yet this doth not signify any act of violence; no, but this was done by his example. Such virtue sometimes example hath on men's spirits; he did not call in the power of magistrates to force the Gentiles. Likewise, it is said, that the whorish woman compelled the young man to commit folly with her, "With much fair speeches she caused him to yield, with the flattering of her lips she forced him," Prov. vii. 21. This was a forcing or compelling to do a wicked deed, but external violence she used not, neither was she able that way to compel him. It is true, all that believe and receive Jesus Christ are compelled; grace hath such power in it, that it doth in some sense constrain the soul, "the love of Christ constraineth us," 2 Cor. v. 15. And as the spouse says, Cant. i. 4, it draws, but how is it? Is it against the consent of the will? Is there any force put upon that noble faculty? No sure, the will acts freely, and is not denied its own proper choice, but it is overruled and persuaded by the workings of the Holy Ghost, cheerfully and freely to choose accept of Jesus Christ. "My people shall be willing in the day of my power,"

Psa. xc. 3. Jesus Christ, as I have formerly told you, will accept of no pressed soldiers, no, no, they must be all volunteers, but naturally the will is corrupt, depraved, and wills only that which is evil, and it is averse to all things that are truly and spiritually good, and so it remains, until grace, or the Holy Spirit, take away that enmity and aversness which is in it, and so makes it willing; and this is done generally by the powerful preaching of the gospel, God being pleased to accompany it with the operations of his own Spirit and divine power; and this is all, no doubt, which is meant by compelling them to come in.

16. As many as they found, both good and bad. This denotes, some of all sorts are called by the preaching of the gospel, good and bad; not that there are any good before grace and effectual vocation; no, no, all are gone out of the way, all are become filthy; there is none that doth good, no, not one, Rom. iii. 12.

1. But yet comparatively, some may be said to be good, that is, not so notoriously wicked as others are, i. e., they may be merciful persons, who are called good, that being a choice moral virtue, but much more precious when it proceeds from the Holy Spirit, as the fruit thereof.

2. But I rather take it with respect had, to what they prove in the end, viz., some appear to be sincere and gracious persons, and others hypocrites, or false professors, and have no wedding garment.

17. "And when the king came to see the guests," v. 11.

This certainly refers to the day of judgment, or second coming of Jesus Christ, when it will appear who are sincere ones, and who are not; or who are wise virgins, and who foolish. Many unholy or unsanctified souls get into the church, which may not be discovered until that day that the king comes to view the guests; Christ then will make a discrimination, then all shall "discern between the righteous and the wicked," Mal. iii. 18.

18. "He saw there a man that had not on a wedding garment."

The custom of the Jews was such (some note) that all that were bid to weddings had a wedding garment, or if not, they were with great shame put out, it is thought that our Lord alludes to that practice: the wedding garment, no doubt, is Jesus Christ, whom we are to put on, "put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ," &c. Rom. xiii. 14.

What was the custom of the Jews at weddings.

Jesus Christ must be put on two manners of ways.

1. For justification, by which the soul is clothed with the righteousness, this is, as I conceive, principally intended here, and is properly the wedding garment, and so generally understood by all sound expositors.

2. Yet Christ is also at the same time put on by faith for our sanctification, and this is chiefly meant in that place, Rom. xiii. 14.

These two, my brother, though they are distinct in some respects, and are not to be confounded, yet the one is never without the other, for where justification is, there is also sanctification; a man is not sanctified that is not justified, nor are any actually justified that are not sanctified; though it is true, "God justified the ungodly, i. e., They are ungodly just at the time when God first justified them, they are not holy and sanctified persons before they are justified, because it is the righteousness of Christ alone that is the matter of our justification before God, which no man hath imputed unto him until he believe in Jesus Christ; but though they are all ungodly ones, just at the time when God justified them, i. e., he finds them ungodly, when he comes to pass the act of free justification upon them; yet God doth not leave them unsanctified by the Spirit; "But ye are sanctified, but ye are justified," &c. 1 Cor. vi. 11, 12.

Therefore it is evident, that faith (which is God's free gift) hath a two-fold office (as elsewhere I have showed.)

1. By the ordination and appointment of God, in respect had to Christ, whom it apprehended and applies; it is said to justify us, not a divine habit, or act, but only in respect of the object it taketh hold of, and receiveth.

2. Also in respect of its own blessed inward virtue and quality; it also purges the soul, and sanctifieth the whole man, "and puts no difference between us and them, purifying their hearts by faith," Acts xv. 9. But pray note, that faith is an instrument, and that Christ's righteousness is the material cause of our justification.

So that some conceive the wedding garment, may comprehend both our justification and our sanctification also, though more primarily and directly the righteousness of justification; without which there is no acceptation here, nor will there be hereafter.

18. "And he said, friend, how comest thou hither, not having a wedding garment," and he was speechless.

How comest thou into my church, or amongst my people, who are my welcome guests, seeing thou hast no true faith, no robe of righteousness? Thou art naked, O wretched soul, dardest thou appear in my presence, naked, and not be ashamed and confounded? thinkest thou that thy own good works or inherent righteousness, will render thee accepted?

"And he was speechless."

He being speechless, signifies, that all such persons that either reject Jesus Christ, and so make no visible profession of him at all, or such who do profess him, yet are unbelievers or hypocrites, they shall be left without any excuse in the great day, they shall have no plea, no pretence whatsoever.

One shall not say, Lord, I was a poor ignorant man, I was not learned, my parents, being low in the world, were not able, to put me to school, to learn me to read thy word, or else they were wicked, and would not do it; pray let me be excused.

Also another shall not say, I was a sober person, I led an honest moral life, I was no notorious sinner, let me be spared, and excused.

A third shall not say, Lord, I was a poor young person, and thought religion did not belong to me, but unto those of riper years; I purposed when I grew older to mind the concerns of my soul, I thought I might do as other young men and women did; let me be excused.

Another shall not say, Lord, I was not elected, as these were, let me be excused. No, this will be no plea or excuse, in the great day? then they will see and know that the cause of their damnation will be just and righteous, it being the only procurement of their own evil doings, and for making light of the gospel and offers of grace.

Moreover, another shall not say, Lord, I was misled by my teachers, they told me I was a Christian, a good churchman, and that I needed not to doubt of my salvation, though I was a swearer, a drunkard, a carnal person, yet by my keeping to the church, and hearing prayers read, and by coming once or twice in the year to receive the sacrament, my condition was good: also I was laid in the grave as a dear brother, or a dear sister in Christ, in a full and certain hope of a blessed resurrection: let me be excused.

Another shall not say, Lord, I was deluded by false teachers, and sucked in (as I now perceive) damnable errors and heresies, even denying thee to be the true Saviour, and justification by thy righteousness and merits, and was led to trust to the light within. I was told by deceivers, that that was the true Christ, and only Saviour, and that if I was led by that, it would convince me of all sin, lead me into all truth, cleanse me from sin, and eternally save me. Nay, Lord, they told me that my body would not be raised again at the last day, and I believed them. They were cunning impostors, and by their outward conversations, which seemed so devout, I was blinded, and cast off that holy profession, which I once made, and ordinances, which I once owned. O let them answer for me, and let me be excused.

I say, these shall be speechless also, and shall have nothing to say or plead, why the sentence of eternal death should not pass upon them: may not Christ say, you had my word to direct you, Moses and the prophets, and writings of my apostles; you had also my faithful ministers, who told you they were enemies to me, and grand deceivers, and if you were led by them, and renounce the true faith, you would certainly perish for ever? but you were proud and conceited, and magnified your own wisdom, above what was written in my word, and above the wisdom of my faithful ministers; therefore your damnation is just upon you.

Again, another shall not, in that day, say, Lord, I was a professor of thy holy name and truth; nay, I had right notions of the great fundamentals of the gospel; I saw that all men were lost in the first Adam, and that they were under wrath and the curse of thy holy law; and I saw no way to be saved, but by thy righteousness, and by the merits of thy blood; and thou didst give a full satisfaction to the justice of God, and that all that believed in thee should not perish, but have eternal life. Lord, I believed these things, I owned thee to be the Son of God, equal with thy Father, and understood wherefore thou didst become man, or assumed our nature. Nay, I believed all the articles of the true Christian faith, and also became a member of a true visible church, and was baptized, and broke bread with them often, and was called a brother, and I also gave to thy poor saints. I say, such a plea of hypocrites will not be heard at that day, but these shall be speechless also.

May not Christ say unto them, were you not told that a man might thus believe, and thus practice, and go further too, and yet be but almost a Christian. Were not you told by my faithful ministers, that "except you were born again, you could not enter into the kingdom of God?" John iii. 3; and that if you allowed yourselves in any one sin, you would certainly be damned? or, "if you loved this world more than me, or son or daughter more than me, you were not worthy of me?" nay, you were told by your own conscience, that you lived in pride, and were guilty of lying, and of the sin of covetousness, your heart was set upon the world, you did not what you did out of a right principle, nor to a right end, it was not my glory which you aimed at, but your own vain-glory or outward profit, therefore your damnation is just and righteous.

Lastly, another shall not say, Lord, I was a preacher of thy gospel, and my words were blessed by thee, to the conversion of many sinners. These also, if not truly gracious, but were unregenerated persons, (though God might bless his own word which they preached) shall have no plea, when they come to stand at God's bar; these also shall be speechless.

Obj. But is it not said, "That many will say in that day, Lord, we have prophesied in thy name, and in thy name have cast out devils, and in thy name have done many wonderful works?" Matt. vii. 22. How then is it said, all shall be speechless?

Answ. I answer, being speechless, doth not denote that none shall make any answer or not plead to be freed from the dreadful sentence, but these shall soon become speechless also, when Christ shall say, "How camest thou hither, not having on a wedding garment?" That word will silence all, or make them all speechless; this word holds forth, as I said before, that no sinner shall have any plea which shall be heard, or stand them in any stead in the great day; every man's own conscience shall witness against him, and accuse and condemn him in that day, if ungodly: see Rom. ii. 15, 16. "God will be justified when he speaketh, and clear when he judgeth," Psal. xi. 4. So much at this time.

SERMON II.

The kingdom of heaven is like unto a certain king, who made a marriage for his son.—Matt. xxii. 1—5, &c.

Then said the king to his servants, bind him hand and foot, and take him away, and cast him into outer darkness, there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth.

SOME think our blessed Lord still alludes to that Jewish custom of putting them out of doors, who came to a wedding, that had not on a wedding garment, though it was never so dark and dismal a night.

But, alas! what a small thing or punishment was that to such, to this here mentioned by our blessed Saviour?

2. By the servants, my brethren, I conceive, are meant the holy angels, not the devils, because the devils shall then, no doubt, be prisoners themselves; they shall at that day be arraigned, and be jointly sentenced, with all hypocrites and unbelievers to eternal flames of divine wrath and vengeance. All condemned sinners must go to hell at that day, with the devil and his angels; therefore it will not be, "take him devils, and bind him hand and foot," as I think I have read in some good book: I know no reason any man hath to affirm any such thing, but ye my servants, the holy angels, take him away, &c.

20. "Take him away, and bind him hand and foot."

By taking him away, may denote that fearful separation of each ungodly soul from Jesus Christ and his saints for ever, according to that passage, "Depart from me, ye cursed," Matt. xxiii. O how amazing is this word, take him away, he has nothing to say; How have many poor condemned criminals trembled when they heard the Judge say, "Take them away, I will hear no more, let them die!"

By binding him hand and foot, may signify his irrevocable state; he is tied and bound in such chains of darkness, that being once in hell, there will be no getting out.

Their enmity and averseness to God will be eternal; the damned hated God when they lived on earth, and they will hate and blaspheme him for ever, when they are thrown into hell.

But this binding hand and foot, may also signify, that sense they shall have of the eternal decree and purpose of God, touching the endlessness of their torment, together with that sense they will have upon their consciences of their utter impossibility of ever satisfying divine justice; for there they must lie, till they have paid the uttermost farthing.

21. By utter darkness is meant the lake of fire, where the worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched.

It is called utter darkness, because there will be no light of God's gracious presence; no glimpse of the least comfort, or hope of ever seeing light; or that it will be ever better with them.

"There shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth." This denotes, that intolerable pain and anguish such shall feel, and endure for ever; they lying in flames of wrath, without the least hopes of ease, or redemption out of that place.

22. "For many are called, but few are chosen," v. 14. God, by the gospel, calls many; multitudes have the word of God preached to them, but none find and feel the power and efficaciousness of it upon their own hearts, but such, who from the beginning were chosen to salvation; yet will the judgment of God be just upon all reprobates; for, had not God, out of love and mercy, elected some, and pulled them as brands out of the fire, all, yea, every soul, would wilfully and obstinately have cast away themselves, and have perished for ever. No doubt God had been just and righteous, if he had executed his wrath upon the whole posterity of Adam, as he did upon the fallen angels: man's destruction is wholly of himself, as the punishment and demerit of his own sin and transgression.

Brethren, is a prince unjust, because he saves a few vile and wicked traitors and murderers, out of a multitude of them who were alike guilty? Or, manifesteth his mercy to some; as he also manifesteth his righteous and just wrath and vengeance, and passeth sentence upon the rest?

There is a twofold call; the one is common, the other is special; the one ineffectual, the other effectual; yet the first will leave the creature without the least excuse, because they did not so far adhere to that which they were able to do. No man, my brethren, ever did improve that power, and means of light and grace, who is damned, which he might have done: he that had "the one talent, hid his Lord's money;" that one talent is, as I conceive, natural light and knowledge, together with the external call, and outward means afforded by the preaching of the gospel. Therefore, did not God graciously vouchsafe another talent to some, viz., the talent of special grace, all the whole race of mankind had been lost.

Obj. But seeing this man that had not the wedding garment, was one of those beggars, or one of the maimed, blind, and halt, how is it that he is condemned for not having a wedding garment? How should such a wretch get a wedding garment?

Ans. This wedding-garment God doth not require men to get by their own money, or spin it out of their own bowels, by their own good works. No, no, it is given freely; but this man never sought by faith in Christ, but appears in his own righteousness, or rather filthiness, not seeing the necessity of the righteousness of Christ, and of the grace of faith.

I shall now proceed.

DOCTRINE.

That the great God hath out of his infinite love and mercy, sent his own Son to espouse and marry poor sinners, or to take them into union with himself.

1. I shall open what this marriage feast doth import, or comprehend; there being something more implied than is expressed.

2. I shall prove, that it is the great and true interest of sinners, to escape this invitation, i. e., to espouse Christ.

3. I shall open what the marriage feast is, and show you the nature of those dainties which are provided.

First, This marriage doth hold forth or comprehend the good will of God the Father unto man.

The King made the marriage. God the Father is the King (as you heard) he is the first and chief agent in it; the Son doth not first choose for himself, and ask the Father's consent, as is commonly among men; no, no, but it is the Father that made the first motion to the Son, of this great and so glorious a design, and purpose of love and grace to sinners.

This marriage doth comprehend.

1. The contrivance of our salvation is in the scripture ascribed unto God the Father: he is (as one most excellently shows) the prime Author of man's actual reconciliation. "God was in Christ reconciling the world to himself," 2 Cor. v. 18, 19. The Father is set forth as the fountain of life, the original of all true good, and first cause of all things; especially of all supreme and glorious acts and works of mercy, and kindness unto man. The Father is the first in all divine operations, as well as the first person in the Trinity; as he is the first in creation, so also in reconciliation and redemption; the Father being offended and injured by man's sin, in his holiness, justice, and bounty, it is necessary that he first approve of, and appoint the way by which he will admit terms of peace, love, and favour, to be offered unto mankind.

1 The wonderful love of God the Father. Charnock, Vol. 2.

The love of God the Father, is spring or rise of our salvation.

Besides, had not the Father been the first and prime Agent and Author in proposing this marriage, it would render the Son more merciful, kind, and loving to lost sinners, than the Father, and so it would have tended to eclipse his glory, and that not only in respect had unto his goodness, but also in respect had unto his sovereignty; for it was at his choice and liberty, whether sinners should be raised to this honour and eternal happiness, by being espoused to his Son, or not. Therefore God the Father's contrivance, and acceptation of this so great and so amazing a design of favour and rich bounty of his Son's espousing of sinners, confers validity upon it, and removes all objections out of the way, which perhaps in some sense, otherwise might have rose.

2. This further appears, because the Son, in his undertaking this work and business, i. e., in coming into the world to espouse sinners to himself, is said to do it in obedience to the Father: "The Lord God hath opened mine ear, and I was not rebellious, neither turned away back. I gave my back to the smiter, and my cheeks to them that plucked off the hair," Isa. l. 56. Though he was a Son, yet learned he obedience by the things he suffered."

The Son ascribes the glory to his Father.

3. It appears that the Father is the prime Agent and Author of this marriage, and blessed wedding supper, because the persons which the Son was to espouse, were first chosen, or elected by him. This is mentioned in this parable, "Many are called, but few are chosen." And they were the Father's choice, not but that they were the Son's choice, as well as the Father's, "Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you," John xv. 16. The Son liked and approved of all them that his Father chose for him, yet he never hath, doth, nor will espouse one soul, but such which the Father from eternity loved and elected to eternal life.

The Father chose the bride for his Son.

Brethren, it is observable, that election is generally in the holy scripture, attributed to the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ. "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ, according as he hath chosen us in him, before the foundation of the world," Eph. i. 3, 4. So it is said in another place, "Whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate, to be conformed to the image of his Son," Rom. viii. 29. The apostle Peter witnesseth to the same truth, "Elect, according to the foreknowledge of God the Father," 1 Pet. i. 2. The Father loved them from everlasting, and therefore elected them.

4. The Father is the first and chief Author of this marriage feast, appears, because he sent the Son into the world, on purpose to espouse sinners, or to bring them into a state of marriage union with himself, it was on this errand the Son came; it was to accomplish this gracious and glorious design and achievement, the Father sent him hither. "Last of all he sent his Son." "I came not of myself, but my Father sent me." It cannot quickly be reckoned up how many times our blessed Lord (in the gospel according to John) saith, the Father sent him; "The same works that I do, bear witness that the Father sent me," John v. 39. Again, he saith, "This is the will of him that sent me," John vi. 40. Again, it is said, "He that sent me is with me." And, as the Father sent him, so likewise, I say it was to this end and purpose, i. e., to espouse sinners, to betroth them unto himself for ever.

The Father prepared the body of Christ.

5. It further appears to be thus, because the Father also prepared him a body, and this not only that he might be a fit sacrifice to redeem those he loved, but also that he might be a suitable person to espouse mankind, and marry them for ever. "A body hast thou prepared me," Heb. x. 5.

6. Moreover, it was the Father which made the first promise of his Son to our first parents; "The seed of the woman shall bruise the serpent's head." And this promise in due time was made good. "When the fulness of time was come, God sent forth his Son, made of a woman," &c., Gal. iv. 4.

God the Father is at the charge of this wedding supper.

7. God the Father also prepared the marriage supper, it was he that made this feast, it is he that is at the whole charge of it; they are his fatlings that are killed; it is his Lamb, and the best of all his flock in heaven and in earth; it is his wine that he hath mingled, his milk, and his bread, "Behold I have prepared my dinner, my oxen, and fatlings are killed, and all things are ready."

Possibly (as I hinted) this may allude to those sacrifices which were under the law, which were types of Christ, who is the substance of all the provision of which this feast doth consist.

But more directly, it undoubtedly refers to that provision which God hath made for the marriage of this most noble and high-born Prince, the Lord Jesus Christ. So that oxen and fatlings, serve chiefly for illustration sake, to set forth that great bounty and noble treatment, or entertainment, all shall find that come to this wedding, and espouse Jesus Christ. It is called, "A feast of fat things, full of marrow; wine on the lees, well refined," Isa. xxv. 6.

8. The Father sent his servants to bid or invite the guests, he therefore must needs be the first and chiefest Author and Agent in promoting this marriage, or the spiritual union of Jesus Christ with sinners; it is said, "Again he sent forth other servants," ver. 4.

The Father gives the bride in marriage.

9. Moreover, it is the Father that gives all those persons unto his Son, which the Son doth espouse. Our Lord saith, "All that the Father hath given me, shall come unto me," John vi. 37. "Thine they were, and thou gavest them me," John xvii. 6.

What giving doth denote.

1. Giving unto Christ, may denote election, and also, that designation of the persons to this end. Moreover,

2. It may also signify, the infusing of grace, or the giving them a heart to believe and to receive him. And as the Father gives the sinner to his Son, so also he gives his Son to the sinner. He first gave Jesus Christ for us, and then he gives him unto us, as the effects of his sovereign love and grace. "If thou knewest the gift of God," John iv. 19. What gift is that? Certainly it is Jesus Christ, he is God's gift, and the greatest, and choicest gift that ever was bestowed upon the children of men; for, when God gives Christ, he gives himself, and all things that are truly good; all things are yours, why so? The answer is plain, viz., you are Christ's, and Christ is God's.

10. The Father is so much concerned in making of this marriage, that unless he draws the sinner to Jesus Christ, or makes the soul willing to accept and receive Christ, none can come; "No man can come to me except the Father draw him," John vi. 44. Naturally the will is rebellious and obstinate; there is an averseness to Christ, and enmity in the mind against him, therefore the Father must by his Spirit remove that averseness, and take away that enmity. It doth not only denote a rational drawing, by arguments used in the ministry of the gospel; for, if this was that which is here meant, then it would follow, that it is not the Father, but his ministers that draw the sinner. Therefore this drawing signifieth that divine power that is put forth by Almighty God upon the soul. Our Lord explains it himself in verse 65.

"Therefore said I unto you, no man can come unto me, except it were given unto him of my Father." Except he give power to come, a heart to come, or rather faith whereby the soul must receive him; and "faith is not of ourselves, it is the gift of God," Eph. ii. 8.

11. The Father manifests his great love, and is the great Agent, and Author of this grace, and high privileges, i. e., the soul's union with his Son, appears, in that the servants which he sends on this errand, as spokesmen to persuade sinners, are to offer this favour to them in his name; nay, they are to entreat them, and beseech them in his stead, "We pray you, as if God did beseech you by us," 2 Cor. v. 20.

So much as to the first thing, which this marriage feast doth denote, or comprehend.

Secondly, this feast, or this marriage doth also denote or hold forth, the wonderful love of Jesus Christ to lost sinners, which I purpose to open more largely under another head.

This marriage feast holds forth the wonderful love of Christ

Thirdly, It also signifies and fully holds forth, the strange and marvellous condescension of Jesus Christ, in that he, who is the eternal Son of God, even "God over all, blessed for evermore," Rom. ix. 5, should become man, or take our nature into union with his own Person, and to enter into a near and most intimate union with such vile and base creatures, as all mankind naturally are.

Fourthly, it moreover comprehends, or doth import, what a wonderful opportunity is now in the sinner's hand, who have this offer made to them, whereby they may be made happy for ever. What a match, oh, sinners! is here provided for you, and proposed to you? You may be espoused and married unto the Son of God, if you can be brought to leave and forsake all your former lovers, with which you are in a league of too great friendship.

This marriage feast shows what an opportunity is put in the sinners hand.

Fifthly, from the subsequent effects of the whole, or from what ensues, it holds forth the horrible evil and ingratitude of mankind. Did ever mortals slight and contemn such a favour, such honour, such happiness, as all those do, who refuse to come unto this marriage.

It shows man's horrid ingratitude.

This shall suffice as to the first thing propounded, and it is all I shall say at this time.

SERMON III.

The kingdom of heaven is like unto a certain king, which made a marriage for his son.—Matt. x. xii. 14.

DOCTRINE 1. The great God, bath out of infinite love and mercy, sent his own Son to espouse poor sinners, or to take them into union with himself.

I have showed, what this marriage doth import, or comprehend.

Secondly, I shall now proceed to prove and fully demonstrate, that it is the true and only interest of every sinner, to accept of this most gracious offer and invitation, to come to this marriage feast, and espouse Jesus Christ.

1. It must be their chiefest, and only concernment, and true interest, by considering, how all sinners, or ungodly men and women are blinded, misled, and like to be undone for ever, by means or reason of those lovers which they have already espoused, and are in league withal.

Brethren, those objects, or lovers that they are ensnared by, and are in love with, are principally three:

1. The lusts of the flesh. 2. The lusts of the eyes. 3. The pride of life.

Sinners are in league with sin.

To which I might add, their own righteousness; which although it be comprehended in the pride of life, yet I shall speak unto it as a distinct and different object of man's affections.

1. The lusts of the flesh, denotes the object of all voluptuous persons, and comprehends gluttony, drunkenness, whoredom, or all sensual pleasures.

2. The lusts of the eyes, comprehends the covetous man's darling, or beloved, as riches, gold, silver, &c. This he desires, and is never satisfied with; yet this is the grand idol of the world, that object mortals dote upon, and are mad after.

3. The pride of life; this is the darling of all ambitious persons; their hearts and eye are set upon pomp, and external grandeur, they seek vain applause, and the glory of this world, which made our Lord say to this sort, "How can ye believe, that seek honour one of another, and not that honour that comes from God only?" John v. 41.

Under this darling object (though with some difference) comes in the great idol of all Pharisaiical persons, viz., self-righteousness, in which doth consist the pride of life, as much as in any other respect whatsoever. What can more fully show the pride of man, than those cursed conceptions of deserving any thing at God's hands, by our own obedience? notwithstanding standing, in our best and chiefest duties, or acts of piety, is much sin, which, as it is a breach of God's law, it deserves eternal death and wrath.

My brethren, pray consider, that it is from these, or some of these beloved objects, on which the hearts of men are set, that so few come to this marriage supper; they will not break off the league they have made with the "lusts of the flesh, the lusts of the eye, and the pride of life," to espouse Jesus Christ.

2. Moreover, know assuredly, that no person can have any true love to God, or unto Jesus Christ, whose hearts are set upon any of these things. "Love not the world, neither the things of the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him; for all that is in the world, the lusts of the flesh, the lusts of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but of the world," John xv. 16.

1. That is, to love things that are sinful in themselves, or sinful in their own nature.

2. Or such who love lawful things and objects to excess, or inordinately, setting their choicest and chiefest affections upon them.

The danger of loving sin, or any lawful pleasure inordinately.

The first comprehends all direct acts of sin, as lying, swearing, whoring, drunkenness, stealing, pride, covetousness, revenge, envy, malice, deceit, substitution, and idolatry, or any other thing that is a breach of the law of God.

It is one thing, my brethren, to be overcome by temptation, to commit this or that sin, and another to love, like, and approve of it. Sin, in the affections, is far worse than sin in the conversation; the former shows such are in the gall of bitterness, and not renewed by divine grace. The other only serves to demonstrate a man is not perfect in grace, or not without sin, as in himself. David, Job, Peter, and many others committed many acts of sin; they had sin in their conversations, but they were not in love with sin; they had it not in their affections, "Ye love the Lord, hate evil," that is, all evil, sin as it is sin, and the worst of all plagues in the world. To have sin in the affections, is a clear sign of unregeneracy. But then,

2. To love lawful things and objects inordinately. God allows people to love their wives, their husbands, their children, their parents, or any of their relations, and friends; but, if we love any of these to excess, or inordinately, or more than Christ, or God himself, we can be no disciples of his, nor is the love of God in such persons. Also God allows us to love our food, our meat and drink, our clothes, our trades, riches, houses, lands, or any thing we have, or do possess, as it is a blessing given to us of God, and sanctified to our good, we answering God's gracious end and design in bestowing these things upon us. But if we set our hearts upon any of these things, and love them more than God, and Jesus Christ, "The love of God is not in us." Men may make an idol of their backs, of their bellies, of their trade, of their lands, of their houses, lawful pleasures, silver and gold; and it is this which renders their condition to be wretched and deplorable.

3. Pray consider, that it is by means of sin, and by an inordinate love to the creature, that all men and women naturally are blinded; these are their gods, their idols, and these things are the objects by which they are in danger eternally to be undone and ruined.

4. Moreover, it is the great end and design of God, by his making this marriage feast, or by proposing to the soul, a union with Jesus Christ, to break, and utterly to dissolve that league, and friendship, sinners have entered into with any of those things, of which we have mentioned.

And now that is the sinner's great concern, or true and only interest, to cast off, and break their former league with sin, or what they have placed their hearts, their love, and affection upon, I shall prove and demonstrate by several considerations.

1. Consider, that sin is an enemy to the soul, and this world also, as it is the object of lusts; and not only enemies, but very cruel and bloody enemies.

2. Sin, in its original, was but a brat of Satan; it is the spawn of the devil, and, like father like child. Sin hath made a breach between God and man, God and man were once in a state of true friendship, until sin set them one against another. Nay, sin hath caused an irreconcilable enmity between God and all mankind; for, all men, by nature, are in this condition, "The carnal mind is enmity against God; it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be;" and, "God is angry with the wicked every day," Rom. viii. 7. Such is his holiness and pure nature, that he cannot but hate him that loves sin, hence it is said, "The face of the Lord is set against them that do evil, to cut their remembrance from off the earth." Again, it is said, "The Lord trieth the righteous, but the wicked, and him that loveth violence, his soul hateth," Psal. xi. 5.

3. Sin hath defaced the image of God in man, and hath brought him under God's curse, Union with Christ is held forth by this marriage feast.

Sinners great interest to cast off, &c., break the league with sin.

What evil sin hath done to man.

and hath laid him obnoxious to eternal wrath. Now if this be duly considered, is it not the true interest of sinners, or their chiefest concernment, to break that league they have made with such an object?

Is not the loss of God's love and favour, a fearful thing; is it not dreadful to be filled with enmity against God, and hate him; saith the Lord, "My soul loathed them, and their soul also abhorred me," Zech. xi. 8.

Is it not an amazing thing, and a dismal loss, that instead of God's holy image, man should bear the image and likeness of the devil?

Is it not a lamentable thing, to be under God's vindictive wrath, and to be laid obnoxious unto eternal burnings? Can any think of this, and not tremble? Would any (unless they are utterly deprived of their understanding) hug such a pretended friend, that is, such an enemy to God, and to the person that is in love with it.

Secondly, furthermore, pray consider, that by this cursed object of sinners, they are become traitors, and rebels unto God, and abide so, as long as they keep this friendship, and refuse to break the league they are in with hell and death.

It was (beloved) hereby, that we cast off our blessed and rightful sovereign, and set up the devil in the place, and throne of God.

Thirdly, this marriage with Jesus Christ, must needs be the sinner's true and chiefest interest, considering yet a little further, what traitorous lovers these cursed objects are unto sinners. Oh! what barbarity have they exercised upon precious souls of mankind.

1. Sin hath put out the eyes of all men, their understanding naturally being utterly darkened, and hence they see not, nor can they discern what a cruel monster sin is, which they hug and embrace in their bosoms; they are in the night of darkness, and think they have got Rachel into their bed, when, alas! it is one far more deformed than blear-eyed Leah; nay, one worse than the devil; for so is sin in many respects, as hath formerly been opened unto you.

Also by this means they cannot see, nor discern the beauty and loveliness of the Lord Jesus Christ. I say, they are blind, and in darkness, their spiritual eyes being put out by sin, which they love, and will not forego, leave, nor forsake.

2. Moreover, sin hath poisoned and corrupted, not only one faculty of the soul, but also every faculty thereof.

3. These enemies, that are the darlings of sinners, have wounded them from the crown of their head, to the soles of their feet; so that they have nothing "but wounds, and bruises, and putrifying sores," Isa. i. 5.

4. Sin hath covered the soul all over with a leprosy; no doubt but the plague of the leprosy, is a figure and representation of sin; we read, such was the nature of it, that it spread itself all over the body. So hath sin spread itself all over every part, and faculty of the soul; and every member of the body of sinners, are corrupted by it also. "Their eyes are full of idolatry, their hands wift to shed blood, the throat is a filthy sepulchre, under their lips, is the poison of asps," Rom. iii. 13. The leprosy was a most loathsome, filthy, and stinking disease; sin renders the soul hateful and abominable in the sight of God, and in every man's own sight, whose eyes are enlightened. No disease was more contagious or infectious; it infected the house, walls, vessels, and garments, where the leper dwelt. So all things are infected by the sin of an ungodly person, even his very prayers are sin. What mortal would embrace such an object, that hath given him such a foul and filthy disease? certainly it must needs be the wisdom of every soul, to cast off such a lover with the utmost hatred and abhorrence.

5. Sin hath laid all mankind naturally in chains, and cruel fetters; they are bound in bonds of iniquity, yea, in such bonds that bind them unto a filthy dead body, a rotten, stinking body. Natural depravity or original corruption, is so compared by the apostle, "O wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me from this body of death," Rom. vii. 24. Or, this dead body. Moreover, these bonds bind all that guilt that is in sinners, upon their souls and consciences: and not only so, but it also binds them unto the devil, to be his slaves and vassals.

And, in the last place, these bonds bind the soul of every sinner that is in love with it, over to eternal wrath and vengeance, yea, unto everlasting burning.

6. Sin hath also stabbed the souls of all that are in a league of love and friendship with it, it has given the soul its mortal wound. Oh, what is the blindness and folly of such sinners! they sport and play with sin, and embrace it, as a Man an enemy to God by sin.

The eyes sinners put out by sin.

See blind leaders of the blind.

See the parable of the man that fell among thieves.

Sin binds sinners in bonds, and also to a dead body.

Sin hath stabbed sinners at their hearts. man embraces a lovely object, and think nothing more sweet and pleasant, and yet every kiss they gave sin, I mean every act of sin, is a stab at the heart, as if a spear was thrust into the very bowels of a person.

Sin, and this world, with which wicked men and women are in love, is set forth by an adulterous woman, by wise Solomon, Prov. vii. 10, 17, 22, 23. Who lies in wait for a foolish young man; "And behold, there met him a woman, with the attire of an harlot, and subtil of heart," And thus she said unto him, I have perfumed my bed with myrrh, aloes, and cinnamon, come, let us take our fill of love until morning. He goeth after her straitway, as an ox goeth to the slaughter, or as a fool to the correction of the stocks, till a dart strike through his liver, as a bird hasteth to the snare, and knoweth not it is for his life."

Though this is true in the letter, i. e., this is the folly and danger of every one that commits adultery with a woman; yet no doubt, it is as true of every other sin. All that love this world, or are in love with any sin, thus they are wounded; every sin is a dart that pierces the soul.

The way sin leads the soul in, and the dismal end it will bring all sinners unto, may sufficiently serve to convince every one who is in love with it, that it is the greatest concern to break that league they are in with it, and to espouse Jesus Christ. As sin lays every sinner under God's wrath here, so it will bring them to hell in the end. The wages, reward, or demerit of sin, is death, eternal death. This will be the end of all those who continue in sin, or that live in the love and liking of it: "her house is the way to hell, leading down to the chambers of death," Prov. vii. 27.

Now, the design of God (I told you) in making this marriage feast, is to bring sinners to be willing to break that contract, which they have made with objects, which certainly, all must needs conclude, is their wisdom to do, considering what hath been said.

Neither is there any other way to escape the misery, and fearful danger they are in hereby, but by their accepting this gracious invitation, viz., to espouse Jesus Christ, which is by eating this supper, or by feeding on Christ by faith; for to believe, to receive Christ, or to feed on him, signifies the very same thing.

This, my brethren, is the first demonstration, to prove, that it is the true interest, and highest concernment of sinners thus to do.

U S E.

1. We infer from hence, that greater love and mercy to sinners, could not be showed unto them, than God hath manifested in making this blessed marriage supper.

God saw what a fearful condition mankind was in, by the love of sin, and by the inordinate love of the creature, they having not ever tasted of any thing which is truly good, he has provided such a feast, which if they come and eat thereof, they will soon perceive how they have been deceived, and blinded by the enemies of their souls.

Exhortation. Let me therefore now exhort you that are yet in your sins, or live in love with them.

1. To consider what your woful state and condition is. This indeed may be lamented. Though these things are so, and it is day by day opened, and made clearly to appear to be so; yet sinners will not believe it, or at leastwise lay it to heart. They cannot be persuaded, that this is their condition, which is a full confirmation of the truth you have now heard, that all ungodly men and women are blind. If these things do not affect your souls, if you believe not, this is your condition, certainly you are in the gall of bitterness, and in the bond of iniquity.

2. Let me exhort you to cast off sin, and the love of this world. Had you rather die, than live? Is sin so sweet to you, that you are contented to be damned for your love to it? Do you think it hath more good and sweetness in it, than is to be found in God, and in Jesus Christ? Will you show yourselves to be some of them that make light of this marriage feast, and, one go his farm, and another to his merchandise? O, if it be so, hear what God says, none of these shall taste of my dinner. No, not so much as one taste of God's love. No Christ then, shall you have when you come to die. No pardon of sin; no peace of conscience, but unto everlasting flames you must be cast.

So much at this time.

SERMON IV.

*The kingdom of heaven, is like unto a certain king, which made a marriage for his son,

THE doctrine I am upon, is this, viz., "that the great God hath sent his own Son, to espouse and marry poor sinners."

1. You have heard, what this marriage doth import.

2. I am upon the second general head proposed, viz., that it is the true and only interest of sinners, to accept of this gracious offer.

I told you, I should endeavour to make this to appear by divers demonstrations.

1. The first was taken from the consideration of that woful condition all men are in by means of that affinity they have made with, other objects and things.

That I have done with, and I shall now proceed.

Secondly, it is the sinner's true and only interest to espouse Jesus Christ, considering the great worth and dignity of his person and offices.

2. From the great unworthiness, or indignity of those persons, which he offers to espouse unto himself.

1. From the dignity, worth, and glorious excellency of Christ's person and offices.

1. He is a King, yea, "King of kings, and Lord of lords," Jer. x. 7. This respecteth his office. But further, he is God, the Son of God, the brightness of the Father's glory, and the express image of his person. He only hath the keys of hell and death. He hath all power in heaven and earth. His glory excelleth the highest heavens: nay, in comparison of him, the sun that is so glorious, is but a lump of darkness, or without light. It is he whose power is such, that he measureth the heavens with a span. And all the regions of the earth, are as the small dust of the balance in comparison of him.

The excellency of Christ's person.

Brethren, if we consider him in his personal excellencies, or in the glory of his offices, there is none like unto him in heaven, nor earth; there is not such another; he hath the pre-eminence over all creatures, angels and men, yea, over all the whole creation. All must worship him, do him homage, or give divine adoration to him. The Father when he brought him unto the world, said, "and let all the angels of heaven worship him," Heb. i. 6.

The glory of Christ's majesty cannot be conceived, much less expressed by any in heaven and earth.

And, is it not (think you) the chief interest, the only concernment of sinners, to espouse him, who is exalted in heaven at the Father's right hand, having taken the full possession of his kingdom above, and will quickly take unto him the actual possession of his kingdom below? "His dominions shall be from sea to sea, and from the rivers, to the ends of the earth," Psal. lxxii. 8. All nations shall serve him, and kings shall lick the dust of his feet, and bow before him. His sceptre is a right sceptre; he doth what he pleaseth, and none can say unto him, what dost thou?

2. He is glorious in his retinue, having "Ten thousand times ten thousand of glorious angels to minister unto him." What are the attendants of the greatest monarch on earth to those mighty ones that attend upon Jesus Christ? The least of them far excel in power and glory, the chiefest king, or potentate on earth.

There are three or four things that further tend to demonstrate his favour, in vouchsafing such a high privilege, and great honour in his espousing poor sinners.

1. Let us consider, his all-sufficiency: he hath all things in the compass of his own being, whereby he is infinitely happy and glorious in himself. Moreover, his glory and happiness had been nothing less than it is, if mankind had never been created, (he being God over all, blessed for ever) nor would his glory be less, (as so considered) if all men should be consumed, and come to nothing.

Christ's all-sufficiency.

He stands in no more need of us, (as one observes) to add unto his essential glory, than the heavens stand in need of a moth to move it, or the earth a grasshopper to uphold it; or the sun a glow-worm, to add to its light and lustre.

Charnock.

Brethren, If the Lord Jesus Christ could not have been happy without his espousing and marrying sinners, it would not have been so great a wonder. But since he can gain nothing by us, and stands in no need of us, in his proposing this so great, so sweet, and gracious an offer, this tends to show his admirable and amazing condescension, and that it must needs be the chief interest of sinners to accept him, it being our good only, which he hereby seeks, and labours to effect.

Secondly, Considering his independency. Christ is, brethren, so free, and absolute in his being, and actings, that nothing can necessitate him to regard us; none could lay any engagement upon him, to set his heart against mankind. If any person could oblige him, or if we could deserve any such thing at his hands, or could present any motive which might effectually persuade him, then it might not be so much admired; but, alas! there is no desert, no merit, no motive in any sinner, either from within, or from without, to stir him up to love, and espouse any man or woman of Adam's offspring. Alas! can boils and blotches allure, or loathsome filth and ugliness entice admirable beauty, to love and delight?

Christ's independency.

Christ's sovereignty.

3. Consider the nature of Christ's sovereignty, in respect had to his choice.

1. He might, without the least prejudice to himself, have annihilated mankind, as soon as he had created them. Before they had sinned, might he not have done what he would with his own, (as Reverend Charnock notes) much more might he have done this. After man had sinned, and cast him off, might he not have executed the fearful sentence of eternal death and wrath immediately, and so have caused the glory of man to fly away as a bird from the birth, from the womb, or conception, and so have crushed the cockatrice in the egg? And this he might done unto the glory of his justice.

2. Or, might he not have displayed the glory of his absolute, sovereign grace and favour (saith he) to the fallen angels, and not to fallen mankind? Or, have made us devils; or, at least, have put us into the like state they are in?

Brethren, The angels were his creatures, and more glorious too in their first estate, than man; and were, as to their beings and nature, more like unto him, they being spirits, and so of a more pure and sublime matter than man, and so might seem a more fit and proper match for him than man, who was made of dust, or red clay. What obligation, I say, lay either upon the Father or Son, to spare man, and not the angels that sinned?

3. Or, why might he not have decreed (saith he) from everlasting (foreseeing man's fall, and horrid rebellion) to have cast off all Adam's posterity, and thrown them into hell, and have raised up a new creation of mankind, from a better head, and have caused them to stand, and have made them more desirable objects of his love and affections?

Obj. But some may say, "How then could the attribute of his mercy and goodness been known?"

Ans. Certainly (as he observes) infinite wisdom could some other way have displayed the glory of that, and all other attributes, if he had pleased; and in such a way, that he might have spared his own precious Son from pouring forth his blood. No doubt but the whole contrivance of the mystery of our redemption, results from God's sovereign pleasure.

4. Or why (saith he) might not the plea of divine justice, have rather prevailed, than the plea of mercy? Was it not more reasonable, that justice should be glorified in man's final ruin, than that mercy should be heard for us, considering that nothing could satisfy divine justice, for man's offence, as it seems to us, but the letting out of the precious blood of his own Son; or that he must die, if we are spared? To which I may add,

5. Or why doth our Lord Jesus commend his love to sinners in England, and not to sinners in India? I mean to the Pagan world; they are wholly left under darkness, and never heard of Christ. They know nothing of his death, nor of the gospel; they have not this offer of his love, as yet, made unto them; they are not bid to this marriage feast.

6. Or, why doth he so graciously vouchsafe this infinite favour to us in and about this city, and some other places in this nation, and lets many cities, towns, and corners of England, remain in great darkness, they having not such clear gospel-light afforded to them? Rev. iii. 20. Christ doth not come and stand at their doors, and knock, as he doth at your doors, and hath for a long time.

Or, why doth he open some of our hearts, causing us to attend upon the word, and by the powerful operations of his Spirit, bow and subject our rebellious wills to embrace him?

Whereas, many are let alone in the blindness of their minds, and hardness of their hearts, who sit under the same means of the external preaching of the gospel. Surely, no other reason can be given of this, but his own sovereignty. What greater demonstrations of sovereign love and grace, can Jesus Christ show unto us?

Thirdly, It greatly concerns sinners to accept of this offer, or it must needs be their chief and only interest so to do, considering, that great indignity and unworthiness of the persons to whom he commendeth his love.

The sinner's great unworthiness.

Quest. Who are they?

Ans. I answer, They are men and women, children of the lost Adam; not angels, but mankind.

And, oh! what a low, base, and contemptible creature is man! "What is man, that thou shouldest magnify him, that thou shouldest set thy heart upon him? And that thou shouldest visit him every morning, and try him every moment?" Job vii. 17, 18.

Man, a worm, a base and vile creature, a mere carrion worm, bred out of corruption, not worth the least regard! Do we value a worm? Oh, why should Christ, the Prince of the kings of the earth, set his heart upon, and court such a creature!

And shall not such creatures think it doth not greatly concern them, to accept him? Is it not their chief interest to bid him welcome, and open the door to him, and readily come to this marriage supper?

Sirs! If men were now poor, yet if they were of an high birth, or sons of nobles, there might seem to be some motive why Christ should make this wonderful suit and offer to them. But, alas! alas! all were base born, born children of wrath. Our Father left us beggars. But, this is not all, he left us sinners. Man is a sinner, a rebel, a cursed traitor to this blessed prince. Shall the king, that we have conspired against, and contemned in our hearts, and consulted with the devil to dethrone, to murder, and tread under foot, come to us to woo us. Hath he fallen in love with us? Or, doth the offended Sovereign stoop to offending criminals? Stand, and wonder, O ye heavens! Doth the Majesty of heaven, in this manner, condescend to espouse a slave of sin, and Satan? Shall such that hate him, be beloved by him? Shall condemned rebels be not only entreated to accept of a pardon, but also to marry the prince himself, and they not think it their only interest to accept it? Oh, what an inequality is here!

1. He a King, yea, the "King of kings," and they rebels and traitors to him?

He the mighty Monarch of heaven and earth, and they beggars!

He from heaven, heavenly; they from earth, earthly!

He the highest Sovereign, and we the lowest peasants!

He the Darling of heaven, and we the vassals of hell!

He, in his nature, pure, holy, and undefiled, and we, in our nature, impure, filthy, and polluted!

Fourthly, It must needs be their true interest, considering what strange and amazing achievements he hath undertook, in order to bring about, and obtain his gracious design and purpose. Christ's wonderful achievements.

1. Consider what a glorious place, and a rich palace he left above, and to what a dole-some land of darkness, he came unto, to seek the lost soul he designed to espouse. He came out of his Father's bosom, to be exposed to the wrath and malice of devils, and wicked men.

2. He laid aside his glorious robes to be clothed (as I may say) with rags, that so he might accomplish his gracious purpose.

3. Consider what a long and vast journey he undertook, to come to us, to offer his love. Is it not a long way from heaven to earth? Christ loved and decreed to espouse sinners from all eternity.

4. Consider, that he from eternity decreed to espouse all those persons which his Father gave him; and whatsoever he doth in time, was but in pursuit of his unchangeable purpose from before all time.

5. Consider, that he hath espoused us virtually before he offers his love unto us: he espoused us, when he espoused our nature; he virtually was married to sinners, when he took the nature of man into union with his own divine person. Calvin understood this chiefly to be meant by this marriage in my text. Indeed, had not the Father first married his Son to the nature of man, he could not have married the person of any man to him. Christ must be flesh of our flesh, and bone of our bone. God being a Spirit, he could not be a proper spouse for us. Could an angel be a fit, and proper help-meet for Adam? We could not see him, could have no affecting idea of him; we could not come near him: his glory is so great, considered as he is God, it would have overwhelmed us, or have dazzled our eyes; therefore he veiled his glory in our nature, and became like unto us, that we might behold him as an object every way suitable, and agreeing to us, whom he came to betroth to himself for ever.

"We beheld his glory, as the glory of the only-begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth," John i. 14. How was this! Even as he was made flesh, and dwelt among us. In this the wisdom and goodness of God was manifested. We could not so well conceive him, nor worship him, because we could not tell how to frame any true or right idea of him in our minds, except he brought forth the express image of his person.

Therefore, it is by him we come to God, believe in the Father, espouse the Father, love, honour, and worship the Father.

The Son of God (saith a learned man) was made flesh, that he might be a true, and fit Bridegroom for his church.

The great abasement of Christ. 6. Consider what he hath suffered and undergone, that he might have his gracious design of love accomplished.

What indignities did he meet withal, in the days of humiliation, from men! His birth was mean, being born of a poor virgin; the Popish church calls her a lady, and paints her in very rich robes; but, alas! as to her outward state in the world, she was no lady, but a mean virgin; which appears,

(1.) By the meanness of that man whom she was espoused unto: Joseph was no lord, no earl, no duke, but a poor carpenter.

(1.) By that poor entertainment she had in the inn. Had she been of some noble, or high descent, no doubt but the innkeeper would have made better provision for her, she being big with child, and near her time. We may conclude, though the inn might be full of guests, yet some might have soon removed their quarters, to have given place to a person of such quality, as these people imagine: however, they would not have turned her into the stable, to be delivered of the holy child Jesus, among the brute beasts.

2. No sooner was he born, but he was laid in a manger, and when the news of his birth came to the ears of Herod, he sought all manner of ways and means to take away his life.

Moreover, the whole time of his life was attended with sorrow and affliction. He was hated, and persecuted from place to place: he spent his days in grief and sighing. He is said to be "A man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief," Isa. liii. 7. How was he reproached and despised of men, called a wine bibber, a friend of publicans and sinners: nay, that he had a devil and was mad; and that he cast out devils by Beelzebub, the prince of devils. Oh, what mortal can read these things, and his soul not mourn, and Christ's bloody agony. his heart pour forth!

Moreover, how basely was he betrayed by one of his own disciples? And, what sorrow did he meet with in his soul in the garden, in his bloody agony, when the weight of our sins, and that wrath that was due to sinners, lay so heavy upon him? and besides all this, what a sore, ignominious, and painful death did he die?

The end of Christ's death. He died in the stead, or room of all those the Father gave unto him. He could not obtain his desire, viz., the espousing and marrying of our souls, unless he died for us: in his holy life he wrought out a wedding garment for us, and for all that espouse him: and, by his death, he bore our sins, and curse of the law, or all that vindictive wrath that was due to us, and so saved us from hell, and eternal vengeance, whose doing and suffering, is our righteousness, to our justification, before God.

And, shall any after this, refuse to come to this wedding, or to accept of his love, and be betrothed to so dear a Saviour.

Oh, ponder these things well in your minds, and lay your hands upon your hearts, and delay no longer, but close with Jesus Christ this day.

Fifthly, but if all these arguments and demonstrations do not it, will not prevail with you, to consider the nature of his precious love.

The great love of Christ opened. I. Jesus Christ had an early love to poor sinners. He loved us long before we were born, or had a being: "The Lord appeared unto me of old, saying, yea I have loved thee with an everlasting love," Jer. xxxi. 3.

It was, my brethren, a love of choice, he chose us, and set his heart upon us from all eternity. It was a love of purpose, of good will; he designed to redeem us, and visit us, and to espouse us, to come and knock at our doors, and to change our hearts, and to marry us to himself for ever.

Oh! what good-will was here to sinners? What a purpose of love, of kindness, of favour, and grace? Did Christ choose sinners so long ago, even from everlasting, and, shall not sinners now choose him, love him, espouse him? "We love him, because he first loved us," 1 John iv. 19. Our love to Christ, is not the cause of his love to us, but it is the effect of his love. His love is the fountain, our love is a small rivulet, flowing from that fountain.

What is it, my brethren, which draws out the love of a person to an earthly object, or cause such a one to look upon it their concern, and interest to return love for love, more than the thoughts of the length of that time he loved her, perhaps from a child; but, Oh!

how much longer did Jesus Christ love us! It was not only from the womb, but from eternity. But pray do not mistake me, I do not say, the cases run parallel; it is not the bare reflection on Christ's early love, that is sufficient to cause us to love him: no, no, but his love to us, hath a physical cause in it; it is like love powder, it operates on us, as the sun by its near approach in the spring, causes the grass to grow, and flowers to put forth. Christ's love to us, hath the same effect upon us, as the sun hath, by shining on the moon, i. e., the sun shines on the moon, and the moon reflects great light on the earth.

II. Christ's love is a free love; it arose from himself. Pray consider the objects he doth so dearly love.

Brethren, the Lord Christ did not let out his redeeming love to us, as we stood in the first Adam, in the state of innocency, but as we were fallen, and lay polluted in our filth and blood. Perfect man stood in no need of redeeming love, mercy, and compassion: God considered as Creator, was our Husband, and we wanted our Saviour to espouse us; I may say, it was in our widowhood that Christ loved us, God having cast us off, and given us a bill of divorce. "Now, when I passed by thee, and saw thee polluted in thine own blood, I said unto thee, when thou wast in thy blood, live, &c. I looked upon thee, and behold, thy time was the time of love, and covered thy nakedness: yea, I swear unto thee, and entered into covenant with thee, saith the Lord God, and thou becamest mine," Ezek. xvi. 6, 8.

Oh, what was the motive of Christ's love! It is beyond our reach to find it out. It is a free love, an undeserved love. There was nothing he could behold in us, to cause him to love us: nay, it is evident, he might see cause to loathe and hate us, but see no cause arising from us, to move him to love us. He loved us when sinners, and enemies, and when we lay under the curse, and condemned criminals. "I will love them freely," Hos. xiv. 4.

III. Christ's love is infinite, or unmeasurable; it passeth all understanding. "That you may know the love of Christ, that passeth knowledge," Eph. iii. 19. It is beyond the knowledge of men or angels. Christ's love hath all dimensions in it; there is a height, breadth, length, and depth in it. We may as soon find out God to perfection, as find out the love of Christ to perfection: "It is as high as heaven, what canst thou do? deeper than hell, what canst thou know? Longer than the earth, broader than the sea," Job xi. 8, 9. So it may be said of the love of Jesus Christ; the inmost recesses, or secrets of his heart cannot be known.

IV. The love of Jesus Christ is wonderful. As his name is Wonderful, so is his nature, and the greatness of his love. Doubtless, his love unto sinners, makes the holy angels behold him with admiration. His love is wonderful, if we consider,

1. The rise, original, and the spring of it is wonderful, it being without beginning, from everlasting.

2. If we consider the motive of it, it is wonderful. Who ever loved thus? Love such, with such a love, that hated him, and so odious and ugly in themselves!

3. His love is wonderful, if we consider the effects of it;

1. In respect had to himself, what did his love put him to do, and to undergo for those he loved? What strange effects had it upon his holy person? How did it seem to disrobe him? How poor did it make him, that was so rich? How contemptible and despised, that was so great, high, and honourable? How low did it bring him, that was so exalted? How miserable to all human sight did he become, that was so blessed and happy? He that was blessedness itself, was, by his love, made a curse for us. In a word, his love made him who was God, to become man; he that was the glory of heaven, to bear the pangs of hell: that was the light of the world, to come under the greatest darkness: that was the life of all creatures, to come under the power of death.

2. Christ's love is wonderful, in respect had to the effects of his love on sinners. 1. It causeth them that hated him, to love him above father and mother, husband or wife, son or daughter, house, land, or a man's own life.

2. It causeth poor sinners to love him, after this manner, whom they never saw: is not this wonderful? O what amazing effects has it upon the souls of sinners: "Whom having not seen ye love, in whom, though now ye see him not, ye rejoice with joy unspeakable, and full of glory," I Pet. i. 8.

3. Christ's love hath a like wonderful effect upon the soul of sinners, that Elijah's garment had, which he cast upon Elisha: "So he departed thence, and found Elisha, the son of Shaphat, who was ploughing with twelve yoke of oxen before him, and he with the twelfth, and Elijah passed by him, and cast his mantle upon him : and he left the oxen, and ran after Elijah, and said, let me, I pray thee, kiss my father and my mother, and then I will follow thee ; and he said unto him, go back, what have I done unto thee ?" 1 Kings xix. 19, 20. No sooner doth Christ cast the mantle of his love on poor sinners, but immediately the soul leaves all, and follows him : no man that hath had the least saving sight of Christ, and hath tasted of his love, but runs after him.

Christ's love is wonderful. 4. Such are the wonderful effects of Christ's love, on the souls of sinners, that it makes a strange and marvellous change upon them : it transforms their souls into his own image. Do but behold Christ, though it be but in a glass, and this will be the effects of it ; " But we all with open face beholding, as in a glass, the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image, from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord," 2 Cor. iii. 18.

Christ's love is ravishing. V. Christ's love is of a sweet, and soul-ravishing nature ; it is compared to wine ; nay, better than wine ; " Let him kiss me with the kisses of his mouth, for thy love is better than wine," Cant. i. 2. There is no believer but finds by experience, that the love of Christ is sweeter than all things in this world, when he gives them fresh tastes of it ; this made the spouse to cry out, " Stay me with flaggons, comfort me with apples, for I am sick of love," Cant. ii. 5. O how sweet is such a sickness ; happy they that are love-sick to Jesus Christ !

VI. The love of Christ is a conjugal love ; nothing will satisfy him but the nearest relation ; it is the espousing the soul unto himself that he designs and aims at, that he may manifest his dearest embracements, the sweetest intimacy ; " I will betroth thee unto me for ever, yea, I will betroth thee unto me in righteousness, and in judgment, and in loving-kindness, and in mercy : I will betroth thee unto me in faithfulness, and thou shalt know the Lord," Hosea ii. 19.

Brethren, if Jesus Christ showed such love to his enemies, nay, unto his murderers, as to pray for them, " Father, forgive them, they know not what they do ; O, then, what is his love unto his spouse ! unto all those that he takes into union with himself ?

Christ's love attracting. VII. The love of Jesus Christ is of an attracting nature ; it is an attracting, a drawing love ; it constrains all that taste of it to love, delight in, and follow him ; " The love of Christ," saith the apostle, " constraineth us," 2 Cor. vi. 14 ; it constrains the soul that feels its effects, to leave all sin ; to loathe and hate sin as the greatest evil ; it constrains the soul to hate that which once it loved, and to love that which once it hated ; " Ye that love the Lord hate evil." It draws the soul out of darkness, into marvellous light ; it draws powerfully ; let who will strive to obstruct or hinder the soul from closing with Christ, it will be in vain, if it be but in the cords and bands of his love, the husband, the wife, the parents, the children, may do what they can to persuade them to leave off following, and cleaving to Christ, yet a believer is constrained to cleave to him : his love is stronger than death ; it draws the soul to holiness, to new obedience, to suffer shame for Christ's sake ; nay, to die for him, rather than it will forsake him.

VIII. Christ's love is a love of complacency ; he delights in that soul that he has drawn to him, and that believeth in him : " As the bridegroom rejoiceth over the bride, so shall thy God rejoice over thee," Isa. lxii. 5. This further appears, by what he says unto his spouse, " Thou hast ravished my heart, my sister, my spouse, thou hast ravished my heart with one of thine eyes, with the chain of thy neck," Cant. iv. 9.

Oh, how is Christ delighted with the eye of faith, by which the soul came to behold him, and which caused it to love him, and delight in him, it being that uniting grace, through the operations of the Holy Spirit ; faith on our part is the bond of this union, though Christ apprehends us first by his Spirit, before we can apprehend him by faith.

And from hence it is, that a believer takes up such complacency and delight in Christ, such as is the cause, will be the effect, Christ being the joy and delight of the soul.

Christ has a commiserating love. IX. The love of Jesus Christ is of a commiserating nature. It is a love of sympathy. He hath such precious love to all believers, or to all that espouse him, that he has a fellow feeling of all their sorrows, troubles, and afflictions ; " In all their afflictions he was afflicted ; and in his love and pity he redeemed them, and carried them all the days of old," Isa. lxiii. 9. This notes (saith our late Annotator) the sympathy of Jesus Christ, he having the same Spirit in him that the church hath ; it being Christ who appeared to Moses in the bush ; he was that angel of God's presence, that led Israel through the wilderness.

Brethren, our Lord Christ hath the same love of sympathy now, as he had in the days of old. "We have not an high-priest that cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities, but was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin," Heb. iv. 15.

Oh! who would not, but readily espouse such a person, marry such a prince, that will sit up with them all the night of their sickness, and sorrows? He will bear them company, his left hand (of power) shall be under their heads, and his right hand (of love and mercy) shall embrace them; he will bear them in his arms, and carry them in his bosom, and give them sweet cordials, to revive, and cheer their drooping and fainting spirits, so that they shall never be without help and support, let their wants be what they will: "Who can have compassion on the ignorant, and them that are out of the way, for that he himself also is compassed with infirmities," Heb. v. 2. Though Christ had no sin of his own, yet he was afflicted, and was compassed with our infirmities; he made our infirmities his own, and bore our sicknesses. O what a kind of love is in our Lord Jesus Christ!

X. Christ's love is an abiding love, it is not hot and cold, as it is among Christ's love abides. men. O what a heat of love will some men show to those they espouse, and marry at first! as if they were all love, full of burning love and affections; but, alas! it doth not abide, it continues but a short time, they soon cool in their affections; and indeed, so doth our love to Jesus Christ, which may be for ever lamented. We are too subject with the church of Ephesus, to leave our first love, Rev. ii. 4. Christ may say unto us, as he speaks unto his people of old; "I remember thee, the kindness of thy youth, the love of thine espousals, when thou wentest after me in the wilderness, in a land that was not sown," Jer. ii. 2.

We too often decay in our love to Christ, as to the degree of it. Our love to him, and to his people, doth not always abide alike strong and fervent, but Christ's love to us, doth never decay; "Having loved his own that were in the world, he loved them unto the end," John xiii. 1.

He loves us not with a mutable, with a changeable, but with an abiding love; "Much water cannot quench [his] love, nor can the floods drown it," Cant. viii. 7.

XI. Christ's love is an inseparable love. No enemy, no infirmity, no mis- Christ's love inseparable. carriage in his people, can separate his love from them: ill persons sometimes cause some men to withdraw their love from their wives; a small thing may separate their love from their dearest friends, but nothing can separate Christ's love from believers. "I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come; nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature can separate us from the love of God, which is in Jesus Christ, our Lord," Rom. viii. 38, 39.

If such is the effect of Christ's love to us, what is the nature of his love in itself? the cause is more noble than the effects. The height of honour, and worldly advancement; nor the depth of disgrace, or worldly abasement, shall separate our love from him, nor his love from us, such is his love to all those that are united to him.

Obj. Some perhaps may say; but sin may separate us from his love.

Answ. I answer, no; that cannot be, because he hath promised to blot out all the sins of his people, and will remember them no more.

By angels, no doubt, are meant the fallen angels; and if the devils can by none of their subtle temptations, entice the saints to sin, so as to separate them from Christ's love, or the love of God in him, then be sure sin can never do it. That which sin may do, the devil may do. But the devil cannot separate us from the love of Christ: therefore sin cannot do it.

Besides, "nor any other creature," or thing: this includes all things; and leaves nothing out; no, not sin itself.

XII. Christ's love is an eternal love, it is like himself, as he is eternal, so is his love; he is the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever; and so is his love to his chosen ones: "For the mountains shall depart, and the hills be removed, but my kindness shall not depart from thee, neither shall the covenant of my peace be removed, saith the Lord, that hath mercy on thee," Isa. liv. 10

If Christ doth espouse or betroth them, then he doth betroth for ever; if he be an eternal Husband, then his love will be eternal; but those he doth espouse or betroth unto himself, he doth betroth for ever, to be an eternal Husband. Ergo, his love will be for ever.

APPLICATION.

What do you say? Is not the consideration of Christ's love, a motive sufficient to woo your souls, or to prevail with you to come to this marriage supper, to be the bride of such a Bridegroom as Christ is? Ask believers, and they will tell you what the nature of his love is; one taste of it fills the soul with joy; and it sometimes causes the soul to say, as Christ does to his spouse, "Turn away thine eyes, they have overcome me."

Christ's love makes every bitter thing sweet, and all hard things easy, it turns the valley of tears into a mount of joy, nay, it brings heaven into the soul. Will you not love this lovely Object, this precious Person? Will you pour contempt upon the Lord of life and glory, and value him not so much as the trash of this world, no, not above your sensual pleasures, and brutish lusts?

Oh, then how just will your damnation be? Sirs, I am here this day, to tell you, there is one in love with you, what think you, young men and women? Is not this matter worthy your most serious consideration? Is there no way that can be used to court your souls into Christ's embraces?

Shall not the Father's Beloved, the Darling of heaven, be your Beloved?

Shall not the object of the glorified saints affections, be the object of your affections?

Oh! do not cast away your souls, you will repent your refusal of this offer one day.

But so much at this time.

SERMON V.

The kingdom of heaven is like unto a certain king, which made a marriage for his son.—

Matt. xxii. 1—5.

DOCT. That the great God hath sent his own Son, to espouse poor sinners.

The third demonstration to prove it, was taken from the great and wonderful love of Jesus Christ. To proceed.

Fourthly, consider the great riches of Jesus Christ. Sirs! if there be a proposal made to a person of a match, presently the question is, what has he? or has she? what portion pray, or what is he worth? Is he rich? Now, brethren, though it be a base and sordid thing, for any person to marry chiefly for riches, or to prefer the portion above the person, which many, alas! now-a-days do; yet (here especially) it may be a motive worthy enough; considering though the first and chief motive should be, the excellency of Christ's glorious person, and the nature and greatness of his love and affections. But, however, know, O sinner, that Jesus Christ is very rich; thou needst not fear thou shalt ever know want, or know poverty, if thou dost espouse him; hear what he says, riches and honours are with me, yea "durable riches and righteousness," Prov. viii 18. I purpose to do three things.

1. Shew, wherein Christ is rich, or in what his riches lie.
2. Prove, that he is very rich.
3. Shew you the nature, or excellent quality of his riches.

1. Christ is rich in goodness, or "despisest thou the riches of his goodness?" the earth is full of the goodness of the Lord. Brethren, greatness and goodness meet in Jesus Christ; it is rare to find them to meet in men; but what is the goodness that is in men, to that goodness which is in the Lord Christ: the sea is not fuller of water, than he is of goodness. It is not long since you heard several sermons upon the goodness of the Lord. O how great is thy goodness. There is no goodness in any creature or person, but originally it proceeded from Jesus Christ; (considered as he is God) all external, internal, and eternal goodness comes from him, as water from a fountain; also divine goodness is part of his riches.

The goodness in men is soon gone, it often proves like the early cloud, and morning dew; "But the goodness of the Lord endures for ever," Psal. lii. 1.

Whatsoever is good, or may be called goodness, which transcends, it is in Jesus Christ in great abundance: all the excellent qualities of goodness is in him; no man is full of goodness, of all sorts of divine and spiritual goodness, but the Lord Christ is.

He is of a sympathizing, a gentle, a loving, a forbearing, a commiserating, and long-suffering nature; and also ever so, he is never otherwise; he is never out of this sweet frame and temper: he is not good by fits, like some men, who often fail in goodness; all their goodness seems soon darkened and eclipsed, by a disordered frame of heart, through the power of corruption; but the goodness of Christ remains.

2. Jesus Christ is rich in wisdom : he is not only wise, but hath great abundance of wisdom in him : "In him are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge," Col ii. 3. He communicates of his wisdom, to make others wise ; no person that receives him, but he imparts his wisdom unto.

Christ rich
in wisdom.

3. Jesus Christ is rich in grace. "My God shall supply all your need, according to the riches of his grace, Phil. iv. 19, in glory, by Jesus Christ." All grace is in him, "we beheld his glory, as the glory of the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth," John i. 14, 16. His grace, love, and favour is infinite ; "and of his fulness have all we received, and grace for grace."

Christ rich
in grace.

Take grace for divine favour, or for gracious habits or acts, Jesus Christ is full of both ; and he must needs be so, who is the Fountain and Original of all grace, and gracious habits.

4. The Lord Christ is rich in mercy ; all kind of mercy is in him ; goodness may be showed to all sorts of persons, but mercy refers to, or is let out to the miserable ; had man never fallen, God's goodness had been manifested to him, but his mercy only respects man in his fallen state, which is alone seen and made known in Jesus Christ, to undone sinners, in mercy he pitied us, in mercy he redeemed us, and in his abundant mercy he renewed us, sanctified and pardoned us ; he is rich in mercy, full of mercy, infinite in mercy, pity, and compassion, to all that receive him.

Christ is rich
in mercy.

5. Jesus Christ is rich in glory, "that ye may know what is the hope of his calling, and what is the riches of the glory of his inheritance," Eph. i. 18. There are riches of glory attending his grace, let out to the church militant ; but what the riches of his glory is, which is let out and manifested unto the church triumphant, we cannot conceive of.

Christ is rich in glory.

Secondly, I shall prove and demonstrate, that Jesus Christ is rich, very rich, admirably rich.

1. The Lord Jesus must needs be very rich, because he is the Father's heir, nay, heir of all things : all that the Father hath the Son hath, all is his, originally, essentially his, considered as he is God. Moreover, all things are given unto him as he is Mediator, whether things in heaven, or things on earth ; he is the Father's first-born, and he also whom the Father hath appointed heir of all things ; Heb. i. 2 ; therefore the inheritance must needs be his. "Jesus knowing that the Father hath given all things into his hands," Joh. xiii. 3.

Christ is rich, because he is the Father's heir

We that preach the gospel, are sent on such a message to sinners (though far more weighty and great) which Abraham's servant was sent about to Laban's house, viz., to recommend Isaac's love to Rebecca. And he said, "I am Abram's servant, and the Lord hath blessed my master greatly, and he is become great, and hath given him flocks and herds, and silver, and gold, men-servants, maid-servants, and camels, and asses. And Sarah, my master's wife, bare a son to my master when she was old, and unto him he hath given all that he hath," Gen. xxiv. 24. 34. 37.

Even so say we unto you ; the great God who sent us, is a mighty King, the world is his, and the fulness thereof ; all things in heaven and earth ; the cattle upon a thousand hills are his, and he has but one eternal Son, and to him hath given all he hath ; and this Son of his is fallen in love with you : oh, is it thus, and do you think to espouse him or not ? what answer shall I return to him that sent me ?

2. But to evince, and further prove Christ is very rich, pray consider, that he hath all kingdoms of the earth given unto him, to dispose of as he sees good. The Father hath given him the heathen for his inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for his possession, Psal. ii. 8.

Quest. Hath Jesus Christ taken into his actual possession, his kingdom, or not ?

Ans. He hath the possession of his more spiritual kingdom already, when he ascended on high, he took possession of that, and he rules now, and has long over all in heaven, earth, and hell : angels, men and devils, are put into subjection to him ; they are all his servants, and at his command. Moreover,

Christ has taken possession of his
kingdom.

2. He will now, very quickly, take possession of all the kingdoms of this world ; and will in a very short time make the haughty and proud monarchs of the earth know, that he is the only rightful King of nations, as well as of saints, and the only potentate ; and before whom they shall bow, "And confess that Jesus is the Lord, and the glory of God the Father," Christ, beloved, is not only the King of saints, but King of nations.

Christ's more visible kingdom very near.

True, for a long time he has suffered such that are his enemies to reign, and he sets up sometimes the vilest of men, for reasons best known to himself, but their time is now but very short, "God will overturn, overturn, overturn, until he comes, whose right it is, and he will give it unto him."

Brethren! The seventh trumpet will be suddenly sounded, and the voice heard, saying, "The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ," Rev. xi. 15. It shall be known in due time, that our Lord Jesus is the true and rightful heir of all the nations and kingdoms of the earth. "The kingdom, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heavens, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all nations shall serve and obey him," Dan. vii. 27.

3. Jesus Christ must needs be very rich, considering the greatness of his family, which he provides for, both to feed and clothe. It is, my brethren, our Lord Jesus, who feedeth every living creature; the whole world is his family, and oh! how well doth he provide for them all! This be sure he could not do, was he not very rich; "The silver and the gold is his, as well as the wool and the flax," Hos. ii. 5. Could we but take a view of all the men, women, and children, that are but in and about this city, no doubt but we should stand and wonder at the multitude of them, and also how they all should be fed and clothed as they are; but what are the people of this one city, to all in this small isle? And what a small handful of people are in this isle, unto all the people throughout the whole world? O what a household, what a vast family hath our blessed Lord? You would think that man was wonderful rich, who at his own proper charge, did maintain every day, (and so continually) ten thousand persons, and to many of them too, doth give vast incomes, it may be a thousand pounds a week. But, alas! what would that be, to the riches of Christ, who hath millions, to provide for at his own charge every day, and that too perpetually; and to some of them he gives crowns and whole kingdoms, clothing multitudes in cloth of gold and silver; doth not this tend to demonstrate that Jesus Christ is very rich?

Moreover, our Lord Jesus is rich, doth appear, not only because all the riches of the whole earth is his; but also because all the riches of heaven are his. O what a rich crown hath he above, and what a rich throne doth he sit upon there! This is above our apprehension; we cannot conceive what the nature of heavenly riches are; all earthly riches are but shadows of the riches of heaven. What is earthly gold to the gold that paves the streets of New Jerusalem. "The streets of the city is pure gold; also the foundations of the city is laid with all manner of precious stones," Rev. xxii. 2. He is so rich, that if he please, he can build many such cities.

It is Jesus Christ that communicates all the riches of grace unto his saints; "We behold his glory as the glory of the only Begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth. And of his fulness have all we received, and grace for grace," John i. 14, 16.

What a multitude of souls hath the Lord Jesus made spiritually and eternally rich? Nay, he has enriched, not only particular persons, but also many churches.

Moreover, the riches of Christ are so great, that he will in a short time, fill the whole earth with the riches of his grace and glory; "The earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the glory of the Lord, as the water covers the sea," Isa. xi. 9.

Certainly, every sinner may have encouragement from hence, to come to this wedding, and espouse this rich Bridegroom, the Lord Jesus Christ.

5. All that Christ espouseth, he enriches, and what a multitude hath he married? There is not one of them, but he doth most nobly provide for.

Sirs! Christ puts upon every particular soul he espouseth, a most rich and glorious robe, far excelling the gold of Ophir; and decks them with pearl, and rich diamonds, and jewels. Nay, he sets a crown, excelling gold, upon the heads of every one of them, and puts a chain of gold about their necks.

Grace is a crown, and thus all believers are crowned here in this world. But this is not all the crown they shall have: for he hath provided a crown of glory for every one of them also: "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life," Rev. ii. 10. This was that Paul knew he should have, when he had finished his course; "Henceforth there is laid up for me, a crown of life, which God, the righteous Judge, will give unto me at that day. And not unto me only, but unto all them also that love his appearance," 2 Tim. iv. 8, 9.

My brethren, what encouragement is here for sinners to espouse the Lord Jesus! O what riches has he! No doubt, but that there shall be many millions of men and women saved: for, although comparatively, there will be but a few, to the vast multitude that shall be damned, yet heaven is a mighty kingdom; we see the airy sky, or outside of hea-

Christ.

All the riches of heaven are

ven (if I may so say) but we cannot look into it, unless it be by faith. We may perceive that the earth is but a small spot to heaven, and no doubt but heaven, like a great house, shall be well filled with inhabitants. Do you think any part or corner shall be empty, or want inhabitants. It is not to be conceived what a numberless number shall be saved.

And now, pray observe and mind it well, every particular saint shall have a crown of glory set upon his head: Christ will, I say, "crown every soul that does espouse him," though they are so vast a multitude. Therefore certainly this doth fully tend to demonstrate, that he is very rich. So much as to the second thing.

Thirdly, I shall show you, the nature, or excellent quality of the riches of Jesus Christ.

1. The chiefest of Christ's riches are spiritual, not only such that enrich the body, but they enrich the soul also. His riches are soul riches, spiritual riches. The men of this world have part of Christ's external riches; he gives these to such that hate him, to such that have their portion in this life; but their souls are clothed with rags; they, in respect of their inward man, or their better part, are "miserable, naked, poor, wretched, and blind," Rev. iii. 16. It is to be feared most of those, who have the most of worldly riches, (who are richly clothed, and adorned in the outward man) are, as to their souls, most wretchedly poor and miserable. Certainly, those who are most beautiful, and pride it in themselves, and are so haughty and proud, that they know not well how to set their feet upon the ground, have most loathsome and filthy souls. Did they but see their inward parts, or, how it is with them, in a spiritual sense, they would be ashamed, and abhor themselves.

Christ enriches both the soul and body.

2. The riches of Christ are incorruptible riches. Earthly riches are of a low, base, and corruptible nature: "Lay up for yourselves treasure in heaven, where moth and rust cannot corrupt, nor thieves break through and steal," Matt. vi. 19. The apostle James bids those wicked rich men he wrote to, to "weep and howl, for the misery that will come upon them: your gold and silver is cankered, and the rust of it shall be a witness against you; you have heaped up treasure against the last day," Jam. v. 3.

Christ's riches are incorruptible.

But Christ's spiritual riches are of a better nature; they will never canker, nor corrupt. What is that treasure worth, that rusteth and is corrupted in a short time, or may be cankered or eat up, and spoiled by moths?

3. The riches of Jesus Christ are incomparable; there is no earthly treasure can be compared with it. It may be said of Christ's riches which Solomon speaks of; wisdom, (which doubtless refers to Christ himself, the wisdom of God,) "The merchandize of it is better than the merchandize of silver, and the gain thereof than fine gold. She is more precious than rubies, and all things thou canst desire, are not to be compared unto it," Prov. iii. 14.

Christ's riches are incomparable.

Certainly that must be of an excellent nature, that nothing can compare with it. Christ's riches as far excel all earthly riches, as the heavens excel the earth, or light darkness.

4. The riches of Christ are inexhaustible, they cannot be spent; his treasury can never be drawn dry. It is like a well, that hath a mighty spring in the bottom of it. Thus it is not with any earthly treasure. Let a man have the greatest heap, or mine of gold or silver, that ever any had, yet it may be wasted, and at the last, by continual drawing out, be all spent. Suppose you could get a vessel which might hold ten thousand hogsheads of wine, yet draw out of it every day, it would soon be all gone.

Christ's riches are inexhaustible.

But it is otherwise here. Some wells are always full, though thousands draw water plentifully, every day, because a spring feeds it. So is this, a multitude have been enriched with the riches of Christ, since the first opening of his storehouse, upon the fall of our first parents, in that gracious promise of the seed of the woman; but yet he hath still the same measure, or quantity of riches he ever had. He is not one farthing poorer than he was, the first day he gave forth of his riches, or divine treasures unto sinners.

5. Christ's riches are soul-satisfying riches. "He that coveteth silver, shall not be satisfied with silver," &c. Eccl. v. 10. If a man get ten thousand pounds, he may be no more satisfied, than when he had not more than a thousand shillings. Earthly riches and honours are unsatisfying. As Alexander the Great, who conquered all the eastern world, was as much unsatisfied after all his victories, as he was before; so it is in respect of the riches of this world, they satisfy not, this is that curse and plague, which attends the rich men of the earth, the more they have the more they covet: but the riches of Christ are of a satisfying nature; "He that drinketh of the water that I shall give him, shall thirst no more. But the water that I shall give him, shall be in him a well of water springing up unto everlasting life," John. iv. 14. Thirsting not again, denotes that full satisfaction, and soul content, such find in the riches of grace; they never found any solid peace and satisfaction before, but still their souls were in a craving, and unsatisfied condition, by reason they sought for satisfaction in those things, were it was not to be had. Solomon saith, that a good man shall be satisfied from himself: not from any self-sufficiency he finds in him, but from that true peace, riches, and content he has received from Jesus Christ. One penny of Christ's heavenly treasure, doth afford far more satisfaction, than millions of gold can administer to a carnal heart: in the fullness of his sufficiency, his soul is in straits.

Christ's riches are unsearchable. 6. The riches of Jesus Christ, are unsearchable riches. "Unto me, who am less than the least of all saints, is this grace given, that I should preach among the Gentiles, the unsearchable riches of Christ," Eph. iii. 8.

There is, my brethren, no bottom of Christ's treasure. As no man can by searching find Christ out to perfection, so no man, nor angel, can find out the riches of Christ to perfection; neither as to the quality or quantity of them. You may as soon find the bottom of the deepest sea, as find out the bottom of Christ's rich treasure of grace, wisdom, knowledge, glory, &c. No man knows, or can know, how rich Jesus Christ is; nor how rich that soul is, who hath an interest in him, or is united to him.

Christ's riches, or his money, passes for current coin in heaven, and is of such a nature, that it will satisfy divine justice. They do not only satisfy the soul of man, but the justice of God also. Brethren, no money, no silver, nor gold can pay our debts, nor save us out of the eternal prison of hell. No, no; it must be Christ's gold, his treasure, his riches, his righteousness, alone. If a man had a thousand millions of gold, he could not pay the smallest debt he oweth to the law, and justice of God. O how excellent are the riches of Christ! For, he hath paid such a sum, that has made a full satisfaction for all the debts of God's elect; and yet one of them owed not less than "Ten thousand talents," Matt. xviii. 24. Oh, what a vast sum hath Christ paid! Every sin is more (comparatively) than ten thousand pounds; for ten thousand millions could not satisfy for the smallest sin; and yet none of us, but may say with David, "Our sins are more than the hairs of our heads," Psal. xl. 12. Now, doth not this tend to demonstrate, that Jesus Christ is mighty rich, and that his riches are of a most excellent nature; that his riches are unsearchable; they save the soul from hell; "Other riches avail not in the day of wrath," Psal. xlix. 7—8. But Christ's riches will; his righteousness delivers from death, i. e., from eternal death, he that obtains but the least drachm of Christ's riches, of Christ's gold, tried in the fire, his soul is saved from hell. What are the riches of Christ, but his righteousness, and the grace of his Spirit.

Christ's riches are harmless riches. 7. The riches of Jesus Christ are harmless riches. They will not ensnare nor hurt any soul that obtains them: earthly riches poison, and destroy oftentimes the possessor of them. Many one day will lament that they had such store of worldly riches, so much gold and silver, because it captivated and ensnared their souls.

Sirs! Riches in the hand doth no man hurt, but it too often gets into the heart; they set their hearts upon it, and love it more than Jesus Christ, and all his divine riches. What was it which made the young man reject Jesus Christ, and go away sorrowful? Was it not his inordinate love to his external riches? the text saith, "He went away sorrowful, for he had great possessions," Matt. xix. 22. It was not his great possessions, but that undue love he had to them, that undid him. Therefore our Saviour said, that "A rich man shall hardly enter into the kingdom of heaven:" nay, that a camel may as easily go through the eye of a needle, as a rich man enter into the kingdom of God.

Was it not love to the riches of this world, that caused Demas to turn away from Christ, or apostatize from the truth.

This also made Paul to give that counsel to Timothy; "Charge them that are rich in this world, that they trust not in uncertain riches, but in the living God," 1 Tim. vi. 17. And in the same chapter, he saith, "but they that will be rich, fall into temptations, and a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts, which drown men in destruction and perdition," 1 Tim. vi. 9.

If men have riches, and no heart to do good with them, they are certainly hurtful to them; nay, they are of a damning nature to such.

But no man was ever hurt by having Christ's spiritual riches. You need not fear any snare here, for the more you have of Christ's riches, of grace, the more secure you are, from snares and temptations.

If any are hurt or ensnared, it is for want of those divine riches, because they have no grace, no faith, or but a small measure thereof.

8. The riches of Christ are certain riches: other riches are uncertain, they take themselves wings, and fly away. A man may with Job be rich to-day, and poor to-morrow; but what says our Saviour? "Durable riches, and righteousness are with me." Prov. viii. 18. No man can carry any of the riches of this world out of it with him, "We brought nothing into this world, and it is certain we shall carry nothing out," 1 Tim. vi. 7. But if we have the riches of Christ, or are enriched with his spiritual riches, we shall carry them out of the world with us. We shall carry a Christ, pardon of sin, peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost, out of the world with us; and although we shall then come to the end of our faith; faith will be turned into vision, and hope into fruition, yet love, that blessed grace, will abide with us for ever; we shall carry that into another world: no, sirs, at death we shall partake of greater riches, than we had whilst we were here. We shall then be possessed with the riches of glory, which far exceeds the riches of grace.

Men, nor devils, can rob us of those riches; fire cannot consume them, nor moths nor rust corrupt them: they lie in a safe hand, Christ is our trustee, in him all our spiritual riches are laid up, he is Lord treasurer. Could the devil pluck Christ out of heaven, we might lose our riches; but alas! that you will all say, is impossible, and as impossible it is, for the devil to deprive us of our soul-riches; for, as "our life is hid with Christ in God, so also are our riches," Col. iii. 2. God intrusted the first Adam with all his riches in his own hand, and he soon run out all; therefore he hath made a better covenant with the second Adam, and in him, with all his elect, Christ is our Surety; he hath engaged to the Father, for all that are given to him, and he therefore keeps all our riches in his own hand, and gives us out of his fulness, according to our present wants, and this secures all our riches. Can the wife want anything, whilst all fulness, all inconceivable riches are in her Husband's possession for ever?

9. Lastly, the riches of Christ are eternal; they are everlasting riches. One spiritually rich, for ever rich. The crown of glory is an everlasting crown, it is a crown that fadeth not away. Also, it is called, an incorruptible crown, and a crown of life, eternal life. The saints riches shall continue to the days of eternity; they shall last as long as God and Christ lasteth. God is their portion, Christ is their riches, and therefore their riches are eternal.

USE.

From hence I infer, that it must needs be the true, and only interest of poor sinners, to espouse Jesus Christ: What mortal but would accept of such an offer, considering how rich he is? Poverty hinders many a match, the person is liked, but the portion is not sufficient; but here is no room upon this respect, for any to object against the espousing of Jesus Christ.

Sinners, if you marry him, all is yours, all his riches are yours, and yours for ever. Christ requires nothing with you, no, though you are far in debt, though you owe ten thousand talents, he hath enough to pay all. Nay, that very moment you believe in him, close with him, you shall have a discharge of all your debts, and be enriched with vast and inconceivable riches.

What say you now, will you come to this wedding, and eat of the King's Supper? Will you accept of Christ? He only does but ask, and desire your free assent and consent, will you embrace him, accept him for your all? Shall he become the object of your affections? What do you say? What answer must I return to the great King, which sent me to you?

SERMON XI.

*The kingdom of heaven is like unto a certain king, which made a marriage for his son.—
Matt. xxii.*

DOCTRINE. That the great God hath sent his own Son, to espouse poor sinners.

The head of discourse I am upon, is this, viz., That it is the greatest concernment, wisdom, and true interest of sinners, to accept of, receive, and espouse Jesus Christ.

This I have laboured to prove by several demonstrations. The last time I was upon this subject, I spoke of the riches of Christ. We will proceed to another argument to win your affections to Jesus Christ, if it may be done, and it shall be taken from the consideration of Christ's admirable and astonishing beauty.

Christ's great, and admirable
beauty.

First, though beauty, nor the portion should be the chief motives for any to marry, but the consideration of the virtue, and excellent qualities of the person, yet admirable beauty doth wonderfully take with some, though among men it is great vanity and folly; for as Solomon says, "Favour is deceitful, and beauty is vain," Prov. xxxi. 30. It often proves a great snare and temptation to mortals, and ruins many a man and woman. Besides, how soon may the fairest face, or the greatest earthly beauty be marred? a disease incident to mortals, quickly turns human beauty into deformity; but so it is not here, Christ's beauty ensnares no person.

How fond youths, whose foolish breasts do beat
With pleasing raptures, and love's generous heat;
And virgins kind, from whose unguarded eyes,
Passion oft steals their hearts by fond surprise,
Feed their strange wand'ring fancies by the eye,
'Till treacherous beauty spoils them utterly?
Covered with wit, black venom in they take,
And midst gay flowers, hug a vip'rous snake.
Here's no such danger, but all pure and chaste,
And love by angels fit to be embrac'd!
A love, above that of woman, beauty such,
That none can be enamoured on to much.
Reader, then read, and learn to love by this,
Until thy soul can sing raptured in bliss,
My well-beloved's mine, and I am his.

None ever saw Christ, his beauty, but fell in love with him.

But that I may proceed, consider, that never any ever saw the beauty of Jesus Christ, but presently fell in love with him. I do not mean, any that saw his person in the days of his humiliation, but all those that ever had a true sight of him by faith, (though I am not of his opinion, who very lately affirmed) that the Lord Jesus was not in his person beautiful, but rather deformed, thereby sadly abusing that text, "He hath no form nor comeliness, and when we see him, there is no beauty that we should desire him," Isa. liii. 2. This no doubt refers to that low, mean, and sorrowful state he was in, in the days of his flesh, under his sufferings and humiliation; not that he was a deformed person, I am persuaded, by what I have read, and for some other reasons, that our blessed Saviour was a most lovely and amiable person; yet many that so saw him, fell not in love with him, but contrariwise, "Hated both him and the Father." But I speak of a true, spiritual sight of Christ, and of his personal excellencies by an eye of faith.

Secondly, Jesus Christ, my brethren, is the original and Fountain of all beauty.

I. He is the original and fountain of all natural beauty.

Christ is the Fountain and original of all natural beauty.

1. Of that wonderful and amazing beauty that is in the sun, moon, and stars. How glorious is the created sun in the firmament of heaven? What eyes can behold him, and not be dazzled? Why, sirs, Jesus Christ is the original and fountain of his glorious beauty; for, considered as he is God, he made the sun, moon, and stars, they proceed from him.

2. Christ Jesus is the Original and Fountain of that glorious beauty that is in the blessed angels of light. No doubt but their beauty is too great for us mortals to behold; I mean, as they are in their own native glory. True, we read that some of the saints saw angels, but they certainly did appear in some other form, and not in their own angelical form; they commonly appeared in the likeness of men, and so they veiled their glory, and native spiritual beauty; can fleshly eyes see spirits?

3. Jesus Christ is the Original and Fountain of that beauty that is in men and women. We read in sacred history of persons that were exceeding fair and beautiful; as Moses, and David, who was ruddy, and of a beautiful countenance; and of Absalom, of whom it is written, "In all Israel there was none to be so praised as Absalom, for his beauty, from the sole of the foot, even to the crown of his head, there was no blemish in him," 2 Sam. xiv. 25.

Moreover, Josephus reports of one, that all that saw him, were amazed and enamoured with his beauty. Also, in other histories we read of some women, that were so beautiful, that they seemed more like angels, than mortal creatures.

Of all the parts of human creatures, the face hath the greatest glory and beauty in it. Now, whatsoever beauty was, or is in any man or woman, Jesus Christ was, and is the fountain of it, all human beauty is from him; he made the most beautiful face, that ever eyes beheld: and, if such be the work, what is the beauty of the workman? we judge of the glory of the Creator, by the beauty and glory of the creatures which he hath made.

4. That beauty which is in the rarest flower, is also from Christ. Though man, by art, may approve nature, yet certainly there are such natural flowers, that far exceed the art of man. Our Lord saith of some lilies, "that Solomon in all his glory, was not arrayed like one of them."

5. Is there any beauty and glory in heaven? Oh, who can imagine what beauty shines forth there! we see the firmament of heaven, that is but the outside of heaven: we cannot look within, heaven is the throne of God, Oh, what beauty and glory is in the celestial paradise! Sirs, this all proceeded from Jesus Christ.

6. All created beauty is, my brethren, but a dark shadow of the beauty of Jesus Christ, or an emblem of his glory, for, as the riches of this world, are but a shadow of his riches; and, as the pleasures of this world, are but a shadow of those pleasures that are at God's right-hand, so all created beauty is but a shadow of Christ's beauty.

All created beauty is but a shadow of Christ's beauty.

II. All internal, or spiritual beauty, is from Jesus Christ, he is the Original and Fountain of it, beloved, as heaven excels earth, so grace excels nature. Sirs, the new creature excels for beauty; what is the new creature, but the image of Christ stamped upon the soul of man? We are said to be "Changed into the same image, from glory to glory," 2 Cor. iii. 18.

All internal beauty is from Christ.

Could virtue be painted to the life, (as one observes) or be drawn out by the pencil of a cunning artist, all that saw it would fall in love with it, and be enamoured, nay, ravished to behold it; as on the other hand, could vice or ungodliness be painted to the life, it would appear the most odious and fulsome sight, that ever mortals beheld; it would be loathed, despised, and contemned by all that saw it; they would turn their eyes away, as from such filth and rottenness they never beheld before: and yet this is the deceived sinners most beloved darling. But to return, little do men think what the internal beauty of a soul is, in whom the image of Jesus Christ is formed, but as the image of a person, though drawn exactly to the life, is not to be compared to the person, whose image it is; so the beauty and glory of the new creature, is but a dark representation of the glory and beauty of the Lord Jesus Christ.

III. All eternal beauty, likewise, is from Jesus Christ; he is the Original and Fountain of it; who is able to conceive of the glory of the spirits of just men made perfect? Or, what the beauty and glory of the saints' bodies will be, at the resurrection-day; when these vile bodies of ours, "shall be changed, and made like unto Christ's glorious body!" Phil. iii. 21.

All eternal beauty is from Christ.

We read of the beauty and glory of new Jerusalem, which I take to be an emblem of the saints future glory; it is said, "To have the glory of God, and her light was like unto a stone most precious, even like a jasper-stone, clear as crystal. And the foundations of the city, were garnished with all manner of precious stones," Rev. xxi. 11, 18, 19. Moreover, it is said, the city was pure gold, built and paved with pure gold; now, all that eternal beauty, either of the saints, or of that place where they shall be, proceeds from Jesus Christ. O, my brethren, what then think you is Christ's most glorious beauty!

Thirdly, the beauty of the Lord Jesus is inconceivable, nay, infinite, far beyond and above the comprehension of men or angels: as his love is inconceivable, so his glory and admirable beauty: no heart can conceive it, nor tongue express it, how do the holy angels; stand amazed to see such glory, such beauty in a man! he was seen by angels. How? seen by them? Why, he was seen with their highest wonderment; that a man, possessed with our nature, who was made a little lower than they, should shine forth in such beauty and glory, above them.

Christ's beauty is inconceivable.

Fourthly, the beauty and glory of the whole Godhead, shines forth in our Lord Jesus Christ, as far as the beauty of the glorious Creator excels the beauty of the creature, so far the beauty of Christ excels the beauty of any created thing; "We beheld his glory, as the glory of the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth," John i. 14. Is the Father glorious, is there infinite beauty in him? brethren, Jesus Christ is alike glorious; "Who being the brightness of his glory, and the express image of his person," &c., Heb. i. 3. He is exactly like the Father, or his express image; and the beauty or brightness of the Father, shines forth in him, that is, in the man Christ Jesus; "For it pleased the Father, that in him all fulness should dwell," Col. i. 19.

Christ's glory and beauty is the glory of the whole Godhead.

O fair sun, (saith one) fair moon, fair stars, fair flowers, fair lilies, but, O! ten thousand times ten thousand, fair Lord Jesus! I have wronged him (saith he) in making this comparison; black sun, black moon, black stars, but, O! fair Lord Jesus! O! black flowers, black lilies, but, O! fair Lord Jesus Christ!

Fifthly, Christ's beauty never decayeth, it never fadeth; the beauty of the face is soon gone, old age quickly causeth that to pass away; nay, diseases and inordinate grief, soon spoil that beauty; also, the beauty of flowers are gone in a moment; yea, and the glory and beauty of the sun, moon, and stars, shall pass away, but Christ's beauty shall continue to all eternity.

Christ's beauty never decays.

Sixthly. The beauty of Jesus Christ is communicative. He can, and doth transmit his beauty to all that love him, or rather, to all that he loves, and doth espouse; no mortal creature can do thus, they cannot communicate, or transmit their beauty to others; but there is no beauty, no glory, no comeliness in a believer, but what they derive from the Lord Jesus Christ. "And thy renown went forth among the Heathen; for it was perfect through my comeliness which I put upon thee, saith the Lord," Ezek. xvi. 14.

Jesus Christ, beloved, doth communicate a two-fold beauty to believers.

1. The one he puts upon the soul, the other he puts, or works in the soul, so that Christ makes believers all beautiful both without and within; he puts upon the soul his own glorious robe; that very garment which he wrought out for us in our nature, in the days of his flesh, which is all bespangled with precious stones and pearls, and glitters far beyond the richest cloth of gold; this is the wedding-garment that is put upon all that come to this marriage-feast, and espouse Jesus Christ. This is a glorious robe, and in this righteousness every believer stands perfectly justified before the righteous and holy God; so that, in this respect they are all fair, and there is not one spot in them. And, my brethren, that very eye which apprehends the Lord Jesus, to the putting on of this garment, is said to ravish the Lord Jesus Christ. "Thou hast ravished my heart, my sister, my spouse, thou hast ravished my heart with one of thine eyes, with the chain of thy neck," Cant. iv. 9.

2. He also infuseth into the soul, glorious beauty, which is the beauty of sanctification. "The king's daughter is all glorious within, her clothing is wrought gold," Psal. xlv. 11, 13. This makes the King to desire her beauty; but none of this beauty is of, and from herself; it is no natural, nor artificial beauty, but all conveyed, transmitted, or communicated to her from Jesus Christ, in an extraordinary manner, by the operations of the Spirit. All the saints of God that ever lived, were as deformed, filthy, and odious, as any other sinner, until Jesus Christ made them beautiful and comely, with his own comeliness. He is made of God unto us, not only righteousness, but sanctification, &c.

Christ's beauty is a soul-delighting beauty.

Seventhly. The beauty of the Lord Jesus is not only a soul-transforming beauty, but also a soul-ravishing, a soul-delighting, and a soul-satisfying beauty.

"He is white and ruddy, the chiefest among ten thousand," Cant. v. 10. Making all that behold him, sick of love to him. "He is fairer than the children of men," Psal. xlv. 2, or the sons of Adam. Christ is not only beautiful in one part, but he is altogether lovely. Some roses excel for redness, and some lilies for whiteness. The moon is fair, and the sun clear and bright; but the rose, the lily, the sun and the moon, and the glorious heavens, are all black when compared to the Lord Jesus. "I shall be satisfied when I awake with thy likeness," Psal. xvii. 15. When I arrive to that perfect and complete beauty and glory, that is in thee, and I shall never be satisfied (as if David should say) until then. The spiritual beauty of Jesus Christ is of a satisfying nature. Natural, or created beauty cannot satisfy the soul of man; that cannot fill its desires, but the beauty of Christ doth this.

Brethren, in a perfect conformity to Christ's beauty and glory, lies all the happiness of true believers, to which let me add,

God the Father takes delight in Christ's beauty.

Eighthly. The glorious God and Father of heaven and earth, takes delight in the beauty of Jesus Christ, considered as God-man in one person. "Behold my servant, whom I uphold, mine elect, in whom my soul delighteth," Isa. xlii. 1. Certainly that person, whose beauty is the delight of the ever-blessed God, must needs be a glorious beauty. God takes no delight in the legs nor face of a man; but he takes delight in the beauty of his Son. The personal beauty and perfections of Jesus Christ, is also the delight of the holy angels, they love to behold him, and to look upon him.

No addition can be made to Christ's beauty.

My brethren, if heaven and earth can make a glorious and complete beauty, then it is in Jesus Christ; for the perfections both of the divine and human nature meet in him. There can be no addition to his beauty, because it is perfect to the highest degree.

And now, you sinners, what do you think? Is it not your wisdom, your highest concernment, to come to this marriage-feast, to espouse the Lord Jesus, to feed by faith upon him, to believe in him, and to be united to him, in bonds of love for ever; to have Christ to be your Husband, and to lie in his arms, and to be filled and ravished with his beauty to all eternity? But if the consideration of his beauty will not move you, or prevail with you to fall in love with him, I will try what another argument will do.

Eighthly. Christ is long-lived. Would you espouse and marry a person that is long-lived, so that you may be sure you shall not quickly be a widow, then Christ is the person. Oh! see that you choose him, espouse him, marry him. Methinks I hear one say, that is deeply in love with one that she values as her own life, nay, above her own life. Oh! I would not marry him, if I was sure he was short-lived, or would die soon after we come together, for his death would be as a thousand deaths to me. Love whosoever you will, and that too with never so strong and great affections, none can ensure his life for one day; the wedding-week may be his burying-week, so far as you, or any body else knows, so uncertain is the life of man. But, if you do espouse and marry the Lord Jesus, he is long-lived, you shall never know widowhood. Long-lived did I say? Oh! know he lives for ever, and cannot die. Jesus Christ is an immortal Husband. "I am he that was dead, (that was well for us, we had perished else,) and am alive, and behold I live for evermore, and have the keys of hell and death," Rev. i. 18.

Christ is a living, and an eternal Husband.

Obj. 1. But perhaps some may say, though Jesus Christ lives for ever, and he cannot die, yet such that espouse him may quickly die; we see believers die, as well as others.

Ans. I answer, if you will espouse the Lord Jesus, you shall also live for ever. If you come and eat of this wedding-supper, you shall never die. "This is the bread which cometh down from heaven, that a man may eat, and not die," John vi. 50. Our Lord doth not mean a temporal death; no, God forbid. Who would live always in this miserable world? Death is one of the greatest blessings to believers, as some of you lately heard. You that are believers, cannot go to your Husband, you cannot go to Jesus Christ, until death open the door, and let you in unto him. "Whilst we are at home in the body, we are absent from the Lord," 2 Cor. v. 6. This Job well knew, and therefore he said, "I would not live always." But know assuredly, that your souls shall never die the second death; you shall not die eternally. "Whoso eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, shall have eternal life," John vi. 54.

Nay, Sirs, temporal death shall not, cannot, separate these lovers. Death cannot separate Jesus Christ, and that soul which espouseth and marieth him. Death cannot dissolve this blessed marriage union, both the body and soul of a believer is united to Jesus Christ; they, when they die, die in the Lord, that is, in union with Jesus Christ.

Believers, cheer up, your Husband hath the keys of hell and death; he hath power over death and hell. "Because I live, ye shall live also," John xiv. 19.

Christ is a living Husband, a Husband that never dies. What comfort is here for you poor widows, that have espoused and married Jesus Christ? What though your earthly husbands are dead, and left you to the wide world, exposed to a thousand sorrows, yet it matters not, your heavenly Husband lives for ever, he dies not.

And now to return to you sinners. Will you not accept of this happy match? Will you not espouse such a King, he that is "the only Potentate, King of kings, and Lord of lords?" A prince of such honour, of such riches, of such love, of such beauty, and one that is immortal, who lives for ever, and that will make you immortal, even save you from death. Also, those that he betrotheth unto himself, he doth betroth for ever. Certainly, this must be your chiefest concernment, your highest wisdom, and only interest. Therefore do not delay, but come to this marriage-feast, and accept of Jesus Christ.

Ninthly. Consider, besides all that I have said unto you hitherto, what a sweet temper, and excellent disposition Christ is of.

This is a thing, which all that marry should well mind. Some who are wise, prefer the good temper of the person they are about to marry, above all things. Nay, one said in my hearing lately, that a good and sweet natural temper, was to be esteemed in the case of marriage, above a small measure of grace in a crooked and peevish nature and disposition. The truth is, a little grace is not sufficient in some persons, to render them lovely and acceptable, in the relation of husband and wife. Some women perhaps, who meet with yoke-fellows, that are naturally of a sweet, mild, and gentle disposition, though not truly gracious, live better, and more comfortable lives with them, than some others do, that are in the main, gracious persons; though to their shame it may be spoken, that they strive no more to mortify their unruly and unsanctified passions and affections.

But what is any man's natural, sweet, and good temper, to the spirit and temper of the Lord Jesus Christ? I shall only hint of his excellent temper in four or five respects.

1. Jesus Christ is of a compassionate temper, of a sympathizing disposition. If thy husband be never so rich, or great in the world, and though never so comely, yet if he be not of a compassionate and sympathizing disposition, thou mayest have no great content, nor happiness in that relation. Certainly, those men that cannot sympathize, or have a fellow-feeling of their wives' afflictions and sorrows, have but little love to them. Now, the blessed Jesus is full of compassion towards all his people. "In all their afflictions he was afflicted, and the angel of his presence saved them. In his love, and in his pity, he redeemed them, and he bare them, and carried them all the days of old," Isa. xliii. 9. Oh, this shows great sympathy that is in Jesus Christ; what a compassionate disposition is he of? "For, we have not an High-priest, which cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities, but was in all points tempted as we are, yet without sin," Heb. iv. 15.

The Greek word denotes (as one well observes) such a sympathy, or fellow-feeling, as makes him like affected, as if he were in the same case with them.

It is said, "His soul was grieved for Israel." Ah, what a sympathizing disposition is Christ of; he mourns, and grieves over his poor afflicted ones; he pities them, nay, he is afflicted with them.

II. He is of a forgiving temper. He is ready to forgive his enemies, "Father, forgive them, they know not what they do," Luke xxiii. 34. But much more is he ready to pardon and forgive the sins of his beloved ones, who are married to him; he covers all the infirmities of his spouse; he will not see any sin in her, "Behold thou art all fair my love, there is no spot in thee," Cant. iv. 7. He casteth his own mantle over all our weaknesses, and infirmities, he is not like some who pretend to be his disciples, yet reproach and vilify their faithful friends and brethren unjustly; they never learned of the Lord Jesus to cover all those weaknesses which may be in such they backbite and reproach. But this is because they see not the beam that is their own eye. These sort are like cursed Ham, and they would do well to read the 15th Psalm. But, O what a tender, charitable, and forgiving temper is the blessed Jesus, even like unto his blessed Father, who passed by all the great enormities of David and said, he was a man after his own heart, save only in the case of Uriah, he took no notice of his other infirmities, which were great. "Woman, be of good cheer, said our Lord, thy sins are forgiven thee." And thus he speaks unto all his people.

III. Christ is of a generous, noble, and bountiful temper, or disposition. He is kind, charitable, and liberal to all, but much more unto his spouse. He gives liberally and unbraided not; "Eat, O friends, drink, abundantly, O beloved," Cant. v. 1.

1. His bounty and generosity would appear, should we consider what it is he hath given, and doth give to all those he loveth:

2. If we consider the manner of his giving.

1. As to what he gives, or parteth with to them, he gives them all he is, or hath. He gave himself for them, to be a sacrifice, to die, and bear the wrath of God in their stead. "Husbands love you wives, even as Christ also loved the church, and gave himself for it; that he might sanctify and cleanse it, with the washing of water by the word," Eph. v. 25, 26.

Did ever any give thus? give himself to die, from that love and rich bounty he bare to such a one that he loved. "Christ hath loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood," Rev. i. 5.

2. He gives them his flesh to eat, and his own blood to drink. Indeed, this is the principle matter of which this feast doth consist.

3. He gives them his word, his Spirit, his grace.

4. He gives them his own blessed robe to clothe them; his eye-salve to open their eyes, his gold tried in the fire, to enrich them.

5. He gives them his own retinue, the holy angels, to guard, preserve, and protect them, and to minister unto them, even to all them that he esponeth, who are heirs of salvation. Moreover, he hath promised to them a kingdom, and a crown of glory, and that they shall sit with him on his throne, and judge the world with him.

2ndly, as to the manner of his giving.

1. He gives freely, all out of his own rich bounty, and that to such that deserved nothing at his hands, and who are not able to make him the least recompence, for the smallest favour.

If he gives anything upon exchange, see the manner of it. "To appoint to them that mourn in Sion, to give unto them beauty for ashes, and the oil of joy for mourning; the garment of praise, for the spirit of heaviness," Isa. lxi. 3.

2. His rich bounty is such, that he gives seasonably, in the very time of need; he will not miss that very season when we stand in the greatest want of mercy and grace, and also whatsoever we do need, to the full supplying of all our wants. "God shall help thee, and that right early," Psal. xlv. 5. He knows the best time, the very nick of time, when to give unto us those things we need. He will not give it to us before, nor will he stay a moment after that time; for, "The Lord shall judge his people, and repent Phil. iv. 19. him for his servants, when he seeth their power is gone, and there is none shut up, nor left," Deut. xxxii. 36. He is such a noble and beautiful Spirit, that "he gives grace and glory, and no good thing will he withhold from them that walk uprightly," Ps. lxxxiv. 11.

IV. Jesus Christ is of a humble, meek, and lowly temper; or of a wonderful condescending disposition. He sticks at nothing too hard for him to do, which is for our good, that he may bring us to God, and into union with himself; "Who being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God, but made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant; and being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross," Phil. ii. 6, 7.

Some will not bow nor yield to their dearest friend, to do that which may expose them to the least pain, shame, and sorrow, but Christ was contented to do anything, though it was never so much to his humiliation and abasement, distress and sorrow, that he might obtain his desire, and work about the intended marriage between himself, and his own elect. "Learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart," Matt. xi. 28, 29.

V. He is of a considerate temper of heart. He considereth and "remembereth that we are but dust," Psal. ciii. 14. And that our strength is not the strength of brass; he will not therefore "suffer us to be tempted, above what we are able," 1 Cor. x. 13. He doth not expect more from his people, than he knows they are able to do, nor lay upon them such burdens, which he knows they are not able to bear.

Tenthly, Jesus Christ is wise. Some choose wisdom, or a man that is wise and of great understanding, before riches, honour, or beauty. I heard some time since, of a rich man that had a daughter to dispose of in marriage, who, when asked, whether he would marry her to a wise man, that was poor and low in the world, or to a very rich man that was a fool. He replied, he would sooner marry her to a wise man, though he was poor, &c. And certainly he showed much wisdom in so answering.

The wisdom of Christ is infinite.

Now, my brethren, Jesus Christ is the very wisdom of God; he is wisdom itself, all true wisdom is from him. He is infinite in wisdom, "In him are hid all Col. ii. 3. the treasures of wisdom and knowledge," Col. ii. 3. He maketh others wise, he doth and can communicate of his wisdom, to all such that he espouses; nay, he maketh such that are foolish, and without understanding, wonderful wise. Christ knoweth all things, he knows all the Father's counsels and decrees, which have been of old, even from everlasting; he shows us the Father, and openeth the deep things of God unto us. "No man knoweth the Son, but the Father, neither knoweth any man the Father save the Son, and he to whomsoever the Son will reveal him," Matt. xi. 27.

No man knoweth the essence of the Father, the decrees, counsels, and designs of the Father, or hath a perfect knowledge of the Father, but the Son only. All saving knowledge of God is in and through Jesus Christ; and he that hath a perfect knowledge of God, (as he is in himself) must needs have a perfect knowledge of all men and devils. He knows our state, our spirits, our frames, our thoughts, our ends, our aims, our ways, our wants, our temptations, our fears, our dangers, and "all our desires are before him," Psal. xxxviii. 9.

1. Christ knoweth the matter of our desires, or what it is we desire, chiefly desire.

2. He knows the design and end of our desires.

3. He knows the spring of our desires, or from whence they flow; whether from a principle of grace, or from self-love, pride, and ambition.

The Nature of men's desires opened.

4. He knows the degrees or extent of our desires; whether weak or strong, faint or vigorous.

5. He also knows the cause of our desires; whether they are caused through a true sight of sin, in its own evil nature, and from a spiritual and gracious sight of Christ's personal excellencies, that we desire him, or only are occasioned from the sight of the damning nature of sin, and a simple desire of happiness.

6. He knows the constancy of our desires; whether they abide or no, or are only temporary, flitting, and continue no longer than we abide under God's hand, or under the rod of afflictions.

7. He knows our desires so as to observe them, judge of them, weigh them, or ponder them.

Also, so as to answer all our good and holy desires, and to punish us for all our unjust and inordinate desires.

9. He knows whether our desires after himself are accompanied with suitable endeavours, or not.

If none of these things will move you to love him and accept of that gracious offer you have of him, and to look upon it to be your chiefest interest to espouse him. Then,

Christ always is the same. Eleventhly, consider, that he is always the same, he never changeth. He is ever, or at all times of the same temper, always alike kind, loving, compassionate, forgiving and forgetting wrongs and injuries; he is not in and out, like changeable men, that are in a good temper one day, and in an ill one, and out of frame at another. Oh, saith a man, was my wife always but in this good, gentle, and sweet temper, as she is now in, how happy would my life be! And so on the other hand, saith the wife, was my husband always alike kind, alike meek, gentle, loving, filled with bowels, and pity to me, being never angry, merose, froward, or peevish, no woman would live a better life. But alas! thus it is but a few, such is the corruptions of the heart, the passions, temptations, provocations, mankind are exposed unto, that they are often disordered in their spirits, and out of frame; they are not always of an even and sweet disposition. But now Jesus Christ, if once you do espouse him, you shall find him always one and the same, "Jesus Christ the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever," He changeth not. He is always the same in power, in love, in mercy, and goodness, in faithfulness, in sympathy, in beauty and riches. Some men may be rich when they marry, but soon may wax poor, by losses, or badness of the times, or by carelessness and ill husbandry, may waste their treasure, and become poor; but the Lord Christ is ever in all things, as touching what he is in himself, and what he hath, the same; he is never sick, no disease, no temptation is he liable unto.

USE.

Oh, what are your thoughts poor sinners, now? will you come to this marriage? will you let all your old lovers go, and get a bill of divorcement, and become dead to sin, to this world, and to the law, and to all your own righteousness, that you may be married to Jesus Christ? say, sinners, you have a good match offered to you this day.

What do you say, young men and women, cannot you find in your hearts to love Jesus Christ? He is willing, if you are willing: oh, cry to him to make you willing! he can draw you to love him, you will never love him, till "he sheds abroad his love in your hearts," Rom. v. 5, by the Holy Ghost. Say, oh Lord, circumcise my heart, that I may love thee.

This is the time, now, in the days of your youth, this age he has chose. "I love them that love me, and they that seek me early shall find me," Prov. viii. 17. Sure you may seek him, is not this in your power? But, if you seek the world, seek your pleasures, your earthly profits, and delights above him, how can you be said to seek him?

What do you say, that are aged? Is it not time, more than time for you, to seek Jesus Christ? He doth espouse some old sinners; he calls some at the eleventh hour. I am come to call you this day to this marriage feast; will none of you accept of this high-born Prince, the blessed Lord of life and glory? Can you be so foolish, and void of understanding, to tell him, you cannot love him, or do not like him? If so, then take what will follow.

Counselation.

But, oh, happy, happy believers, what joy and comfort may this administer unto you? O see what a blessed choice you have made, and what a Friend, what a Husband you have got.

But so much at this time.

SERMON VII.

DOCT. The kingdom of heaven is like unto a certain king, which made a marriage for his son.—Matt. xxii. 2. &c.

That the great God hath sent his own Son, to espouse poor sinners.

1. What this marriage doth import, we have shewed.

2. That it is the great concernment, wisdom, and true interest of sinners, to accept of Jesus Christ; or, to come to this marriage, and eat of this feast, i. e., believe, or feed by faith on Christ. This we have endeavoured to make appear, and to demonstrate by many arguments.

The last was taken from the consideration, that he is always the same, and changeth not; neither in respect of his glory, power, wisdom, love, beauty, or excellent temper.

I shall now proceed to the next demonstration proposed.

Twelfthly, it is the greatest concernment of sinners to come and eat at this marriage dinner, or espouse Jesus Christ, from the consideration of those many glorious and blessed effects, that attend or accompany the soul's marriage union with Christ.

I. Hereby he gives himself unto the sinner. They through this union have an absolute interest in Jesus Christ; he is the soul's, and the soul is his; he is that sinners' Friend, his Beloved, his Saviour, Portion, Husband, &c. "My beloved is mine, and I am his." Such an one may say, with Thomas, "My Lord, and my God." I do not say, that every one that hath obtained this union with Christ, hath the faith of assurance, or fully know, and are confident, Christ is theirs; no, a true believer, through the weakness of his faith, or by reason of Satan's temptations, may have some doubts and fears about it, yet, nevertheless, that soul hath Christ, or a true and saving interest in him, whether he knows it, or not.

Union with Christ gives the soul an absolute interest in him.

II. This union is a full union. As it is the nearest and sweetest union, so it is a most full and complete union. A whole Christ is united to the sinner, and the whole of a sinner, both body and soul is united to him; so that they become both one, in the nearest relation, in a most wonderful and mystical manner.

Union with Christ is a full, a sweet, and near union.

1. The whole Person of Christ is united to a believer; not only united to his human nature, but also to his divine nature. This word (Christ) doth not refer to his human nature, only, nor to his divine nature only, but to both natures in his person; neither of those natures, distinct from each other, is Christ, though sometimes the human is called Christ; as when it is said, "Christ died for our sins," 1 Cor. xv. 3. Yet, in another place, it is explained, [he] i. e., "Christ was put to death in the flesh," 1 Pet. iii. 11. His Godhead could not die.

Moreover, sometimes by Christ is meant his divine nature. But now, I say, a believer is united unto a whole Christ, even unto the divine, as well as to the human nature. And hence it is, by virtue of his union, the dead sinner is quickened: the flesh of Christ can quicken no person without his Spirit. "The flesh profiteth not," John vi. 63. That is, the human nature, without the divine; "It is the Spirit which quickeneth." The human nature profits not of itself alone, without being united to the divine; yet the human nature, being hypostatically united to the divine nature, so it doth profit us; for, "Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you," John vi. 53. That is, except we feed upon the virtue of his body broken, and his blood poured forth, by believing, we can have no life in us.

Yet, it was impossible, that the blood of Christ could avail or profit us, had it not been united to the divine nature, because it was from the worth, dignity, and virtue of his Godhead, that the sacrifices he offered, became satisfactory to God's justice. Yet, on the other hand, I may say, that without the flesh of Christ, his Spirit, or Godhead could not profit us, because the justice of God required, that the same nature of man should perfectly keep the law of God for us, and suffer and die, or sustain that penalty, or punishment, which our breach of it had exposed us unto. And since a whole Christ is united to a believer, it follows from hence, that all that good, that is in the Godhead, is, and shall be conveyed to us, so far as it is communicable; and, as the humanity could not communicate grace and spiritual blessings to us, so without that blessed union of the Godhead with the manhood, the divinity is incommunicable to us.

Therefore, saith a worthy writer, although all life, all salvation floweth from the fullness of the Deity, yet it is not communicated to us, but by the flesh of Christ. For, as the Deity is as a fountain, whence all good things flow, (as) life and salvation, yet the flesh, or humanity, is as the channel, by which all these good things, all gifts, and grace are derived unto us. Therefore, unless a man apprehended this channel, and be united to it, he cannot possibly be a partaker of these waters, which do flow from this fountain.

2. Moreover, the whole of the person of a sinner, a believing sinner, both soul and body, is united to the Lord Jesus Christ; the body, as well as the soul is in union with him. That which the second Person in the Trinity, took into union with himself, was not only our human flesh, but our human soul also, to assure us, that both our bodies and souls he would take into union with himself.

Again, That which Christ died for, bought, and redeemed by his blood, that he doth take into union with himself. But Christ died both for the bodies and souls of his elect; therefore he taketh both body and soul into union with himself. "Know ye not, that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost, which is in you, which you have of God, and ye are not your own. For ye are bought with a price, therefore glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which are God's," 1 Cor. vi. 19, 20.

3dly, This union is a strong union intensively, so that Christ and a believer become one spirit, "but he that is joined to the Lord, is one spirit," 1 Cor. vi. 17.

Charnock. Not essentially, but mystically one spirit. One Spirit (saith a reverend writer) as if they were but one soul in two bodies. What the Spirit doth in Christ, it doth also in a believer, according to the capacity of his soul, the same Spirit, which was the immediate conveyer of grace, to the human nature of Christ, is so to us. Christ had an essential holiness, in respect of his Godhead, but a derivated holiness, as man. And this derivative holiness proceeded from the Spirit in him, without measure, which we have in our measure. And by virtue of this union, by the same Spirit, whereby we become one Spirit with Christ; not only that grace which is in us, and in our great Mediator, Christ Jesus, are of the same nature and original, as the light of the sun, and the light of the stars, are the same, though they differ in degrees, not essentially:—It is the same Spirit, in respect of person, which makes Christ near of kin to us. Thus a believer is said to dwell in Christ, and Christ in him.

4. Moreover, it is an union that is indissoluble; sin, hell, devils, nor death, can break it; believers sleep in Jesus, they die in the Lord; that is, in union with him.

III. Another effect of this union, is communion with Christ; union cannot be without Charnock. communion; "For (saith one) while the members are united to a living sound head, there will be an influx of animal spirits, whereby they shall partake of life and motion; the Spirit from our mystical Head, will be working in us, providing for us, and standing by us." Yet it is not always to the same degree; our communion with Christ, though it be constant, yet it is not always so full and sweet. Now part of this communion appears in these things following:

1. Christ and a believer walk together; "Enoch walked with God three hundred years," Gen. v., so long he had communion with God on earth: O, what a high privilege is this! to walk hand in hand with Jesus Christ! to take sweet turns with him in his garden; "Come, my beloved, let us go forth into the field. Let us get up early to the vineyards; let us see if the vine flourish, whether the tender grapes appear, and the pomegranates bud, and there will I give thee my loves," Cant. vii. 11, 12.

2. They lodge together; "Let us lodge in the villages:" my beloved shall "lie all night between my breasts," or in my heart, Cant. vii. 11, Cant. i. 13; there Christ lies, there he rests all night, or so long as the night of mortality doth last; he doth not abide with the soul for a short season, like a traveller, but he is a constant dweller; and does also manifest to the soul, his choicest love and favour.

3. They sit together; the King sits at the table with his beloved consort, and dearest spouse; "Whilst the king sitteth at his table, my spikenard sendeth forth the smell thereof," Cant. i. 12.

4. They lie in each others arms; "His left-hand is under my head, and his right-hand doth embrace me."

5. They often visit each other; believers visit Christ in ways of duty, and Christ visits them in ways of mercy.

6. They sup together; "If any man hears my voice, and open the door, I will come in unto him, and will sup with him, and he with me," Rev. iii. 20.

7. They have one and the same interest and design, to carry on and manage in the world; they have one and the same name; we are called by his name, as a woman bears her husband's name; I say, Christ and Christians are of the same name: he is called the fairest amongst men, and she, that is his spouse, the fairest among women; nay, the church is called Christ, so is Christ; that is Christ mystical, i. e., the church.

There is a communication of all Christ hath to the soul, through this union. Tanquam heres ex affei, saith one; there is a sweet communication of all Christ's beauty, goods, and goodness, to the wife of his bosom: is it not a most sweet and blessed thing to dwell in the same house, in the same place with Jesus Christ, to be possessed with the same spirit, partake of his joys, and made wealthy with his riches? All is yours.

IV. Another effect of this union, or which doth accompany it, is mutual delight and complacency, in each other: never did any husband take so much delight in the wife of his youth, as Christ takes in that soul he espouses: "Let thy fountain be blessed, and rejoice with the wife of thy youth: let her be as the loving hind and pleasant roe; let her breasts satisfy thee at all times; and be thou ravished with her love," Prov. v. 18, 19. It is to be feared, it is not thus with all husbands; but thus, and more abundantly, it is with Christ: "As a young man marrieth a virgin, so shall thy sons marry thee; and as the bridegroom rejoiceth over the bride, so shall thy God rejoice over thee," Isa. lxii. 5. Christ's most dear and intimate love and affections, are placed upon, and run out to all true believers, to such a degree, that he breaks forth to this purpose; "Thou hast ravished my heart, my sister, my spouse, thou hast ravished my heart with one of thine eyes, with the chain of thy neck," Cant. iv. 9. Saints are called the spouse of Christ; propter amoris magnitudinem: because of that great and unparalleled love that is between them.

Mutual delight of Christ, and complacency the effect of union.

The joy of the bridegroom is the highest and sweetest that is found among the sons of men; hence Christ is pleased to express his love by that of a bridegroom: thou shalt be called Hephzibah, for the Lord delighteth in thee: they are the joy and delight of his soul: "How fair and pleasant art thou, O love, for delights!" Isa. lxii. 41. How may such expressions revive our spirits? But read again, "Turn away thine eyes from me, for they have overcome me," Cant. vii. 6. But if this is not enough to affect your souls, in the thoughts of the gracious nature and effects of this union, see what he says further: "The Lord thy God is in the midst of thee, he is mighty, he will rejoice over thee with joy, he will rest in his love, he will joy over thee with singing," Zeph. iii. 17.

V. Another effect of this union is a full discharge of all the sinner's debts: let a woman be never so much in debt, no sooner is she married, but all her debts become her husband's; none of them can be recovered of her, demanded in law of her, he must pay, and satisfy for all she owes: she is in no danger of an arrest, nor need she fear a prison.

Brethren! until a sinner believes, and hath actual union with Christ, he stands charged with a vast debt; no sinner owes less than ten thousand talents.

Though we deny not, but that all God's elect are decretively justified and pardoned from all eternity; that is, God did decree to pronounce every elect person in every age, when they personally did exist, and had (or should obtain through the Spirit, a vital union with Jesus Christ) actually and personally acquitted, pardoned, and pronounced righteous ones, and for ever freed from all vindictive wrath and condemnation; but until such a vital union be obtained, they, as well as the rest of mankind, lie dead in sin, and are children of wrath by nature as well as others. And this appears,

See my medium be-twixt two extremes.

None of the elect are actually pardoned, justified, before a vital union with Christ proved. Rom. viii. 1. Eph. ii. 2, 3.

(1.) Because all the elect fell in the first Adam, and by virtue of the fall, were brought under the same condemnation that their public head fell under.

(2.) Because all are born in sin, all come into the world with the same stain, and guilt of sin: "Behold I was shapened in iniquity," &c., Psal. li. 5.

(3.) Because it is positively said, "That the whole world became guilty before God," Rom. iii. 19; not only in their consciences, but fore Dei, before God, and in his sight; and in this respect Paul shows there was no difference, the sentence of the law being charged upon the elect by God himself, until they are in Jesus Christ.

(4.) And this further appears, because it is said, that "he that believeth not is condemned already," John iii. 18: let him be who he will. "He that hath the Son hath life, but he that hath not the Son of God hath not life," 1 John v. 12. Hath the Son, that is, union with the Son, or is married to the Son, hath life; that is, both the life of justification and the life of sanctification, and also eternal life in the seed of it, and also hath a vital principle in him that hath the Son, and that he that hath not the Son hath not life, in either of these respects.

(5.) Because the Holy Ghost frequently ascribes our actual justification only to believers, or to faith, though not to faith either as a habit or an act, or that faith is any of the matter, or the material cause of our justification; but only objectively, or in respect to Christ, whom faith apprehends; "Being justified by faith, we have peace with God," &c., Rom. v. 1. "Therefore we conclude, that a man is justified by faith," &c., Rom. iii. 28. "Even we have believed in Jesus Christ, that we might be justified by the faith of Christ," &c., Gal. ii. 16. Again, "In him all that believe are justified,"

Acts xiii. 39. And where is said (in any place of scripture) he is justified that believes not, (though not in his own conscience) yet he is in the sight of God; (say they) and must not such then, who affirm that elect unbelievers are actually justified, be looked upon as fomentors of an error, and such which cannot tend any ways to the glory of God.

(6.) None of the elect are actually pardoned nor justified, before they obtain this union with Christ; because justification of our persons make a relative change, though not a real change: it makes a change of the state of the person, though not a change of his heart; no, that is done by regeneration, which always accompanies justification; no man is actually justified that is not renewed; he that was a child of wrath, is made a child of God; "This thy brother was dead, and is alive again:" he was dead in sin, and dead in a law of sense also; a condemned man is a dead man, and every one in that sense is dead, until justified and acquitted of the law sentence.

I would know whether they own the elect were ever in this sense dead, or condemned: if not, 1. I see not then how they can properly be said to be justified at all, because justification of sinners is a discharging them from the wrath, guilt, and condemnation they lay under, before they were so justified. 2. Let such who deny what I say, show when, and at what time the law sentence was taken off of the elect, if it was before they obtained a vital union with Jesus Christ.

The elect were once condemned.

(7.) The sins of the elect are not actually pardoned, or they pronounced, acquitted, before this union with Christ appears yet further; because ministers are commanded to preach the gospel to sinners, undone sinners, and tell every unbelieving sinner he is in a miserable state, even naked and without Christ, until he has union with Christ, being both children of wrath, and under condemnation: but if some men do not thus believe, how, with a good conscience, can they preach after this manner? No, they must say, "Sinners, if you are elected, you are actually justified, whether you believe or not; and all your sins are actually pardoned, though you do not know it, or have not the evidence of it in your own consciences." But would not this be strange doctrine, and such that would expose religion to shame and reproach, or at leastwise such preachers? Or can that be a truth that is not fit to be preached? or if it be thought fit to be preached, can it tend to the conversion of sinners?

Lastly, The Holy Ghost convinceth all persons, whom he convinceth effectually of sin, that before they are united to Christ, they were in a sad and deplorable state and condition, ask any convinced sinner this question.

Quest. Pray, what was your state and condition, before you were helped to believe, or to receive Jesus Christ, by nature?

Answ. O (says he) Sir, a sad and miserable state and condition, for I was condemned and under God's wrath, &c.

Now, doth not the Holy Ghost convince them, that this was their state; and that they were naked, &c., without Christ's righteousness: sure, he that has Christ's righteousness imputed to him, cannot be said to be naked. And be sure, the Holy Spirit is a true and faithful Witness, and being God cannot lie. Not that I deny a federal union of the elect; from eternity, the Son of God was our Surety: he then received a grant for us, and we received it in him, according to 2 Tim. i. 7, and Tit. i. 2.

But no sooner is the soul espoused, and married to Jesus Christ, or hath union with him by faith, through the infusion of the Holy Spirit, but it is actually discharged. Christ says to the justice of God, concerning such a person, as Paul, concerning Onesimus, to Philemon, "If he hath wronged thee, or oweth thee anything, put that upon my account," Phil. 18. If justice should demand payment, (which is impossible) of such, saith Jesus Christ, I have paid it; I am responsible for all this soul oweth; I died for this person. I (saith the soul) plead my interest in Christ, my union with Christ; for that satisfaction which he made to thee, O Justice, for all my debts, and horrid crimes, is my legal discharge at God's bar, in the court of heaven. Is not this, my brethren, a blessed effect of the soul's marriage-union with Christ? What perplexity are some in, that are far in debt, and have nothing to pay? They cannot sleep, nor take their natural rest, for fear of an arrest, and of going to prison. Oh! (saith the poor creature) what shall I do? I am fallen into the hands of a just man, one that will not forgive me a farthing of what I owe him; I am run out of all I had to trade with, by my own extravagant and profuse living, and he is incensed against me, and, alas! I have not one penny to pay, nor no friend, nor brother to help me, oh, I must go to prison, and there lie as long as I live!

Just thus it is, with a poor sinner, one that is an unbeliever; he is run out of all that God lent him, by his horrid wickedness; and owes to God a vast sum, and there is none can help him; no friend hath he to satisfy the justice of God; yet, without there be a full satisfaction, to prison he must go, even to the worst of prisons, to hell itself. Ah, what is it to go to an earthly prison, to this, viz., to be cast into utter darkness, to lie in a furnace of fire to all eternity!

But now, if this poor guilty wretch will but espouse and marry Jesus Christ, he is immediately discharged of all the danger he was in before. Such is the happy estate of all that have actual union with Jesus Christ.

VII. From it follows another blessed effect of this happy union, namely, free justification. The soul of a believing sinner is accepted in Christ, as perfectly righteous. Justification an effect of

Brethren, I know some do not distinguish between pardon of sin, and free justification, but make it all one act of God; but, as I conceive, there is a great difference, though it is granted, no person that is pardoned, but he is also justified. Yet, evident it is, a man that is a criminal, and brought to the bar to plead, and is found guilty, may, as an act of the king's grace, be pardoned, as to that obligation he lies under to punishment; but he may not, cannot be said to be acquitted, justified, or declared righteous, and an innocent person. But every believing sinner, or every person that espouseth the Lord Jesus, through the imputation of Christ's perfect righteousness, is justified, acquitted, and declared innocent, and without spot, at the bar of God's justice. Christ's righteousness is put upon that soul, and accounted his, as if it was his very own, and wrought out by himself; so that in this respect, he "is all fair, and hath no spot in him," (as Christ speaks of his spouse). When God pardons a sinner, he deals with him in a way of mercy, but when he justifies him, he deals with him in a way of righteousness; "I will greatly rejoice in the Lord, my soul shall be joyful in my God; for he hath clothed me in garments of salvation; he hath covered me with the robe of righteousness, as a bridegroom decketh himself with ornaments, and as a bride adorneth herself with jewels," Isa. lxi. 10. So that a believer may not only say, in the Lord I have pardon, and remission of sins, but also, "In the Lord have I righteousness and strength," Isa. xlv. 24. "Who shall lay anything to the charge of God's elect?" Rom. viii. 33, 34. That is, to their charge that are actually in Christ, or united to him. For before an elect sinner believes, the law hath power, and doth charge him, and divine justice chargeth him, but when he believes none can charge him; "for it is God that justifieth." "Who shall condemn, it is Christ that died." It is Christ the Son of God, he that is equal with God, that is, God as well as man.

Hence he hath made a sufficient satisfaction, and an atonement to divine justice, or rather, that is risen again; which shows our full discharge from sin in him; we were all virtually justified, when he was raised from the dead, and we are actually justified, when we apply, or receive the atonement; "If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins," Rom. v. 11, 1 John i. 9. Not only merciful and gracious, but faithful and just; he will not exact from us satisfaction, who plead that atonement his Son hath made for our sins. Christ having paid our debts, God cannot be unjust as not to forgive us, through his blood.

Oh, what a blessing is this! How happy are they that obtain union with Christ! They are justified, and always justified completely, and for ever justified, and justified from all things, Acts xiii. 39.

VIII. Another effect of this union is regeneration. No sooner doth Christ apprehend us by his Spirit and enable us to believe in him, so that we are spiritually united unto him, but immediately we are renewed, or changed into his image; "If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature," 2 Cor. v. 17. Jesus Christ can take no delight in a black and filthy creature, no more than a man can delight in a filthy swine. "A contrary nature," (saith a worthy writer) "cannot unite. Can fire and water be united? a good angel, and an impure devil?" Now this union is made by the infusion of the Holy Spirit, which immediately works new habits in the soul. By nature we are in the first Adam, and bear his vile image, but by grace we are in the second Adam, and so partake of his holy and heavenly image; "He that is joined to the Lord, is one Spirit," 1 Cor. vi. 17. It is not an union simply in love and affections, (as some would have it) without a change of disposition; the Holy Spirit dwells and operates in that soul, "If any man hath not the Spirit of Christ, the same is not his," Rom. viii. 9. The head and the members are all of one and the same nature. Can a loathsome carcase be united to the holy Jesus? Or a sinner be joined to him, and remain still filthy? No, no, regeneration immediately follows, as the effect of this union. "If Christ be in you, the body is dead, because of sin, but the Spirit is life because of righteousness," Rom. viii. 10. Regeneration
union.

Regeneration an effect of union.

Freedom from bondage, and the curse of the law an effect of union with Christ.

IX. It follows from hence, that as the effect of this union with Jesus Christ, the soul is also set free from bondage. Now, "the Lord is that Spirit, and where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty," 2 Cor. iii. 17. The Lord Christ, though he be a man, yet not a mere man; he is called, "A quickening Spirit." The first man, "Adam, was made a living soul;" the last man, "Adam, was made a quickening Spirit," 1 Cor. xv. 45. And, where he is, or dwells in any soul, there is liberty. Such that are united to him, are discharged from the spirit of bondage; they are set at liberty from the bondage of the law, and the curse thereof. "If the Son therefore make you free, then are you free indeed," John viii. 36. Made free, or set at liberty from the servitude and slavery of sin, of the law, of death and hell. They that are of the law, or not dead to the law, and so not married to Christ, but are in bondage, under the killing power of it, being possessed with a base, servile, slavish spirit, being servants of lusts and corruption; but believers, through this divine union, are delivered from this woful state; "For ye have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear, but ye have received the spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba, Father," Rom. viii. 15.

That soul that is in the first Adam, may be said to be married to the law, is evident, which is a cruel husband, the letter killeth; as many as are under the law, are under the curse. Mount Sinai covenant gendereth to bondage; for this Agar is Mount Sinai in Arabia, and answereth to Jerusalem, which now is in bondage with her children," Gal. iv. 24, 25.

He therefore that seeks for justification by the law, or by his own righteousness, or according to the terms of the first covenant, is in a woful condition; the law being not dead to him, nor he dead to that; "Know ye not, brethren, for I speak to them that know the law, how the law hath dominion over a man, as long as he liveth," Rom. vii. 1, 2, 3. By the law, he means the law of wedlock, and all that are under the first covenant, are married to the law, as to an husband. See the fourth verse; "Wherefore brethren, ye also are become dead to the law, by the body of Christ, that ye should be married to another, even to him that is raised from the dead," &c.

Therefore, believers are freed from the malediction, and from the rigid exaction, and the irritation of the law; but "now we are delivered from the law, that being dead, wherein we were held," Rom. vii. 6. The law as a covenant of works is the strength of sin, and the effects of both is dead, so long as a man is under the power or dominion of them; but believers, through their union with Christ, are freed from both.

All Christ hath, is a believer's, as an effect of his union with him.

X. Another glorious effect of this marriage-union with Christ, is an undoubted right to, and interest in, all that Christ hath. He endows the soul with all his spiritual goods, as the husband endows the wife he marries, with all his worldly goods. This all know is the effect of a marriage union. Though a prince should espouse and marry a poor virgin, even take her off the dunghill, (as it were) yet no sooner is she married to him, but she is a queen, and is also interested in all he hath. She hath a rich dowry according to his dignity and grandeur. So it is here, "Whether Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas, or the world, or life, or death, or things present, or things to come, all are yours," 1 Cor. iii. 22. They have a right and title to all things that are Christ's. But how comes this to pass? See the next words, "Ye are Christ's, and Christ is God's." The word is theirs, the ministers of Christ are theirs; the ordinances and the promises are theirs, even all the promises are theirs; all that grace that is in Christ, that wisdom that is in Christ, is theirs, that have a real union with him, "My peace I give unto you." That grace that is in Christ, and that peace that flows from Christ, is theirs, that have union with him.

All a believer's wants shall therefore be supplied, and that richly too. Jesus Christ is not an unkind husband, (as you have heard,) but of a loving, generous, and bountiful spirit.

He is an unkind husband, that denies his dear wife anything which she needs, or hath the want of, to make her life comfortable unto her. "Woman (saith Christ,) be it to thee as thou wilt," Matt. xv. 28. Take what thou wilt. If David could say, "because the Lord was his Shepherd, he should not want," Psal. xxiii. 1, how much more may a saint say, the Lord is my husband, therefore I shall not want, because this relation is stronger, and more intimate, nearer and obliging. "No man ever hated his own flesh, but nourisheth and cherisheth it, as the Lord the church; for we are members of his body, of his flesh, and of his bones," Eph. v. 29, 30.

He that communicates to us his own flesh to eat, and his blood to drink, be sure will withhold no good thing from us, which he knows will do us good. "My God shall supply all your need, according to his riches in glory, by Christ Jesus," Phil. iv. 19, or by virtue of that union you have with him. Believers have manifold wants; they may say with David, the best of them, "I am poor and needy," Psal. xl. 17.

A sincere Christian knows he is poor; he sees his wants. "I (saith Christ,) know thy works, and tribulation, and poverty," Rev. ii. 9. But contrariwise, a formal Christian, like the church of Laodicea, thinks himself rich, and increased in goods, and has need of nothing. But let the wants of believers be what they will, the Lord Jesus will see them all supplied. "They that fear the Lord, shall want no good thing," Psal. xxxiv. 10.

1. Do they want counsel? "Thou shalt guide me by thy counsel, and afterwards receive me to glory," Psal. lxxxiii. 24.

2. Do they want wisdom? "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask it of God, who giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not, and it shall be given him," James i. 5.

3. Do they want comfort? "I will not leave you comfortless, I will come unto you," John xiv. 18.

4. Do they want grace, more grace? "He will give grace and glory, and no good thing will he withhold from them that walk uprightly. He giveth more grace, wherefore he saith, he resisteth the proud, and giveth grace to the humble," Psal. lxxxiv. 11.

5. Do they want strength? "They that wait on the Lord, shall renew their strength." "I will strengthen thee, I will uphold thee, by the right hand of my righteousness," Isa. xl. 31.

6. Do they want healing? Christ is their Physician, as well as their Bridegroom, he hath the balm of Gilead. "Who forgiveth all thine iniquities, and healeth all thy diseases," Psal. ciii. 3.

Sinner, sinner, thou hast many running sores, and dangerous wounds in thy soul; thy wounds stink, and are corrupt. "From the crown of thy head, to the sole of thy foot, there is nothing but wounds, and bruises, and putrifying sores," Isa. i. 5, 6. But no sooner dost thou espouse Jesus Christ, but he will heal them all, and make thee whole; the lost soul he came to seek and to save, and the sick and wounded he came to heal; but if thou dost not believe in him, espouse him, thou wilt certainly perish eternally of thy wounds, and soul sickness; for nothing but an application of Christ's blood by faith, can heal thee.

7. Dost thou want rest? Art thou weary and heavy laden? Oh, then believe in Christ, come to Christ; though thy sins are never so heavy upon thee, though never Luke x. 42. so great a burden to thee, yet he will ease thee. "Come to me, all ye that labour, and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." "Cast thy burden upon the Lord, he shall sustain thee," Matt. xi. 28.

Nay, brethren, believers themselves have their burdens. "We that are in this tabernacle do groan, being burdened," 2 Cor. v. 4. But Jesus hath already "borne all our grief, and carried our sorrows," Isa. liii. 4.

1. Christ hath borne the burden of our sins; the guilt of all our sins were laid upon him. "The Lord hath laid upon him the iniquity of us all."

2. He hath borne the burden of our duties and obedience. That obedience God required of us, was a perfect conformity to the requirements of the holy law, which we were not able to do, that yoke we were not able to bear, but the Lord Jesus in our nature, and in our stead, hath borne it for us.

3. He hath also borne that sore and amazing burden of God's wrath, which was due to us for our breach of the law, and that on purpose to free us, to deliver us, and all that do truly believe in him, from it for ever.

4. Nay, my brethren, Christ bears part of another burden of ours; I mean the burden of our afflictions and sorrows.

1. By way of sympathy, "He is touched with the feeling of our infirmities," Heb. iv. 15.

2. He bears now our sorrows and burden of afflictions and infirmities, by succouring and supporting us. "Underneath are the everlasting arms," Deut. xxxiii. 27.

3. "By sweetening all our afflictions with his own gracious presence. "When thou passest through the water, I will be with thee, and through the rivers, they shall not overflow thee; when thou walkest through the fire, thou shalt not be burnt, neither shall the flame kindle upon thee," Isa. xliiii. 3.

4. By teaching us by all our afflictions. We have not the rod of correction, without his gracious instruction.

5. By sanctifying all our afflictions to us, making them of great use and profit to our souls. "All things shall work together for good, to them that love God."

6. By purging us thereby from all our filth and pollutions. Affliction is the furnace of Christ, in and by which, he refines his gold, and makes it more pure.

U S E.

Now, is it not (think you) a blessed thing to be in a state of union with Christ! Oh, that these things might move some of you, that are yet in your sins, to come to this wedding, and receive Jesus Christ! But I can go no further at this time.

SERMON VIII.

The kingdom of heaven is likened unto a certain king, which made a marriage for his son.—
Matt. xxii. 2.

DOCT. That the great God hath sent his own Son to espouse poor sinners.

The argument I am upon to persuade sinners to espouse Jesus Christ, was taken from the happy and blessed effects that attend, or accompany the soul's marriage union with Christ. To proceed.

XI. Another effect of this union, is the blessing, and great privilege of adoption.

Marry the King's Son, and his Father will become your Father.

Brethren, that spirit which unites the soul to the Lord Jesus, is the spirit of adoption.

There are three ways, by which, (as I conceive,) adoption comes in.

1. By a marriage with Christ.
2. By a grant, or free-gift.
3. By the Holy Spirit, which is the bond of this union.

The Holy Ghost, that unites us to Christ, (as I said,) is a Spirit of adoption. "For ye have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear, but we have received the Spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba, Father," Rom. viii. 15. Compare this with that in Gal. iv. 6, "Because you are sons, God hath sent the Spirit of his Son into our hearts, crying, Abba, Father."

"Because you are sons." They were sons by virtue of their union with Christ, and thereby partook of his holy nature, by regenerating grace. But yet this privilege of adoption is further confirmed and strengthened by the Holy Spirit, by the indwelling of the Spirit. The habits of grace gives us this privilege; yet it is the act, and exercise of grace, influencing the soul, that makes us cry, Abba, Father, or to plead this privilege.

Brethren, every believer hath the Spirit of adoption in him; but every believer cannot to the same degree of boldness, cry, Abba, Father. The reasons may be,

1. Because grace in some may be weak. A child new born, cannot cry, father, father, though e'er a short time; when grown up, it can do it: so it may be here.

2. In some others also, the Spirit may be grieved, and so may withdraw its testimony for a time, from such Christians, and they thereby may be left under many fears and doubts. Oh, how dangerous is it to quench or grieve the Holy Spirit of God, Eph. iv. 30.

3. Or it may be, because a child of God may be under great and grievous temptations; Satan may get much advantage against him, and weaken his hope and confidence in God, touching his union with Christ, and his adoption. Nay, many have not only been tempted and too far overcome, by Satan, but also been deserted by the Lord, as Heman, Job, and others. Job cried out, his hope was perished; and if you read the 88th Psalm, you may see the distresses upon this account of Heman.

4. The Holy Ghost is a free Agent, and therefore he may testify unto the soul its adoption, when he pleaseth, and sees occasion. And,

(1.) The Holy Spirit may suspend its testimony, to humble the soul; sometimes a saint may be lifted up, and then to bring him to the foot of Christ, the Holy Ghost may suspend its witnessing influences for a time. (2.) Or, the Holy Spirit may do it, to put a believer the more upon the use and exercise of grace. (3.) Or to cause the soul, the more to prize his testimony, as touching this high and sacred privilege.

5. A believer may have the Spirit of adoption, and cry Abba, Father, and yet want comfort; though the testimony may be strong, yet the troubles of the soul may be great. David calls upon his soul, and says, "Why art thou cast down, O my soul, and why art thou disquieted in me? hope thou in God, for I shall yet praise him: who is the health of my countenance, and my God," Psal. xlii. 11. He pleads his relation to God, though his comfort was gone. So in Isa. l. 10.

2. The privilege of adoption, is by way of grant, or free gift; "to them gave he power or privilege, to become the sons of God," John i. 12. But it is not given to any but to them only, that do receive and espouse Jesus Christ. "But to as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name."

One sign, or evidence of our adoption, is our regeneration, as the very next words show, "Which were born not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God," ver. 13.

Adoption and regeneration always go together; no soul is adopted, but he is also regenerated. Oh! this is a great and glorious privilege of ours: For,

1. To be children, is to lie near the Father's heart, God loves his own children, which he hath adopted to himself, and hath begotten by his own word and Spirit. No father hath such a great love to his children, as the Lord hath unto his, "And hast loved them, as he hath loved me," John xvii. 23. Considered as he is Mediator, with an inconceivable, unchangeable, tender, and an everlasting love.

What it is to be an adopted child of God.

2. To be cared for, and pitied as a father cares for, and pities his children, when they are afflicted, and in misery, "As a father pitieth his children, so doth the Lord pity them that fear him," Psal. ciii. 13.

3. To be fed at his own table; this privilege belongs to children, and to dwell in their Father's house, they are allowed to dwell with God, and God dwelleth with them, "As God hath said, I will dwell in them, and walk in them, and I will be their God, and they shall be my people," 2 Cor. vi. 16.

4. To be taught and instructed by the Lord, as a father teacheth and instructeth his children. How careful was Abraham in doing this, with David and many others.

5. To be clothed by the Father. A father clothes all his children at his own cost. So the holy God puts a glorious robe upon all his children, even the perfect righteousness of his own Son Jesus Christ. Our Elder Brother hath a garment wrought out for them all, that are his Father's children, which the Holy Ghost puts upon them, and in which the Father always beholds them.

See the parable of the prodigal son, the best robe.

6. To be preserved and protected as children. What father will suffer his children to be devoured, and torn to pieces, if he can defend them?

Rom. viii. 7.

7. Heirship. "If children, then heirs, heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ," Rom. viii. 17. (It is not thus with all the children of an earthly prince, viz., they are not all co-heirs with the elder brother, (see Gal. iv. 7). Hence they serve God with filial fear and love.

XIV. Another effect of this union with Jesus Christ, is sanctification. "He that sanctifieth; and they that are sanctified, are all of one," Heb. ii. 11.

Brethren, there is a necessity of union of nature between the sanctifying Saviour, and the sanctified sinner. Our union with Christ and sanctification, is the effects of the hypostatical union of the two natures in the person of Christ. Every believer is justified by his blood, and sanctified by his Spirit. These are attributed to his taking our nature into union with his divine Person.

Sanctification an effect of union.

All the elect were then virtually taken into union with himself, in him, as their common Head and Representative. And, as the union of the divine nature, sanctified the human nature, in the Person of Christ, in the womb of the virgin, even so, when sinners (though unclean in themselves) are united to Christ by the Holy Spirit, they are actually sanctified, and made holy. The Spirit, which is the bond of our union, on Christ's part, is a spirit of holiness, or of sanctification. And, like as it is impossible for the branch to bear like fruit with the vine, until it is grafted into the vine, so it is impossible for sinners to be holy, or to bring forth the fruits of holiness and sanctification, until they are grafted into him, by the Spirit, and faith.

By this also, we may know, whether we have attained to the blessing of union. "Such were some of you, but ye are washed and sanctified, but ye are justified in the name of our Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of our God," 1 Cor. xvi. 11.

Though a person may be never so filthy, and unclean before his union with Christ, yet this union doth not leave him filthy, and polluted; for as he hath the righteousness of Christ imputed to him, to his justification, and remission of sin, so he hath also received the Holy Spirit, creating in his soul new habits, and gracious dispositions, by which he is enabled, and influenced, to die unto sin, and so to live unto God.

XII. Another blessed effect of union with Christ, is free access unto the throne of grace. "Therefore being justified by faith, we have peace with God, through our Lord Jesus Christ," Rom. v. 1. Not justified before, or without faith; nor being justified, and by faith have peace in our conscience (as some would have the text be read, (falsely placing the point at justified) but, being justified by faith, &c.,

Free access to God an effect of union.

respecting the object, faith apprehendeth, or applies; we have peace with God, through the obedience, or righteousness of Jesus Christ.

The effect of this is here opened by the apostle. (1.) Peace with God. (2.) Access unto God, by whom also we have access by faith into this grace wherein we stand. (3.) And, rejoice in hope of the glory of God.

A person may be reconciled to his prince, and yet not be admitted into his presence: he may not at any time have free access to him.

Or, if he should have such access, yet he may not have his petition heard, and all his wants and necessities answered, but believers have this free access to God, through Jesus Christ. They may "come with boldness to the throne of grace," Heb. iv. 16; and also, always speed when they come, "In whom we have boldness, and access with confidence, by faith and love," Eph. iii. 12, in whom, or being united to him.

1. May boldly, or freely come; come to God, as unto a Father.

2. May have free liberty of speech, even such words, as becomes a child that approaches the presence of such a dread majesty.

3. With an assurance of having his ear opened, to our just and righteous requests and petitions.

4. Have also a ready answer, if they ask in Christ's name, such things that are according to the will of God, provided they ask in faith, believingly, and in love to the honour of God.

And this not only for themselves, but for others also. God would hear his servant Job, for his three friends, when he would not hear them for themselves, "My servant Job shall pray for you, and him will I accept," &c., Job xlii. 8.

Some are greater favourites in the court of heaven than others, or are more accepted, or better beloved, than other saints may be, or in a better frame than others are; or they may have more faith.

How ready was king Ahasuerus to hear Esther; "What wilt thou, queen Esther? what is thy request? It shall be given thee, to the half of the kingdom," Esther v. 3. Believers being the spouse of Christ, have a wonderful interest and acceptance in the court of heaven.

(1.) Because the way, by which they come by it, is that new and living way, God hath consecrated through the veil, that is to say, Christ's flesh; he procured this free access for us, by his own blood. (2.) Because Jesus Christ hath also purchased all things they want for them, at such a dear rate. (3.) Because they are so near and dear to Christ, and to the Father, through him. (4.) Because the Holy Spirit frames all their desires and helps, and influenceth them in all the good and just petitions. "We know not what to pray for as we ought, but the Spirit itself maketh intercession for us, with groanings that cannot be uttered," Rom. viii. 26. (5.) Because God hath laid himself under gracious promises to hear them, and to give them all things they need.

(6.) Because they are invited to come with boldness; they are required to come, and draw near to God. (7.) Because Jesus Christ himself, is always at the Father's right-hand, to take their requests, and offer them up to God, with the most sweet odours of his own intercession, Rev. v. 8.

Victory over all enemies an effect of union with Christ. XIV. Another effect of the soul's union with Christ, is a victory over all our enemies, whether within or without. Jesus Christ hath overcome them all, not only for himself, but for all that are his; "Be of good cheer, I have overcome the world," John xvi. 33.

1. Christ's victory was ours; he overcame as the Captain of our salvation. He overcame sin and we in him. He overcame temptations, yea, all its allurements, when Satan showed him all the kingdoms of the world; and we then overcame the world in him. He overcame death as our Head and Husband, and we also overcame death in him.

2. Moreover, we actually are made conquerors, through our union with him. Faith is, my brethren, a victorious grace, "This is the victory that overcomes the world, even our faith," 1 John v. 4.

By partaking of his Spirit, we are partakers of his strength. Hence we are said to be "strengthened with all might, according to his glorious power," Col. i. 11. Faith makes us victorious, as it did the worthies of old, over all worldly desires, fears, hopes, and joys, which are the great hindrance of our obedience to God, i. e., the instrument, the weapon, by which we overcome, and virtually includes in it this victory, as the effect includes the cause, is our faith, which in our union is planted in our hearts; and thus we "are in Christ, more than conquerors," Rom. viii. 11.

His victory gave all the elect a full assurance of overcoming, and hence a believer may triumph over death and the grave, "Oh, death! where is thy sting? Oh, grave! where is thy victory?" 1 Cor. xv. 56, 57.

XV. Another effect of our union with Christ is, a clear and full manifestation, or a saving knowledge of the Lord, "I will betroth thee unto me in faithfulness, and thou shalt know the Lord." This is the great promise of the new covenant, by which we become the Lord's. "They shall all know me, from the least of them to the greatest of them, saith the Lord," Jer. xxxi. 34.

Saving knowledge an effect of
union.

In this covenant we are married to Jesus Christ, and this is the effect of our conjugal union. Christ will hide nothing from his spouse, that is for her good, and his own glory. All things "that I have heard of my Father, I have made known unto you," John xv. 15.

Some have only the light of nature afforded them; they know no more of God, than the visible things of the creation teacheth them, by the help of their natural reason.

Others have the light of common gifts and grace; they have the written word, and great light by those gifts of knowledge Christ hath endowed them with.

But believers have the saving light and knowledge of God and Jesus Christ, which is life eternal.

XVI. Another effect of this blessed union, is fruitfulness in grace, and in all the fruits of righteousness. No man can bring forth fruits or product of grace, before the habits of grace are implanted in their souls; nor are those habits implanted in any soul, but in those only that are united to Christ: "Wherefore brethren, we also are become dead to the law, by the body of Christ, that ye should be married to another, even to him that was raised from the dead, that we should bring forth fruit to God," Rom. vii. 4.

Fruitfulness in grace is the effect of union with Christ.

It appears evident, that one special end, as well as an effect of this marriage union, is fruitfulness, as it is among men: first marriage, and then fruit, as the effect of it, in a natural way: as grafting into the stock must precede the partaking of the sap, John xv. 1, 5. so as to bring forth fruit, so we must be united to Christ in a spiritual way, before we can bear spiritual fruit. Nature may bring forth the fruits of morality, (as it did in some of the old heathens) but the fruits of the Spirit is the product of supernatural grace. "The fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, meekness, goodness, faith, temperance:" Gal. v. 22. A little to open each of these.

Love. That is, the effects of union, love to God, and Jesus Christ; love to the church of God, to the interest of God, and to the truth of God. Moreover, love to all men.

Joy. This denotes that full and sweet satisfaction the soul of a believer hath, in this his happy union, or marriage with Christ, he or she, being unspeakably delighted in it, esteeming it their chiefest and greatest good and happiness: "Whom having not seen, ye love, in whom, though now ye see him not, yet believing, ye rejoice with joy unspeakable, and full of glory," 1 Pet. i. 8.

Peace. Or, quietude of mind and conscience; they had, and all believers have peace with God. Moreover, peace here, denotes a peaceable temper to all the saints, or in peace they possess their souls.

Long-suffering. This is opposed to seeking revenge, or retaining prejudice in our hearts to any brother; bearing and forbearing with each other; suffering wrong, rather than seeking to right ourselves in an undue way or manner.

Gentleness and goodness. viz., Sweetness, and kindness of temper, by which we avoid all hard-heartedness, and uncharitableness to each other; mutually endeavouring to accommodate ourselves so one to another, that we may be helpful to each other on all occasions.

Faith. I take this to refer to faithfulness, in keeping our covenant with God, and his church; and our word and promise in all our commerce and dealings one with another, and with all men.

Meekness. This denotes humbleness of mind; "learn of me, for I am meek and lowly of heart," Matt. xi. 29. This grace is opposed to pride, haughtiness of mind, and self-conceitedness; as also to wrath and undue anger and passion.

Temperance. viz., A sober use of the creature, and all creature enjoyments; not having our hearts set upon them in an inordinate manner. "But I say unto you, brethren, the time is short, it remaineth that both they that have wives, be as if they had none, ver. 29, And they that weep, as though they wept not; and they that rejoice, as though they rejoiced not, and they that buy, as though they possessed not. And they that use this world, as not abusing it, because the fashion of this world passeth away," 1 Cor. vii. 29.

Oh! Christians, see to it; these blessed fruits of grace are the effects which all those who have a real union with Christ, experience.

Final perseverance an effect of union.

have an imperfect

See the parable of the sower.

XVII. Final perseverance is also an effect of union with Christ.

1. This happy union tends to make Christ, and all believers, but one mystical body, or one mystical Christ; and should he lose one member, he would have an imperfect body; "we are all members of his body, of his flesh, and of his bones," Eph. v. 30. Will a man suffer the members of his body to be torn to pieces, and lost for ever, if he hath power or wisdom to preserve them? Or, hath Christ less love to the members of his mystical body, than a man hath of the members of his natural body?

2. This union must preserve every believer from final apostacy, or else the prayer of our blessed Lord was not heard and answered. "I have prayed for thee, that thy faith fail not."

3. If the union betwixt the Father and Jesus Christ, be indissoluble, then the union betwixt Christ, and all true believers, is indissoluble; but the former is true, therefore the latter is true also: "I in them, and thou in me, that they may be made perfect in one," John xvii. 23.

4. If the seed remains in all that are in a state of union with Christ, then not one of them can fall finally away, but the seed remains; therefore they cannot finally fall; "the seed remains, they cannot sin because they are born of God," 1 John iii. 9.

5. Christ's love to, and care of his spouse, is such, that they cannot finally perish. His love is unchangeable, and abiding; besides, he betroths all which he betroths for ever.

The resurrection an effect of union with Christ.

XVIII. The resurrection to eternal life, at the last day, is likewise an effect of this glorious union. "But if the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus Christ from the dead, dwell in you; he that raised up Christ from the dead, shall also quicken your mortal bodies, by his Spirit that dwelleth in you,"

Rom. viii. 11. Both body and soul of a believer is in union with Christ, and as all the elect by virtue of Christ's resurrection, are, and shall be raised in their spirits, to a taste of spiritual life, so also all their bodies shall be raised at the last day, or else a whole Christ shall not be raised; "for as in Adam all die; so even in Christ shall all be made alive," 1 Cor. xv. 22.

Brethren, as all the first Adam's seed, or all that stood in union with him die, so all the second Adam's seed, or all that stand in a state of union with him, shall be raised to eternal life, at the last day, by virtue of that union. True, all the ungodly shall also be raised, but not by virtue of union with Christ, because they never were in him; but they shall be raised by virtue of the mighty power of Christ, not in mercy, but in wrath.

XIX. Glorification also is an effect of our union with Christ. He, as our Fore-runner, is already glorified in heaven, and we in him, as our head; and we shall actually be glorified with him also, at the resurrection day, both body and soul: "And the glory which thou hast given me, I have given them, that they may be one, even as we are one," John xvii. 22. That glory the Father hath given unto Christ, he gives by promise to all his, and will actually bestow upon them: for whom he "justified, them also he glorified."

Also to be where Christ is.

XX. As an effect of union with Jesus Christ, believers shall be in the same place with Christ. This is that which they long for, and it shall be granted unto them. Shall not the husband, and his dear wife, and beloved spouse dwell together? "Father. I will that they whom thou hast given me, be with me where I am, that they may behold my glory," John xvii. 24. And again he saith, "where I am, there shall my servant be."

APPLICATION.

1. From hence we may infer, that by virtue of this union with Christ, believers are delivered from all things that are evil, whether here or hereafter; and are, and shall be possessed with all things that are truly and eternally good; i. e., grace here and glory hereafter.

2. And then, is it not, oh ye sinners, your true and only interest, and highest concernment, to espouse the Lord Jesus?

3. Moreover, it tends further to aggravate the sin and folly of all those who make light of this marriage supper.

4. Also from hence, may all believers receive no small comfort and consolation. What tongue can express their happiness? nay, what heart can conceive of it? lift up your heads ye saints that are dejected; why do you mourn, ye princely ones? what glory are you heirs of! oh, be not troubled, though your state, at present, is mean and low, Christ hath espoused you, "and when he appeareth, ye shall also appear with him in glory," Col. iii. 3.

But so much at this time.

SERMON IX.

*The kingdom of heaven is like unto a certain king, which made a marriage for his son.—
Matt. xxii. 2.*

That the great God hath sent his own Son, to espouse poor sinners.

THAT it is (you have heard) the sinner's highest concernment to accept of Christ, and believe in Christ, or to espouse the Lord Jesus Christ.

Jan. 31, 1637.

Secondly, I shall show you how, or by what ways and means, the soul's marriage union with Jesus Christ, is accomplished, or brought about.

How union with Christ is effected.

1st. Note this by the way, that it is effected, or brought about by all the three persons of the blessed Trinity.

First, the spring, or original cause of it, is the love of God the Father; the Father from everlasting loved all those that are espoused by Christ.

This marriage union doth not depend on the will, and good pleasure of man, not on the creature. No, for shall the corrupt will of man, be the rule of God's will? Some tell you, if the creature will receive Christ, then God will move in a way of grace and favour towards him. After this notion Jesus Christ might have no spouse at all, nay, his death might prove to be in vain.

Union with Christ depends on the will of God.

2. This union is wrought by the free gift, or donation of God the Father. The Father gives all those to the Son, which he espouseth. "All that the Father giveth me, shall come unto me," John vi. 37.

Secondly, this marriage relation is wrought out, or effected, by the Son of God, who doth espouse poor sinners.

1. By Christ's recommending his infinite, and inconceivable love to the sons and daughters of men; his early love, even from everlasting.

Brethren, Jesus Christ readily accepted of his Father's choice; nay, his love was as early set upon lost sinners, as the Father's. "His delight was with the sons of men," Prov. viii. 31. The sinner doth not first fall in love with Jesus Christ, and so their love draws forth his love to them. No, that cannot be, for when Christ loved us, we hated him; our hearts naturally were filled full of enmity against God, and Jesus. "Now, when I passed by I looked upon thee, and thy time was the time of love. And I spread my skirt over thee, and covered thy nakedness, and entered into a covenant with thee, saith the Lord God, and thou becamest mine," Ezek. xvi. 8.

This was the time of Christ's love, he first looked upon us, and had pity on us, and cast his skirt over us, which was his own robe of righteousness. His look on us begets faith in our souls, by which we apprehend, and take hold of him. "Then I washed thee with water, yea, I thoroughly washed away thy blood from thee, and anointed thee with oil," ver. 9.

2. Christ brings it about by his death. All were under the curse of the law, to which every soul of man was married, in a covenant of works; which covenant could not be dissolved, and the sinner be delivered from this their first husband, but by the death of Jesus Christ. "But now being delivered from the law, that being dead, wherein we were held," Rom. vii. 6. And to this end (as he showeth) "That we might be married to another, even to him that God raised from the dead," &c., ver. 4. Nay, my brethren, the law is not only dead by the death of Christ, (as it was a covenant of works) but by his death, i. e., by the effects thereof, we are become dead to the law also, "Ye also are become dead to the law, by the body of Christ."

Union with Christ by means of his death, or by which the law becomes dead to us, and we to that.

We now see, that there is no relief, no help, no justification, nor eternal life, by the works of the law, "Sin revived," Rom. vii. 9. And thus is this glorious union wrought and accomplished by Jesus Christ.

2. Jesus Christ worketh about this union, by his own free offer, or tender of himself, and his infinite love to sinners in the gospel. He makes a free offer of himself, with all his benefits, to every one that will, or hath a heart to receive and embrace him. "If any man thirst, let him come to me and drink," John vii. 37. "Come to me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest," Matt. xi. 28. "He that comes unto me, I will in no wise cast out,"

Christ offers himself freely to sinners as sinners.

John vi. 36. The Lord Jesus stands with his arms spread open, to receive all that come to him. He says, "Behold me, behold me, look to me, and be saved, all ye ends of the earth."

Thirdly, this union with Christ, is more immediately effected by the Spirit, or by the Third Person of the Trinity. It is, my brethren, the more immediate work and office of the Holy Ghost, to unite sinners to the blessed Jesus; as the Father gave the Son for us, and as the Son died and shed his Blood for us, so the Holy Spirit makes his blood to become effectual and efficacious to us.

1. It is the work and office of the Spirit, to enlighten the eyes of poor blind sinners, to behold their woful condition by nature, and to convince them of the evil of sin. As also to behold a transcendent beauty and excellency in Jesus Christ.

2. The Holy Spirit doth it, by infusing new and gracious habits in their souls.

3. By breaking them off from that obligation to their former husband, the law, under which they lay; destroying all hope and expectation of justification by the law, or any righteousness of their own.

4. By causing the poor convinced sinner to die to sin, and so to divorce them from all their old lovers, i. e., "The lusts of the eyes, the lusts of the flesh, and the pride of life."

5. The Holy Spirit doth not only enlighten their understandings, and convince their consciences, but also he bows and bends their stubborn and rebellious wills, which would not yield to accept of Christ, nor subject unto him, but by the working of his Almighty power.

6. The Holy Spirit doth it by working faith in their souls. No man can believe in Christ, receive Christ, or espouse him; But as the Spirit helps them so to do. "By grace ye are saved, through faith, and that not of yourselves, it is the gift of God," Eph. ii. 8.

Brethren, it is given to us to believe; nay, the Holy Spirit works faith in us, after the same manner that God wrought in Christ, when he raised him from the dead; "It is according to the working of his mighty power." Eph. i. 18, 19.

7. By his shedding abroad the love of Christ "in our hearts," Eph. v. 5. Love to Christ is not the product of nature; believers do not love him with a mere human love, but with a divine love. Love is a fruit of the Holy Spirit, or it is a supernatural grace, (we have heard of love-powder, and I know not what) you may be sure the seed of the Spirit in the heart of a sinner, is like unto spiritual love-powder; I mean, this grace works in us physically, causing the soul as soon as it sees Jesus Christ by an eye of faith, to fall in love with him; they cannot but love him, it is a happy effect of a blessed cause.

8. By causing the sinner to choose Christ as the best good, in heaven and earth; and not to take him only as his Saviour, but also as his Head, Husband, and only Sovereign, and blessed Prophet, to be taught and led by him in all things.

9. By discovering to the soul the necessity of Christ, and that there is no salvation but in Christ, and so to build on him alone; and not only to close with him in the first act of faith, but helps the soul to commit itself to Jesus Christ, and wholly to trust and depend upon him for all supplies, continually in all things, as the wife depends upon her husband. To believe in Christ, is to live upon him, to rest on him, and to cleave to him, as the only Beloved of our affections.

1. Faith is set forth by the actings of our senses, viz., seeing him, hearing him, tasting him. "Oh! taste and see that the Lord is good." By feeling him in his powerful influences, and love-drawing operations; by smelling the sweet odour of his divine grace; his very name by the Spirit, is as an ointment poured out.

2. Faith is also set forth by the actings of our mind, or by the actings of the internal powers of the soul, viz., by desiring Christ, by longing for, by resolving not to cease until we find and enjoy him, by knowing him; to believe in him, and knowing him, the very same thing is meant; and also by putting our trust in him.

10. The Holy Spirit is so great an Agent, in bringing about this union, that he helps the soul wholly to make a resignation of itself to Christ, so as no longer to be its own, but the Lord's.

APPLICATION.

1. Exhort. To love Christ, and cleave to him, and there are mighty motives to persuade sinners to do this.

1. Consider what pangs of divine wrath his precious soul endured! Christ comes to woo sinners in his bloody garments. Behold his hands, his feet, and his bleeding side, he comes to woo you, to entreat you, to open to him, to receive him, and to espouse him, through a sea of blood, yea, of his own blood.

2. Consider his long-suffering, his coming, standing, knocking, and calling upon you at your doors. "Behold, I stand at the door and knock," Rev. iii.

Motives to espouse Jesus Christ.

20. Wonder, O ye heavens! See the King at the poor beggar's door! The Creator is come to court and woo the sorry creature, and yet is not regarded! There the Lord stands, cries, calls, knocks, and yet the sinner will not open the door, nor cry out, "Oh! who is at my door?" Cant. v. 6.

3. Ponder how importunate Christ is. His long standing, even till his head is wet with dew, and his locks with the drops of the night. His love in calling, intreating, beseeching sinners to embrace him, surely should move you. No lover, certainly, useth more sweet solicitations and persuasions, to obtain the love of a virgin, than Jesus Christ doth use to obtain your affections: "Ho, every one that thirsteth, come to the waters," Isa. lv. 1, 2.

4. Consider and ponder, his complaining and weeping, when he sees sinners refuse him; "He was grieved because of the hardness of their hearts," Mark iii. 5. Again, how doth he complain? "My people will not hearken unto me; Israel will have none of me," Psal. lxxxi. 11. "I have stretched out my hand all the day long, to a stiff-necked and rebellious people, which walked in a way that was not good," Isa. lxv. 2.

6. Consider these his mournful expostulations, when he is ready to be gone, shows how importunate he is, to embrace sinners in the arms of his love and mercy. "How shall I give thee up, O Ephraim? How shall I make thee as Admah? How shall I set thee as Zeboim? mine heart is turned in me, and my repentings are kindled together."

7. His most earnest and most importunate desire to be received by sinners, appears also by these promises of grace, and pardon, he hath made to all that believe in him. "Behold thou hast spoken and done evil things as thou couldest, only acknowledge thine iniquity," Jer. iii. 5. "Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts, and let him return unto the Lord, and he will have mercy upon him, and to our God, and he will abundantly pardon," Isa. lv. 7, 8. "All manner of sins and blasphemy against the Father and the Son, shall be forgiven unto men," Mark iii. 28, 29.

8. Consider those threatenings he denounceth against such that do condemn him, and proceed on in their wicked ways.

Brethren, it is cursed rebellion not to receive and embrace this your sovereign, or to refuse to come to his feast: "They shall not taste of my supper." That is, such shall have no pardon, no peace, no Saviour, no mercy. "He that hath the Son hath life, but he that hath not the Son, shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him," 1 John v. 12. And again he saith, "But those nine enemies, that would not that I should reign over them, bring them forth, and slay them before me," Luke xix. 27.

9. Consider that Christ's love is a matchless love. Oh, see his infinite goodness and condescension, how is he set upon the espousing of lost and undone sinners! Know, O soul, though thou art never so low, base and vile, yet Jesus Christ will accept of thee; they are the halt, the lame, the blind, and the maimed, that are received into his embraces. Though thou art one of the poor of this world, and art clothed with rags, or attended with never so great outward poverty, or art inwardly deformed and filthy, even as black as sin and hell can make thee, yet if thou come to him, he will receive thee as freely and as readily as if thou wast the highest monarch in the world.

It is not the greatness of thine iniquity, nor the multitude of them, nor thy former refusals of him, that can obstruct this thy happy union with him, if thou comest now to this wedding-supper. It is not thy former revolting, or backsliding from him, that can hinder it; may be thou art one that hast some time since strong convictions, and thou hast lost them, or hast made a profession of the gospel, but art backslidden, yet fear not, see what he says; go, and proclaim these words, "And say, return, thou backsliding Israel, saith the Lord, and I will not cause mine anger to fall upon you, for I am merciful, saith the Lord, and I will not keep anger for ever. Only acknowledge thine iniquities," Jer. iii. 12, 13.

ing sinners.

II. From hence I also infer, that it is no easy thing for a poor sinner to fall in love with Jesus Christ. It is not in the power of man's will, to tie this conjugal knot, or unite his heart to the Lord Jesus, but it must be by the agency of the mighty God, or by the power of the Holy Spirit; all moral persuasions, though never so strong and powerful, cannot do it any good, no, we must be drawn to Christ by the Father, and by the effectual influences of the Holy Ghost, if ever we are united to Jesus Christ, the Spirit is the bond of this union.

2. Exhort.] Sinners, labour to come to this marriage feast. Attend upon the means, cry to God to send the Spirit to incline your hearts, bow your wills, change your affections.

1. Consider thy refusal of Christ, is a great sin, yea the greatest sin.
 1. It is a sin against the highest and most sublime, and amazing wisdom of God the Father, who found out this way to make fallen men happy for ever.

2. It is a sin against the highest goodness of God, that was ever manifested: in this was the love of God manifest, "that he sent his own Son into the world, that we might live through him," 1 John iv. 9.

3. It is a sin against the only remedy God hath provided.

5. It is the highest act of disobedience against God, who commands thee to believe on his Son.

6. This refusal of Christ, doth cast the highest contempt upon the Lord Jesus, and tends to stain his glory. What, wilt thou prefer thy lusts, above the Lord Jesus Christ?

7. It is the soul-damning sin; "He that believeth not is condemned already," John iii. 18.

DIRECTIONS.

It may not be amiss, if I give you a few directions, about your closing with Christ, or espousing of him.

1. See it is the person of Christ you fall in love with, it must be for what Christ is, not for what he hath; many eye more the portion, than the person, but how shameful a thing is that, in the sight of all men!

2. You must espouse a whole Christ, not Jesus only, a Saviour, but Christ the Lord; not simply accept of him, or receive him, as a priest to die for you, but as a king to rule in you, and to reign over you; and as he is a Prophet to teach, guide and lead you. It is thus he is offered in the gospel.

3. Join nothing with Christ. You must espouse a single Christ, Christ alone; not Christ and Moses, not Christ and your own righteousness; no, you must not trust in Christ, and in inherent grace; not join, in point of justification, the graces of the Spirit, with the righteousness of Christ. Faith itself is no part of the matter of our justification before God, if your faith be trusted in, and relied upon as any part or procuring cause of your acceptance, and justification at God's bar, you will appear no better than an adulteress; Christ will not endure any to be a co-rival, or competitor with him. As he takes us in our rags, without any previous qualifications, or as bare, and simple sinners, so we must take him as a bare and simple Saviour, joining nothing of our own, or anything that is ours, with him.

4. You must receive a whole Christ with a whole heart, as a whole Christ comprehend all his offices, so a whole heart comprehended all our faculties: "My son, give me thy heart," not a part of it, but all of it; "thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy strength;" their heart is divided, now they shall be found faulty.

5. You must espouse the Lord Jesus immediately, not delay, but forsake your other lovers, before they leave you; some would have Christ when they can sit no longer; the present time is the season Christ hath chosen, and he loves young people, your youthful days; "I love them that love me, and they that seek me early shall find me," Prov. viii. 17. The fat is the Lord's, that is, the best of the sacrifice, the best of your days, of your love, and of your strength.

6. You must come up to Christ's terms, though they may seem never so hard to the flesh, thou must pull out a right eye, and cut off a right-hand; thou must deny thyself; and take up thy cross and follow him, not one Delilah must be spared, no sin indulged, or connived at, or lived in.

Terror. What will you do that condemn, despise, and reject the Lord Jesus, or make light of this marriage-feast? You that love the world, love your sins, or anything else above Jesus Christ; what will you do when death comes, and in the day of judgment? O know, ye sinners, that such are cursed, who love not the Lord Jesus! "If any man love not the Lord Jesus Christ, let him be Anathema Maranatha." Let him be a curse till the Lord comes; such are cursed both living and dying, and for ever.

Consol. To you that are espoused to Jesus Christ, what comfort and consolation may this afford and administer: O what a choice have you made! Or rather Christ hath made of you! What princess is thus honoured! What is all the preferment that an earthly king can raise any unto this honour! You are espoused to the son of this sublime, this noble and mighty King!

Your Husband is coming, and the marriage day is now very near: how sweet will that meeting be in the air, when you shall lie in the bosom of the blessed Jesus for ever: "We shall be caught up together, to meet the Lord in the air; and so we shall ever be with the Lord," 1 Thess. iv. 17.

"Behold the Bridegroom comes," Matt. xxv. 6, prepare to meet him (get ready) this turns all our water into wine; never rest O believer, until thou canst say, my "Beloved is mine, and I am his." Thus I close with this point of doctrine.

SERMON X.

And all things are ready, come to the marriage. Come, for all things are now ready.—
Matt. xxii. 4, Luke xiv. 17.

MATTHEW calls it a dinner, and St. Luke, a supper. The one may allude to the dispensation of gospel grace by the prophets, they being the first servants that were sent to invite sinners to this wedding. And the other may refer to the dispensation of the gospel, in the last age of the world; which may, perhaps, from thence, be called a supper: or, the one to the beginning of the gospel-feast, and the other to the latter end of it.

Why it is called a supper.

In these words are four parts.

1. Plentiful provisions prepared: "All things are ready."

2. An invitation: "Come."

3. The nature and design of the feast explained. "Come to the marriage." "Not to a common, or ordinary feast, but to a marriage, viz., To feed by faith on Christ, or to espouse Jesus Christ.

4. A strong motive, denoting speed, to come presently: "For all things are [now] ready."

Doct. The blessings of the covenant of grace, or union with Christ, contains in it, all sorts of spiritual dainties, as a sumptuous feast, ready prepared, to which sinners are invited.

Here I shall do (God assisting) five things.

1. Show, why the blessings of the gospel, or union with Christ, is compared to such a feast.

2. Show you, what those things are, that this marriage feast doth consist of, which are said to be all ready; or, what that denotes.

3. Show you, the nature of those things, of which this feast doth consist.

4. Show, what is meant by coming, and what is required of them that come.

5. Show you, who they are, that may be said to come, and eat of this feast.

1. The blessings of the gospel, or of union with Christ, may be compared to a great feast, a marriage feast.

The soul's marriage with Christ the noblest and most glorious design that ever was.

I. From the glorious design or end of it. A feast, a noble marriage feast is prepared upon a high design, even the marriage of the king's son: therefore the provision of such a feast, such a banquet, is prepared upon a high and great design.

Consider, was there ever a higher, a more glorious design than this! What, the marriage of the Son of God to poor sinners! No dinner, or supper can be provided on any occasion, equal to this. Every king and nobleman, prepares a marriage feast for his son, according to his greatness and high grandeur, and the magnificence of his son. Now, brethren, God is no petty prince, but the great King of heaven and earth, to whom all earthly kings owe subjection, and homage. Sirs! All the mighty and chief monarchs of this world, are but subjects of this King; and his Son is heir of all things, as well as "He is the brightness of his Father's glory, and the express image of his Person," Heb. i. 3; and all things are given into his hand. Therefore, in respect of the design of this supper, it may be compared to a marriage feast, yea, and the noblest and most glorious that ever was, viz.,

To join heaven and earth together, the great Creator, and the undone sinner; or, to bring mankind into a lasting union, and near relation unto God.

This marriage feast denotes the highest act of grace, and rich bounty in God, that ever was shown.

The Father heartily consents to this marriage.

II. A feast, such a marriage feast, where multitudes of poor subjects, or rather traitors and rebels are invited, denotes the highest bounty, generosity, mercy, and goodness, that a king can show, as to offer to marry his own Son, to such a person so unworthy of such favour and honour.

So, my brethren, this marriage of Christ the Son of God to sinners holds forth infinite grace, mercy, and rich bounty, even to the admiration of men and angels. What king did ever offer to marry his own son, to an enemy, to a cursed rebel and traitor, that had conspired to dethrone him?

III. A king that makes a marriage feast for his own son, thereby clearly shows, his hearty consent, it being made at his own charge. So God the Father shows his hearty consent and approbation, as to his Son's espousing and marrying of sinners, since he (as you have heard) doth not only provide all things for this feast, at his own charge, but also sends his servants to invite the guests. The love of the Son doth not exceed the love of the Father.

Choice bread and wine at this feast.

IV. A princely marriage feast consisteth not only of all choice meats, or rich dainties to be eat, but also of the choicest wines to be drunk. We read that at the marriage feast in Cana in Galilee, they had wine, though the best was reserved unto the last. So, brethren, at this spiritual banquet God hath provided in the gospel, at the marriage of his Son, are all things that are desirable to eat, and that too in a plentiful manner; "There is bread enough, and to spare, in my Father's house," Luke xv. 17. But much more for the marriage day, and also the finest and best he hath. Jesus Christ, under the name of wisdom, saith, "Eat of my bread, and drink of the wine that I have mingled," Prov. ix. 5. Alas, sirs, you that are unbelievers, never eat of such bread, nor drank of such wine in all your lives; "Why do you labour for that which is not bread," Isa. lv. 2. That which cannot feed and satisfy your soul. Here is bread indeed, meat indeed, drink indeed; all sorts of meat, such that suits with all ranks, degrees, ages, and appetites of men; as babes, young men, and fathers; "If any man thirst, let him come to me, and drink," John vii. 37, Cant. i. 2.

There is no want of any thing at this marriage.

V. At the marriage of an earthly prince, there is no want of any thing that can be desired, to feed, to delight, and to satisfy all that come. So in this marriage supper, there is no want of any thing that the soul needs: all things are here ready, the best of the whole kingdom may be expected to be had at the marriage feast of the king's son. So, here is the best of heaven, even all the choicest rarities and dainties, which are no where else to be had. A table is here richly spread, to the astonishment of the holy angels. Take a short view of those rarities on which you are to feed.

1. Here we feed by faith on the mystery of God's amazing wisdom; his wisdom in a mystery, that was hid from ages and generations: "That hidden wisdom that God ordained before the world, unto our glory. Which none of the princes of this world knew," 1 Cor. ii. 7, 8. In another place it is called, "The knowledge of Christ in a mystery; which in other ages was not made known unto the sons of men, that the Gentiles should be fellow-heirs of the same body, and partakers of his promise, in Christ by the gospel," Eph. iii. 4.

This is a choice dish, here we feed on that infinite wisdom of God, in the contrivance of the way of our salvation by Jesus Christ, and of our redemption through his blood.

Here we see how God hath defeated the devil in his hellish contrivances, in his overthrowing and ruining mankind. And how God hath not only displayed in our redemption, the attribute of his wisdom, but also the glory of all his other blessed attributes, and caused them to meet together in sweet harmony.

2. Here we also feed on the sweet dish of God's eternal council, purpose, and decree, before the world began. His cabinet councils, (if I may so say, with reverence) are here opened at this marriage feast, before our eyes; "Which from the beginning of the world, hath been hid in God, who created all things by Jesus Christ," Eph. iii. 9, 10. In which are so great and sublime rarities, that the principalities and powers in heavenly places, greatly desire to feed with you herein, as they are made known by the church, even the manifold wisdom of God. Though they are not concerned in marrying of Jesus Christ, (he not taking hold of the nature of angels) yet they are greatly affected with the secret wisdom and counsel of God, as it is here revealed.

3. Here also poor sinners by faith, may feed on the infinite love of God the Father, and on the love of Jesus Christ, which passeth knowledge.

4. Moreover, here they may feed on the Antitype of all those Jewish feasts, and legal sacrifices, which were under the law. They had many feasts which were types of this marriage feast; they had the shell, but we have the kernel; they the shadow, we the substance.

5. Here sinners may feed on the true manna that came down from heaven, which far exceeds that which the fathers eat of in the wilderness, and are dead, "but he that eats of this manna, shall live for ever." Here also at this marriage supper you may drink of the antitypical water that came out of the rock, which is of admirable virtue, and sweet to the taste.

6. Here sinners may feed on those precious dainties, which kings and good men of old longed for, but it was denied them in that manner as we in gospel-days have it. They saw Christ's day but darkly. They beheld this marriage supper afar off, as it is solemnized in these days, it prophesied as a thing to come, "In this mountain shall the Lord of Hosts make a feast," &c., Isa. xxv. 6.

Kings and righteous men desired to see this marriage feast.

7. The King hath now, as it were opened his princely closet of his choicest rarities, and brings forth all his delicate sweet-meats, and bids us eat. Jesus Christ takes now his spouse into his banqueting-house; "This is the day of the gladness of his heart." Here we sit with the King, and behold him in his arms, whilst we are ravished with his love.

The King's closet opened.

8. Here we feed on the blessings of union and communion, with the Father, and the Son, and have the fellowship of the Spirit, and joy in the Holy Ghost.

Union and communion tasted of at this marriage feast. Wine of consolation at this supper.

9. Here we drink of the wine of consolation, which those who taste of, soon forget their sorrows. Here we eat the bread of reconciliation, and drink the wine of free justification, and adoption. Here we fed on the sweet-meat of pardon of sin, all past, present, and to come; and on peace of conscience, which is a continual feast.

10. Here sinners may taste of those heavenly dainties, which the glorified saints partake of in abundance, in the celestial paradise; though our vessels can take in but a little of it, though their's are enlarged, yet believers here, partake of the same joys, the same in quality, though not as to degree, or quantity. This, my brethren, is that "Feast of fat things, a feast of wine upon the lees, of fat things full of marrow, of wines on the lees, well refined," Isa. xxv. 6.

The saints' joys are of the same quality as those in heaven.

This feast, saith our late Annotator, is made up with the most exquisite delicate provisions, which are manifestly meant of the ordinances, graces, and comforts, given by the Lord to his saints.

Mr. Poole.

11. As this marriage feast consists of the choicest rarities, and varieties of heaven, so it is also all free. It is free to sinners, free to the receivers, but costly to the Provider and Founder of it. It cost the Father dear, and the Son dear; but all that are bid and invited, are not to pay one farthing for any thing. Sometimes people that come to a feast, are sumptuously entertained, but yet may not know what bill may be brought them; but when the master of the feast says, "Gentlemen, you are all heartily welcome, but here is not a farthing to pay." This makes them cheerful. Even so it is here, God bids all that come to this feast, Welcome; but it is all of his own free grace; "Wine and milk without money," &c., Isa. lv. 1, 2. A poor sinner may say with Peter and John, "Silver and gold have I none." Yet he may come to this wedding, and eat freely. Oh! what a dishonour indeed would it be to a king, that bids you to the marriage feast of his Son, should any of you bring something of your own, and set it upon his table, in the midst of his dainties! How would he frown upon you, should you do this, and say, Who brought this hither? Am I not able to entertain you with my own, but you must bring your paltry stuff? Let those who are tainted with the errors of Arminianism, or Baxterianism, think of this, who strive to mix the King's wine with their muddy water, or mix their polluted works with God's free grace. How doth he loathe their notions of free will, and their own righteousness! Do they think to be the more welcome at this wedding, because, forsooth they would, through the pride of their base hearts, help God, and bear some part of the charge of this feast? As if the Almighty Jehovah, was not rich or able enough, to do all Himself alone! Oh! how fain would sorry man have somewhat to boast of, and glory in, of their own, and God not have the whole honour of our salvation?

VI. A wedding dinner of a prince is prepared in the king's own house, in his palace; so this feast is prepared and made in God's holy mountain, in his church; "Sion is God's habitation," it is the King's palace, "In Salem is his tabernacle, and his dwelling-place in Sion," Psal. lxxvi. 2. "This is my dwelling-place for ever, here will I dwell," Psal. cxxxii. 1-4. Thither, sinners, you must go, thither you are invited, if you would eat of this supper; "In this mountain shall the Lord of Hosts make unto all people, a feast of fat things," Isa. xxv. 6.

The church, beloved, is Christ's banqueting house, or his house of wine; "He hath made us sit down together in heavenly places, in Christ Jesus." Do you, sinners, think to feed with the saints, and eat of this supper, whilst you remain without? This marriage is not kept abroad in the market-place, in the open air of this world. You must not expect any choice entertainment by the king, if you come not to court. True, some that come to the door only, may, perhaps have a small morsel from the king's table; so some sinners that never come up to God's terms to espouse Christ, have the ministry of the word; they may taste of that, though they feed not freely on it, nor of Christ in it. I do not say, none can feed on this feast, but such that are of this, or that particular church; but, however, they must be members of the mystical church, of the universal church. But they that are convinced, it is their indispensable duty, to join with the visible church, and have an opportunity so to do, it may be feared, if they sin against conscience, whether they shall ever taste of the King's supper.

All are not called or bid to this feast.

VII. A marriage feast is prepared for such that are invited; and a king is at liberty to bid or invite whom he pleaseth; all is at his own sovereign pleasure. Is he bound to bid all that dwell in his dominions? No, surely, if any of you make a marriage feast for son or daughter, you are at liberty to invite whom you will; nor can any justly censure you, because you do not invite all that dwell in your parish. So it is here, in this respect, no man treats himself, invites himself, but it is God's prerogative to bid whomsoever he pleaseth, though many that are invited, do not, will not come; yet none can come but such that are called by the Gospel. True, "many are called, but few are chosen." But God doth not call all nations, all the world have not the gospel preached to them; no, many dark regions of the earth never heard the joyful sound. Though we hear it in England, few ever heard it in India; the antichristian world, the Many nations are ignorant of this supper, and not called to it.

Mahometan world, and the Pagan world have it not, and, is God therefore unjust? God forbid. Is he deprived of that liberty of his own will, which, in such a case, none can deny unto man? May not God act from his own sovereignty, and do what he pleaseth? "Is it not lawful for me to do what I will with my own?" Matt. xx. 15. And, though God is pleased to afford the gospel to England, yet all in this nation are not invited, no, not all of this city, of this and that town, or parish, nor all of this or that family. See what God says, "I will take you one of a city, and two of a family, and bring you to Sion," Jer. iii. 14. He called and invited Abraham of old, but left the rest of his kindred and father's house in gross idolatry. Was he unjust, to choose the nation of the Jews, and leave all the Gentile nations in blindness? Oh, that these things were well considered! Brethren, God might have refused to send his Son to espouse one of Adam's race; he might justly have suffered all to perish in their sins. "I will have mercy, on whom I will have mercy, and I will have compassion on whom I will have compassion," Rom. ix. 15.

Great joy at this marriage feast.

VIII. A marriage feast denotes a time of joy and mirth. If music and merriment be ever lawful to be used, it is at a wedding.

So this marriage feast doth hold forth a time of greatest joy to sinners. Should a prince court a poor virgin, and set the marriage day, and invite her to court, to be taken into his embraces, would not this fill her full of joy? So nothing can more cheer and rejoice the hearts of lost sinners, than the news that Jesus Christ is fallen in love with them, and has appointed the marriage day, and has also provided a marriage feast, and invited them to come and accept of his love, and most gracious purpose to espouse them unto himself; "Thou shalt rejoice in thy feasts, thou, and thy sons and thy daughters," &c., Deut. xvi. 14. What was the feast of the tabernacle a type of, but this marriage feast? It is said, when Philip came down to the city of Samaria, and preached Christ to them, and they believed, "there was great joy in that city," Acts viii. 8, and great cause for it! What, be espoused to Christ! Be freely justified by God's grace! Have all their sins pardoned, and not see cause of joy, and of singing God's praises!

The waiters at this feast, who.

IX. At a marriage feast of a prince, there are waiters who are persons of honour, called, maids of honour. So here wisdom "has killed her beasts, mingled her wine, and sent forth her maidens," Prov. ix. 2, 3; which are the ministers of the gospel, who are waiters, or such that attend at this marriage feast, "Who are to give to every one his portion of meat in due season," Luke xii. 42. The queen of Sheba was wonderfully taken with the sitting and attendance of Solomon's servants; noble persons, especially kings, have noble attendance. Solomon was a type of Christ, and the order of his house, and attendance of his servants amazed the queen of Sheba. But besides the ministers of the gospel, the holy angels attend on the bride and bridegroom. "They administer unto them that are heirs of eternal salvation," Heb. i. 14. This shows the great honour Christ doth vouchsafe unto his Saints. What are the ministers of Christ on earth, to those blessed angels of heaven, who he commands to wait upon, and minister to his people here.

X. Sometimes, perhaps, at a marriage feast, all that are invited, will not come, and, for their neglect, others are sent to, who were not at first invited.

So it is here, the Jews were first invited to this marriage supper, but they refused to come; and we poor Gentiles were then sent to, and are graciously invited; we, who lay in the highways, and under hedges, that we may partake of their leavings, and sup with Christ.

APPLICATION.

I. I infer, That God is exceeding good and gracious to sinners, it is beyond all the conceptions of our hearts, and expressions of our lips. Let all in heaven and earth stand and wonder that such a banquet should be prepared, and such invitations vouchsafed, to vile and ungodly ones.

EXHORTATION.

2. O bless God for this supper, and for such large provision prepared! What encouragement is here for all to come! Here is enough, "Come who will." But to proceed,

I shall show you what a feast is. This is my next great work. It is a great feast.

1. Brethren, this is a great and large feast; here is provision for multitudes, the quantity is great, consisting of many costly dishes; here is all; "Who can understand the loving-kindness of the Lord?" "Hast thou entered into the springs of the sea? or hast thou walked in the search of the depth? who can number the clouds in wisdom?" Job xxxviii. 22, 37, stand and wonder!

2. It is a costly banquet; the life of the bridegroom went to purchase the food and provision of this feast; sirs, gold and silver cannot purchase the least morsel of this banquet, it may be said of it, as Job speaks of wisdom, "It cannot be gotten for gold, neither shall silver be weighed for the price thereof; it cannot be valued with the gold of Ophir, with the precious onyx, or the sapphire; the gold and the crystal cannot equal it, and the exchange of it shall not be for jewels of fine gold," Job xxviii. 15—17. It is a costly feast.

3. It is a noble feast, a most honourable banquet, a most magnificent stately supper, on the marriage of the mighty King, the royal heir of both worlds, here earth is married to the noble line and offspring of heaven, it is therefore a most glorious feast, the design of it is a most glorious design, (as you have heard) proceeding from a most glorious cause, and is attended with the like glorious effects. It is a noble, a glorious, and magnificent feast.

4. It is an heavenly feast, the food of which it consisteth is heavenly; the bread eaten here came from heaven, the subject it feeds is heavenly, viz., the soul of man; and the nourishment such receive that feed upon it, is heavenly nourishment; the company that here sit and eat together, are all heavenly, being born from above; the music that is at this banquet, is heavenly music, heavenly songs, sung with heavenly and gracious hearts. It is an heavenly feast.

5. It is a love feast, or a feast made wholly up of love, eternal love was the spring of it; the rise and cause of it was love, the design and purport of it is, to manifest love, infinite love, sweet and eternal love, soul-enriching, soul-delighting, soul satisfying, and soul exalting love; here the rich feed the poor, the rich Creator feeds the poor lost, undone creature; the rich Saviour feeds the miserable, and wretched sinner. It is a love feast.

6. It is a mysterious feast; such a feast as to what is meant, and held forth by it, very few understand; for all that come to eat and feed at other marriage feasts, do not marry the bridegroom, nor doth eating of those dainties produce such an effect as union in bonds of nearest affinity, with the lord and master of the feast, but all that come to this marriage feast, and eat of this food, are thereby united, or espoused to Jesus Christ; for what is it to eat of this provision, but to believe, or receive Jesus Christ by faith? by which means, through the Spirit, they all are immediately espoused to the Lord Jesus. It is a mysterious feast.

7. It is a wonderful, a full, an incomparable feast: Solomon's provision for his table, was nothing unto this; no feast that ever was made by any king, was any thing to this; yet Solomon's provision for one day amounted to a large bill, viz., "Thirty measures of fine flower, and threescore measures of It is an incomparable feast for richness, &c.

meal, ten fat oxen, and twenty oxen out of the pastures, and an hundred sheep, besides harts, and roe-bucks, and fallow deer, and fatted fowl," 1 Kings iv. 22, 23. But alas! the supper of this King, i. e., the great God, is far richer, and more abundant store, more in quantity, and richer far in quality: the lamb that is ready slain, and prepared to be eaten at this feast, is more in worth and value, than ten thousand feasts, and every thing that can be contained in them, that ever was, or can be made by mortals; nay, worth more than ten thousand worlds: the water that is here drank at this wedding, one drop of it is better than ten thousand tuns of the rarest wine than ever was provided at any other feasts: it is the water of life, all such that drink of it shall never die. "Whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him, shall never thirst; but the water that I shall give him, shall be in him as a well of water, springing up into eternal life," John iv. 14.

The bread at this feast came down from heaven; "the bread of God is he which cometh down from heaven, and giveth life unto the world," John vi. 33. Bread of life, spiritual bread, heavenly bread, or true bread from heaven, "He that eateth thereof shall never hunger," John vi. 35.

At this feast we eat of the hidden manna of election, and of the sweet-meats of spiritual knowledge, and divine and saving illuminations, and feed on the marrow of justification, and pardon of sin, and on the honey-comb of free grace, and drink of those consolations that are in Christ, and the fellowship of the Spirit, and bowels of mercy, on the comforts of love, on the choice rarity of a lively hope, and taste of the oil of joy, peace of conscience, and the fat of ordinances, and the sweetness of the promises, and blessings of the word, that is sweeter than honey, or the honey-comb; better than gold, yea than much fine gold. Here we are stayed with flagons, and comforted with apples, being sick of love.

Here we eat of the rarities of the covenant of grace, and are delighted with the effects and fruits of saving faith, and may taste of the blessings of assurance.

Now put all these together, and then say, this is a marriage feast indeed; Oh, who would not come unto it, that are invited! Oh know ye poor sinners (that hear me this day) you are some of them, you are again bid to this marriage; what are your resolutions? Will you come? Do you think these things are but stories? or are you persuaded of the truth and reality of them? How then can you refuse to embrace Jesus Christ.

CONSOLATION.

Oh! and what is the happiness of all those that are come and do partake of this supper! Let such be thankful, and live answerable to such privileges. But no more at this time.

SERMON XI.

Come, for all things are now ready.—Matt. xxii. 4, Luke xiv. 17.

THE last day I closed with the second general head.

I have shewed, what a kind of feast this marriage feast is, I shall proceed to the next thing.

Thirdly, I shall shew you, what is meant by all things being now ready. And,

1. What these words do imply, "all things are now ready."
2. Shew you, what these things are, that are now ready.

What is meant by all things being ready.

I. These words, now ready, do imply, that the sinner that is invited, is not to bring anything with him to this wedding, to entertain himself; no morsel of his own, nothing is required of him, unless it be an hungry stomach, or a thirsty soul; "If any man thirst let him come to me and drink," John vii. 36, 37.

Object. Some perhaps may say, is he not to bring a wedding garment with him?

Ans. No person will be entertained without a wedding garment; but that is not of the sinner's own providing, nor can he prepare it, he hath nothing to make it of; the wedding garment is a very rich robe, (as you will hear hereafter) but all a man's own righteousness is not worth one farthing in God's account, being compared to filthy rags: the wedding garment is, my brethren, given to those that come and eat of this marriage supper; and it is among those things that are ready, and it is one of the first things that the sinner that comes ought to look after, and if he hath it not, there will be no room for him at this wedding.

II. These words, all things are now ready, do imply, that all the provision of this marriage feast, is of God's providing; and that all is of his own free grace, through Jesus Christ; all things are of God, who hath reconciled us unto himself by Jesus Christ, etc. "By grace ye are saved." 2 Cor. v. 18. Eph. ii. 8.

III. These words do imply, that all things that concern our salvation and justification, are all ready purchased, provided, and prepared for us: the Lamb of God is not now to be slain, but he is already slain; satisfaction is not to be made to God's justice by anything Jesus Christ is to do in, or for the sinner that is invited; no, but justice is already satisfied, and sin is expiated already by Jesus Christ. Heb. ix. 26, 28, cap. 10, 10.

A robe of righteousness is not to be prepared, or wrought by the Spirit of God, (much less not by the sinner himself) but that this robe of righteousness is by Jesus Christ wrought out for us, by his active and passive obedience, and it is ready to be put upon every sinner that comes to this wedding.

If brethren, [faith] was this wedding garment, either as a sacred habit or grace of the Spirit in the soul, or as the act of the soul, then it could not be said, that all things are now ready; because the words denote, that all the provision is made for us, without us, not within us; that righteousness by which sinners are justified at God's bar, is not a righteousness wrought in them, but without them, in the person of Christ, and it is put upon all that do believe in Christ, whose obedience is the meritorious, and the material cause of our justification, he has done all, in respect of our justification, the robe is made, although the Holy Spirit has not done all his work as to the application of Christ's righteousness, blood, and merits, to poor sinners, yet the Holy Spirit is ready to enlighten, to quicken, to regenerate.

IV. These words, now ready, may respect the clearness and fullness of the gospel provision, and revelation of it above the law, "The law made nothing perfect," Heb. vii. 19, but the gospel doth: now we need no higher, no other, or clearer revelation or discovery of God, Christ, and salvation. The law shadowed forth (in its types and ceremonies) the gospel, but all things then were not fully ready, to be presented to our open view, as in the gospel they are.

V. Now ready, may denote, they were not so ready until now; and they are so ready now, that God seems to wait for his guests; and Christ hath now no more to do, but to receive and embrace, and bid all welcome, that come to this marriage; and they therefore carry a sharp reproof to all that make not haste to come to this wedding: shall God's costly supper be quite ready, and Christ the Bridegroom stay for us, and we not hasten away?

Lastly, it is a strong motive to sinners to come away, it is supper-time, and all things are quite ready, Luke xiv. 17.

Secondly, I shall show you, (how) what those things are which are now ready.

I. Here is the mighty God, who was greatly offended, and full of wrath, ready pacified and reconciled in Christ, to all that come to this wedding; "Fury is not in me:" fury was in him, but in Christ it is put away; "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." "For if, when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God, by the death of his Son," &c., Matt. iii. 17, Rom. v. 10.

God is ready pacified and reconciled in Christ.

The reconciling sacrifice is offered, that atoned for our offences, yet none but they that believe receive the atonement.

The price is paid, but the captive may not presently be discharged, his fetters may not be knocked off, Christ's blood may not yet be applied, but it shall be to all them for whom he died.

2. The blessed God and Father is ready to receive all that come to this marriage supper; he stands ready with his arms spread open to embrace them, and bid them welcome, let them be never such sinners, profuse prodigals, that have wasted all their substance on harlots; Sirs, were not sinners besides themselves, sure they would haste away to this supper, or arise and go with the prodigal to their Father; it is said, "And when he came to himself he said, how many hired servants of my father's have bread enough, and to spare, and I perish with hunger: I will arise and go to my father," Luke xv. 17. Well, and will his father receive him, shall he be entertained that hath thus sinned, thus offended? Yea, his father no sooner saw him, though he was "afar off," but he had compassion, and ran to meet him.

God the Father is ready to receive sinners.

By the Father of this prodigal, the great God is meant, and by the prodigal an ungodly sinner, one that has been most profane, and abominably wicked. God doth not stand ready only to receive a returning sinner, until he come home, but

See the parable of the prodigal

opened.

he runs to meet him; indeed, he knows that there are such obstructions, or obstacles in the way, that they cannot come to Jesus Christ, unless he draws them, unless he helps them, or brings them, by the power and influences of his Spirit. But, O see how ready God is to embrace returning sinners! The father "fell on the neck of his prodigal son, and kissed him," Luke xv. 20. Though your sins be as red as scarlet, as red as crimson; though you have done as many evil things as you could, yet

Jesus Christ stands ready to receive all that come to the marriage.

if you come to Christ, the Father stands ready to bid you welcome, Jer. iii. 5.
3. Jesus Christ is also ready to espouse all poor sinners that come to him, or that come to this marriage supper: he stands waiting, looking out, (as it were) to see who comes unto him, that he may manifest himself, in all his perfections, and personal excellencies, to them, in the ministration of the gospel; saying unto them, "Behold me, behold me; look unto me and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth," Isa. lxx. 1, Isa. xlv. 22.

Jesus Christ stands ready waiting, having all his glorious wedding robes on, being every way decked as a bridegroom for the bride; and says, "Come unto me all ye that labour, and are heavy-laden, and I will give you rest," Matt. xi. 28. They, and they only that believe in Christ, that come to Christ, do enter into rest. Christ is the only rest for the soul; there is rest from the labour and sore bondage of the law; in him is rest, also, from the guilt of sin, and from the fear of wrath, and divine vengeance, the punishment of sin; and Jesus Christ is ready to give this rest to all that believe in him, or that come to this wedding supper; "All that the Father giveth me, shall come to me; and he that comes to me, I will in no wise cast out," John vi. 37.

The wedding garment is ready.

See the parable of the Book II.

4. And, as I have hinted, here is also a wedding garment ready, it is wrought by Jesus Christ, he made it; it is not to be made or spun out of our bowels; the sinner hath no stuff, no materials to make this garment of; it is, brethren, a robe that is compared to cloth of gold, "Upon the right hand did stand the queen, in gold of Ophir," Psal. xlv. 9; it is made of the choicest gold; it is said, "her clothing is wrought gold;" this is not that glory that is within her, but it is a robe put upon her. True, "The king's daughter is all glorious within," ver. 13. This, no doubt, refers to the graces of the Spirit, and to her inward holiness, or the righteousness of sanctification that is within, or inherent; but her clothing, that is prepared for her without, and put upon her, is wrought gold: the matter of this garment (saith a divine) was prepared by the Father, the first Person of the Trinity: the Son he wrought it, he made the garment, by his perfect obedience to the law of God, and suffering the penalty thereof in our room; and the Holy Ghost puts it upon the soul, he applies Christ's merits; he unites us to Christ, and works faith in us, and so puts this glorious robe on our souls.

But, pray brethren, see, I beseech you, to take care rightly to distinguish between the garment of justification, and that of sanctification; many confound these two together, and strive to mix our inherent righteousness in our justification, with the righteousness of Christ: this was that error that Mr. Baxter led the people into (though I hope he was a good man, God might open his eyes before he died.) It is, sirs, a dangerous thing to adhere to such a notion; this is to make our justification to be partly by works, and partly by grace. I tell you once again, all works of righteousness, either done by us, or wrought in us, are utterly excluded in our free justification. O! how do I long to see you all well established in this great fundamental truth of the gospel! "If it be by grace, then it is no more of works, otherwise grace is no more grace; but if it be of works, then it is no more of grace, otherwise work is no more work," Rom. xi. 6. Our justification in the sight of God, is as much of free-grace, as is our election and effectual calling. "He that worketh not, but believeth on him that justifieth the ungodly, his faith is counted for righteousness," Rom. iv. 5. In the Lord, shall one say, have I righteousness and strength, not in ourselves, but in the Lord; "Who of God is made unto us, wisdom and righteousness, sanctification and redemption," 1 Cor. i. 30. This is the wedding garment that is ready. Do not think you must bring this robe along with you, that come to this marriage supper; no, no, all our righteousness is but as dung, compared to this righteousness; "He made him sin for us, who knew no sin, that we might be made the righteousness of God in him," 2 Cor. v. 21.

to heal sinners.

VI. Here is Christ as a skilful and able Physician, ready to heal all your wounds, and sickness of your souls; he that is our Bridegroom to espouse us, is our Physician (I told you) to heal us. Sirs, you must not think to get rid of your sins, or cured of your sores, before you come to Christ; you must come to him as sinners; "The whole need not a physician, but they that are sick," Matt. ix. 12. Nothing can heal our wounds, but the blood of our Physician, applied by faith to our souls.

Sinners when they first come to Christ, are wounded in every part and faculty of their souls; "From the crown of their heads to the soles of their feet, there is nothing but wounds, bruises, and putrifying sores," Isa. i. 6. But he stands ready to heal all that come to this marriage feast.

1. He heals the plague of a hard heart; he breaks this, and none but he can break the heart of stone, and take it away; "I will take the stone out of your flesh, and will give you a heart of flesh."

What diseases Christ cures.

2. He it is that heads our stubborn and obstinate wills; "Ye will not come to me, that ye may have life," John v. 40. It is Christ that bows and subjects the rebellious will; "My people shall be willing in the day of my power," Psal. cx. 3.

3. He cures us of that great blindness of our understanding; it is he that hath the eye-salve, to open their eyes that were born blind, and none but he; "I counsel thee to buy of me gold tried in the fire, that thou mayest be rich, and white raiment, that thou mayest be clothed, that the shame of thy nakedness do not appear; and anoint thine eyes with eye-salve, that thou mayest see," Rev. iii. 18. He is appointed of God to open blind eyes; all men are born blind, spiritually blind, and no man can see till Christ opens their eyes.

4. It is he that must cure the soul of that tympany of pride: man naturally is conceited, and very proud and rich in his own fancy; but Jesus Christ shows him his poverty and wretchedness, and brings him to his feet, even to clothe himself.

5. Christ cures our souls of that carnality that is in our affections; mankind naturally have their hearts set upon earthly things and objects.

6. Here is a fountain ready to wash the poor polluted sinner from all its filthiness: you must not think you are to wash yourselves from your pollution, and then come to Christ, then come to this marriage supper, then espouse Christ; as if you thought he would not accept you, receive you, espouse you, in your blood and filth. O take heed, for the Lord's sake, of this. You are not first washed, and then believe, then come to Christ, or espouse him: pray see what he says by the prophet Ezekiel, "And when I passed by, and saw thee polluted in thy own blood, I said to thee, live. Yea, I said unto thee, when thou wast in thy blood, live. Now when I passed by thee, and looked upon thee, behold thy time was the time of love, and I spread my skirt over thee, and covered thy nakedness," Ezek. xvi. 6, 8. That is, I cast upon thee my robe of righteousness; "Yea, I swear unto thee, and entered into covenant with thee saith the Lord God, and thou becamest mine." Christ first saw us polluted in our blood, and died for us. Again he looked upon us, to call us to this marriage feast; this was also the time of his love, when we lay in our sins, and were originally and actually defiled and polluted, and when we were in this condition, he swore to us, and entered into a conjugal covenant with us, or was pleased them to espouse us, and make us his own; and now see what follows, "then I washed away thy blood from thee, and I anointed thee with fresh oil," Ezek. xvi. 9. This refers to the sanctifying virtue of the Holy Spirit; the sinner is not to wash himself first, and then come to Christ; but come Christ that he may be washed. Sanctification doth not precede our union with Christ, but follows, (it is an effect thereof) at least in order of nature, though not in order of time.

A fountain ready to wash in.

VII. The Holy Spirit, the third person of the blessed Trinity, is ready to discharge his office, to all sinners, who are made willing to come to this marriage, or are chosen ones. His work is to quicken, or to infuse a vital principle into the soul; no sinner can come until this is done, where there is no life, there can be no motion.

The Holy Ghost is ready to quicken dead sinners, &c.

The work of the Spirit is, to enlighten, to renew, or regenerate the soul; and all this the Holy Spirit is ready to do, for all those that God hath chosen and called to this wedding.

VIII. Free grace in God, is ready to adopt all for sons and daughters who come; "because ye are sons, God hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son into your hearts, crying Abba Father," Gal. iv. 6. This ariseth from the favour of God; "to as many as received him, to them gave he power (or privileges) to become the sons of God, even to as many as believe on his name," John i. 12. Such are no more servants, but sons.

Adoption is ready to be conferred on all that come to Christ.

IX. Here is a Lamb ready slain, and prepared, as choice food for the soul to feed upon, with bread and water of life, and all other spiritual varieties, suitable for such a marriage supper.

Bread and water of life is ready.

Spiritual music is ready.

X. Here is the great master of spiritual music ready, to rejoice and cheer all the guests that come to this wedding.

The Holy Ghost fills the heart with grace and peace, peace with God, and peace of conscience, and joy in believing; "and they began to be merry: now the elder son was in the field, and as he came, and drew nigh to the house, he heard music and dancing." Luke xv. 24, 25.

Ornaments of grace
ready.

XI. Here is an ornament of grace ready, like a crown unto thy head, and chains beyond gold, to put "about thy neck," Prov. i. 9; and a ring ready to put upon thy finger, with this motto, "My beloved is mine, and I am his." Every soul that espouseth Jesus Christ, is very richly adorned in the inward man, with the grace of the Holy Spirit.

Pardon of
sin is ready.

XII. Here is pardon ready, under the broad seal of heaven. Pardon! perhaps some may say, how large and extensive is it? Is it a pardon of all my sins, that ever I have committed against God? and not only a pardon of all past, but is it of all to come also?

I answer, It is a pardon of all sins past, present, and to come, as to that vindictive wrath that is due to them; although perhaps the soul may not see it quickly, or have the feeling comfort of it in his own conscience. Nay, God may, for present and future sins, be displeased and offended, and as a tender Father may correct the child he loves, yet he will not disown, nor turn his child out of his house, nor remove his loving-kindness from it. I mean, there cannot be a breach made on our justification, God's covenant of peace he will not break, union with Christ cannot be lost. "There is therefore now no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus," Rom. viii. 1. If all sins present and to come, of believers, as to vindictive wrath, were not forgiven, then there might be condemnation due to them that are in Christ Jesus; for that sin that is not forgiven; as touching that just wrath and divine vengeance that is the demerit of it, binds the soul under eternal condemnation, but such "That believe in Christ, shall not come into condemnation, but are passed from death to life," John v. 24. That is, they are passed out of a state of spiritual death and condemnation, and are always in a state of eternal life, and shall at last pass into it actually. "For by one offering he hath perfected for ever them that are sanctified," Heb. x. 14.

Strong con-
ady in Christ.

XIII. Here is a cup of strong consolation ready, enough to ravish the souls of all that espouse the Son of God, or rather that are espoused by him; God having passed both his word and oath to confirm his covenant, even salvation to all his seed; "Wherein, God willing more abundantly to show unto the heirs of promise the immutability of his counsel, confirmed it by an oath; that by two immutable things in which it is impossible for God to lie, we might have strong consolation, who have fled for refuge, to lay hold upon the hope set before us," Heb. vi. 17, 18.

This is enough to cheer our drooping spirits to the full, and to vanquish all doubts and fears for ever. God can as soon lie, or be guilty of perjury, (which is the highest blasphemy to say) as that one believer shall eternally be lost, or perish for ever. Sure such who refuse to come to Christ, esteem the consolations of God to be but small, and the reason of it is, because the consolations and comforts of this world, are great with them, they value earth above heaven, and the pleasures of sin more than joy in the Holy Ghost.

Christ's ministers ready to watch
saints.

XIV. Here are the servants of Christ ready. I mean, his ministers, to give them that come the right-hand of fellowship, and to break the bread of life unto them; yea, "To give every one his portion of meat in due season." They will withhold nothing from them, that their Great Master hath appointed for them; "And how I kept back nothing that was profitable unto you, but have showed you, and taught you publicly, and from house to house," Acts xx. 20. Again he saith, "For I have not shunned to declare unto you, all the counsel of God," ver. 27. Ministers are ready to watch for their souls.

Angels ready to guard and defend the saints.

XV. Here, my brethren, here are the angels of God ready also, to conduct them, to guard them, to defend them, and to minister to all that shall be, or are heirs of eternal life. "They are, saith Reverend Bifield, appointed as special attendants about Christ, as the Messiah; and they serve also as ministering spirits, to keep and attend upon the elect; in life they defend and keep them, as a strong guard about them, and plague their enemies, Heb. i. 14. And in death, they are about them, and carry their souls to heaven, as they did the soul of Lazarus. Psal. xci. 3, 4." The Bridegroom doth readily vouchsafe his own guard, his own retinue, his glorious courtiers, to be a guard and retinue to his bride, and to every soul he doth espouse.

XVI. Here are ordinances also ready, i. e., holy baptism ready, that so you may have communion with the Lord Jesus, (in a lively symbol) of his death, burial, and resurrection which you ought to receive, as a pledge of the remission of all your sins, and to show, that all your iniquities are washed away in his blood, and buried in his grave; and hereby also you come to be let into his church, and in a regular way admitted to his holy table. "Then they that gladly received the word were baptized, and the same day there were added unto them about three thousand souls," Acts ii. 41. Baptism is ready always to him that comes to Christ, that believes in Christ, and it is a great sin then, for such to neglect it; "And now arise, why tarriest thou? and be baptized," said Ananias to Paul, Acts ix. 17.

are ready,

XVII. Here is also imposition of hands ready, that so you may receive a further measure of the promised Spirit, which is made to all them that love Christ, and keep his commandments, to the end you may be confirmed and established in the truth, and receive the earnest of the Spirit, and the seal and comforts thereof, to your own souls.

Eph. i. 13,
30.

XVIII. Here is a place ready for you that come to the house of God; I say, a place in the church is ready for you; holy David greatly valued this privilege, it is that one thing which he desired; "One thing have I desired of the Lord, and that will I seek after, that I may dwell in the house of the Lord all the days of my life," Psal. xxvii. 4.

A place in

Certainly this is a glorious privilege, is it not esteemed a high honour to dwell always in the king's palace, in his courts, nay, to dwell with the king in his own house; and dwelling-place? "Beautiful for situation, the joy of the whole earth is Mount Zion, on the sides of the north is the city of the great king. God is known in her palaces for a refuge," Psal. xlviii. 2, 3. Again saith the Psalmist, "The Lord hath chosen Zion, he hath desired it for his habitation; this is my rest for ever, here will I dwell, for I have desired it," Psal. cxxxii. 13, 14. Again he saith, "blessed are they that dwell in thy house," none have any right to dwell in the gospel church, but believers only, none but the true spiritual seed of Abraham. The bond-woman, and her seed, i. e., the fleshly seed, (as such) are cast out in this, there is a difference between the legal, and the gospel church; "cast out the bond-woman and her son," Gal. iv. 30.

XIX. There are mansions in heaven also ready for your souls, when you die, every one that comes to this wedding, ought to be told of this, Christ hath prepared, and made ready dwelling places for them above; "In my Father's house are many mansions, if it were not so, I would have told you, I go to prepare a place for you," John xiv. 2. The poorest saint here, that lives in the meanest cottage on earth, hath a glorious house prepared for him in heaven; "for we know, that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens," 2 Cor. v. 1.

A place in
ready.

XX. There is a glorious kingdom ready, every believer is born an heir to a kingdom, and when they come to age, they shall possess it: the poorest saint is an heir of a kingdom; "hearken, my beloved brethren, hath not God chosen the poor of this world rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom, which he hath promised to them that love him," Jam. ii. 5. Oh! how rich is Christ, the Bridegroom of our souls! he hath a kingdom to give, or to bestow upon all he espouseth, a rich kingdom, an immovable kingdom, yea, an eternal kingdom: "Fear not, little flock, it is your father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom," Luke xii. 32.

A kingdom is ready for every believer.

XXI. There is not only a kingdom ready, but a throne is ready also, for every believer; all that Christ espouseth, shall sit down with him on his throne, and judge the world with him; "He that overcometh shall sit down with me in my throne, even as I have overcome, and am set down with my Father in his throne," Rev. iii. 21.

A glorious
ready.

XXII. And lastly, there is likewise a crown of glory ready: surely, all may see here is encouragement enough to come to this marriage supper; every believer shall have a crown of glory, far better than a crown of gold; earthly crowns are troublesome things, as I am persuaded they that wear them at this time find, by woful experience. One of the French kings found it so formerly, which made him say, as I have read, "That if a crown lay at his feet, he would not put forth his hand to lift it up to put it upon his head." But this crown will be an easy crown; no trouble, no sharp thorn will attend the crown of life: see what Paul says, "I have fought the good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith, henceforth there is laid up for me

a crown of righteousness," 1 Tim. iv. 7, 8. Aye, perhaps you may say, a crown was laid up for Paul, that may be, but we are not Pauls, we are not such captains for Christ as he was. Well, but see further what he says, "Which the Lord, the righteous Judge, will give to me at that day, and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearance." Every true believer shall have a crown of glory; "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life," Rev. ii. 10. Earthly men strive for an earthly crown, a corruptible crown; but we, saith the apostle, for an incorruptible, 1 Cor. ix. 25.

APPLICATION.

Reproof. Is it so? Are all things now ready? Then I infer, it is an unreasonable thing for any to neglect to come to this wedding; how severely doth it reprove such who delay? Should any noble man make a great supper, and bid many, and send one servant after another, to bid those that are invited to come away, for all things are now ready, and they should defer coming to another time, would it not greatly offend him, and be horrid ingratitude, and a shameful abuse of his bounty? Pray observe what St. Luke says, "And he sent his servants at supper-time, to say to them that were bidden, come, for all things are now ready," Luke xiv. 17. It was just at supper-time, when every thing was ready, and set upon the table, the King sent his servants; if you come not, you cast great contempt upon the King, and slight his rich and gracious favours; nay, and so far as you can (to speak after the manner of men) disappoint him: shall he provide all these great varieties in vain? Shall the glorious Creator wait for, and look out, to see when his guests will come, and all to no purpose? "They all, with one consent, began to make excuse;" Ver. 18. Wonder, O ye heavens, at this!

EXHORTATION.

2. Be exhorted to come away; he not like these wretched creatures: will you make excuses too? Have you other business to do, and cannot come? Then will the King be wroth, and say, concerning you that hear me this day, as in the words following, "For I say unto you, that none of those men which were bidden, shall taste of my supper," Ver. 24. That is, not one of them shall have the pardon of their sins, be justified, sanctified, saved, none of them shall ever know how good Christ is, his love is, nor how good peace with God, and peace of conscience is. It is as much as if God should say, all these men shall be damned, and perish in their sins, and be undone for ever.

Sirs, mind the words as a strong motive, "Come, for all things are now ready;" can there be a more prevailing argument than this is, now ready; there is no staying one moment without the highest peril, and severe displeasure of Almighty God. What do you say? Will you deal kindly and truly with God, and with your own souls? Let me allude to, and make use of the words of Abraham's servant, who was sent to Rebeeca, who was born to Bethuel, son of Milchah, the wife of Nahor, to take her to be the wife of Isaac, Gen. xxiv. 15. "And now (saith he) if you will deal kindly and truly with my master, tell me, and if not, tell me, that I may turn to the right-hand or to the left," Ver. 49. O that you would say with Laban and Bethuel in the next words, viz., "The thing proceedeth from the Lord, behold Rebeeca is before thee, take her, and let her become thy master's son's wife, as the Lord hath spoken," Ver. 50, 51. Will you say, we will this evening go to Jesus Christ, or accept of this most gracious invitation, and embrace the Lord Jesus. The thing is of the Lord, and we cannot longer refuse to come to this supper: O were it thus, though it were but one soul that should thus do, what cause of joy should I have, who thus have spent my time and strength amongst you, though the great profit will redound to your own immortal souls!

I may truly say, this day, life and death are set before you, though it is God that must work in you, to will and to do of his good pleasure. If you do come, if you do believe, and receive Jesus Christ, you have life; but if you do refuse him, and abide in unbelief, expect nothing but death: "He that believeth and is baptized, shall be saved, but he that believeth not shall be damned," Mark xvi. 16.

CAUTION.

Secondly, One word to you that are professors, and I will conclude at this time.

1. But by way of caution, you profess yourselves to be believers, such that are come to sup with Christ; but take heed lest you are deceived; you are this evening to come to eat the Lord's supper, and that you may do, and yet not partake of the provision of this marriage supper; they are not all that eat of the bread and drink of the cup, in the sacrament, that feed indeed on Jesus Christ, or that have union with him; no, no, many of the visible church may perish for ever.

Therefore, see what faith you have, what love you have to Christ, and whether you are thoroughly changed, effectually renewed in heart and life.

O see what fruits of faith, and of divine union with Christ, appears in you: do not please yourselves with a name, or with an external profession of religion; you may have lamps, but no oil in your vessels, you may have the shell, but not the kernel. Many in these evil days have a form of godliness, but want the power of it; but the time draws near now, when the sinners in Sion shall be afraid: fearfulness will surprise the hypocrite.

CONSOLATION.

2. But to you that are sincere, who do believe to the saving of your souls, what comfort and consolation doth this doctrine administer to you! What though you are poor in this world, and despised of men, yet know, "You are heirs, heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ," Rom. viii. You have heard what your spiritual robes are, how rich, how glorious, and how high you are advanced. You are made near to God, espoused to Christ, and born heirs to a crown of glory. Live, O live as such that are thus raised to honour; carry yourselves as Kings' children, and trample all sublunary things under your feet.

SERMON XII.

All things are ready, come to the marriage.—Matt. xxii. 4.

He sent his servants at supper-time, to say to them that were bidden, come, for all things are now ready.—Luke xiv. 17.

THE parts, according to Luke, are these following:—

1. Here is a mission, "He sent his servants."
2. The person commissionating, a certain man; according to Matthew, a certain King, viz., the great God.
3. The persons commissioned, his servants, viz., his ministers.
4. The commission itself, "To say to them that were bidden, come," viz., preach the gospel, and excite sinners to come to Christ, to believe in him, receive him, or eat of his dainties, or espouse Jesus Christ.
5. The time when this commission was given, viz., at supper-time.
6. The motive, "For all things are now ready." We have observed, Doct. That the blessings of the gospel, or grace, and union with Jesus Christ, contains in it all sorts of spiritual dainties; or of a sumptuous banquet ready provided, to which sinners are invited, to come and eat.

1. What this feast doth denote you have heard.
2. Why compared to a feast.
3. What King it is that made this feast.
4. What is meant by these words, "All things are now ready."
5. I shall now proceed to show you, the nature, or blessed quality, of the provision which this feast, or marriage supper doth consist of.
7. And then show what is meant by coming, and by eating.

I. As to the nature of the food, I told you it is heavenly food, it is a spiritual or heavenly feast; therefore the nature of all the provision is spiritual, it is food for the soul, not for the body; as is the nature of the soul, such is the nature of that food it liveth upon: material food cannot feed an immaterial creature, that which is earthly, is fed with earthly food, but that which is spiritual, is fed with spiritual food; therefore the food of this feast must needs be of an excellent nature, the meat came from heaven, bread from heaven, the word of God is called "the incorruptible word, that liveth and abideth for ever," 1 Pet. i. 23.

II. Transforming. This is the marvellous property or efficacy of this food, if a sinner eats it, it will beget in him a divine likeness unto God, or form Christ's image in his soul: brethren, by eating, we lost God's image; I mean, "by eating the forbidden fruit," and by eating of this food, we have God's image soul-transforming na-

again restored in us; by our first eating we came to have an evil nature, evil qualities infused into us, or a likeness to the devil; and by eating, i. e., in believing, the Holy Spirit, infuseth a holy nature into the soul. "But we all with open face, beholding as in a glass the glory of God, are changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord," 2 Cor. iii. 18. This beholding and believing, or feeding on Jesus Christ, is all one, and the same thing, the Spirit is the only agent that doth it, he works this change, he works in the soul this faith, and in his helping a poor sinner to believe, eat, or receive Jesus Christ; holy habits of grace, and so a glorious change is wrought in the soul. "whereby are given to us exceeding great and precious promises, that by these ye might be partakers of the divine nature," 2 Pet. i. 4. Not a communication of the essence of God to us, but an infusion of divine qualities and dispositions, i. e., the true knowledge of God with righteousness and true holiness.

 Food of God's providing. III. It is food of God's own providing, and indeed the best of heaven, and it is food that can be had no where else, but at this marriage an earthly king may provide choice provision, or costly and rare dainties at the marriage of his only Son, and heir of his kingdom: but perhaps some of his nobles may provide as costly, as rare and rich dainties at their son's weddings, but so it is not here, "thou hast the words of eternal life;" John vi. 68. That is thou, and none but thee: none hath eternal life to give, grace to give, glory to give, but thee alone; "neither is there salvation in any other, for there is none other name given under heaven, among men, whereby we must be saved," Acts iv. 12.

It is whole- some food. IV. It is wholesome food; other diet, or rare dainties, may be choice, sweet to the taste, and please the pallet; but they may be hurtful to the body, and breed diseases, or forfeit the person that feeds on it; but so it is not here, it is not of a destructive nature, but contrary wise, by eating, by believing, sin dies; it tends to kill the old-man, i. e., the body of sin. A wicked man may say, as those in another case, "O thou man of God, there is death in the pot:" 2 King iv. 40. Sirs! there is death to every beloved lust, by believing in Christ, or feeding by faith, on him; therefore to the soul it is very wholesome food, you cannot eat too much here, no man ever believed in Jesus Christ too much, you cannot have too much faith, the more you eat and drink of this provision, the better, the more strong, healthy and hearty you will be.

V. It is physical food, as well as it is sweet to the taste, and excellent in nourishment, it will heal all your soul diseases, many are averse to take physic, they love no purging-potion, nor any other medicines whatsoever; but could they find a physician that could prescribe some delicious food to them, meat, or drink, that would cure them of all their bodily distempers whatsoever, such a physician would please them well; especially if upon trial they should experience a perfect cure thereby, O what flying would there be to such a person!

Why, if you come now to this marriage supper, and feed on these spiritual dainties, I can assure you sinners, on the word of my great Master, and by the experience of many thousands of true Christians, it will cure you of all your soul maladies, or spiritual distempers, let them be whatsoever they are, or can be.

VI. Though it be physical food, yet it is sweet and delightful meat also; "I sat down under his shadow, with delight, and his fruit was sweet unto my taste," Cant. ii. 3. It is sweet in the mouth, and it will not be bitter in the belly, not like John's little book; the very judgments of God, in the way of his providences, may be sweet to the souls of the godly, yet bitter to the wicked, nay unto the saints they may be bitter in some sense, yet in Christ is nothing bitter; how sweet is it to feed on his love, on his righteousness, on justification, on pardon of sin, on adoption, on communion with him? nothing is so good as God in Christ; whosoever feedeth on the creature, or on their lusts, how sweet soever they may taste in their mouth, they will be bitter at last, bitter in the belly, bitter to eternity. "Surely he shall not find quietness in his belly," Job xx. 20, no, nothing but horror, pain, and perplexity, for ever.

VII. It is not cloying, a little of some food cloy a man presently; hence, saith Solomon, "It is not good to eat too much honey," Prov. xxv. 27, he gives a reason for it, viz. "Lest thou be filled therewith, and vomit it up;" too much of earthly and sensual delights are not good; they oppress the stomach, I mean the conscience, and must therefore be vomited up by repentance; but this sweet and delicate food will not turn the stomach, it is consoling, but not cloying, nor surfeiting.

VIII. It is (as one observes) undiminshable food, you may feed upon Jesus Christ day by day, and yet he is a whole Christ still, a full Christ still, this food doth not waste by eating, it is like the "widow's barrel of meal, and cruise of oil," 1 Kings xvii. 14, it diminisheth not. Let millions come and eat plentifully, they will not leave (notwithstanding) as much in Christ as they found. The blessed God need not go and buy more provision, though never so great multitudes come to this marriage supper.

IX. It is incorruptible food, immortal food, all other food perishes in eating, and he that feedeth upon it perishes also. But as this food, this bread, never perisheth, so shall he that eat of it never perish; the meat that is eaten at this marriage feast, endureth for ever. "Labour not for the meat which perisheth, but for that meat which endureth unto everlasting life, which the Son of Man will give unto you; for him hath God the Father sealed," John vi. 27. What labour is it which our Saviour intendeth? Are we to work for life, or must we earn our bread before we eat it? No, no, all our labour cannot procure it. Hence, he adds, "which the Son of Man will give unto you;" they that followed our Lord in the days of his humiliation, eat of those loaves, which he broke unto them freely, it cost them nothing; they had all on free cost; yet in following him from place to place, they are said to labour for it, for our Saviour alludes unto that, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, ye seek me not because ye saw the miracles, but because ye did eat of the loaves and were filled," John vi. 26. Some think that the food Christ blessed and multiplied, namely, the bread of fishes, tasted more sweet, and was more delicious than any other of the same kind, perhaps it might be so, and that might make the multitudes follow him, to eat thereof, for no doubt many of them did not want bread, however they had it freely, though in following him they are said to labour for it, so, all the labour thou art to take for this incorruptible food, is to come to this wedding, or to come unto Jesus Christ, for though it perishes not, yet it is to be had "without money, and without price," Isa. lv. 1, 2.

X. It is suitable provision, agreeable, and meat for all sorts of guests, that come to this feast.

A little to open this.

(1.) Consider it suits, or is agreeable with every age of those persons which come, here is milk for babes, and "strong meat belonging unto them that are of full age, even those who by reason of use have their sense exercised to discern both good and evil, Heb. v. 14. Here is the "sincere milk of the word," 1 Pet. ii. 1, 2, for weak converts, that which suits and is agreeable to them, i. e., plain and easy truths for weak capacities, and also more sublime mysteries of Christ, or those deep things of God, which are proper for men of great knowledge and understanding, and of long experience to feed upon.

(2.) Here is food suitable to every state and condition, the souls of men can be in.

1. Such that are dead, here is that food that will quicken them, give life to them.

2. Such that languish, and are ready to die, here is food to revive, and increase life in them.

3. Such that are cold and lifeless, here is such food that will enliven, heat, warm, and quicken them; "thy word (saith David) hath quickened me," Psal. cxix. 50, 93, before he was dead and flat in his spirit, but by feeding, i. e., by believing, or receiving the word of God, he was quickened, it strengtheneth the weak soul.

4. Such that have dim eyes, this food will strengthen their sight, as well as open the eyes of the blind; it is like "Jonathan's honey; the commandment of the Lord is pure, enlightening the eyes; the entrance of thy word giveth light, it giveth understanding to the simple," Psal. cxix. 8, Psal. cxix. 130. So soon as you let this food go down, or let the word enter into your hearts, you will find your souls much enlightened thereby.

5. Such that are sad, and dejected in their spirits, here is food to cheer and console them.

6. Such as are consumptive, here is food that is restorative, "He restores my soul," Psal. xxiii. 3. I might enlarge, but let this suffice to open what we intend.

XI. It is suitable food, in respect it so well agrees with the souls of believers, at all times, in sickness and health, in prosperity and adversity, whilst they live, and when they die.

XII. It is soul satisfying food, go where you will else for food, it will be bread that satisfies not; "Wherefore do ye spend money for that which is not bread, and your labour for that which satisfieth not?" Isa. lv. 2. All things short of Jesus Christ, the bread of life, never nourishes nor satisfies the soul, they are all vain, empty, and foolish things, there is no soul-satisfying food, but at this marriage-feast, at the great King's providing, at the marriage of the Son; tis food will allay all spiritual hunger, fully satisfy all the desires, and necessities of the soul, as the prophet David found by blessed experience. "Who satisfieth thy mouth with good things, so that thy youth is renewed like the eagles,"

Psal. ciii. 5. Again, he saith, speaking of the Lord; "He satisfieth the longing soul, and filleth the hungry soul with goodness," Psal. cvii. 9. It yieldeth such satisfaction that ariseth to joy, and sweet delight; they delight themselves in fatness.

Fifthly, what is meant by coming to this marriage supper.

1st. Negatively.

What it is not to come to Christ or to the marriage.

1. Not a bare coming to hear the word of God preached; No, no, a man may come to hear sermons every day of his life, but never for all that, come to Christ.

2. Not a giving heed to what may here be preached. They may attend with some diligence to the word, yet not come to Christ, or come to this wedding-supper. "The eyes of all that were in the synagogue, it is said, were fixed upon him; they heard no doubt with great attention, but few of them believed on him.

3. It is not legal repenting, or reformation of life.

4. It is not a simple obeying of the precepts of Christ, some talk of coming to Christ by repentance, and others by obedience; they think that if they come to baptism, they come to Christ. But, alas! a man may arrive to legal repentance, and reformation of life, and be baptized, and receive the holy supper, and never come to Christ, never come to the marriage supper.

What it is to come to the marriage supper.

2dly. And directly in the affirmative, to come to Christ, or unto this wedding, so as to answer the purport of this invitation, is to believe, or receive Jesus Christ by faith. Believing in Christ, and coming unto Christ, are convertible terms, implying one and the same thing. "I am the bread of life," he that cometh to me shall never hunger, and he that believeth on me shall never thirst," John vi. 35. Here is mention made of bread, eating of it; our feeding upon him is employed and held forth by coming to him, which also he expresseth, by believing on him; all which is no more, nor less, than a true receiving him, as Mediator and the only Saviour.

Sixthly. What is meant by eating or feeding on the provision, provided at this marriage supper?

Answ. What it is to eat of the food of the wedding supper.

1. I answer, the very same thing, believing, and coming, provided it be such a coming, such a eating, as the invitation intendeth; or that answers the design of God therein; for though there is one that was said to come, who had no wedding garment; yet he did not come in a true and right manner, i. e., he did not believe, he did not eat, for thereby the wedding garment is put on; had he believed truly on Jesus Christ, he had not wanted a wedding garment.

2. Feeding or eating, is to experience the preciousness and sweetness of the Lord Jesus Christ, or to know that the Lord is good, a man that sees food set upon a table, and beholds it with his eyes, may conceive or suppose it is good and excellent food; but he doth not without tasting know how sweet and choice it is. So a man that hears the word, hears Christ preached, and the excellencies of Christ opened; may be persuaded, in some degree that there is great good in him, or that he is a precious Christ; but if he doth not receive him by a lively faith, or not savingly believe in him, he knows not by experience how good he is to the soul. Hence David cries, "O, taste! and see the Lord is good," Psal. xxxiv. 8. Labour to feed upon him, to receive him by faith, and then you will find how good he is. "If so be that you have tasted the Lord is gracious," 1 Pet. ii. 3.

3. To feed on this supper, is to make Christ our own, as he that feedeth upon food makes that food his own; so a believer makes the promise, and Christ in a promise, and in an ordinance, his own. This it is to eat, i. e., it is to apply Jesus Christ to our own souls.

4. It is to live wholly upon Jesus Christ, or to go out of ourselves, to him alone, fetching all we want from him, leaning upon, and trusting in his righteousness, and on the merits of his blood only, exclusively of every thing else, and inclusively, of whatsoever in a spiritual sense, we need.

5. It is to stay upon Christ; as bread is the stay and staff of man's life, and he that feeds thereon finds strength and support thereby; so Christ is the stay and staff of the soul, and to feed on this food, is to receive strength from Jesus Christ. Strength against sin, against the power and dominion thereof; and strength against Satan's temptations, and also against slavish fear, and the spirit of bondage and strength; against all reproaches, trials, and persecutions, a believer may meet with (and all discouragements) for the sake of Christ.

APPLICATION.

Reproof. This reproves, and shows the great folly of all such sinners, who refuse to come to this marriage supper. Is such the nature of this food, and wilt thou slight and contemn it, nor desire to taste it?

2. It inform us also, what the cause is, that the spiritual diseases, and soul-sicknesses of sinners remain, and they are not healed. Alas! they do not come to Jesus Christ, they do not believe in him, receive him; there is in believing a cure for every disease of the soul. Also there is no help, no cure, no healing, anywhere else, nor by any other way or thing, but by Christ alone.

3. It, moreover, discovers the cause or reason, so many of the saints and people of God are so weak, so low, and ready to faint, in their spirits; it appears evidently it is because they have no more faith in Christ, they do not with a strong faith rely upon him, or feed upon him. Can a man expect to be strong, or gather strength, that forsakes his food, that cannot, or doth not eat? The way to be strong is, to feed plentifully on wholesome food; so the way to get spiritual strength is, to feed freely upon the Lord Jesus. This is to be strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might, or to be "strong in the grace which is in Christ Jesus," Eph. vi. 10, 11, i. e., to believe with a strong and fixed faith, upon that fulness that is in Christ, "Eat, O friends, drink, drink abundantly, O beloved," Cant. v. 1. O take in freely and plentifully, by faith, the merits of my blood, see how my Father in me is pacified towards you, and fully reconciled, and you in me are accepted, justified, and pardoned for ever.

4. From hence also we may see what the cause is, that some who come to hear the word, receive no spiritual and saving benefit thereby, nor know how good it is. Alas, they believe not, they do not eat the word, "Thy word was found, and I did eat it." Such only receive Christ, and receive the good that is in the word of Christ, that truly believe in him.

5. Moreover, it informs us, how exceedingly precious the Lord Jesus is unto a believer, or what he is made to be unto him, even every thing.

EXHORTATION.

Oh, believers! Be persuaded from hence, to bless God for Jesus Christ, and prize him as your all; you that have Christ, have all, you have every thing that is truly good. O how happy are all they that feed by faith on Jesus Christ! What soul-strengthening, soul-healing, soul-comfort have they!

But no more at this time.

SERMON XIII.

But they made light of it.—Matt. xxii. 5.

THEY, that is, the Jews first, it principally in the first place refers to them, and also to all who slight the Lord Jesus, or union with him, or his gracious benefits, and that glorious provision provided in the gospel. From hence let me take notice of this point of doctrine, viz.

March 13,
1697.

DOCTRINE.

That although there is so much good to be had in Jesus Christ, to whom sinners are invited, yet many of them make light of him, and all he hath to impart to them.

I. Show what it is to make light of a thing, and so what it is to make light of Jesus Christ.

II. Show you, what sinners do make light of.

III. Show you, the evil, and great danger in making light of the Lord Jesus Christ.

IV. Give you the reasons, or causes, why sinners do make light of Christ, or from whence it doth arise.

I. To make light of a thing or person, is to slight it, or slight the person, or not value him, accounting him not worth regard. And thus sinners make light of Christ, and of this most gracious invitation. They slight, and value not the Lord of life and glory; they value neither an interest in his person, nor the merits of his blood, but slight his love, grace, and infinite goodness; and regard not the offers he makes to them.

What it is to make light of Jesus Christ.

2. To make light of a thing, or of a person, is not so much as to think seriously of it, or of him, not accounting the person worth one deliberate thought. As perhaps a virgin may be told of a very good match, or of a deserving person far exceeding her quality or merits; but she cries, pish, away with him, she will not let out one thought upon him; perhaps she hath heard something of him, that is distasteful to her. Thus many sinners make light of Jesus Christ; tell them that Christ commends his love to them, and would gladly embrace them in his arms, and espouse them; but they, in their hearts, cry away with him, I see no beauty, no loveliness in him; I cannot leave all my sweet delights and pleasures for such a choice, for such a companion. Pray, saith the poor messenger, (the minister of Christ) think seriously of this so great and glorious an offer: pish, say they, trouble not yourself with me, I will none of him: thus God spake of old, of his people Israel, "My people will have none of me;" They say to God, "Depart from us, we desire not the knowledge of thy ways," Job xxi. 14. This is to make light of this marriage-feast, or of union with the Son of God.

3. To make light of a thing, or person, is to contemn it; this is a higher degree of making light of a thing, &c. Will you accept of such an offer, of such a person? The answer is, no, I contemn the motion and person you mention, I despise him in my heart; to set light by parents with a witness, is to despise them when old or poor.

And thus do some sinners make light of Jesus Christ, or set light by him, and all the spiritual dainties prepared at this marriage supper, i. e., they contemn and despise him in their hearts; "Ye have both hated me and my Father," John xv. 24. You are so far from liking, loving, and receiving me into your bosoms, that you even abhor me and my people; "If the world hate you, you know it hated me before it hated you," John xv. 18.

4. To make light of a thing, or person, is to do some action, directly contrary to that which is proposed: as Ahab, who did evil in the sight of the Lord, "And as if it had been a light thing for him to walk in the sins of Jeroboam, the Son of Nebat, that he took to wife Jezebel, the daughter of Ethbaal," I Kings xvi. 31. That which he knew was directly contrary to the will of God, or distasteful to him.

Thus sinners do some base actions, contrary to what God professes to them in the gospel, viz., They join in with the devil, and in affinity with their filthy lusts, and strengthen themselves in their own evil ways.

5. To make light of a thing, may be yet further opened, viz., When a matter of greatest moment is propounded unto a person, and he presently says, truly, I will think of it, but I cannot now attend upon that affair, I have other business to mind at present, which, may be, is to go prove some yoke of oxen, or see a farm which he hath newly bought, or other things of like nature; or walk for their health in the fields, when they should attend on the word: now when such frivolous things are chosen, before a diligent attention upon the means of grace, or about the affairs of another world; this is to make light of Christ, and of all the blessings which he hath purchased.

As of one of the French kings, who was playing at some game with his nobles, and one came to acquaint him with a treacherous design against his life; the messenger signifying it was a serious thing, or matter of a great moment, he replied, he would mind serious things to-morrow, he was not at leisure then, so he lost his life. Pray mind what Luke speaks of those whom Matthew saith made light of it; the first said, "I have bought a piece of ground, and I must needs go to see it, I pray thee have me excused," Luke xiv. 18. One would have thought, he should have went to see it before he had bought it. "Another said I have bought five yoke of oxen, and I go to prove them, I pray thee have me excused. And another said, I have married a wife, and I cannot come." Now this is to make light of this great concernment; are not these frivolous excuses? And are they not strangely deluded, thus to court their own ruin, and to pray to be excused from minding their own eternal happiness? This is to make light of it, i. e., not only to defer this great business till to-morrow, or till hereafter: but to prefer earthly concerns above the matters of everlasting life, or union with Jesus Christ.

II. What is it which sinners make light of?

1. I answer, they make light of the word of God, or of the preaching of the gospel, which must needs be a very great sin and evil: because the preaching of the gospel is appointed to work faith, through the influences of the Spirit. "So then faith cometh by hearing the word of God," Rom. x. 17; it is a mighty instrument of "God's power unto salvation, to every one that believeth," Rom. i. 16: hence it is said, that it pleaseth God. "By the foolishness of preaching, to save them that believe," 1 Cor. i. 21.

What sinners make light of

Now they make light of this great blessing, which is the means of their salvation: and will not attend upon the word, or when they heard it, slight it.

2. They that make light of the convictions of their own consciences, as Felix did; "And as he reasoned of righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come, Felix trembled," Acts xxiv. 25. His conscience was awakened, and he was convinced of his sin, of his intemperance, and unrighteousness; Paul touched him in his tender place. Well, but did he cherish these convictions? No, no, but he, contrariwise, liked it not; but answered, "Go thy way at this time, when I have a convenient season, I will send for thee." But evident it is, he soon forgot Paul's doctrine, and so made light of it, and continued in his former evils. And thus many sinners still daily do; it may be under the word, their consciences may convince them, and sorely gripe them, for living in this or that sin, and in the neglect of this and that duty; but they turn a deaf ear unto the checks and convictions of their hearts and consciences, and so make light of it, or regard it not. They that make light of the convictions and rebukes of their consciences, which rise from the light of God's word, make light of God himself. Now, they that make light of this offer, do make light of the most gracious offer and invitation that ever was afforded to the sons and daughters of men; and this will appear by the induction of particulars following.

1. It is an invitation of the greatest and highest pity; God the Father is called, "The Father of mercies," 2 Cor. i. 3; because he is the fountain or original of good, which floweth to poor creatures. "And the Lord God of their fathers sent to them by his messengers, rising up betimes and sending; because he had compassion on his people, and on his dwelling place," 2 Chron. xxxvi. 15, 16. And now as he, out of pity and compassion, sent to them, under that dispensation, so he hath sent his ministers and messengers to poor sinners, under the gospel, knowing what wrath and ruin will fall upon them, which they must endure to eternity, if they come not to this marriage supper, but rather slight and refuse his most gracious invitation.

What an invitation this is.

2. It is not only an offer and invitation full of pity and mercy, but also as full of love and rich bounty. O, what a feast is here prepared! and what a design hath the Lord in it! He invites them to a noble banquet, and what is comprehended in it, and God's gracious design therein you have heard.

3. It is an often repeated offer and invitation, "and he sent other servants." God tries what one minister may do; but if sinners will not hear him, hearken to him, or come at his bidding, he sends another, another after him, "Go, say to them that were bidden, all things are now ready." May be, some of you have been invited an hundred times, to come to Christ, to believe in Christ; yea, a thousand times, and yet refuse. O! how inexcusable will God leave sinners, that eternally perish. "I have called, and you have refused; I have stretched out my hand, and no man regarded; but ye have set at nought all my counsel, and would none of my reproof." Certainly, such who make light of this invitation, are such that do thus, i. e., they set at nought all God's counsel, and contemn his love and favour extended to them.

4. It is a free invitation; all the provision (as you have heard) is prepared at God's own proper charge; sinners are not required to bring anything with them; It is a free invitation. no, that would be a dishonourable thing to him, and stain his glory.

1st. God was under no necessity to make this marriage feast, nor to invite this and that man or woman unto it; it was an act all of his own free mercy, love, and goodness; it was this only which moyed him thus to do.

2ndly, doth the blessed God receive any profit, or advantage, to himself hereby? "Can man profit God? If thou art righteous, what givest thou him? or what receiveth he of thine hand?" Job xxxv. 7. Our righteousness cannot oblige God; we are but unprofitable servants, when we have done all we are commanded: the righteousness, or righteous actions of men, contribute nothing to God; they are no advantage to him, the best that we can do; "My goodness (saith David) extendeth not to thee." If the righteousness of Christ added nothing to the essential glory of God, how should any thing that sinners can do? Can their believing make God more happy, more glorious than he is? "Who hath given unto him, and it shall be recompensed," Rom. xi. 34? All that we can do is due to him; it is a debt we owe to God. Besides, we can do nothing in a way of faith, &c., but what we received power to do from him. There can be nothing added to him, God is so full; what can be put into a vessel that is full to the brim?

O, sirs! All that God hath to impart to sinners, in this marriage feast, is of his own free grace; he receives not a pin of us for any thing: he says to his guests that come and eat plentifully, you are all heartily welcome, here is nothing to pay. It would, indeed, be ridiculous for a king to invite men to a wedding supper, and let them pay any thing for what they eat or receive; but much more dishonourable to God; therefore, they that join their faith, and sincere obedience with God's free grace, and Christ's merits, have cause to blush and be ashamed.

3rdly. All the good and heavenly blessings imparted to sinners, is bestowed without the least merit or desert of the creature. Doth a man deserve such favours? Can a rebel deserve a free pardon of a prince, or to be advanced to high honour?

4thly. It is a clear, a plain, and full invitation; God in the gospel speaks plainly to sinners, though sometimes in parables: which he pleased to help his servants to open them; yet at other times sinners may say with the disciples, "Lo! now thou speakest plainly, and speakest no proverb," John xvi. 29: doth not Christ speak plainly, when he saith, "He that believeth, and is baptized, shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned," Mark xvi. 16. And again, "He that hath the Son hath life, but he that hath not the Son hath not life. If ye believe not that I am he, ye shall die in your sins," John viii. 24. What plainer expressions could he use? He tells you it is not by works, but by grace ye are saved; nay, it is "He that worketh not, but believeth on him that justifieth the ungodly, his faith is counted to him for righteousness," Rom. iv. 5. That is, Christ received by faith, or his righteousness so apprehended, is our righteousness to justification, in God's sight, Isa. lv. 1, 2.

5thly, it is an open and public invitation; it is like a proclamation put forth by a king, to pardon all guilty and rebellious traitors, that come in and plead his gracious clemency, through an atonement made by another: "Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money, come ye, come, buy wine and milk without money and without price:" be ye whosoever, whether Jews or Gentiles, great sinners or small, bond or free, young or old, rich or poor; whoever thirstest after happiness, or would be saved, but know not the way: "Hear, and your souls shall live," ver. 3. What grace is here, and how publicly offered! "Go, and proclaim these words towards the north, and say, return, backsliding Israel, and I will not cause my anger to fall upon you; for I am merciful, saith the Lord, and will not keep my anger for ever; only acknowledge thine iniquities, that thou hast transgressed against the Lord thy God," Jer. iii. 12, 13. Here is a loud cry, an open proclamation to be made in the high place, at the opening of the gate. "Wisdom crieth without, she uttereth her voice in the streets; She crieth in the chief place of concourse, in the opening of the gates; in the city she uttereth her words," &c., Prov. i. 20, 21. Those sinners that make light of this invitation thus openly made, will find many to witness against them at the last day.

6thly. It is a large and comprehensive invitation; it is to all sinners, none by name exempted; so that one hath no more cause or reason, to say I am not comprehended in it, any more than another. "Go into all the world, preach the gospel unto every creature," Mark xvi. 15.

The chiefest of sinners have encouragement to take of this gracious offer of pardon and peace, through Jesus Christ; yea, the backsliding sinner, the stout-hearted sinner; "I have spread out my hands all the day long to a rebellious people," Isa. lxv. 2. One would think this should melt the hard and obstinate sinner's heart, and that none should be so vile, as to make light of this invitation. "Hearken to me, ye stout-hearted, that are far from righteousness," Isa. xlii. 12; that have no righteousness of their own, and seek not after any, but delight in sin and wickedness; "I bring near my righteousness," ver. 13, I have provided you a righteousness of my own, a righteousness which I am well pleased with; it agreeing exactly with my holy law, and holy nature; and I bring it near to you, that are unrighteous, and ungodly persons, come to this marriage feast, and God will put this robe of righteousness upon you, though you are never so filthy, and unclean in yourselves.

7thly. It is a pressing and most earnest invitation. Alas! the sinner's life lies at stake, his soul is in danger; "We, knowing the terror of the Lord, persuade men," 2 Cor. v. 11; to believe and be fully assured, that there shall be a great and terrible day of the Lord, and that the slights of God's gracious call and invitations, shall be cast into a lake of fire and brimstone; we therefore are earnest with sinners; "We are ambassadors for Christ, as though God did beseech you by us; we pray you in Christ's stead, be you reconciled to God," 2 Cor. v. 20. The angels bid Lot hasten, "while he lingered, the men laid hold upon him," Gen. xix. 16. Brethren, God must lay hold upon sinners, and pull them out of Satan's hands, and out of the pit where they lie.

8thly. It is at a seasonable time you are invited, it is while it is day, and just at supper time, when the table is spread, and every thing quite ready ; and the great God waiteth for your coming. The Lord waits to be gracious, he (as it were) looks out for you ; he sees a coming sinner, though he be as yet a great way off. Sirs ! would not an earthly king be greatly offended, if such that he should invite to supper with him at such an hour, should delay coming, though he sends to them just at supper time, and waits for them, and yet they come not ?

9thly. It is to some an effectual invitation, it tends to make the soul willing, that is, given to Christ. " All that the Father hath given unto me, shall come unto me," John vi. 36. Whosoever has a heart, a will to come, a desire to believe, may be assured that they are given unto Jesus Christ. " The dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God ; and they that hear shall live," John v. 25 ; Christ calls shall be made effectual to them ; Lazarus could not resist the call of Christ, when dead in the grave. Grace, my brethren, or rather the God of all grace, works irresistibly. " My people shall be willing in the day of my power," Ps. cx. 3.

APPLICATION.

From hence we may infer, that sinners naturally are strangely blinded and deceived by Satan. Is it not strange that such an invitation should be slighted, that any sinner should make light of it ?

2. This also may inform us, that God is infinitely good and gracious to undone sinners ; what heart can conceive of it, or what tongue can express it ? His mercy, love, and goodness, doth not only appear in his sending our Lord Jesus Christ, to espouse sinners ; but also in sending his ministers to invite them to come, and accept of his most gracious offer ; nay, and in his often repeating his call ; his kind and compassionate invitations.

3. Moreover, from hence we infer, that God will leave all men at the last day, without excuse. What will such vile sinners have to say, when they stand at God's tribunal, who were sent to, and called upon, perhaps a thousand times, to come unto Jesus Christ, or to come to this marriage supper ; who wickedly refused it, and made light of it ?

4. Also, from hence we may be informed, how sinners are ensnared with the love of this world, and the perishing things thereof. They prize and value these things above their immortal souls ! Nay, above an interest in Jesus Christ. They rather choose to have their lusts, their earthly riches, honours, and pleasures here, than the free pardon of all their sins ; and to be acquitted, justified, and made the sons and daughters of the Most High God ; and to be made heirs of the everlasting kingdom of glory, and a crown that fadeth not away.

5. Believers, also may from hence perceive, what cause they have to admire God's free grace to them. For had not he by his special love, and divine goodness, overcome them, influenced them by his Spirit, and drawn them to his Son ; bowed, and subjected their rebellious wills, and changed their hearts, they would as certainly made light of this gracious invitation, as any of the rest do. This is signified by these words, viz., " Compel them, who hath made thee to differ from another," 1 Cor. iv. 7. Didst thou, O soul, make thyself to differ ? Was it by virtue of thy own power ? Have they anything to glory in, or make their boast of ? " It is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth ; but of God that sheweth mercy," Rom. ix. 16.

6. Ministers may also learn from hence, not to be discouraged ; though they see but little success of their great pains and labour ; it is no new thing, if the people would not be entreated, be persuaded, nor prevailed with, to cleave to the Lord, and accept of his mercy, by the holy prophets, and apostles of our Lord Jesus Christ ; but made light of their words, and of that message. Is it any marvel, they slight the word in our mouths, and make light of the message we bring unto them ? Well may we say, " Who hath believed our report ?" Isa. lix. 1. And not wonder ? If they would not hear their report ? Nor the report of our blessed Lord himself.

7. And since this is so, let poor ministers labour to be like their Master, viz., to wait patiently upon the souls of those people, to whom they preach ; God the Father waits long, Christ waits long, the Holy Spirit waits long, and are not weary ; therefore let us also wait ; let ministers faithfully discharge their duty, and deliver their message, and leave the success of all unto God ; and say with their blessed Lord, " Though Israel be not gathered, yet shall I be glorious in the eyes of the Lord, and my God shall be my strength," Isa. xlix. 5.

SERMON XIV.

But they made light of it.—Matt. xxii. 5.

I have showed you what it is sinners make light of.

I shall now proceed to show further what sinners make light of, and also the great evil and danger that attends this sin.

The great evil and danger of making light of gospel grace.

1. It is a very great sin in respect of what they make light of. They slight and cast contempt upon that glorious contrivance, of God's infinite wisdom, in that high and sublime council, that was held between the Father and the Son, before the world began. They make light of the highest act of God's wisdom, that ever was; and this too, in the clearest revelation, and manifestation thereof: our salvation was the highest act of the wisdom of God; and that the gospel containeth the clearest and fullest revelation of this glorious wisdom, none will or can deny. The result was to send the Second Person of the blessed Trinity, into the world, to assume man's nature, or to be incarnate in the flesh; and to lay the sins of all the elect upon him, as their great Sponsor, or Surety; public Head and Representative, and to die for them, i. e., in their stead and room. My brethren, should God have called the angels together, to consult about a way to raise fallen man, from under the fall and curse, for the breach of the first covenant (so that the honour of God might be preserved, in respect of all his blessed attributes, and that sin according to the demands of the law, and justification, might be unsworded and yet divine mercy be magnified, in pardoning sinners; could they, think you, have found out such a way? No, no, none but infinite wisdom, could do this; hence God saith, "Deliver him from going into the pit, I have found a ransom," Job xxxiii. 24. Our deliverance is by a ransom, by a price paid to satisfy the justice of God. I have found a ransom; it is the contrivance of God, the invention of God, and of him alone.

"If all men on earth (saith a worthy divine), yea, if all the angels in heaven, had sat from the foundation of the world to this day, in council, beating their brains, and debating this question, viz., how sinful man might be delivered, out of the hands of the law, or that condemnation or sentence, under which the law had cast and detained him, with satisfaction, or without damage, to the justice and righteousness of God; they would never have found it out, nor anything like it; this is God's own intention. Or if God had said to fallen man, I see thou art in a lost and pitiful condition; but sit down and consider how I may do thee good, and not wrong myself; how I may relieve thee, and not dishonour myself, and I will freely do it. If God (I say) had given man a blank to write down, what would he have done to bring this about? he could never have found it out, but must have perished for ever in his sin." Thus far this great man; no, no, it was God that devised the means, that his banished might not for ever be expelled from him.

But now, Sirs! must not this be a most abominable evil, for any man or woman to slight this contrivance of God's profound wisdom, or cast contempt upon it, or to use the words of my text, make light of it. O! what is the nature of this sin? and what fearful danger do such sinners expose themselves unto for ever?

2. The evil and danger must needs be great, not only as it casteth contempt upon the wisdom of God, but it is also a making light of God's infinite mercy, love, and goodness. No greater act of love could spring from boundless eternity, than for God to part with his own dear Son, the only delight of heaven: no gift could ever equal this gift. "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son," &c. Gave him to what? To redeem sinners. Which way must he do it? He must die, he must bear the curse of the law for us. O, this was the most stupendous evidence of his mercy, and divine goodness! Nay, and it is to slight and make light of the precious love of Jesus Christ, who freely gave himself to die for his enemies. Oh! what ingratitude is this! What, make light of such love! such mercy! Be amazed, O ye heavens! and be astonished, O earth! What power hath the devil over mortals? What blindness is there in their understandings? What enmity in their minds? What rebellion in their wills? What earthliness and carnality is there in their affections? But what will be the end of these persons? What dangers do they run? and, what a hot hell do they prepare for their own souls for ever?

3. It is to make light of God himself, for he offers himself to be our God; he stands waiting to give himself and all he hath, so far as it is communicable to creatures. But as he said to Israel of old, "My people would have none of me." So he may say now, this sinner, and that sinner will have none of me: they despise me, not only my love and tender mercy, but they also contemn me, and slight me. They value five yoke of oxen, a small parcel of land, and their pleasures, above me.

God offers himself, in Christ, to be the sinner's God, to be their Father, to be their Friend, to be their inheritance, and portion for ever: but what saith my text, but they made light of it. They slight and contemn him in their hearts. They think it is a better choice to enjoy their earthly riches, honours, and pleasures, their sensual delights, their cursed cups, and wicked companions, their pride and ambition, and merry meetings, which they spend in swearing, drunkenness, and blasphemy, treading the Holy God under their feet, vilifying his laws, spitting in his very face, and contemning all things which are good and virtuous. But what will be the end of these things?

4. They make light of Christ, who waits to espouse them. They slight his person who is "the chiefest among ten thousands," Cant. v. 10. They make light of his beauty, light of his riches, his unsearchable riches: make light of his most precious love, his early, his infinite, his incomprehensible, his dying, his bleeding, his redeeming, and his espousing love! O! what sin and folly, nay, madness, is in their hearts!

5. They make light of the merits of Christ, and of his satisfaction, of his sorrows, of his bloody sweat, when in his fearful agony of his bloody passion, they regard not the piercing of his hands and feet, by cruel nails, nor the piercing of his tender heart with that bloody spear. But by their contempt of him, by their unbelief, and hardness of heart, they make it a light thing to wound and pierce him again: they regard not his blood, no more than if it had been the blood of a malefactor: they offer violence to his Spirit, resist him that would apply his blood, to the salvation of their souls: they contemn his authority, make light of his kingly, priestly, and prophetic offices. O! what evil is there in this sin? and, what danger do they run? They make light of a marriage with Jesus Christ. To this end you have heard they are called, or invited to this feast. The evil therefore in refusing so gracious an offer, must needs be very great and abominable. What! will the prince espouse his poor servant, a person of so low and base degree? nay, one that hath been in actual rebellion against him? and shall this kindness, this love, this honour so undeserved, be made light of? Wonder, O heavens!

6. They make light of a marriage with Christ. This is the effect of this refusal. And this contempt they offer to the Son of God, and of all those glories that attend and accompany him!

7. They make light of the Holy Ghost. The Spirit waits upon them, to apply the blood of Christ to their wounded souls: but they make light of his motions, influences, and operations.

The Holy Spirit strives to unite their souls to the Lord Jesus, or to tie that most blessed and sacred knot. But they quench the Spirit, grieve the Spirit, resist the Spirit, in the discharge of his office, until he leaves them, and gives them over to their own heart's lusts; they must therefore of necessity perish, in regard the Holy Ghost is the only Agent that must make the death of Christ effectual to their souls. What can a sinner do, when the Holy Spirit utterly withdraws from them? All spiritual life, and vital motions, are alone from the Holy Spirit.

8. They make light of their own precious and immortal souls; they contemn and wrong their own souls. "He that sinneth against me, wrongeth his own soul; all that hate me, love death," Prov. viii. 36.

Such that make light of Christ, hate him; the lesser love is counted a hatred, and they do not only hate Jesus Christ, but their own souls also. To love the world, to love riches, honours, and pleasures, above Christ; or husband, or wife, son, or daughter, more than the soul, is to hate and wrong Christ, and that precious soul God hath given them. Here is a blessed match offered to the soul, a rich and glorious husband for the soul, but the sinner being led by the flesh, and by Satan, is beguiled of this inconceivable blessing. How might a child see cause to hate such an enemy, be it father, or mother, and any else, that should persuade it to slight the offer of a prince, who makes love to it, until he is so provoked, that he rejects it for ever, and resolves to visit it no more, wait at his door no more.

9. They make light of pardon of sin, which is only to be had in Christ, through his blood, and in obtaining of union with him. Brethren, none ever find pardon, who make light of Christ, and of his invitation to this marriage supper.

And, O! what is the state of that soul, whose sins are charged upon him, who lies under the guilt and power of his sins!

10. Their sin and danger is great, because they make light of all the promises of the covenant of grace, all the promises run in Christ; first, they were made to Christ, and then to believers in Christ. God hath promised to be the God and Father of all that love Christ, that espouse Jesus Christ, and many other promises there are also. See John xii. 26. "If any man serve me, let him follow me, and where I am, there shall also my servant be; and if any man serve me, him will my Father honour." What a great evil is it to make light of such great and precious promises! Moreover, whosoever slights and despises the promises of the gospel, do incur on themselves all the evil, and direful wrath, that is contained in the threatenings thereof.

11. They make light of communion with Christ. "Behold! I stand at the door and knock, if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in unto him, and sup with him, and he with me," Rev. iii. 20. But they made light of this so great a privilege; they value not supping with Jesus Christ, communion with Christ; they slight all those choice refreshments he affords to them, that embrace him in the arms of their faith.

Moreover, as they make light of communion with Christ, so they also make light of communion of the saints, as if there was "No consolation in Christ, no comfort in love, no fellowship of the Spirit, no bowels and mercies," Phil. ii. 1. No good in ordinances, no soul refreshment in the holy sacraments. They condemn the fat things of God's house, bread of life, and water of life, is not worth any thing with these persons; their souls loathe the heavenly manna, they cannot relish Christ's spiced wine, nor do they esteem of the sweet juice of his pomegranates, they prize their cups, their merry-meetings with their ungodly companions, above the meetings of the saints, and all the joys of Mount Zion.

12. They make light of eternal life, or of the salvation of their souls; therefore, the sin and danger which attends these persons, must needs be great. Heaven, and all the glory thereof, is slighted by them; they sell their birth-right (with profane Esau,) for a mess of pottage; they will not part with their earthly inheritance, for the glorious mansions above.

That "Far more exceeding, and eternal weight of glory," 2 Cor. iv. 18; of which the apostle speaks, is as light as vanity, in the judgment of these persons; and as they make light of all things that are truly good, really good, spiritually good, whilst here; so, I say, they do of whatsoever is truly, and eternally good, great, and glorious, hereafter.

13. They also make light of hell, as not to fear the pains and punishment thereof.

They make a light thing of divine wrath. They make light of the wrath of God, they fear not the anguish of an accusing conscience, the worm that dieth not; nor do they tremble at the thoughts of that fire that cannot be quenched; the lake that burneth with fire and brimstone, is but a light thing in their eyes. These things considered, may serve to show their sin and danger is very great.

14. They make light of the gospel; such that sinned against Moses' law, died without mercy.

Every contumacious going beside the law, or casting it aside by commission of evil, was death; no such contumacious transgressor could escape God's just wrath; yet that obedience the law required, so far as men were capable to perform it, delivered no person from God's most strict and severe justice. But Jesus Christ, in our nature, hath answered all the demands; the gospel gives life, though the law could not. Therefore, to slight this great and glorious Redeemer, must of necessity bring the severest wrath and vengeance on all such sinners.

Sirs! There is no escaping, no avoiding the righteous punishment which the just God, will inflict upon all gospel sinners, see Heb. ii. 3.

15. The danger of such who make light of Christ, and of the gospel, must needs be very great, because it is the rejecting or casting contempt upon the only remedy God hath provided; they that sinned against the law, might fly to the gospel; but what will they do, or whither will they fly, that sin against the gospel? Who tread under their feet the blood of the Son of God! O what sore punishment shall these be thought worthy of? See Heb. x. 2. Hath God sent his Son to be a sacrifice, to pour out his blood to save them, and shall they make light of such a cure, of such a remedy, of such grace, and divine favour? O! how low must such think to lie in hell. "Verily, I say unto you, it shall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom and Gomorrah, in the day of judgment, than for that city," Matt. x. 15; for that city, or that people, or person, that will not hear the words of Christ's ministers, but make light of their message, or of that offer, which they in their great Master's name make unto them. These shall have a hotter hell than the people of Sodom. Sodom is not so great a sin, as to make light of Christ, and his blood; which hath procured pardon for all such abominable sins. There is no sin, nor blasphemy either, against the Father or the Son, but the gospel offers pardon for. Therefore, such who slight such a remedy, procured at such a dear rate, must needs be (it being a slighting, or making light of Christ,) the sin of unbelief, which is the worst of all sins. This is the root and foundation of all other sins, as faith is the root of all other graces. "Not one sin, (saith a learned author,) but will be engendered in the womb of this sin, as well as there Charnock. is not one grace, but springs from the womb of faith." Why are men proud, covetous; why do they swear, lie, steal, commit adultery, &c., but because they do not believe, God hates them, and will condemn them; they believe not his word; nay, and this sin of unbelief, or making light of Christ, maintains all other sins in their full strength. As faith tends to weaken all sin, so unbelief keeps every sin in its full power. Also it is the great supporter of the devil's kingdom; as faith overcomes him and his kingdom, so unbelief strengthens him and his kingdom, in the soul of every such sinner, and in the world.

16. Their danger is great; for all the attributes of God, are set against this man, viz., against him that makes light of Christ. Not only divine justice, but divine mercy, love, and goodness also; therefore his sin and danger is great. "The face of God is set against them that do evil, to cut off the remembrance of them from the earth," Psal. xxxiv. 16. The face of God may denote his glory, or the perfections of his nature. All God's holy and blessed attributes, are set against those persons who are guilty of this evil. O! it is sad indeed, when once mercy, love, and divine goodness, pleads against a sinner; no wrath like that which is kindled in the heart of God, for the abuse of mercy, and infinite love and goodness. Brethren, as all the blessed attributes in Christ, meet together in sweet harmony, and unite their strength to save a poor sinner that believes in Jesus; so they all unite together, to cut off and destroy for ever, all such who do not believe in him, but contrariwise make light of him, and of the merits of his blood.

17. The evil and danger that attends those that make light of Christ, and of all gospel grace, is great; because, in their so-doing, they are obedient to the devil: it is his lusts which they do, and in this he shows his utmost malice against God, Jesus Christ, and the sinner's own soul. This is to cast dirt upon God's glory, in the work of redemption. What is Satan's design herein, but to cause the sinner, as much as lieth in him, to render the grace of God in Jesus Christ, to be of none effect. So that his blood might be shed in vain. If Satan cannot hinder men from hearing the word, he stirs them up to make light of it; and such that so do, are obedient to him, and do his will, they show that they are his obedient servants and vassals.

6. From hence it appears, they do, as much as lieth in them, endeavour to nullify the glorious work of Christ's mediation, it denies him the honour of his meritorious passion; no sin doth so immediately oppose Christ as Mediator, and trample upon that inestimable sacrifice, as this doth. What, make light of such an undertaking! a work of such a nature, brought in as the result of such a council, effected by such a price; and to accomplish such a high design, and not value it above one base lust! What, choose rather to see a new bought piece of land, or a farm, or to prove five yoke of oxen, rather than to have an interest in Christ's most glorious mediation, person, and benefits!

APPLICATION.

1. Information. We may from hence see the infinite patience of God, O! admire this God, in his long-suffering and forbearance!

Doth he still wait upon such wretched sinners, that thus slight and contemn his most infinite love, goodness, and mercy? Is it not a marvellous thing, that God should let such creatures live one day longer? God certainly bears infinitely more reproaches and indignity, by this sin, than all men in the world ever bore; yet he hath as much patience to bear with them, as he hath power to punish them: it is not because he wants power to ease himself of these adversaries, that he spares them so long; none but God could endure such affronts from an enemy.

2. This sin is aggravated by their continuance in this sin, as God's patience is greated, by his repeated offers of his grace and mercy. "He sent his servants to invite them again, he sent other servants to say to them that were bidden, come, for all things are now ready," Luke xiv. 17; but as often as God invited them, they rejected, and made light of his invitation. O wonder that after the first refusal of Christ, God will send to them again, and again ! and yet doth the sinner persist in his obstinacy and infidelity ; and will God still solicit the sinner, and call and cry to him ? yea, knock again and again at his door.

3. Here is great encouragement for the worst of sinners, to come to Christ, and not to give up their hope, though they have many times slighted and made light of his sovereign grace ; God nevertheless calls you again. If there were no sinners called but once, your state perhaps might be lamentable indeed, because some of you have been called many times. Oh, how many times did some of you that are believers, make light of Christ, and of his gracious invitations, before you were made willing to receive him ? Therefore, let not such that have refused his calls, despair of his acceptance, if they embrace him now.

4. Terror. It may be, notwithstanding, for terror to all such sinners that are guilty of this sin, i. e., of making light of Christ and the gospel.

1. Consider, as you have heard, how great this sin is, and what dangers you do run ?

2. Is it not irrational, or a most unreasonable thing, to make light of God himself, and Jesus Christ whom he hath sent ? do not you own the holy scriptures ? and that the gospel is a true revelation of his eternal purpose, of saving men by Jesus Christ ? Do you not own he was put to death to save your souls ? and that there is no other way of salvation ? and is it not a most irrational or unreasonable act in you, to make light of this Christ, and way of everlasting happiness ? Art thou convinced, that there is no other way to save thy soul from hell ? and wilt thou make light of this way ? Art thou wounded to death ! and art convinced there is no other balsam can heal thee but this ? And wilt thou make light of it ? Art thou convinced that thou art polluted, and abominably filthy, and that there is no other Fountain can wash and cleanse thee, and wilt thou slight, or make light of this fountain ?

3. Is it not also a most ungrateful act, or a most unkind requital of God and Christ, for such inconceivable love, grace, and favour ; what, wilt thou fly in the face of him, and cast dirt upon him that wrought out a way of life for thee, by his own blood ? Do you not think it was a most horrid wickedness and ingratitude in the Jews, who preferred Barrabas before Jesus, and in Judas, to value Christ but at thirty pieces of silver ? And dost not thou know that thou art as guilty of as great ingratitude, and casts as great indignity upon him, that dost value a soul-murdering lust above him, that will not part with thy beastly pleasures, sinful profits, and cursed companions, for all the good that is to be found in the Lord Jesus Christ ?

4. It is also an inexcusable evil, there is no plea for this thy great wickedness. The Jews (as one observes) had some plea, though it would not excuse them for their great evil, in refusing of the Lord Jesus, i. e., he was clothed with infirmities, appeared as a poor man, and had no form or comeliness, or no external beauty and glory, as they expected their Messiah would appear in. But what plea canst thou make, since thou knowest he was indeed the Son of God ? they saw darkly, and were under a cloud, and knew not well the meaning of those mysterious types and shadows, but we see, with open face, now the Lord is ascended, and glorified in his highest majesty and glory ; thou dost not doubt of the truth of the Christian religion, and yet darest thou make light of this Saviour, and of that great salvation purchased by him ? Will not thy misery be great ? Is it not a just and righteous thing in God to set thee at nought, or make light of thee, who hast set him, and all his counsel, at nought, and hast made light of him ?

5. Exhortation. Strive to be sensible of the malignity and greatness of this sin, and repent of this thy wickedness. There may be yet mercy, if thou dost not further proceed in thy abominable evil. All thy former sins shall be forgiven, if thou now dost believe, and come to this marriage supper.

6. This affords also much consolation to believers, who are delivered from so great sin and danger. Oh ! prize God's favour, who hath dispersed the cloud of darkness, which had seized upon your noble souls. What a blessed state are you in, who are pulled out of the pit, and whose feet are set upon a rock, who are saved from hell, and have an undoubted title to eternal life.

SERMON XV.

But they made light of it.—Matt. xxii. 5.

DOCT. Many sinners make light of Jesus Christ, and of all the blessings that are offered unto them in the gospel.

I showed you the great evil and danger of making light of Christ, and his benefits.

IV. I shall show you from whence it doth arise, or come to pass, that sinners make light of Jesus Christ; or give you the reasons of it.

1. It ariseth, or is occasioned from that great ignorance, and woful blindness that is in the hearts of sinners.

1. They are ignorant of that need and necessity there is of coming unto Christ, and so to feed upon the provision which is prepared at this marriage supper. If people were convinced that there was no corn, no bread to be had, but at the king's court, or in his granary, they would haste thither; or, that there was no water, but in the king's fountain, provided the granary and fountain were opened, and free to all comers, and this was made known by his proclamation, what multitudes would resort to get corn to supply their necessity!

Ignorance is one cause why sinners make light of this heavenly banquet.

Now, brethren, it is thus here in a spiritual sense; there is no bread of life, nor water of life; no food for our souls to be had, but in Jesus Christ alone; it is in this respect, as it was in Egypt, there was no corn in all the land, but what was laid up in Joseph's hand by the order of Pharaoh, and when the people came to Pharaoh, he sent them to Joseph, so the Father sends all poor, distressed, and needy souls to Jesus Christ, the true Joseph, But whilst men remain ignorant of this, or do not see the absolute necessity of coming to Christ, or of coming to this marriage supper, they will not come, but make light of this gracious invitation, thinking that they may be provided otherways, or have peace with God, justification, pardon of sin, and eternal life elsewhere, or in some other way: as,

1. Perhaps they think to have it by a sober life, or by doing that which is just and honest in the sight of all men; they think this way to be justified, and saved for ever.

2. Others think inherent holiness through Christ's merits, is that which justifies them in the sight of God.

3. Another sort affirm, that the light which is within all men, is the true Saviour; and that, by obedience unto that light, men may be led into all truth, convinced of all sin, be justified from sin and be eternally saved.

The light within all men is of the law of works.

Now, brethren, this is to seek justification by the works of the law; for pray note it well, that the law that was written on two tables of stone, and that law or light which is within all men that come into the world, is as to the matter or substance of it, but all one and the same law: hence the Gentiles, who were said to be without the law, (that is, without the law in tables of stone, or without the ministration of it, that was given to the people of Israel) had the law, or light thereof in their hearts; which shew the works of the law in their hearts, Rom. ii. 15. That is the sum of the law, i. e., to love God above all, and our neighbours as ourselves; or else the office of the law, which is morally and naturally just and good, and to convince and reprove such that walk not according unto it; but if by the law in either of these respects, justification is to be obtained, Christ is dead in vain, Gal. ii. 21. So that the ignorance and delusion of these men, is very great: for,

1. Their doctrine teacheth poor people to seek justification by the works of the law.

2. To frustrate and make void the grace of God, in sending of his own Son, and so to render his death a needless thing; for if Christ had not come, all men would have had the law and light within; and if by that righteousness, viz., by the law; either without us or within us, we might have been justified and saved, what need was there of Christ to come and keep the law for us, and to die in our stead, to satisfy the justice of God, for our breach of the law? "But what the law could not do, in that it was weak through the flesh, God sent his own Son," &c. Rom. viii. 3. Therefore it appears, that these men who are for the works of the law, are under the curse, as the Apostle shows, Gal. iii. 10; and evident it is, that by the law no man is, nor can be justified: "for if there had been a law which could have given life, verily righteousness should have been by the law," Gal. iii. 21. If there had been any law, or light which could have given life, justification, and salvation, it should have been by it: and thus these men, like the Jews of old, being ignorant of God's righteousness, that is the righteousness of Christ, who is God as well as man; and from hence it is that most men make light of Christ, and of salvation wrought for us by him. The apostle ascribes it to their ignorance, and plain it is, it was these our Saviour, in the first place, means in my text, they made light of it, and it was upon this foot of account.

If I am persuaded, that I have enough bread of my own, I will not go to my neighbour's door for it; he that thinks he can spin a righteousness to clothe him out of his own bowels, he will never go to Christ to beg a garment of him, to hide his nakedness, and so to present him comely in the sight of God. But when a sinner comes to see all his righteousness is but filthy rags, and all his own food is but husks, as the prodigal did, he will soon see cause to go to the Lord Jesus, or to go to his Father's house.

Ignorance of the nature of gospel provision, one cause men make light of this invitation.

2. They make light of Christ, and of all his benefits also, by reason of their great ignorance, of the nature, worth, and excellency of the provision which is prepared at this marriage supper. Alas! they never tasted how good God is, Christ is, how sweet his love and favour is! how desirable pardon of sin, and peace of conscience, and joy in the Holy Ghost is! O taste, and see that the Lord is good! Psal. xxiv. 8. This denotes their ignorance, or their want of experience. They may have heard of that great good which is in God, and in the Lord Jesus Christ; but it was only by hearsay; they were ignorant of it, as to a true experimental knowledge thereof, and therefore may, and no doubt do, make light of it.

Ignorance of God's nature the cause why Christ is slighted.

3. They are also ignorant of God in the perfections of his nature, and blessed attributes of his absolute purity, holiness, justice, and righteousness. They think that God forgives our offence, without a plenary satisfaction to his infinite justice, and holy law: nay, and many in these days are left so to the ignorance and blindness of their own hearts, as to disown all revealed religion, and hence some have of late affirmed, that there is nothing contained in the gospel, or doctrine of Christianity, that is mysterious, or above human reason; though, blessed be God, he has raised up some worthy men who have been helped fully to confute such notorious errors: the apostle says, "Without controversy great is the mystery of godliness, God manifested in the flesh," 1 Tim. iii. 16. &c. Is not that a great mystery, that God should be man, and man be God, in one person; that he that made the world, should become a babe of a day old; and that we should be justified by the obedience and righteousness of another, by a righteousness imputed to us. The truth is, man is unable to understand, by all his natural wisdom, things of God; as the apostle show, in the wisdom of God, "the world by wisdom knew not God," 1 Cor. i. 21. And yet is there nothing contained in the gospel mysterious; but men being born under the covenant of works, and having some remains of that broken law in them, they condemn the wisdom of God in a mystery, viz: his great and glorious contrivance of our salvation by Jesus Christ; because it is above their carnal, or human reason to comprehend it.

It is strange to them that we should be justified, acquitted, and pronounced righteous, perfectly righteous in God's sight, who, to that very time, were ungodly, and that by the righteousness and obedience of a poor man, condemned as a wicked person, or a cursed malefactor who was hanged upon a tree. This doctrine the learned Greeks of old accounted foolishness, and it ariseth from that great ignorance which is in them, of the holy nature of God, and tenor of his holy law; and from hence it is, that they make light of Christ, and of all his benefits.

4. It may also be through, their ignorance of God's invitation as to them; they do not think that God speaks to them, or that they are the lost sinners Jesus Christ is offered unto; because perhaps they have got more righteousness of their own than many others have. They make light of Christ, and of his righteousness, because they are not swearers, drunkards, thieves, nor unclean persons: possibly some men may think none need trouble themselves about coming unto Christ, but profane persons.

5. Some of them also may be ignorant of the voice of God, in the ministry of the gospel: they know not the voice of God like Samuel, when a child, they know not who it is that calls them; Samuel thought that it was Eli that called him; "Here I am, for thou didst call me," 1 Sam. iii. 6. Many think it is not the voice of God that calls them; but the voice of such or such a minister, not Christ's voice, but man's voice, man's invitation; "If thou knewest who it is that saith unto thee give me to drink," John iv. 10. She knew not it was Christ, the true Saviour, the blessed Messiah that spake unto her. She took him to be a mere man, only one of the Jewish nation: and thus sinners may think, when ministers call them to come to Christ, to come to the marriage supper, it is nothing more but a call of men, and perhaps they may conclude, that the servants of God, chiefly by all preaching, design to proselyte them to their opinion, to make them either presbyterians, independents, or baptists, whereas, if they are faithful ministers, it is chiefly to bring them unto Jesus Christ, it is to deal with their consciences; but this they may be ignorant of, and so make light of this most gracious invitation.

6. They may, moreover, be ignorant of the freeness of these good things, to all right comers; some perhaps may think they may not come, must not come yet; they are not humble enough, or are not prepared for grace; the world is too much in their hearts at present; they dare not come whilst they are so much incumbered with worldly affairs; or that they must not believe in Christ, until they have got a good degree of repentance, and sorrow for sin; they think that they must bring some worthiness with them, some money, or something to commend them unto Jesus Christ, or else they may suppose they do not feel themselves so empty, so hungry, as they ought to be before they come to eat of the food prepared at this great supper. The truth is, none will come to Christ, none will feed on him, or receive him by faith, but such that see the want, or need of him; it is the thirsty soul, the hungry soul that invited; but many may look for this to be in them, to a greater degree than at present they experience, which may arise from their ignorance. No doubt but some are more hunger pinched than others, or they may have a more extreme thirst in them than some have, and yet they are invited; it is not the degree of the sense of the want of Christ, as the truth of that sense they have of the want of him, and of his righteousness.

Brethren, this ignorance in some persons, as touching the way and manner how they must come to the Lord Jesus, may cause them to neglect, or defer coming. What, venture now upon Christ? what, believe now, before we have reformed our ways? or have got some meet qualifications? no, this they dare not do. What so filthy, so unclean, and yet venture to come to Christ? as if great sinners, such that are most abominably filthy, must not come to the Fountain to be washed; as if morality could prepare men for grace; or that none but sober moral persons ought to believe in Jesus Christ, and yet he says, that he came not to call the righteous, but sinners; and that the whole need not a physician, but they that are sick. Alas, sirs! all reformation of life, repentance, sorrow for sins before faith, are dead works, and profit no man as to the salvation of his soul. All these things are but a man's own righteousness, which are but filthy rags, and please not God; wouldst thou come in these vile and loathsome rags, to this marriage, to be espoused and married unto Jesus Christ? O blush and be ashamed! Know, O sinner, that thou must come as a poor, naked, polluted, and undone wretch (as you have been often told) and yet wilt thou not come to him until thou art more fit, more trim, in thine own eyes. Believe it is a delusion of Satan; if thou makest light of this great truth, thou wilt be found to make light of the gospel, and of the free-grace of God.

From that enmity which is in sinners' hearts they make light of Christ.

II. It is from that natural enmity, that is in the hearts of sinners against God, which causeth them to make light of Jesus Christ; this is another cause why sinners do thus contemn and despise the riches and freeness of God's grace, in Jesus Christ; "The carnal mind is enmity against God," Rom. viii. 7. Sinners are in captivity, under the power of sin, yea, the very slaves of sin and Satan; and it is grace alone that slays that enmity. "Of the same that a man is overcome, of the same is he brought into bondage," 2 Pet. ii. 19; they are in strong chains (and fetters, to their own lusts) and Satan by these bands and cords, holds them back from coming to this marriage, he fills their hearts with prejudice to Christ, and stirs up that evil seed and principle, which is naturally in them, to make light of the Lord Jesus; "His own iniquities shall take the wicked himself, and he shall be holden with the cords of his own sins," Prov. v. 22. He thinks to be disentangled hereafter, from his lusts, and from the world, but it is all in vain; for he is in perfect bondage, and is neither able nor willing to see himself at liberty, his sins hold him fast,

III. Many make light of Christ, from the inordinate love of this world, in respect of the riches, honours, and pleasures thereof; there is a cursed trinity, as well as a blessed Trinity, a trinity below, as well as a Trinity above, viz., "The lusts of the flesh, the lusts of the eyes, and the pride of life," 1 John ii. 16; and sinners love these, adore these, and bow down to these three, more than they love, adore, and bow down to the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Ghost; earthly things suit with earthly hearts, carnal delights feast the carnal part, the flesh shall be fed, though the soul be starved, and out of love to these things, all spiritual dainties are slighted, and made light of; they had rather feast at the devil's table, than feed and feast with the Lord Jesus Christ, they had rather be feasted with the sweet, flesh-pleasing meat, roasted at the fire of lusts, and as it is taken off the devil's spit, than with the fat things of God's house. Tell them where they may have a good bargain, or how to get riches, and be made great and honourable among men, or of a merry meeting, to carouse, drink, and be jovial amongst their beastly companions; it is out of love to these things, that they condemn all things that are spiritually good; but let such know that they cannot feed with Christ, and with devils, "Ye cannot (saith Paul) drink of the cup of the Lord, and of the cup of devils. No man can serve two masters," I Cor. x. 21, that is, who are directly contrary the one to the other, and have quite opposite interests to carry on; "Ye cannot serve God and mammon," men cannot love sin, love the world, and yet love Jesus Christ. "He will either love the one and hate the other, or cleave to the one, and forsake (and make light of) the other," see once again this parable as it is recorded by Luke xiv. 18—20. "And they all with one consent began to make excuse; the first said unto him, I have bought a piece of ground, and I must needs go and see it; I pray thee have me excused." Strange! Is this all the business this man had for to do? It was not to go buy the piece of ground; no, he had bought it before, and no doubt but he had seen it before to: men do not use to buy land, before they have seen it: here was no ground to fear of losing his purchase, for he had bought it, but he must needs go again to see it: it ran in his mind, it had got possession of his heart. But is not this a poor and lame excuse? Oh! for what a trifle do some men make light of Jesus Christ? They had rather go and walk into the fields, and see their land, and how their corn grows, then to attend upon the word of God, and to obtain an interest in the Lord Jesus. "And another said, I have bought five yoke of oxen, and I go to prove them; I pray thee have me excused," ver. 19. It was not to buy his oxen; no, but it was to prove to them, no doubt but he had made some proof of them, before he knew they would draw; but this shows how little he valued spiritual things, and that his love was set upon the things of this life. "And another said, I have married a wife, and therefore I cannot come." Sensual pleasures, drown and swallow up the hearts of some men; carnal men do not only pursue their lusts, or do such things that are a direct breach of the law of God, but also inordinately let their hearts run out upon lawful things, and a man may lawfully marry a wife; marriage is God's ordinance, but some men through an inordinate love to their wives and children, make light of Christ, and of all the blessings of the gospel: I have, in speaking to another parable, largely opened this, and therefore shall say no more to it here.

What small excuses sinners make to keep them from Christ.

See parable of the sower.

Whoredom and excess of wine, take away the hearts of some, who like unclean birds, choose rather to feed on carrion on a dunghill, than with doves upon pure grain; or like swine, they will not exchange their acorns or husks, for the best rarities in the world: and others by overprizing earthly enjoyments, (which are blessings in themselves) eternally lose their souls; it is no wonder that men who have sensual hearts, are inordinately in love with earthly things, make light of Jesus Christ, and of union with him.

Self righteousness hinders from coming to this marriage, in making light of Christ.

IV. Sinners make light of Christ, and of all spiritual blessings, from a conceit of self fulness; will such that are Laodicea like, i. e., see no need of anything, buy of Christ gold tried in the fire, to enrich them, or white raiment to clothe them? No, they, are increased in goods, and in their own conceit need nothing; such that have a fulness in themselves, bread to eat of their own, will not come to this feast: tell some learned men who study philosophy, and other human arts and sciences, that they had better study their own hearts, and the knowledge of a crucified Christ; they will but laugh at you, and make light of such good counsel, and perhaps tell you, that you are a fool: and will you teach them, sirs? As there is a religious fulness, as well as a sinful fulness, so there is a learned fulness, which renders Jesus Christ but of little worth, and value with some men, they had rather study Aristotle, Seneca and Plato, than Jesus Christ and him crucified, some of this sort, study more how to get a fat benefice, than to feed on Christ, and win souls to him. Moreover, tell some other men, who are pure and righteous in their own eyes, of the righteousness of Christ: alas! they make light of that, and say, "God, I thank thee, I am not as other men, nor as this publican," Prov. xxvii. 7; these men have such a full stomach, that their souls loathe the honeycomb.

The cares of this life hinder others.

V. Some make light of all gospel dainties, by reason their hearts are so full of the cares of this life; tell some poor men of the bread of life? Ah, (saith he) I had rather you could tell me how I may come out of debt, and have whatsoever I want for myself and family; intreat them to believe in Christ, and tell them that the Lord Jesus hath paid all the debts of poor believers, and that God is satisfied in Christ; that all that believe in him are happy for ever; press them to come to this feast, away with those stories (say they), we cannot sleep, our hearts are so full of the cares of this world ; we fear our other debts, more than those you speak of, not knowing but we may be laid in prison are long : Martha, though a good woman, was too remiss in attending on Christ, through the incumbrances of the world, “ Martha, Martha, thou art careful and troubled about many things, but one thing is needful,” Luke x. 41, &c.

VI. Many make light of Christ and gospel blessings, by reason of the sufferings of the cross, they that embrace Jesus Christ, may be undone to be religious, say they is the way to be ruined : I assure you, say they in their hearts, the food you invite us to eat, that is to be had at this marriage feast, is but melancholy diet, and it will embitter all the comforts of this life. But, alas ! all this is because they never tasted how good the Lord is, they have no experience of that real, good, and transcendent sweetness that is in the enjoyment of Christ’s love.

The suffering of the cross, hinder some men in coming to Christ, and making light of him.

VII. Some perhaps make light of Christ and of this gospel banquet, by means of their carnal relations, they are afraid to displease them, it will cause (saith a man) strife to rise between me and my wife, or saith a woman, between me and my husband, or between me and my father and mother, or between me and my best friends ; by which it appears that they love husband and wife, father and mother, better than Jesus Christ. O, saith one, I must obey my parents, will you have me to be a disobedient child ? Many are like Ahaziah, whose mother was his counsellor, to do that which was evil in the sight of the Lord ; but know such, who in religious matters chose to please their parents more than to please Jesus Christ, make light of those things, and refuse the offers of eternal life. Some parents who are ungodly, hate the thoughts that their children should be religious, and are ready (like a wicked wretch I have heard of) to seek ways to debauch a pious son or daughter, rather than to see them truly religious ; wicked relations and ungodly companions cause some to make light of this gospel banquet.

Carnal relations cause some to make light of Christ. 2 Chron. xxii. 3.

VIII. The main cause of all from whence most make light of this invitation, to come to this marriage feast, is unbelief. Some believe not what they are told of the blessed state such are in, who receive Jesus Christ, but are ready to conclude, they are but fancies and idle dreams.

Unbelief the main cause why sinners make light of Christ.

Some others are also under the power of unbelief, and ready to say, though Christ be a blessed object, and pardon of sin be no small blessing, yet they are never like to obtain those high privileges, no, but seem to say, as some of old did, “ there is no hope ; but we will walk after our own devices,” Jer. xviii. 12. You have here, first, a desperate conclusion, there is no hope ; and secondly a desperate resolution, “ but we will walk after our own devices.” There is no hope, that we should obtain an interest in Christ, and be justified, pardoned, and saved for ever. No hope, that we should get our hearts changed, or get power over our evil and abominable lusts, and hence they slight and make light of all the means of grace, they not considering the mighty power of God, who is able to change the vilest hearts in the world ; but sin is so rooted in their affections, and they withal are lazy, and love to sleep, or abide in, a spiritual slumber, or slothful condition, and being not willing to strive against sin, nor attend upon the world, nor cry to God, they make light of this heavenly feast.

SERMON XVI.

So the servant came, and shewed his Lord these things ; then the master of the house being angry, said unto his servant, go out quickly, into the streets and lanes of the city, and bring in hither, the poor, and the maimed, and the halt, and the blind.—Luke xiv. 21.

THE rich Pharisees among the Jews made light of it as you have heard, and now the poor, the maimed, and blind, two things may be signified.

1. The poorest sort ; the poor have the gospel preached to them, and they receive it.

2. Great sinners, or such that are in a miserable condition, in respect of their souls, or notorious sinners, as Publicans and harlots, the Scribes and Pharisees, making light of the gracious offer of eternal life ; true, all men naturally are in a poor, maimed, and deplorable condition ; but these no doubt appeared so to be, in their own sight :

“ Go out quickly,” &c.

Doct. That sinner must presently, without delay, come to Christ, and even as sinners, as poor, maimed, halt, and blind.

Sinners must presently come to Christ and believe in him. I have, under another parable, showed, what to do a thing quickly doth imply; here it signifies the great speed sinners should make; they must believe presently, without delaying it one moment; they must not stay to get any previous qualifications, before they come to Christ.

First, I shall give you a few reasons, why sinners should presently come to Christ or not delay.

Secondly, Show, who are poor, maimed, halt, blind, &c.

Why sinners should presently come to Christ. I. Because God (or the great King that made this feast) was angry with others who made light of it, making excuse, and delay coming, and for this they were cut off from tasting of this supper. The base delays and trifling of some provokes God to anger.

II. Because this is business of the highest concernment in the world; what, are sinners wounded, mortally wounded, and shall they delay accepting a plaister presently? what malefactor condemned to die, would not presently accept of a pardon, if it be offered to him.

III. Because now all things are just ready: shall God wait, Christ wait the sinner's time? Or, shall not God's time be their time.

IV. Because the present time is the accepted time: "Behold! now is the accepted time; behold! now is the day of salvation," 2 Cor. vi. 2. Now, "to day, if you will here his voice;" Heb. ii. 7. If God calls to-day, none must say to-morrow. "Boast not thyself of to-morrow, for thou knowest not what a day may bring forth," Prov. xxvii. 1.

V. Because now is the day of sinners' visitation; and if they lose this day, the things of their peace may be for ever hid from their eyes, as they were from Jerusalem. "O that thou hadst known, at least in this thy day, the things that belong to thy peace, but now they are hid from thine eyes," Luke xix 42.

The gospel proclamation runs thus, quickly, presently; it commands sinners presently; to throw down their arms, and lay hold of the offers of free pardon now, and delay not.

VI. Quickly, Because ministers are commanded to endeavour to bring them in presently; they cannot assure any person, that he shall be entertained or find mercy, if he delays one day.

VII. Because the day of men's lives are very short and uncertain; sinner, thou mayest be dead before another day; God cast some off suddenly, therefore thou must presently close with Christ, or throw thy soul upon the Lord Jesus.

VIII. Because the harvest-day and gospel summer may be soon at an end; the length of other harvest-days may be known, and also market-days, but the length of the day of grace we know not.

Secondly, Show, who these poor maimed, halt, and blind are, who are to be brought in presently.

Who the poor, maimed, halt, and blind are. I. The poor refer to the lost sheep of the house of Israel, or to such that are sick, and see the need of a physician, or wounded and want a sovereign balm to heal their sores; that are also hungry, starved, having no bread of their own to eat, or nothing to sustain food, satisfy, and support their languishing souls; so that a plentiful feast of fat things, must needs be welcome to them, though the rich and self-righteous Pharisees made light of it.

II. These poor and maimed ones see also, that they are naked, or have nothing but filthy rags to cover them; and therefore are glad to hear there is at this wedding a rich garment, prepared for all the guests that are invited, and that come to it. They see they have nothing of their own, neither to eat nor to clothe them, nor a penny to buy anything withal.

III. Neither can they work to earn anything to supply their necessities, being maimed, halt, and blind; he is not so poor and miserable, though he has nothing, if he can work, and that way get him bread to eat; but these see, that they have laboured for that which is not bread, and that which satisfies not.

IV. Moreover, they are so poor and miserable, that they have no friend nor brother to Isa. lv 1, 2. do anything for them; no help by the law, no help by their own righteousness, no help from men, no nor by what any saints, ministers, or angels can do for them.

V. So poor, wretched, and miserable, that, besides their present want, they are in debt owing ten thousand talents, and not one farthing to pay.

Question. How came they to be in this miserable condition?

See the parable of the man. Answer. By original and actual sin, or by falling among thieves, who wounded them, and stripped them of their raiment, and left them half dead; sin and Satan are those thieves.

Question. How come they to see and know this is their sad and deplorable condition ?

Answer. 1. They come to see and know it by the law, the law being opened to them, in the spirituality of it; "sin revived and I died," as to all hope or help by it.

2. By the revelation of the gospel, in Christ's poverty, in his bloody agony and crucifixion, they came to see the horrid evil of sin; and know that there is no help nor relief, but by his obedience, by his righteousness, or by his atonement.

3. They come to know this to be their miserable state, by the conviction of the Spirit; "When the Spirit of truth is come, he shall convince the world of sin; of sin, because they believe not in me," John xvi. 8, 9. The Holy Spirit convinceth these poor sinners, that they have no bread to eat, no clothes, no garment to cover them, nor any power or strength to work for life; and that they can do nothing to wash away the guilt and filth of their sins.

Question. Why doth God bring them to see this their condition, and send his servants to call such as these, yea, and with all speed, presently to bring them to the marriage feast ?

Answer. 1. Because God would embitter sin unto them, which is so evil in itself, and was so bitter to his own dear Son. God will make all men know, what sin is first or last; either in this world, in a way of grace and love, or in the world to come, in a way of wrath and indignation.

2. Because the rich, or self-righteous ones will not come: they that have a self-fulness, that find no want in themselves, make light of this spiritual banquet, as you have heard: the prodigal thought not of returning home to his father until a famine arose in his souls.

3. Because until sinners are convinced that this is their condition, they will never value Christ, prize and esteem of the bread of life, nor will any but such exalt free-grace, and magnify the Lord Jesus; and then God sends for them in haste, or that they may quickly be brought to Christ; because otherwise, they will fall under utter despair, and Satan would get great advantage over them: they being ready to die, are proper objects of God's rich mercy, love, and favour.

APPLICATION.

1. This may tend to humble proud sinners, and show what a condition they are in: they will not come to Jesus Christ; they are blind, wounded, and wretched, but see it not know it not, and so are like to perish for ever.

2. This also may tend to reprehend such who tell us, that the elect are not really in a naked state, wretched and miserable, before faith is wrought in them; but that they are actually justified, healed, and pardoned, whilst profane and ungodly persons, though they know it not; can such be said to be naked and miserable, that are clothed with the righteousness of Christ ?

3. This shows the absolute necessity of Christ, and of a vital union with him; and also with what speed convinced sinners should come to Jesus Christ.

4. Moreover, it shows what a wonderful mercy it is, for a sinner to be brought to see his sin, and to have a true and real sense of his undone condition: God saith to his servant, "Go quickly, and bring hither the poor, the maimed, the halt, and the blind;" these shall come, nay they will come; God hath opened their eyes, and wrought a will in them to take the water of life.

5. These souls are willing to beg, they are ready to starve, and know they have nothing of their own, and so readily go to Jesus Christ for all things they want; they see divine wrath ready to consume them, but are convinced, that, by the blood of Christ, that wrath is quenched, and God reconciled; and they being maimed, are in great pain, and therefore gladly receive a plaister to heal their wounds.

"And the servant said, Lord it is done as thou hast commanded, and yet there is room," ver. 23.

The poor outcasts of Israel, lost sinners of the Jews came in, they believed in Christ, they came to the marriage supper: but still there is yet room for more, even for poor sinners of the Gentiles also.

Doctrine. Though many receive Jesus Christ, or come to the marriage supper, yet there is room for more still.

First, I shall show you, what these words denote, there is yet room.

Secondly, show you, where there is room.

Thirdly, why it is said, there is yet room; and show you how long there will be room.

What there is yet room doth denote.

I. This word implies, that there is a certain definite number, that shall and must come to this supper, i. e., there are places prepared for more, which are yet empty.

II. It signifies, that God will have his house full: see "that my house may be full," all the elect must be called, and many of them were among the Gentile nations.

III. It implies, either that some who were called did delay, or else that there were some that were not yet invited, or not yet called, the servant was sent again.

IV. It denotes the largeness, or the extensiveness of God's love to sinners; his love is not extended to all universally, yet it is extended to all the nations of the world, not to the Jews only, but to the Gentiles also: Christ was "sent to be a light to the Gentiles, that he might be God's salvation to the ends of the earth," Luke ii. 32. Many have been called, and yet there is room for multitudes more, who, in the latter days, shall be called, and shall flock like doves to the window.

How we may know in what nation the elect of God are.

Question. How may we know in what nation or place some of God's elect are who shall be called?

Answer. 1. Where the gospel is sent, there no doubt are some of God's elect ones, be it what nation, kingdom, city, or town whatsoever: God will not sow where he shall not reap. O happy England, happy London, happy Bristol, happy are those cities, that have the gospel in a clear ministration; if sent to them, there is a seed, a remnant, that God will bring or gather to himself.

2. Where God sows the seed of the word plentifully, and brings the gospel to their very doors; and also brings sinners under the word: this is a sign of grace to many of their souls; there is little hopes of them that will not hear.

3. When people give attention to the word, hear it diligently, and the convictions of Acts xvi. 14. the word and Spirit takes hold of their hearts: when God opens the heart of a man or woman, as he opened the heart of Lydia, to attend upon the word, it is a sign they belong to the election of grace.

Secondly, where there is yet room.

Answer. I. There is room in the heart of God, and in the heart of Jesus Christ. Solomon; (it is thought) in his great love extended to so many. was a type of Christ; and also, that his loving of Pharaoh's daughter, held forth Christ's love to the Gentiles. Oh! what love hath Christ to us tauny and sun-burnt Gentiles, that we should be the darlings of Jesus? there is yet room in the Father's heart, and in the Son's heart, for thousands of sinners.

II. There is yet room in the election of grace, that is not full yet; I mean, they that were given to Christ, and chosen to eternal life, are not all yet called: God sees and knows who are his, and who have been called, and are gone to heaven, and who are not yet called, and until they are all brought in, there is room in the election for the conversion of them.

III. There is room in God's house below, I mean in his Church; there are yet many empty places that must be filled, and God will fill his house with guests; Egypt, Æthiopia, Sheba, must come in; Turks, Tartar, Pagans, and infidels, shall be called: "Who are these that fly as a cloud, and as doves to the windows?" Isa lx. 8. "A little one shall become a thousand, and a small one a strong people, I the Lord will hasten it in his time."

IV. There is yet room in the marriage chamber, i. e., the covenant of grace, into the bonds and bounds of which, Jesus Christ will bring all his elect; they that are decreetively his, and he struck hands for them, and therefore he will espouse and marry them all first or last.

V. And lastly, there is room in heaven, heaven is not yet full; "In my Father's house are many dwelling-places," John xiv. 2. And not one of them places shall be long empty.

Thirdly, why is it said there is yet room.

Why it is said there is yet room.

Answer. I. Because God would discover his great love to poor sinners, even to the sinners of the Gentiles; and that no poor sinner might despair who is not yet called.

II. Because Christ's mystical body is not yet complete; some members are yet wanting; all the branches are not yet grafted into the true vine and olive-tree.

III. It is said, there is yet room, that ministers may know their work is not yet done; and therefore, be diligent to bring in all whose hearts are made willing.

IV. To let us know the great patience and forbearance of God, though sinners still refuse to come in, and accept of mercy, and persist in their evil ways, yet God sends to them, to acquaint them there is mercy for them in his heart, and a place for them, yea room enough still in his house.

Question. How long will there be room?

Answer. I. So long that God is pleased to continue the gospel, to this or that place, land, or nation.

How long there may be room.

2. So long as the patience and long-suffering of God is continued, or he is upon the throne of grace, and is not risen up from his place, where he sits between the cherubims.

3. So long as the Spirit of God strives with men, or with any poor sinner: when God said, his Spirit should strive no more with the old world, there was no more room for them in his heart, no, nor in the world.

4. So long as the harvest lasteth, and until all the elect are not called, and some things are not fulfilled that God hath spoken, even until Christ deliver up the kingdom to the Father, having finished his mediatorial work and office.

APPLICATION.

I. Bless God, poor sinners, that there is yet room: O, how good is God, in providing so large a wedding-chamber! and to extend his love and favour to so many! "And the number of them was ten thousand times ten thousand, and thousands of thousands," Rev. v. 11.

II. Let no sinner from henceforth say there is no room; if thou hast got room for Christ in thy heart, there is room for thee in his heart.

III. Comfort. Sirs! It is a sign you are some of them from whom there is yet room, for these reasons following:

1. Because you have the Gospel continued to you; the kingdom of heaven is not yet taken from you.

2. Because you (especially some of you) attend upon the word with diligence, as men that are sensible of the worth of it.

3. Because it begins to reach some of your hearts, and causes you to cry out, what must we do to be saved?

IV. Reproof. Yet it may be, by way of reprehension, to such of you that delay; O, consider you are called to come quickly, presently, and not defer the great concerns of your precious souls, to another day; for the Lord's sake take rebuke: what! will you be like Lot?

V. Exhortation. Haste, haste to the wedding-chamber, lest you never eat of the King's supper, no, nor taste of it; you know not how long the harvest may last, and the Spirit of God utterly leave you, and strive no more with you for ever.

"And the Lord said unto his servant, go out into the high-ways, and hedges, and compel them to come in, that my house may be filled," ver. 23.

I have already opened these words at the beginning, by way of exposition. These that are here mentioned are the Gentiles, who were out of the Jewish Church, and strangers to the commonwealth of Israel, and were afar off, who seemed mere outcasts or vagabonds, lying in the high-ways, and under hedges. What this compulsion is we have opened, and showed it does not intend outward force or violence; our Lord never taught any Spanish conversion, nor French conversion; not to dragoon them, or, by inhuman cruelties, to compel them against their consciences; no, this is of the devil, and not of Christ.

High-ways. Such that go on in the common road of sin, or in the high-way to hell and destruction, the ways that all the Gentiles walked before called. From hence, note the Doct. God extends mercy to the worst of sinners, even to idolaters.

As all the Gentiles were; even such that sacrificed to devils: "But I say, that the things which the Gentiles sacrifice, they sacrifice to devils, and not to God," 1 Cor. x. 20. They had images, and the evil angels answered in those images, which they called oracles, and thought it was a speech from God, whereas it was the devil that spoke, and them they worshipped; as many of the poor heathens do now, whom they call evil gods, and fear and serve them, more than the God of heaven and earth, and yet God offered grace, and invited such sinners as these, to come to this blessed Gospel feast; which may be great encouragement to the vilest of men, to look to Jesus Christ, and not to despair of God's mercy, in and through the Lord Jesus Christ.

For I say unto you, that none of those men who which were bidden, shall taste of my supper; that is, none of them, Jews or others, who desired to be excused; and made light of the gracious tender of the Lord Jesus; they shall not taste of my love, of pardon of sin, of free justification, nor of any other gospel blessings or privileges; they shall not taste of anything that is truly spiritually good; they shall never see my kingdom, nor know what heaven is. O! it is a dreadful and most dangerous thing to slight Jesus Christ, or make light of the offers of grace, or gospel invitations; let all such therefore tremble, who are found guilty of this great sin and wickedness.

“And when the king came to see the guests, he saw there a man not having a wedding-garment on, and he said, Friend, how camest thou hither, not having a wedding garment, and

may be said to view his guests.

he was speechless?”

Question. When may the king be said to come and view the guests? shall any wicked man get into heaven, or into the wedding chamber, when Christ comes at the last day?

Ans. No no, the door will be shut against 'all unbelievers then; therefore it must refer to the visible church: here many get in amongst the saints, in the church militant, who have not a wedding garment, and Christ will say unto such, friend! How camest thou here, or how gottest thou among my people, not having on a wedding garment, or not being clothed with my righteousness; but appearest in thy filthy rags, in my presence?

Doct. The Lord Jesus takes, or will take a view of all his guests; and if any have not a wedding garment, he will soon have his eye upon such a person.

In speaking to this point of doctrine; I shall,

First, show, what a view Christ takes of all his guests.

Secondly, show, why Christ will or doth take such a view.

Thirdly, show, what is meant by the wedding garment.

Christ views all our hearts.

I. Jesus Christ doth and will take a strict view.

1. He will and doth view their hearts; “I am he that searcheth the heart and reins,” Rev. ii. 23. This shows Christ is the most high God, he sees whether all those who are in his church have changed hearts, new, or renewed hearts, or not, whether their hearts be sincere and upright, or not, whether they have believing hearts, or true faith or not, whether they have humble obedient hearts or not.

2. He views their thoughts, to see whether evil thoughts are lodged in them or not.

3. He views all the motions, counsels, designs, purposes, desires, ends, and aims of all their hearts.

4. Christ views the lives of all his guests, or such that are got into his church, he sees how they live, and what conversations they lead, how they behave themselves at home, and abroad; when in the company of wicked men, as well as when among his own people; also he sees what conscience they make of their duty, and what love they have to one another, and to his poor saints, and faithful ministers, and how they carry it in their families, the husband to the wife, the wife to the husband, parents to children, and children to parents. “All the ways of men are before the eyes of the Lord, and he ponders their goings,” Prov. v. 21.

5. Jesus Christ views their principle, whether they are sound in the faith or not, or hold such principles and notions of Christianity as are according to the holy doctrine taught by himself and his apostles, or not; if any hold erroneous or corrupt principles, he sees and knows them, as he did some in the church of Pergamos; “Thou hast them that hold the doctrine of Balaam,” Rev. ii. 14; which some think was marrying with idolators, others a community of women; “So thou hast also them that hold the doctrine of the Nicolaitans, which thing I hate;” that all agree was the community of women, as it is said, Nicholas himself prostituted his own wife to others. Let all take heed what doctrine or notions they suck in, and see whether they consist with the revelation of the word, the holy nature, justice, mercy, and goodness of God, “Christ will judge the world in righteousness,” Acts xvii. 31; and though he saves in a way of sovereign grace alone, yet he will condemn none without respect had to their sins, and contempt of his word; “He will judge every man according as their works shall be,” Rev. xxii. 12. If men, by their notions, justify the wicked, whom God condemns, or seek to be justified by their own righteousness instead of renouncing it, and counting it as dung to be found in the righteousness of Christ, and so appear before him without the wedding garment, they will be speechless. Let such that join their faith, and sincere obedience, with the righteousness of Christ, in justification before God, (as they call it) see to it; Christ sees and weighs men's principles, their spirits, their actions; nay, their persons; “thou art weighed in the balance and art found wanting.”

Question. In what balance will Christ weigh men?

Our thoughts,
Our desires, ends, and aims.
Our lives and conversations.

Answer. In the balance of the sanctuary, or in the scales of truth, righteousness, and justice; therefore, he that is put into the scales without Christ, (or not both weighed together) the law and justice of God will find them as light as vanity; justice, the law, and the holiness of God, will have full weight and measure, thou wilt be viewed and weighed. O sinner, look well to it, you may be viewed by men, and pass for good Christians, but may not bear Christ's view, nor his weighing here, nor at the great day; or men may, on the other hand, condemn you out of prejudice, and yet Christ may find you sincere and upright ones, and acquit you.

Secondly, why may, or will Christ put this question, "friend! how camest thou hither, not having a wedding-garment?"

Answer. I. Because none ought to attempt to come into the church, or to come to this marriage, without a wedding-garment: he alludes to the custom of the Jews, all that were invited to a marriage among them, were to have a wedding-garment.

Why the question will be asked, friend, how camest thou hither?

II. Because such is the clear revelation of the gospel, in respect to this matter. What is more fully laid down than this, that no righteousness of the creature, no inherent righteousness will avail any man? this is so sufficiently declared, that Christ may, and will say, how camest thou hither, not having on my righteousness; but thinks to be justified and accepted by thy own righteousness, or by thy works, or by thy faith and obedience: friend, why didst thou not give credit to my word and faithful ministers? Christ may say, did not I tell you, that all that trusted in their own righteousness should perish for ever? did not I confirm this doctrine by miracles; nay, by my own blood? and, how often did I tell you, that, unless you eat my flesh and drank my blood, ye had no life in you.

III. Or the Lord Jesus may put this question to him, because he had on nothing but filthy rags: what a bold and rude thing is this? Dare you appear, before the eyes of a holy God, in these loathsome rags, who hates all sin and filthiness? O what a pickle art thou in, and how odious and how hateful in the sight of God, and in my sight.

IV. Or, may be, this man was one that talked much of Christ's righteousness, as that only which justifies a sinner before God, i. e., he might hold that notion and plead for it, dispute for it, but only pleased himself with the speculative or notional knowledge thereof, but was no true believer; but perhaps one that turned the grace of God into lasciviousness, and sinned because grace abounded; or never regarded sanctification, in order to a meetness for eternal life; but perhaps was one that pleaded for an imputative sanctification, (as some do now) as if the personal sanctification of Christ is imputed to them, for their sanctification, as well as his obedience to the law, and his sufferings, is imputed to them that believe, to justify them in the sight of God, which certainly is an abominable doctrine, and tends to encourage sinners in their sins, and to damn their souls; for without inherent holiness, or the sanctification of the Spirit, no man shall see the Lord.

The notion of imputed sanctification, detectable as abominable.

"Friend! how camest thou hither?" such a one as thou without a wedding garment, that spent so much time in talking of, and disputing for an imputed righteousness, or for a wedding garment, and yet hast it not on, but appears here without it? What can such a man say? he, to be sure, must needs be speechless.

V. Or, Jesus Christ may put his question well, to such who have it not on, considering what he hath done to procure the wedding garment. He may say, Friend! did not I take the nature of man, into union with my own divine person, (though without sin) that in the body I might work out a righteousness, or a glorious garment, for all that I espouse? and, dost thou come hither without it? What contempt dost thou cast upon what I have done and suffered? Did I live that holy life in obedience to the law, and die in vain? for so it will follow, if any other righteousness, save mine only, could justify a sinner before God. This, my brethren, is according to what Paul saith, "for if their had been a law that could have given life, Christ died in vain," Gal. iii. 21. How speechless must this render all that think to be saved by any other righteousness, than Christ's alone: besides, Christ may say, is not my church and people an holy priesthood, and dost thou think that any holiness, save that wrought by my Spirit, or imparted to them, can sanctify them?

VI. Moreover, was not this wedding garment offered to thee? Is it not tendered unto all? "Even the righteousness of God unto all, and upon all that believe," Rom. iii. 22. It is offered to all, but it is put upon none, or imputed to none, but to them that believe in Jesus, they and none but they have on the wedding garment; others are naked, even the elect themselves before faith, or before their actual union with Christ.

VII. Christ may say, how camest thou hither? thou art an unbeliever, and did I not say, "he that believeth not shall be damned?" Mark xvi. 16. And dost thou think to be saved, and make me a liar?

Thirdly. What is meant by the wedding garment.

What the wedding garment is. Answer. You have heard over and over, it is the righteousness of Christ God-man, as he is apprehended by faith alone; and whosoever hath Christ, union with Christ, hath on the wedding garment: some I know would bring sanctification as here meant; but certainly, Christ's righteousness only is the wedding garment: whosoever hath Christ on, put on Christ for justification, he hath on the wedding garment. It is said, the king's daughter is clothed with wrought gold: the wedding garment is put upon the soul, it is put upon all them that believe, it is not wrought in them: the king's daughter is also said to be all glorious within; that I conceive refers to the graces of the Spirit, or to the righteousness of sanctification; but the wedding garment is not that righteousness that is inherent, or wrought in the soul, but put upon the soul; and though sanctification is a glorious work, yet it is not perfect in this life, but Christ's righteousness is complete and without spot, and therefore that which renders the soul lovely in Christ's eye, and so the wedding garment.

Question. Why is it called the wedding garment? Also, what is the nature of it?

See the parable of the prodigal son. Answer. Because I have spoken to it, in opening the parable of the Prodigal son, where it is called the best robe, I shall but touch upon this here; but to proceed.

Christ's righteousness covers all our imperfection. 1. It is a long garment, it covers the soul (as I may say) from the head to the foot; it covers all our infirmities and deformities; it covers like a garment, all the defects and blemishes, that attend our lives, our duties, and all the imperfections of our grace: O what is there wanting in our faith? what defects and weakness in our faith? and how weak and imperfect is our love to God, to Christ, and to the saints and people of God? and who is he so humble, so meek, so patient, so temperate as he ought? the sins that cleave to our graces and best duties, were it not that God looked upon us in the righteousness of Christ, we should be loathed in the sight of God.

There is an absolute need of Christ's righteousness 2. As a garment is absolutely necessary since the fall, to cover our naked bodies, so is the righteousness of Christ also absolutely necessary to cover our naked souls; and as innocent Adam needed no garment to cover his body, so he needed not the righteousness of Christ to put upon him, to cover his soul: the necessity of this robe came in by the fall, through our want of a perfect inherent righteousness of our own.

3. A glorious garment is ornamental; it makes a poor beggar that hath it on, to appear like a prince; so the righteousness of Christ, put upon a vile and wretched sinner, puts a beauty upon him, and renders him like a prince, or very glorious in the sight of God; thou wast comely, through that comeliness I put upon thee, Ezek. xvi. 14.

4. As a garment defends the body from the scorching beams of the sun; so the robe of Christ's righteousness defends the soul of a believer from the scorching beams of God's wrath, and also from the fiery darts of the devil, and from the power, guilt, and punishment of sin, and the curse of the law.

5. As all old garments are put off by a princely bride, and esteemed of no value, in comparison of a rich wedding-garment that is bespangled with jewels and diamonds, Phil. iii. 8, 9, so a poor believer, that puts on this wedding-garment esteems all his own righteousness but as dung, in comparison of this glorious robe; "upon thy right-hand did stand the queen in gold of Ophir," Psa. xlv. 9. The wedding-garment renders the bride amiable, and most lovely in the sight of the bridegroom, and to rejoice over her; "and as the bridegroom rejoiceth over the bride, so thy God shall rejoice over thee."

This garment none can tear, neither doth it ever grow old, nor is it the worse for wearing. It is called a white robe; but though it be so, yet it has no spot or stain; nor can the value if it be counted; nay, let me add, the holy angels are not so richly clothed, for they no other righteousness, than that of mere creatures: but this is the righteousness of God, i. e., Jesus Christ, the Mediator, who is God over all, blessed for evermore, Amen.

APPLICATION.

1. This may put a rebuke upon such who attempt to come into the presence of God without a wedding-garment.

2. It also shows the miserable condition of hypocrites, who, though they may not be discovered in this world to men, yet Jesus Christ will find them out expose them to shame at the last day; "Friend, how camest thou hither, not having a wedding-garment?"

3. Also, by this we may see who will be rejected, and the cause of it, in the great day.

4. Be exhorted to seek after and provide the wedding-garment; the damnation of sinners will not only be for their horrid sins and unrighteousness, but also because they trusted on, and depended upon their own righteousness, good works, and inherent holiness.

5. This moreover informs us, of the happiness of the weakest believer; he that has the smallest degree of faith, is in as good a condition as the strongest believer; all are equally justified, or clothed alike, all have on the wedding-garment, all are pardoned and have the same righteousness of Christ put upon them.

6. O be persuaded to put a high value on his robe, and fetch not your comfort and hope of justification, and acceptation with God, from the inward purity and uprightness of your hearts, nor from the liveliness of your frames; yet remember, that all such who are justified, are also sanctified: "Put on the Lord Jesus, and make no provision for the flesh, to fulfil the lusts thereof," Rom. xiii. 14. "And he was speechless," ver. 12.

Doct. That when God comes, by Jesus Christ, to judge sinners, they will be speechless, or have nothing to say to excuse themselves, who have not got the wedding garment.

First, I shall prove this point of doctrine.

Secondly, I shall give you the reasons of it. Thirdly, apply it.

I. Let this be premised, i. e., I do not mean sinners shall speak nothing to excuse themselves, no, this is not meant when it is said he was speechless; for it is said, some will say in that day, "Lord, we have cast out devils in thy name, and in thy name done many wonderful works," Matt. vii. 22. Moreover, our Lord, in another place, saith, "Then ye shall begin to say, we have eat and drank in thy presence, and thou hast preached in our streets," Luke xiii. 26.

What is not meant by being speechless.

My brethren! sinners may speak many words to excuse themselves (as I hinted in the explanation of these words) one may plead his ignorance, he was not learned, and another that he was poor, and had a great charge of children to provide for, which took up all his time and thoughts; also another, that he was misled by his teachers; moreover, another perhaps may plead his moral righteousness, or sober life; another his external obedience and inherent righteousness; but, alas, none of all these things will avail them anything, they having not got the wedding-garment; therefore they shall be silenced, "All mouths shall be stopped, and all the world become guilty before God," Rom. iii. 19.

What is meant by his being speechless.

Their own consciences shall accuse them, and put them to silence, "Their conscience also bearing witness, and their thoughts the mean while accusing or else excusing one another, in the day when God shall judge the secrets of men, by Jesus Christ, according to thy gospel," Rom. ii. 15, 16.

Secondly, to give you the reasons of this point, and demonstrate the truth thereof.

Why all men shall be speechless in the day of judgment.

I. The first shall be taken from the justice and righteousness of God; "Shall not the judge of all the earth do right," Gen. xviii. 25. God will be cleared when he judgeth, and justified when he condemneth; his goodness and righteousness is such, he cannot do wrong to any man, and this every man shall see, and be convinced of in that day; and therefore when judgment passeth, all shall be speechless, or put to silence; hence it is said, the judge "will be upon a white throne," Rev. xx. 11, which denotes the justice and righteousness he shall be clothed with. "We know the judgment of God is according to truth," Rom. ii. 2. "The sceptre of thy kingdom is a righteous sceptre," Heb. viii. Moreover, it is positively said, God "will judge the world in righteousness," Acts xvii. 31. "The Lord shall judge the people righteously," Psal. vii. 8.

II. They shall be silenced, and become speechless, because of that clear revelation and declaration God hath made of the necessity of the righteousness of Christ, to the justification of a sinner at his bar.

The law lays all men under wrath, that condemneth every unbeliever: there is no clothing, no garment to cover their nakedness, by the law, nor any standing in judgment before God in that righteousness; "Now we know, whatsoever the law saith, it saith, to them that are under the law, that all mouths might be stopped, and all the world become guilty before God," Rom. iii. 19. Alas, the law, or light within, is weak through the flesh, that cannot help nor relieve one soul; and therefore God sent his own Son, and God hath plainly, and positively said, that "he that believes not, shall be damned," Mark xvi. 16. That is, he that flies not to Jesus Christ, or takes not hold of his righteousness, and the merits of his blood or wholly does not rest on him, or truly believe in him, shall perish.

And this wretch, that had not on the wedding-garment, read this text, and many more of the like nature, and yet believed not in Christ, but either trusted to his own righteousness, to his own repentance, tears, contrition, and reformation of life; or else trusted in the simple mercy of God, without having a respect to the sacrifice and atonement of Christ's blood; now this plain revelation of the gospel, so often repeated concerning the necessity of faith in Christ, or getting on the wedding-garment, will cause every unbelieving sinner to be speechless.

III. They shall be silenced, considering what the sacred scripture testifieth, concerning the inherent righteousness of the best of men, calling it filthy rags, and vile raiment, now this being so, shall any dare to appear in those rags? Isa. lxiv. 6.

Object. But it is not in the power of a sinner to get this wedding-garment, none have it without faith, and faith is the gift of God, may not a sinner plead this at the great day?

Which way sinners will be silenced, and left speechless, at the great day.

Answer. But though they know this is so, yet they do not look to God in Christ for power; but perhaps think, they may have this robe without faith, nor else trust to their own power, and they can believe at any time, and this will silence them in that day.

IV. They shall be speechless, because their own consciences will bear witness against them, that they did not what they had power to do: could they not forbear their lying, their drunkenness, their thieving, their whoring, &c., and could they not attend upon the word of God? or go to a meeting as easily as to an alehouse, or to walk in the fields, or be at home? or, could they not give as much credit to the word of God, as to a human history? The word saith, "He believeth not is condemned already; and that he hath not then Son, hath not life, but the wrath of God abideth upon him," John iii. 18—36. Had they not as much power to believe such a record of God, as to believe what is told them in human history? True, it is one thing to have the faith of credence, and another thing to have the grace of faith, but ungodly sinners do not act or exercise that faith on the verity of God's word, which they are capable to do; but rather by their pride and infidelity seem to declare God's word is not to be regarded, but look upon it to be a fiction; and from hence they will be speechless.

The witnesses will silence the sinner in the day of judgment;
Who, the witnesses will be.

V. They will be silenced by those severe witnesses that will come in against them at the great day,

1. The moral law will be a witness against them: "Do not think that I accuse you to the Father; there is one that accuseth you, even Moses, in whom you trust," John v. 4, 5. The holy law will be brought in against them (by which they thought to be justified) they having broken it many thousand times, and are cursed as well as accused by it. Does not the law require a sinless righteousness, "This do, and thou shalt live," that is, live and sin not? and doth not the law pronounce death and wrath against all that have broken it? This will silence all that have no interest in Jesus Christ.

2. The gospel will witness against them also; because that discovers there is no other way or name given by which we must be saved, but by Christ alone, and him they have rejected; the gospel offers free pardon to all that come to Jesus Christ, but they would not come to him, nor cry to God, to help them to believe in Jesus, and to change their hearts; therefore they shall be speechless.

3. All the holy attributes of God will come in, and witness against sinners, and put them to silence.

(1.) Divine wisdom will silence them, because that way infinite wisdom contrived to recover lost sinners, was slighted, and other ways adhered unto.

(2.) The truth of God will witness against them, and make them speechless, because neither the promises of the word were believed, nor the precepts obeyed, nor the threats thereof feared.

(3.) Divine power will come in and witness against them, because God's almighty arm was stretched out, to help and save them, but they did not endeavour to take hold of it.

(4.) Divine justice will also witness against them, and exact full payment of all their debts, and call for execution, because the satisfaction made by Jesus Christ was despised and slighted, they not pleading that, for their discharge at God's bar.

(5.) The mercy of God likewise, will come in and witness against them; because all that favour, love, and mercy, let out in and by Jesus Christ, was abused, and abominably neglected. The very flood-gates of mercy were opened, yet they went on in their sinful ways; and because the sentence against their evil works was not speedily executed, their hearts were fully set in them to do evil; and that goodness that should have led them to repentance, they abused, and made an occasion to harden them in their sinful courses.

4. Jesus Christ, the Judge himself, will witness against them; because against him, his love, and infinite goodness, their sins were committed, they trampling upon his most precious blood, and disesteemed of all he had done. O then the Lamb of God will appear like a lion; and "will say to the mountains and rocks, fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb," Rev. vi, 15, 16. As the knowledge of the judge is infinite, and his righteousness just and wonderful, so his wrath and fury will be also terrible, "When he comes in flaming fire, to take vengeance upon all that know not God, and who obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ," 2 Thess. i. 1,—8. He then will say, "Bring out them my enemies, that would not have me reign over them, and slay them before me," Luke xix. 27.

Christ himself will be a Witness against the sinner.

5. The ministers of Christ will be called, it is thought, to witness against them, who offered Christ to them, and told them what their sins, and their unbelief, would bring upon them in the end; but they regarded it not, but, may be, contemned them in their hearts.

6. Their own consciences, I told you, will witness against them, and convince them, that the sentence will be just and righteous. Conscience now reproves them according to its light, but then all clouds and veils shall be taken away, and all these pretended excuses which now they make, shall be gone for ever, and they will see it will be in vain to plead their own good deeds or righteousness, and much more in vain to plead their perfections, which some now boast of; for they will find they have sinned, and did sin daily; that they had very proud, envious, lustful, unbelieving, and erroneous thoughts; as well as many sinful actions; they thought not rightly of Christ, and were mistaken in their moral and inherent righteousness.

Conscience, my brethren, keeps a record of all our thoughts, words, and actions; and in that day this book shall be opened; conscience is privy to all evil thoughts, evil words, and secret deeds of darkness, and will come in and witness against sinners in that day.

Jesus Christ, the Judge, will appeal to every man's conscience, whether it be not a just and righteous sentence that he passeth upon them, and all will justify him in that day. "That thou mayest be justified when thou speakest, and clear when thou judgest," Psal. li. 4.

Now, from hence, all these things being considered, every man that is found out of Christ, shall be speechless.

APPLICATION.

1. Let none think to escape the righteous judgment of God, or to hide his sins from his eyes. Now, you may hide your sins from men, but all your secret sins will be laid open in that day.

2. We infer, that God is very gracious to discover in his word how it will go with sinners in the great day; search, and you may know now what your state is, and what your doom will be then.

3. This informs also, that the damnation of sinners will partly be for their trusting in their own righteousness, and slighting of the righteousness of Christ. No wonder that they do not believe Christ's faithful ministers, who tell them of the danger they are in upon this account, and of the vanity of their hopes of being saved, any other way than by Christ alone, since our Saviour shows, they will have the boldness to plead for their acceptance some other way, than by his righteousness, before the great Judge of heaven and earth; for this is clearly implied here.

TERROR.

Let hypocrites, and all unbelievers, tremble. O! what will you do, in the day Christ comes to view his guests, who are without the wedding-garment? Perhaps you may have something to say now, and may deceive yourselves; yet know, that in that day you will be speechless. Will a place among the people of God avail you anything then? No, you will be silenced in darkness for ever.

EXHORTATION.

Let every soul despair of salvation any other way than by Jesus Christ; you must believe, rely upon Christ, be clothed with his righteousness, or perish; then labour to throw your souls upon the Lord Jesus Christ, and believe with all your hearts. But be not deceived, to think you do believe, unless you find the effects of true faith; faith without works is dead, it purifies and sanctifies the soul where it is wrought in any person.

Do not say, Wherefore should you strive to believe, because you cannot tell whether you are elected or not; for if you believe, this is the way to know you are one of God's elect. Think not you shall have any plea, upon the account of election, in the day of judgment, that will avail you nothing; what, though he hath chosen some men to salvation, will he be unjust in condemning ungodly sinners? No, in that day you will find all men will be speechless, and be convinced that their condemnation will be just and righteous; if men cannot make their principles comport with the justice and righteousness of God, let them conclude they are false principles; for they shall find that every man shall be damned for his own sins, and abominable wickedness, in that day.

COMFORT.

This may be for consolation to all true believers, or such who have espoused Jesus Christ; you have got the wedding-garment, you love the person of Christ, you value the Person as well as the portion, you love the image of Christ, as well as the righteousness of Christ; and therefore it appears, your state is happy for ever.

"Then said the king to his servants, bind him hand and foot, and take him away, and cast him into utter darkness, there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth," verse 13.

It is very observable, that our Saviour ends several of his parables after this dreadful manner, to deter sinners from their evil ways; and to assure them, that hell is a place of intolerable misery.

Binding them hand and foot, shows the certainty and unavoidable nature of their punishment; the unchangeable decree of God shall be executed upon them, and when once in hell, they shall never come out; they shall be as unable to deliver themselves, as a man that is bound in fetters, and chains of iron, can stir or move out of the place where he is cast.

And gnashing of teeth, denotes the great pain and anguish of those torments which they must undergo, for evermore.

"For many are called, but few are chosen." Many hear the gospel preached, or have the outward call, but few are chosen to eternal life, and so are effectually called, or find the gospel come to them in power, and not in word only to them. But this being spoken to in the opening of the parable, Matt. xx. ver. 16, I shall say no more to it here.

THE

OF THE

FAITHFUL AND WISE SERVANT.

SERMON XVII.

Who then is a faithful and wise servant, whom his Lord hath made ruler over his household, to give them meat in due season.

Blessed is that servant, whom his lord, when he cometh, shall find so doing, &c.—Matt. xxiv. 45—51.

WE have the same parable recorded by the evangelist Luke, with a little difference; but whether our Lord spoke it only at one time is doubtful, from the coherence, or what proceeds in both the evangelists; as the occasion of our Lord's speaking this parable; the occasion of which, according to Luke, was that question put forth by the apostle Peter, "Then Peter said unto him, Lord, speakest thou this parable unto us, or even to all? And the Lord said, who then is a faithful and wise steward," &c., Luke xii. 41.

The occasion of this parable.

The scope and design of this parable.

As to the scope or main design of this parable, it seems to me,

1. To excite or stir up all believers to watchfulness, and a due preparation for our Lord's coming, according to what proceeds in both the sacred writers, and the duty of watchfulness concerns all Christ's disciples.
2. Another reason of it is, to stir up all the ministers of the gospel to faithfulness, in their places, work, and office, both to himself, and to his church and people, whom they have the care and oversight of. Indeed, it chiefly refers to them, and shows :—

- (1.) That they are stewards of God's house.
- (2.) That they are rulers in or over the household where they are set.
- (3.) To discover the blessed condition that all faithful ministers of Christ are in, and what happiness shall attend them, in the day when he cometh.

3. It also seems to be a prediction of the multitudes of unholty and unfaithful persons (who call themselves ministers) that there would be in the latter days, or a little before our Lord's coming, viz., such that would be drunkards, gluttonous persons, &c., and such also who would smite their fellow-servants, or be persecutors of Christ's faithful people and ministers, and that shall say in their hearts, the Lord delayeth his coming.

4. And to show what a dismal state they are in, and what a fearful end they may expect to meet withal, at the great day, when the Lord cometh. But to proceed, and open the parts.

Who then is the faithful and wise servant, &c.

Ministers are Christ's servants, not lords, but servants in Christ's house, not lords over God's heritage ; and ought to be men of great wisdom, and of faithfulness ; also St. Luke call them stewards, " Who then is a faithful and wise servant, whom his Lord shall make ruler over his household," &c.

The parts of the parable opened.

Every steward a lord chooseth is a servant, but every servant is not a steward ; and a steward over a lord's household is not a mean place of trust, nor is he a servant of a low or inferior rank or quality.

" Whom his Lord shall make ruler over his household," &c.

All stewards may not be made rulers over their lord's household ; but only to perform that part of their work, or office they as stewards are appointed to do, which may differ ; some are only made stewards, to gather in their lord's rents, others not only do that, but to provide all necessaries for the whole family in respect of meat, drink, &c.

Ministers are Christ's stewards.

Now the pastors of churches being made stewards, have a very great trust committed to them, in the absence of our Lord Jesus Christ ; they are called stewards of the mysteries of God. " Let a man so account of us, as the ministers of Christ, and stewards of the mysteries of God," 1 Cor. iv. 1.

A minister is a servant, so that the honour that principally belongs to his master, he must not take to himself ; yet ministers, being Christ's stewards, and also his ambassadors, there is honour due to them, as they represent Christ's person ; and such that despise, slight, and contemn them, they will be found to despise, slight, and contemn the Lord Jesus Christ ; like as all princes look upon themselves slighted or contemned, when their ambassadors are slighted, &c.

" Made rulers over his household."

Not over households ; no steward of Christ is a steward or pastor of more than one church ; they must meet, be fed, and worship God altogether.

" Whom he hath made," &c. Men are made ministers and rulers by Jesus Christ. It is the Lord Jesus that gives them all their ministerial gifts, and divine graces. " When he ascended on high, he gave gifts to men," &c. Eph. iv. 8. Moreover, authority to preach, and take care of the church of God, is given to them, by Jesus Christ. He hath left directions about the choice of his ministers, that are to be bishops or overseers, how they ought to be qualified, and how, and by whom (in his name) to be ordained. " By prayer and laying on of hands," Acts xiii. 3.

1 Tim. iii. 1,
2, &c.
1 Tim. v. 22.
1 Tim. iv. 14.

The rite of laying on of hands, was the way of investiture into office, under the law, as well as under the gospel ; " Moses laid his hands upon Joshua," Deut xxxiv. 9.

Doct. A minister of Christ is his steward, and is entrusted with the household of Christ, and all he hath. In speaking to this, I shall,

1. Show what Christ's ministers are entrusted with.
2. Show what ministers may be said to be stewards and rulers.
3. Show what is required of them ; or show, who are faithful servants.

I. Ministers are entrusted with the gospel, called the mysteries of God. The gospel is committed unto them, I mean, a ministration of it, even all the whole doctrine thereof to study, open and publish it unto the world, and unto the church of God, especially to that household they are made stewards of.

II. The administration of all the sacred ordinances of the gospel, is committed unto them, particularly the ordinance of baptism and breaking of bread, and to pronounce church censures.

III. The care of the church, or whole household, where they are stewards, is committed unto them, "Take heed therefore unto yourselves, and to all the flock over the which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers," Acts xx. 28.

IV. The souls of every particular member is committed to them where they are placed by the Lord Christ. "They watch for your souls, as they that must give an account," Heb. xiii. 17.

Secondly, What ministers may be said to be Christ's stewards and rulers of his household.

Ans. Ministers are of two sorts.

Two sorts of ministers in the church.

Acts xx. 28.
1 Pet. v. 1, 2.
Heb. xiii. 17.

Teachers as well as pastors are left in the church.

1. Such who are only teachers, who preach by virtue of their gifts Christ hath given them, being regularly called so to do.

2. Elders or pastors; now, they that are pastors, only are made stewards and rulers over Christ's household; the trust or care of the family may be committed to every particular teacher in a church; no, it is the pastor only that is the chief steward and ruler therein.

Question. What authority then have men to preach, besides ordained pastors or bishops?

1. Answer. Christ hath not only left pastors in his church, but teachers also, "He gave some pastors and some teachers," Eph. iv. 11. These two remained in church, when the extraordinary gifts and offices and officers ceased, as that of apostles, evangelists, and prophets.

If Christ gave some teachers to his church, besides pastors, then such to whom he hath given ministerial gifts unto, may and ought to preach, but the former is true; ergo.

2. Such that have those ministerial gifts, may and ought to preach, though not ordained ministers or pastors, because they are required so to do; "As every man hath received the gift, even so minister the same one to another, as good stewards of the manifold grace of God," 1 Pet. iv. 10. Some that oppose this, would have the gift here mentioned, to mean common gifts that every parent or master of a family hath received, or any gift or ability whereby he may be serviceable to the good of others, but do these at all turns of whom they speak, speak as the oracles of God; see the very next words, "If any man speak, (that is teach) let him speak as the oracles of God."

3. There can be none chosen to be overseers or pastors, if there are no teachers besides pastors in the church, because a bishop or overseer must have (among qualifications) this one, viz., he must be "apt to teach," 1 Tim. iii. 2; and also by "sound doctrine, be able to convince gainsayers," Tit. i. 9; therefore there are teachers left in the church, and ought to be trained up there, and due encouragement given to them, besides pastors, and the consequence of denying it, would be pernicious to the churches of Christ. What church dares utterly dispense with one of the qualifications of a pastor or bishop.

4. Men are exhorted to covet the best gifts, but rather that they may prophecy, that is, teach or preach the gospel; but why should men desire such gifts, if they may not be allowed to preach?

Question. Who have right, or authority to preach the gospel, as teachers?

1. Answer. I answer first negatively. Not all who have human learning, or the knowledge of the tongues, although they may be set apart by men to preach; for Papists and profane persons may have learning, and take their degrees in universities, but doth that make them Ministers of Christ, or give them a lawful call and authority to preach. Christ, my brethren, hath not appointed such men to be his ministers; no, nor is the knowledge of the tongues any of the qualifications either of a teacher, bishop, or overseer. See 1 Tim. iii., Tit. i.; in which two chapters, all the qualifications of pastors are left upon record.

2. Nor hath Christ ordained universities, or schools of human learning, to train up ministers, neither can that qualify, or authorize any man to be a true minister; if the word of God be a sufficient rule, (as certainly it is in this great case) for what can any man living say to the contrary, from God's word, or confute what I say? Though I am no enemy to human learning, but have often wished (if God saw it good, and it might tend to his glory) that all that are true ministers had the knowledge of the tongues, but perhaps God hath on purpose chose such who are base things, or men unlearned, to confound the wise and learned, "That no flesh should glory in his presence, but that he that glorieth should glory in the Lord," 1 Cor. i. 29, 31.

Learning is good, if not abused; it is a good hand-maid, but a bad mistress. It is indeed a shame to some that have lately rendered men, who have not the knowledge of the tongues, unfit to preach, as if they could not speak sense, or good English, nor understand the scripture; and what is this but to magnify such learning above the Spirit's teaching, and the gifts of men above those ministerial gifts given by Jesus Christ?

3. Man ought not to preach, to whom Christ hath not given ministerial gifts unto, and capacitated to open the word of life. It is one thing to do it by art or by human learning, and another to do it by virtue of that gift God hath given to a man; and he cannot be a minister of Christ, whom Christ never gave gifts to, nor authorized to preach the gospel.

Secondly, and in the affirmative.

The call to the ministry is either extraordinary or ordinary. But none now pretend to have an extraordinary call, unless they are some imposters that are crept up of late times; but unless they could work miracles, no wise men will regard what they say or affirm, on that account.

An extraordinary, and an ordinary call to the ministry.

1. Therefore, a true regular call to the ministry lies in a true church of Christ; and indeed, the churches are Christ's universities, where all his ministers ought to be trained up.

1. God converts this or that man; he gives them his Spirit, his grace, and also ministerial gifts, of which gifts the church is the proper judge.

2. When gifted, or thought to be gifted, the church may, nay, ought to admit them to exercise their gifts, and try them, nay, try them again and again, "Let the prophets speak two or three, (though one by one) and let the other judge," 1 Cor. xiv. 29, 30. As extraordinary gifts were then to be tried by the church, so ought ordinary gifts now.

Question. What kind of persons ought teachers to be?

Answer. 1. They ought, as I told you, to be sure that are looked upon to be truly gracious, giving no just cause to the church to judge otherwise, but that they are regenerated persons.

What kind of men teachers, who are not pastors, ought to be. 1 Tim. iii. 6.

2. They ought to be humble men; it is dangerous to encourage a proud conceited young man, who is already lifted up and appears to magnify himself above others: no, he must be nothing in his own eyes, or not conceited, but willing to submit to better judgments, wherein he differs from others. What fearful work have some conceited young men made in the churches, and what dishonour brought to the good ways of God.

3. One of a good report of them that are without, that the name of God be not evil spoken of.

4. One that there is good ground to believe, doth not take up the ministry for "filthy lucre sake," 1 Pet. v. 2. Or for profit, as he doth it not for applause; though if wholly taken off of all worldly business by a church, he ought to be maintained, as God hath ordained; but not until then ought he to throw off his calling, or not till he hath a good and warrantable call so to do.

5. One sound in the faith, holding all the essentials of true Christianity, and a man of good understanding in the mysteries of the faith, or else how shall he feed others with knowledge and understanding?

6. He ought to be of a peaceable, quiet, and condescending spirit, and a holy and good life and conversation.

Question. What cause or reason are they to encourage gifts, or to train up teachers in the church.

1. Answer. Because what ministerial gifts Christ hath given to any man, he gave them to the profit of his church, and good of sinners.

2. Because the labourers are but few, and yet the harvest is great; and if upon that account, we are to pray to the Lord of the harvest, to send labourers into the harvest, much more when he hath sent them, we ought to call them forth, and encourage them to preach.

3. Because if otherwise, what will become of the churches in future times, when the labourers we have now are called home? though God can find labourers it is true, yet ought not we to use the means he directs us to use?

4. Because all that have received ministerial gifts, are but stewards of those gifts, and God will call them to give an account, about their improving them in the great day.

Objection. Those that are called may be weak at first, and so it may not be honourable to employ them.

Objections answered, about encouraging the gifts of the church.

1. Answer. They should be employed privately at first only in the church.

2. Christ hath out of the mouths of babes and sucklings perfected his praise.

3. Many now perhaps that are able ministers, were at first very weak; and had not they been encouraged, what a wrong might it have been to the church of God, and, as the proverb is, use makes perfect.

Objection. But they are tradesmen, husbandmen, and may such preach, are they ministers?

1. Answer. Was not Moses a shepherd, though brought up in Pharaoh's court, yet before called, he kept the sheep of Jethro, his father-in-law, Exod. iii. 1. And the angel of the Lord appeared to him in a flame of fire, out of the midst of a bush. And was not the prophet David also a shepherd, before he was called; and Amos an herdsman; and were not some of the apostles fishermen, Matthew a toll-gatherer, and Paul a tent-maker, and wrought at his trade after called to be an apostle: nay, it is thought, our blessed Saviour himself was a carpenter; "is not this the carpenter, the Son of Mary?"

Our annotators conclude he might work at that trade until he was thirty years old, Mark vi. 3, 4; for he began not his ministry until he was about that age: and, say they, it is not probable that he lived all those years in idleness: no doubt they cried, the carpenter is a preaching; and this might cause our Lord, in the very next verse to say, a prophet is not without honour but in his own country, and among his own kin, and in his own house.

You that contemn tradesmen's preaching, may be would (had you lived in those days) contemned the ministry of our blessed Lord, and that of his disciples; take heed what you do.

Objection. The churches may not be capable to provide a sufficient maintenance for them; it is well if they can provide well for their respective pastors.

1. Answer. The maintenance of gospel ministers, is laid down as fully in the New Testament, as any one duty: but as you heard, the ministry consists of two parts.

1. Such who preach only by virtue of their gifts.

2. Such who are wholly set apart, and ordained to preach, watch over, and take the care of a particular flock; now these being discharged from all secular business, and must not entangle themselves with the affairs of this life, 2 Tim. ii. 4, must be provided for, if the church be able; but such who are only gifted brethren, may follow their callings, and ought not to expect a maintenance, expect a church need all their time, and being able to provide for them, do take them off of their trades, then they must provide for them also.

1. Fear one thing that greatly hinders the flourishing of our churches, and obstructs some men who are gifted, from exercising their gifts, is that great neglect of the present pastors. Should we be called, say some, to that office, we and our families may be exposed to want, or to many straits, as we see others now are: Oh what provision did God make for his ministers under the law, and to be sure he would have his gospel ministers as well provided for. Such churches who are rich and do it not, are under great evil. "Who goes a warfare at his own charges? who planteth a vineyard, and eateth not of the fruit thereof? or who feedeth a flock, and eateth not of the milk of the flock: if we have sown unto you spiritual things, is it a great thing if we reap your carnal things," 1 Cor. ix. 7. Are not you more obliged to us, than we to you? As if our apostle should say, what is it we receive from you, in worth or value to what you receive from us? If you have our gold, shall we be denied your copper? there is a far greater disparity between spiritual and carnal things. "Do you not know, that they that minister about holy things, live of the temple, &c.; even so bath the Lord ordained, that they that preach the gospel should live of the gospel." Again saith our apostle, "Let him that is taught in the word communicate to him that taught him, in all good things." Shall poor ministers, who labour to feed our souls, not have bread, and any good things, to feed, nourish, and refresh their bodies, with their wives and children; God forbid: certainly, they little prize either their souls, or soul-food, that show no love to Christ, or his ministers.

Though it is an abominable evil to undertake the ministry for filthy lucre, yet it is equally as great a sin and shame, not freely and plentifully to minister to them who are discharged from all trades and callings, to provide for themselves: O how have the widows and children of some ministers suffered, through the neglect of this duty: it is not enough that you hand out to your ministers just enough to them to keep them alive, but that they may be able to give, and provide for their children.

Object. But some young men, who have entered on the ministry, have brought great dishonour on the name of God and religion, partly for want of parts and abilities to preach, and partly by their scandalous lives.

1. Answer. So have others, who are learned, many of them also being ignorant, or wanted both grace and gifts; both these ways you speak of have brought great reproach on the name of God, if not among us, yet among others.

2. Must not sincere and able persons be encouraged, because hypocrites get into the ministry, to the dishonour of God.

3. The fault may perhaps lay in the churches, who suffer such to preach whom Christ hath not given ministerial gifts unto: Indeed, some of late as well as formerly, run before they are sent, or preach before approved of by any true regular church, or are allowed to preach: such ought to be silenced, and it is a shame to them that countenance such; and for Christ's sake let churches, and pastors of churches, see well to this, and labour to prevent this evil for time to come, that so none may be allowed to preach publicly but such who are of spotless lives (though they may be unjustly reproached) and able to preach, to the honour and credit of religion: it is not every one that thinks he has a gift that is to be allowed to preach, or called to the ministry, "and how shall they preach, except they are sent?" Kom. x. 15.

Some preachers not sent of God, nor ought to be encouraged Object. But some are very young, that are called out to the ministry.

1. Answer. Wisdom is not always with the aged.

2. Christ called John when young, Samuel when young, and Timothy when a youth; "Let no man despise thy youth."

3. Commonly those ministers who entered when young on the ministry, have proved most honourable and eminent in the ministry.

Thirdly, Who are wise and faithful stewards of Jesus Christ.

1. Answer. Such who dearly love their blessed Master, the Lord Jesus Christ, who serve him because they love him; not by constraint, but of a ready mind; not for filthy lucre, but in love to Christ's person, and his name, truth, and people; "Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou me, feed my sheep," John xxi. 16. Christ would employ none to feed his lambs, but such that love him and them.

Who are wise and faithful stewards of Christ.

2. Such that serve Christ in all humility; a proud person is no ways fit for this sacred work and office: He that is wise, and will be faithful, is nothing in his own eyes; "To me, who am less than the least of all saints, is this grace given, that I should preach among the Gentiles, the unsearchable riches of Christ," Eph. iii. 8.

A servant is a name of subjection, it is a shame for such to be as lords over God's heritage, or seek for the pre-minance above their place and station; a faithful steward of Christ esteems it a greater honour to be Christ's servant, than to be an earthly prince. Indeed, it is a contradiction to say, such a one is a proud Christian; for he cannot be a true Christian, much less a true minister, that is not humble, "Learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart," &c. Matt. xi. 29.

3. A wise and faithful steward of Christ is sincere, he serves him with a perfect heart. David had many infirmities that God overlooked, because his heart was upright in the sight of God.

4. A faithful steward of Christ is universal in his obedience, he will feed his Master's household with all that food his master hath provided or appointed for them; he will not come under a promise to please men, to keep back any one truth or ordinance of Christ, or forbear to preach it, lest it offend some that do not see it to be their duty; "And how I kept back nothing that was profitable unto you; wherefore I take you to record this day, that I am pure from the blood of all men, for I have not shunned to declare unto you the whole counsel of God," Acts xx. 20—27. Again, he saith, "Do I seek to please men for if I yet pleased men, I should not be the servant of Christ," Gal. i. 10; that is a faithful servant. Let such who promise not to preach up some one ordinance or another to please men, from hence see their fault and be ashamed.

6. A faithful servant or steward feeds the whole household, therefore must have them every meal altogether if possible. He must give every one meat in due season, that is, every Lord's day; therefore he is not to have two households to feed, whom it is morally impossible to feed or give their meat too in due season, and how is a faithful steward of Christ's household grieved, when he perceives many of the family are missing when he gives forth the bread of life to the household? This makes him to complain to his Master, to see such and such places empty.

7. A faithful steward of Christ seeks the honour of his Master in all he doth; not his own glory, nor his own interest; no, but the true interest and glory of Christ; and thus our Lord did, "I seek not my own glory, but the glory of him that sent me." All his wisdom, parts, knowledge, &c., is able to do, he ascribes to Christ alone, and acknowledges, he can do nothing without the Lord Jesus, nor will he add to, nor diminish from, or alter anything which his Lord commands.

See the parable of hiring servants into the vineyard

opened.

8. A faithful steward rejoiceth to see love and union in Christ's family, all drawing together, "Like the horses in Pharaoh's chariot," and every one doing their duties, and in bearing their burdens, so that there is an equality.

9. He that is a faithful steward, sees to take care of the weak babes, or little children that are in his Master's family, and, like his Lord, he "gathers his Lambs in his arms, and carries them in his bosom," Isa. xl. 10, 10. He strives to support the weak, and strengthen the feeble minded.

10. He is constant and unwearied in his work; he faints not, though he meets with many difficulties, reproaches, and abuses from some in the family, as well as from others, "We therefore labour and suffer reproach," &c. He will not decline in his work in a day of persecution, nor withhold corn from his people, though it exposeth him to the loss of his liberty, nay, to the loss of his life.

Lastly, he that is a wise and faithful steward of Christ, labours to have his accounts to give up to his blessed Lord, that he may be accepted of him when he comes again.

Question. Why is a steward, or pastor of a church, called a ruler?

Ans. First negatively. Not that the whole government of the church is committed to him; he is not to rule without the brotherhood. "If he will not hear the church," Matt. xviii. 17; it is not said, if he will not hear the pastor.

1. But in the affirmative, he is invested with authority or power, as the chief ruler in the church, though there be helps of government, and for any to plead for an absolute or sole power of rule and government, to be in a pastor, that tends to expose the church and members thereof to tyranny, or to the will of the pastor, and so a worse government in its nature, than many civil constitutions among men. In a particular church rightly constituted, is the fixed seat and subject of all ordinances of public worship, and hath the seat of all officers, or organical members, that serve for the use of the whole; and that these with their officers, have the seat of that government that is judicially to bind or loose the soul. The government of Christ's household is ordained or appointed by himself, and not left to men to order and govern it as they think good.

2. A ruler is to govern by the law, and the constitution of the land, city, or corporation, where he is placed, and so an elder must govern according to the gospel constitution, or laws and rules left by Jesus Christ.

3. Some rulers, or chief magistrates, can pass no act, law, or sentence, without the people, either to acquit, or condemn, (according to the constitution of the government) it must be with, and by their assent and consent. So the steward or pastor of Christ's household, can pass no act, to receive in, or cast out, &c., without the assent and consent of the church.

4. A ruler, that rules well, is worthy of due honour. So ought a faithful ruler of Christ's household to have due or "double honour," 1 Tim. v. 17; yet know, there are some great disparities, between some earthly rulers and Christ's stewards, or pastors of churches, for they are not lords, &c.

5. A ruler ought to be a man endowed with much wisdom and humility. So ought a pastor or steward of Christ's household.

6. In most constitutions, there is one chief ruler who is to be obeyed, &c. So Christ hath made the steward of his house a chief ruler, and commands all the family to obey him. "Obey them that are over you," Heb. xiii. 17.

Hath made rulers of his household. Note from hence, Doctrine. That a church of Christ is his household.

1. I shall hint a few things to show, why a church is compared to a household.

2. Show, what a house or household it is.

1. In a household are persons of different ages, different tempers, strength, &c. So in a church there are little children, or babes in Christ, and also young men and fathers, some strong, and others weak, and some of a mild spirit, and others froward, which renders it the more hard and difficult for the steward of his house to please them all, and rightly to demean himself as a wise and faithful person in his place and office.

2. What is done in a particular family ought not to be published abroad by any of the household, and if any do it, it is a shame and reproach to them. So it is a shame and reproach to any member to publish to any out of the church, what is done therein.

The church is Christ's household.

Church matters not to be spread abroad.

3. Every family is under the government of him who is the chief ruler, and all ought to be in subjection according to his good government. So ought all members of a particular church, to adhere to the good government of Christ's steward, or pastor of his church.

4. It is a great honour to a household, when it is well governed, all knowing their work and places, and living in love together. So nothing is more honourable or lovely, to see a church well governed, all adhering to the majority, and government of it, striving to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace, living together in love, and condescension to each other.

5. The whole household ought to be together at times of family duty, and also at meals if possible. So ought every member to be together in public worship of the church, and when the steward gives forth the spiritual food of the word in due season, to every one.

6. The steward of the household is to see good order kept up in the family; and so ought the steward of Christ's household, to see and labour that good order and discipline be kept up therein, according to the rules his Lord hath appointed.

2. What a house or household is it?

1. Answer. It is a spiritual household. "Ye also are built up a spiritual house, an holy priesthood," 1 Pet. ii. 5.

2. It is a great and noble household. 1. It is called the household of God, therefore a noble house, "Ye are fellow-citizens with the saints, and of the household of God." As the universal church is God's household, so is every particular society, or congregation of Christians. 2. God himself is the chief householder, he is the Master and owner of this household. It is by his laws it is governed they are all his children and servants who are the true and proper members of this household. 5. God himself dwells therein, "Here I will dwell for ever, for I have desired it," &c. Psal. cxxxiii. 14. 6. It is a noble and glorious house, because it is the place where "God's honour dwelleth," Psal. xxvi. 8; and an household where the "Glory and beauty of the Lord is seen," Psal. xxvii. 4.

3. It is a household beloved of God. "The Lord loves the gates of Zion, more than all the dwelling places of Jacob," Psal. lxxxvii. 4.

4. It is called, the "household of faith," Eph. ii. 9. There the true faith of the gospel, and the true worship of God, is maintained.

5. Christ's household is under a special and peculiar government from all other households whatsoever, (though others may call themselves by his name) its rules, laws, and discipline, agreeing exactly with the institutions and appointments left by Christ in the New Testament, and with the pattern of the primitive churches. This household will not admit of any human rites, or traditions whatsoever. This household will not suffer any to alter or change any of the rules of its ancient government, nor receive in the carnal seed of believers as such; but all that are admitted to be of this family, must be qualified according as their great Lord hath left directions in the gospel. True, under the law God's household consisted of all the natural seed of Abraham, or the whole house of Israel, according to the flesh, that being a national church. "But old things are now passed away, and all things are become new," 1 Cor. v. 18. According as the first gospel church was gathered, Acts ii., and constituted, so is, and ought every true spiritual and gospel community or congregation of saints now; we read, not of one infant that was admitted into any one of the apostolical primitive churches. No, none but such who, upon the profession of their faith, were baptized.

"Blessed is that servant, whom his Lord, when he cometh, shall find so doing, Verily, I say unto you, that he shall make him ruler over all his goods," ver. 46, 47. Or as in ver. 21, "I will make him ruler over many things."

1. This shows how exceedingly the Lord Jesus Christ is pleased with those ministers or stewards of his, who are faithful in all things, in the discharge of that great trust committed to them.

2. That Christ's faithful ministers shall receive no small honour, but he greatly exalted in the day when he appears, "They that turn many to righteousness, shall shine as the stars for ever and ever," Dan. xii. 3. All believers shall receive great glory, but ministers, who are faithful, shall excel in glory.

"But if that evil servant shall say in his heart, my Lord delays his coming, and shall begin to smite his fellow servant, and eat and drink with the drunken," ver. 48, 49.

Christ's faithful ministers shall receive great glory at the last day.

Doct. Note from hence, "That in the latter days there will be evil or ungodly persons, who will assume the ministry, and hardly believe that Christ will come again, and from thence be led away to live unholy lives.

It may be feared, some of this sort may get into true churches; but by smiting their fellow servant, some think our Lord refers to persecution; and so to another sort of men that call themselves his ministers, who turn persecutors of his faithful servants, or at least vilify, reproach, or render them very odious to all they can, which horrid wickedness Christ will severely punish in the great day.

"The Lord of that servant shall come when he looketh not for him, and in an hour that he is not aware of. And shall cut him asunder, and appoint him his portion with hypocrites and unbelievers, there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth," ver 50, 51.

Note, that some who are preachers and ungodly men, shall perish eternally; and that such who either reproach or persecute Christ's faithful ministers, shall be cast into hell.

Wicked preachers shall perish with vengeance.

My brethren, it ought to be well observed, how many parables our Saviour ends after this amazing nature, viz., of casting sinners into hell, to suffer God's wrath and vengeance for ever.

U S E.

1. You may gather from what hath been said, who are true and faithful ministers of Christ.

2. And also that the gospel church is congregational, and not national; for what national constitution has a steward over it, as a chief ruler? No, a steward refers to a particular household.

3. Moreover we infer, that as a minister hath received a great trust, and is a great blessing to a particular congregation, so he being a ruler, is endued with authority, and ought to be had in esteem and honour.

4. And that he, and all Christ's household servants, ought to watch, and be ready for Christ's coming.

5. That wicked preachers of all people (especially such who smite Christ's servants) are in a fearful state and condition.

6. Let every one that belongs to this household, labour to behave themselves well therein, for the eyes of God are always upon this household; "That thou mayest know how thou oughtest to behave thyself in the house of God, which is the church of the living God," &c. 1 Tim. iii. 15. Many have not learned to carry it as they ought, in the house of God, with that zeal, holiness, and observation of the laws, rules, and precepts thereof, under the care and charge of the steward, and good discipline of it.

7. We infer, that it is no small honour to dwell in this house, and be one of this household, and much greater honour and dignity to be an approved and faithful steward of the household of Christ.

8. It may reprove such who belong to this or that particular church or household of Christ Jesus, who are so left to themselves, as to violate the sacred covenant they come under to dwell in, and there to worship God, and always be fed, and under the eye of the steward and whole household; such deserve no place therein, but as disorderly persons, ought to be proceeded against, and turned out of the family.

9. Union, love, and sweet concord, is to be pressed after, and endeavoured to be promoted, by every one that dwells in this family, or are of this household, nothing tending more to the glory of a family, than their walking together in unity, discord, contentions, and divisions in any family being hateful, and to be abhorred; and such that cause divisions in this household ought to be marked and proceeded against as directions in that case are given.

THE
WISE AND FOOLISH VIRGINS.

SERMON XVIII.

Then shall the kingdom of heaven be likened unto ten virgins, which took their lamps, and went forth to meet the Bridegroom, &c.—Matt. xxv. 1,—12.

THIS is one of those prophetic parables our Lord spake; also this and the parable of the mustard seed discovers the state of the church in the latter days, or just at the time of Christ's coming.

Year of Christ's life, 33.

Parables I have formerly showed you, my brethren, are taken from earthly things, or actions of men, to illustrate some choice heavenly doctrine, or spiritual mysteries; and the first and chief thing that is to be considered, is the scope and main end thereof.

The coherence of this parable, and to what time it doth refer.

And evident it is, that our Saviour in this refers to what precedeth in the foregoing chapter, where he answered a question put forth by his disciples, "Tell us when these things shall be, and what shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world?" Matt. xxiv. 3. This question is three-fold.

1. Concerning the destruction of Jerusalem.
2. The sign of Christ's coming.
3. And of the end of the world.

The end of the world no man knows, "no, not the angels of heaven, nor the Son himself, but the Father only," Mark xiii. 35. And hence he exhorts all to watchfulness and prayer. "Watch ye therefore, for you know neither the day nor hour," Matt. xxiv. 42. That is, neither the day nor hour when our Lord will come, nor the end of the world.

Now this coming of Christ is either personal or precursory.

(1.) His second personal coming I judge will be at the beginning of the thousand years reign, when "God will tabernacle with men," Rev. xxi. 3.

(2.) There is a precursory coming of our Lord, (as one notes) or a most glorious spiritual coming, to set up a more visible and universal kingdom in this world, which will precede his personal appearance; which I take to be the beginning of the latter-day glory, and which will be at the sounding of the "Seventh trumpet," for then Jesus Christ will begin his spiritual and more visible and glorious kingdom; or "when the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdoms of our Lord Jesus Christ," Rev. xi. 15, 18. One design of this coming of our Lord, is to destroy the son of perdition, and utterly to overthrow Mystery Babylon. "And then shall that wicked one be revealed, whom the Lord shall consume with the spirit of his mouth, and shall destroy with the brightness of his coming," 2 Thess. ii. 8. Now it is partly this coming of Christ (I conclude) our Lord in the first place intends, though I will not exclude his personal appearance; for I see no reason to doubt, but that the precursory coming of the Lord Jesus is to prepare things for his personal appearance; when, (as a bridegroom) he will appear to celebrate the marriage with his beloved spouse. Yet his coming upon mystery Babylon, or by his bright appearance to destroy the son of perdition, may be distinguished from the coming last mentioned, though both may be comprehended, or included by the Bridegroom's coming. And now at this time, viz., when Christ will come upon Babylon, and begin to set up his more visible kingdom and rule in and among his people, the kingdom of heaven may be compared or likened unto ten virgins.

Year of Christ's ministry.

"Then shall the kingdom of heaven," &c.

Even at the ending of the fourth monarchy, or at the time of the utter downfall of the Romish power, when the stone shall smite the image upon "the feet and toes," Dan. ii. 24, compared with ver. 41. "And in the days of those kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom," &c., not in the days when the iron legs of the Roman monarch had the power, or when Christ began his spiritual or gospel church state, which was when Tiberius the emperor reigned at Rome, though some suppose this is meant by these words, "in the days of those kings;" but I conceive that the Holy Ghost refers to the government of the Romish monarch, when it came to the ten toes, being partly weak, and partly strong, signified by the "iron and clay," which will not, cannot mix together; the "Ten toes" of the image, and "Ten horns" of the beast, Rev. xvii., I conclude, refer to the same ten kings. "And in the days of those kings (which no doubt, is now this present state and time of the Roman monarchy) shall the God of heaven set up" a most glorious and more visible kingdom than ever yet he had in the world, since the resurrection of our Lord from the dead; for evident it is, that this kingdom's state must commence from the declining state of the papal power, and after the passing away of the "second woe," and upon the sounding of the "seventh angel," Rev. xi., Dan. vii. 26, 27. "The second woe is past, and behold the third woe cometh quickly. And the seventh angel sounded, and there were great voices in heaven, saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ," Rev. xi. 14, 15. That is, it does begin to be his kingdom. I am persuaded that all the "seven vials appertain to the "seventh trumpet, and that not one of those vials, or "seven last plagues," are as yet poured forth, nor shall till the Mahometan power is gone, or ceases to be any further woe to the antichristian state, which certainly is near, even at the very door. So that it is evident, the chief design of our blessed Lord in this parable is,

A little before the coming of Christ the church is compared to ten vir-

The scope of the parable.

1. To discover what a multitude of formal and foolish professors there would be in the church at the time of this his coming.

2. To stir up all Christians to holy watchfulness, lest they meet with a dismal disappointment when he comes.

I shall in the next place consider the parts of the parable here following.

1. Show you what is meant by the kingdom of heaven.
2. What is meant by the wise and foolish virgins.
3. Why called virgins.
4. Who is meant by the bridegroom.
5. What by going forth to meet him.
6. What is meant by lamps the virgins took, and what by taking their lamps, and going forth.
7. What by the oil and vessels.
8. What by the bridegroom's tarrying.
9. What by the midnight cry.
10. What by the virgins' rising and trimming their lamps.
11. What by going to buy oil.
12. What by being ready, and going in to the wedding chamber.
13. What by shutting the door.

And under the several heads I shall note some points of doctrine.

To proceed :

"Then shall the kingdom of heaven be likened," &c., ver. 1.

The parts opened
1. What is meant here by the kingdom of heaven.

The kingdom of heaven is taken variously, (as I have showed;) but here no doubt by it is meant the visible church, as all expositors agree, so that we may read it thus, viz., then shall the visible church be likened to ten virgins, &c. That is, at the latter end of the world, or a little before our Lord cometh.

And from hence note,

1. Doct. The visible church in the times of the gospel, especially, may be compared to the kingdom of heaven.

In speaking to this

1. I shall show you in what respect the visible church may be compared to a kingdom.
2. Show why it is compared to the kingdom of heaven.

First, Because the church is under a kingly government, or is governed by a king, viz., our Lord Jesus Christ; the church owns no other king or head, lord and lawgiver in divine or spiritual things, but Christ alone; "The Lord is our Judge, the Lord is our Lawgiver, the Lord is our King," &c. Again it said, "Thine eyes shall see the King in his beauty," Isa. xxxiii. 22, ver. 17. This King is the glorious Bridegroom of our souls, the government of the church is monarchical, and governed by a King clothed with absolute power and authority, whose will is his law; and yet his government is just and righteous, because he cannot will anything but what is good: "There is one Lawgiver, who is able to save and to destroy," Jam. iv. 12. We own no king to have command over our consciences, but Christ alone.

2. Because the visible church is a distinct state from any other kingdom and sort of government. Moses, who governed the kingdom of Israel, hath no command over Christ's spiritual kingdom, nor any other person as a viceroy, the Pope, nor any earthly potentate have any thing to do to lord it over Christ's subjects. What power hath the French king to lord it over the freeborn people of England? (we have a king of our own.) Much less what has he to do to lord it, and tyrannize over Christ's saints, who are free-born subjects of the king of heaven and earth.

3. Because every kingdom consisteth of divers sorts, degrees, and ranks of men, of different frames of spirit and dispositions; some noble, and some ignoble, some rich, and some poor, some old, and some young, some virtuous, and some wicked, some wise, and others foolish: so it is in the more refined kingdom of Jesus Christ, there may be some noble, some mighty, (though not many of that sort). "In a great house are not only vessels of gold and silver, but also of wood and of earth, some to honour, and some to dishonour," 2 Tim. ii. 20. In Christ's kingdom are fathers, young men, and little children, and some sincere Christians, and some hypocrites, or wise and foolish ones.

4. Because the same laws bind all sorts of persons, within the compass of that kingdom or its jurisdiction, there is not one law for the great ones, (or for the rich) and another for the meaner sort; and as it is thus in an earthly kingdom, it is in Christ's visible church, all are under the same laws, precepts and ordinances.

5. Moreover as ignorance of the laws of a kingdom or state exempts no man from obedience, or punishment for disobedience, because they are published, and may be known; it is not enough for any to say they did not know this or that law, statute, or ordinance; so ignorance of Christ's holy ordinance and precepts in a people that live where the gospel is preached, and his ordinances published, will exempt no man from obedience thereunto.

6. In every kingdom there is a statute book, (if it be a regular constitution) wherein all the fundamental laws, statutes, and ordinances of that kingdom are written: so the word of God, or blessed gospel, is the great statute book of the church or of Christ's spiritual kingdom, in which all his laws and ordinances are recorded.

The word of God the great statute book of the church.

7. A king appoints officers in his kingdom under him, to govern and order and manage all the affairs thereof, and to do all things by his authority, and in his name; and even so hath Jesus Christ set officers in his church to order and govern his spiritual kingdom under him, by his authority and in his name, and according to his blessed word, and they that submit not to his government, despise the king's authority; the officers are elders and deacons, whose work is expressly laid down in the gospel: nor do we read of any other office or officers he hath left in his church (and to abide) but only those two.

8. And as in a kingdom those who violate the laws thereof, or such who own not the laws thereof, are called to account and punished; so are or ought all such in Christ's spiritual kingdom, who submit not to the government of it, to be called to account, and without repentance to be cast out as such that will not have Christ rule over them.

Secondly, why is the church called the kingdom of heaven?

1. Because the church in its constitution, laws, and government, is not of this world, but of a sublime and heavenly constitution, the legal ministration being carnal, is called a "worldly sanctuary," Heb. ix. 1. Indeed the church state of the Jews (though of divine appointment) yet might rather be called worldly than heavenly, because it was national, and much agreeing with reason and the nature of man; it being a law requiring obedience with the promise of life, and threatening death for disobedience (those moral precepts being the same in substance with those which are written in the hearts of all men;) but the constitution of the gospel church is founded upon grace, not on nature, though some who pretend kindness to her, confound nature and grace together in Christ's spiritual kingdom, being ignorant of the nature, quality, and righteousness of this kingdom.

The gospel church more spiritual than the legal was.

2. All the laws (I mean all pure gospel precepts) in a special manner are from heaven, (as our Lord asked the Jews, concerning the baptism of John, whether from heaven, or of men?) The blessed Jesus positively saith he received his doctrine from his Father, and as the "Father gave him commandment," John xii. 50. And hence he is said also to "speak from heaven," Heb. xii. 23.

3. The church may be called the kingdom of heaven, because the same king that reigns in heaven, reigns in this, and goverus it; he is also always present with his people in his kingdom below: moreover, the saints are ruled, and do subject to him, so that though Christ is king over all the earth, yet they are believers only who are the subjects of his special spiritual kingdom; he has power over all, but his church is only the kingdom of grace, where Christ by his Spirit and influences thereof, and according to his own laws, rules and reigns.

4. Because the doctrine, faith, order, rule, and government lead to heaven, promoting an holy and heavenly life, and to prepare us for heaven.

5. Because the saints are the subjects of heaven, heirs of heaven, and their names are written in heaven; moreover "Their conversation is said to be in heaven," Phil. iii. 20. They live heavenly lives, and are influenced by heavenly principles, chiefly mind things above.

6. Because the church is a figure of heaven, or it resembles heaven, and ought to imitate heaven in unity, love, holiness, and also in singing God's praises, with united hearts and voices, as the saints and angels do, and shall for ever in heaven. And hence likewise ministers in the church are called stars; they are as stars to give light, and adorn these heavens: and if any of these stars fall, they are said to fall from heaven.

7. Because here is the glory of heaven begun, and look (saith one) as the same sun which fills the stars with glory, yet the same beings touch the earth, even so the same glory which shines in heaven, shines in the church here: hence we are said to be "called into his eternal glory," 1 Pet. v. 10. And also are "set down in heavenly places in Christ," Eph i. 3.

U S E.

Infer. 1. 1. We may infer from hence, that it is no small privilege to be admitted members of the visible church; what, called out of the world, and not to be of this world, what a blessing is this!

Infer. 2. 2. Moreover, it shows what honour God hath put upon his church below, in calling it the kingdom of heaven.

Reproof. 3. This therefore may reprehend such who strive to confound the church and the world together. Sirs, you know not what you do, you may as well endeavour to bring heaven and earth together. The church is a select separated people, and as distinct from the world, as heaven is from the earth, and hath in it different laws to govern it: and so are the subjects, men and women, that are born from above, being of heavenly spirits, tempers, and dispositions.

1. Exhort. 4. Take heed you do not defile these heavens; they that pollute the church pollute or defile heaven. O let us live as men in heaven: also know that the angels of heaven attend our assemblies, and observe how we walk and behave ourselves. But which is much more, our heavenly king hath his throne here, he sits amongst us, and beholds our lives, spirits, and conversations.

2. Exhort. 5. Let sinners take heed of reproaching the church of God, for such "blaspheme God, his tabernacle, and those that dwell in heaven," Rev xiii. 6. As you read some are said to do. Moreover, let all seek the good, peace, and glory of this kingdom, promote the spiritual trade, riches, and the enlargement of it.

Terror. 6. Terror; woe to them that would pull down this kingdom, or spoil the beauty and glory thereof, or cut off the provision of it, or seek to raze it.

Inform. 7. Likewise this may inform such how vain and fruitless all their labour and attempts will be; can they shake heaven? this kingdom (as to its state and constitution) cannot be shaken nor undermined, also God will undo all that afflict her in the latter day.

8. Pray for the latter days' glory of this kingdom, it shall be great, "And kings of the earth shall bring their glory unto it."

Caution. Caution. Take heed you raise not tumults, nor cause divisions in this spiritual and heavenly kingdom; they that seek her good, and love her, shall prosper; but such who show a bitter spirit against her, or disturb her quiet, God will destroy for ever, unless they repent. Take heed you do not stain her glory, nor do that which may weaken this kingdom, and grieve this king.

"Shall be likened to ten virgins."

Of these this kingdom doth consist, namely of virgins, and these virgins are the members of the invisible church.

Quest. Why are they called virgins?

Answ. Negatively, virgins do not refer to the female sex only, but to males also, "These are they that have not defiled themselves with women, for they are virgins,"

Rev. xiv. 4.

1. Virgins are chaste and not defiled. So the members of the true visible church are not defiled with idolatry, not popish, nor any other superstitions, they hate spiritual fornication. Idolatry is often in the scripture called whoredom, adultery, and fornication. Sirs, many churches consist not of virgins, but of such who are defiled with the fornications of the great whore. Hence in Israel such who kept themselves pure from idolatry, were called the virgin daughter of Sion.

2. Virgins are commonly the younger sort, and are of yielding or complying temper, will bow and be entreated by a lover they like and approve of. So these like young plants bow and bend to the word and entreatings of Christ. Old trees cannot be bowed, so many old sinners cannot be persuaded to bow to Christ, they will not yield to espouse him.

3. Virgins (perhaps) are often courted and tempted to uncleanness, or to unchastity, but they yield not. So Satan tempts the saints, and wicked men tempt and entice them to sin, and to idolatry, but they that are wise yield not, they abhor all such motions of the devil and his instruments.

4. Virgins are often espoused; so believers are espoused to Jesus Christ. "I have espoused you to one husband, that I may present you a chaste virgin to Christ," 2 Cor. xi. 2; they forsake all other lovers, and cleave to the Lord Jesus in all sincere and cordial affections; they die to the inordinate love of this world, and the law, being "become dead to that, that they may be married to Jesus Christ," Rom. vii. 4.

5. Virgins delight to be clean and neatly dressed, (unless they be foolish and slothful ones) who are often ashamed of their foul linen; but others will have their linen white and without spot: so wise virgins, or sincere Christians, love to be clothed in linen clean and white, which is the righteousness of Christ, called the righteousness of the saints, because it is that which was wrought for, and is put upon them that are virgins, or true believers; and also they love to be clothed with the garment of inward holiness or sanctification, and hate the garment spotted by the flesh.

See the marriage supper opened.

6. Virgins love also to be richly adorned: so true believers love to be adorned with all the graces of the Spirit; particularly with a "meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price," 1 Pet. iii. 4.

7. A virgin espoused (if wise) hath cordial affection or dear love to her bridegroom (or him that hath espoused her) so sincere believers most dearly love Jesus Christ the Bridegroom of their souls; but foolish ones, though they have espoused Jesus Christ by a visible profession, love other things more than him.

8. Virgins love and take delight in the company of each other; so true Christians delight to converse with each other: "They that fear thee will be glad when they see me, because I have hoped in thy word," Psal. cxix. 74. And again he saith, "I am a companion of all them that fear thee," Psal. cxix. 63.

9. Virgins are commonly beautiful, or comely; so all wise and sincere believers are beautiful and comely in Christ's sight, being richly adorned, and having the image of God upon them; and hence they, like beautiful virgins, are exposed by Satan to manifold temptations, to corrupt themselves (by false worship and other enticements also,) "I am black but comely," Cant. i. 6: black by reproaches and persecution, and by their own inward corruptions, but in Christ very beautiful and comely, having doves' eyes, a most chaste and single eye; set upon Christ, and delighting in Christ alone.

10. Sincere believers may be compared to chaste virgins, because they hate the hire of an harlot; "They give gifts to all whores," Ezek. xvi. 16, 33. But though the devil offers all the world to entice true Christians to forsake Jesus Christ, and cleave to idolatry, they abhor the hire. What have some virgins suffered before they would submit to unchaste embraces? and pray what have some Christians endured before they would cleave to the idolatry of the heathen; or to the idolatries and superstitions of the church of Rome! Even to the most cruel deaths that bloody tyrants could invent; so that neither the pleasure nor profit of sin, could or can entice the true children of God to defile themselves; and though it is true, God hath sometimes suffered some of them to fall in an hour of temptation, as David, Peter, &c., yet like chaste virgins they commonly (unless fearfully ensnared) withstand all temptations of sin and Satan, as Joseph did.

A virgin hates the hire of an harlot.

11. A virgin, if beset or waylaid, she will cry out, (and indeed so she must or else not be guiltless, but it will be deemed a consenting:) so a poor believer when beset by sin or Satan, doth and must cry out to God, as Paul did, and will not yield or consent, so much as to evil thoughts, and so are guiltless; for there is no defilement or charge of sin without the parties' consent, or the yielding of the will;

A virgin if beset will cry out.

“The evil I would not do, that do I,” Rom. vii. 15. Evil thoughts may not be charged as sin, that are only Satan’s suggestions, if they are abhorred, and the soul cries out: Virgins will avoid evil company. “For this I besought the Lord thrice,” &c., 2 Cor. xii. 8.

12. Virgins are careful to avoid all debauched and scandalous company: it is the counsel of wisdom, not to come near the harlot’s house,” Prov. viii. 5; so believers should take heed to avoid the company of the wicked. “Who can touch pitch and not be defiled?” Who can worship in a false way once, and not be defiled thereby? Or keep company with swearers, drunkards, or profane persons, and not get himself a blot? Dinah was defiled by wandering abroad, or getting amongst the uncircumcised: “Abstain from all appearance of evil,” 1 Thess. v. 22. With the froward we soon learn frowardness.

Prov. vii. 10. 13. A virgin will not put on an harlot’s dress; we read of the attire of an harlot, this an honest woman abhorreth: so Christians will avoid all superstitious rites, traditions, and ceremonies of the false church; they reject all popish relics and superstitions, which seem to be the attire of an harlot.

14. It is the character of a chaste virgin, that she be seen and not heard: a comely silence is an excellent virtue in damsels; “An harlot’s voice is loud,” &c., Prov. vii. 10, 11. As some persons, my brethren, hang all their riches on their backs, so some professors’ religion is all in their tongues and airy notions. An empty vessel (if you strike it) sounds more than that which is full: so an empty professor commonly makes a greater noise than a pious Christian; empty professors boast many times of their assurance, when a true believer is full of complaints and doubtings. “In the multitude of words there wants not sin,” Prov. x. 19; but a fool by his silence is counted wise. Sirs, frothy and light discourse, discovers a vain and frothy heart; hence David resolved to keep his tongue as with a bridle, while the wicked were with him. “A wise man spares his words,” Prov. xvii. 27.

15. Virgins are apt on every turn to blush, they are shame-faced, but a “whore’s face is impudent,” Pro. vii. 13. God complains of some that sinned “and were not ashamed, neither did they blush.” A true believer at every occasion is ready to fear he hath spoken or done amiss, and the blood is as it were ready to come into his face he is ready to blush and to be ashamed before the Lord; his conscience is tender, and presently checks or smites him.

16. Virgins desire to have manifestations of the love of them who have espoused them; so doth every believer: “Let him kiss me with the kisses of his mouth, for thy love is better than wine,” Cant. i. 2. The Son of God might be said to kiss his elect, his spouse, (1.) When he took our nature into union with his divine Person. And (2.) When he discovers to us, that he loved us from everlasting, by effectual calling. (3.) When he applies his robe of righteousness to us in free justification. (4.) Also when he stamps his own image upon us in regeneration, and sanctification. (5.) The kisses Christ gives his spouse. When he seals his love to the soul by his promises, or in an ordinance. For Who may be said to kiss the Son. he gives us evidences and manifestations of his love in all those respects.

We are also bid to kiss the Son.

1. This we may be said to do when we own and worship him; we read of some that had not kissed Baal, that is, they had not owned him to be a god: such refuse to kiss the Son, who own him not to be God over all, or that deny his Deity. (2.) We kiss the Son when we worship him; there is a kiss of adoration: “They say to them, let the men that sacrifice kiss the calves,” Hos. xiii. 2; that is, let them give adoration to them, they that honour the Son as they honour the Father, may be said to kiss the Son. Kisses are a demonstration of honour and reverence; as when a man kisses the king’s hand, the king honours him. Thus Christ confers love and honour on those persons who are admitted to kiss him. (3.) When we believe in Christ, or touch him by faith, we may be said to kiss the Son; we embrace, cleave to him as our Saviour, and the Bridegroom of our souls. (4.) When we love the Lord Jesus with a superlative love, the highest love, we may be said to kiss the Son; and thus all the wise virgins show their love to Christ, and own him as their Saviour, and chief Beloved of their souls. (5.) Moreover, there is a kiss of reconciliation; the Father kissed his returning prodigal, to denote he was reconciled to him: when we are reconciled to God and to his ways and people, and are united to Christ, we may be said to kiss the Son.

16. Virgins are commonly strong in their affections; the lamentation of a virgin is put for the debt of sorrow. O what love has a true believer to Christ! (David’s soul was broken with longings after God,) and as their joy is unspeakable when they have his presence, so their sorrow is extensive when he is absent.

See the parable of the prodigal opened, 2nd book.

17. A virgin is the object of a prince's affection; so are believers the object of Christ's affection and delight. "Thou hast ravished my heart, my sister, my spouse," &c. "How fair is thy love, my sister, my spouse, how much better is thy love than wine," Cant. iv. 9, 18.

Lastly, virgins used to go forth in the night (in those eastern countries) to meet the bridegroom, and attend on him into the marriage-chamber: so believers in the latter days (this prophetic parable shows) should in a dark time go forth with great expectation to meet Jesus Christ, the Bridegroom of their souls, as you will hear more hereafter.

The custom of the eastern countries about meeting the bridegroom.

"And went forth to meet the Bridegroom."

1. I shall show who this Bridegroom is, and why so called.

2. What may be meant by the virgins going forth to meet him.

1. This Bridegroom all understand is our Lord Jesus. And though I have in opening the parable of the marriage feast set forth the excellency of his person, (and also in the opening the parable of the pearl of great price,) yet I shall here show why he is called a Bridegroom.

Doct. Jesus Christ is the Bridegroom of all believers.

I shall show,

1. How fitly he may be called a Bridegroom.

2. Show that he excels all bridegrooms.

I. A bridegroom all know is one that proposeth to marry, and not live a single life, how happy soever he might be, did he resolve never to change his condition. My brethren, the Son of God, notwithstanding all that glory he had with the Father from eternity, he being his only-begotten Son, lying in his bosom, and was the joy and delight of his Father's heart, and being clothed with all the personal excellencies of the eternal Father, yet resolved to dispose of himself in the marriage: and by calling himself a Bridegroom he declared to men and angels, that he hath a spouse (who as his bride) he resolved should live with him in glory for ever and ever.

Why Christ is compared to a Bridegroom.

See the parable of the marriage supper opened, 3rd Book.

II. And in obedience, as a wise Son he consulted with his Father about this important affair, and would not proceed one step without his Father's hearty agreement and consent. Hence it is said, "The counsel of peace was between them both," Zech. vi. 13. As it was a counsel of peace, it signifies the persons beloved were fallen under God's displeasure; and though multitudes of the angels were so fallen as well as mankind, yet he passed by the first, and fixed his heart and thoughts on a remnant of the lost offspring of fallen mankind, who were chosen and given to him by the Father from everlasting; now this marriage being determined by the whole Trinity, and who the spouse should be that the Second Person should marry; when the fulness of time was come, the Father sent him into the world on this glorious and gracious design; hence he said, "I proceeded and came from God; neither came I of myself, but he sent me," John viii. 42.

The Father consented that his Son should espouse fallen sinners.

III. A man that designs to marry, maketh choice of the person he purposeth to espouse. So Jesus Christ with all cordial affections made choice of God's elect seed amongst the fallen lump of mankind, whom he designed to redeem and betroth to himself for ever: "For verily he took not on him the nature of angels, but he took on him the seed of Abraham," Heb. ii. 16.

IV. When a man hath fixed upon the object he designs to marry, he contrives the proper way and method, in order to the accomplishment of his design and purpose; so the Son of God consulted with the Father, what was best and fittest to be done, that he might bring to pass and actually accomplish this his glorious design, the result of which was,

1. That the Son of God enters first into a holy compact or covenant with the Father, and so became a covenanting party or common Head, Representative, and Surety for all God's elect who were his intended spouse.

What was agreed upon that the Son of God must do in order to espouse and marry God's elect.

2. That he must marry (or take into union with his divine person the nature of his elect, or) fallen mankind, and so be incarnate, in the flesh, in the womb of a virgin; for if he was not flesh of our flesh, and bone of our bone, he could not be a proper Mediator between God and man, neither could he be a fit and proper Bridegroom to espouse and marry us, but, "Forasmuch as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he also himself took part of the same," Heb. ii. 14.

3. That in taking on him our nature he became our kinsman, and so had the right of redemption fell upon him, and thereby also was obliged to espouse us unto himself, (or all that were given to him by the Father.) And,

4. That in that nature he must work out a perfect and complete righteousness, which the sacred law of God required, and because the intended spouse was fallen under God's high pleasure for treason and rebellion, (in violating the sacred law of heaven) and was also condemned to die, (and none but he alone could satisfy for her horrid crimes) he foresaw it was absolutely necessary that concerning the flesh he must be put to death for her, or in her stead and room, to all which he heartily agreed, and obliged himself to the Father in the said covenant to do, and readily took that long journey from heaven to earth, to be clothed with our nature, and in garments dipped in blood, so became a suitor, to woo and entreat the sinner's love and affections.

Stop here, and wonder, O my soul! O what a journey did the Son of God take upon him! and what glory did he leave, and into what a dolesome land of darkness and horror did he come, and what great abasement, ignominy, shame and spitting upon, expose himself unto! and what a cursed death did he die, that he might become the Bridegroom of our souls!

V. A man that hath fixed his love on a person (he hath thoughts to espouse) propounds questions to her, among which this is one, i. e., whether she be not pre-engaged? and if she be (through folly in a wicked way to her utter undoing) he strives to break off such a sinful and unlawful contract. Now the Son of God well knew that sinners whom he designed to espouse, were entangled in love in a wicked way, and to their utter ruin, with many lovers, viz., with this sensual world and their own horrid lusts, and that many of them also were fallen in love with their own righteousness: which unjust contract he strives to break, and disentangle each soul from all those soul-undoing lovers, and this he intimated when he said, "Unless a man deny himself, and take up his cross and follow me, he cannot be my disciple." Matt. xvi. 24. Nay, moreover, that such that espouse him must hate all things for his sake, "If any man come to me, and hate not his father, and mother, and wife, and children, and brethren and sisters, and his own life also, he cannot be my disciple," Luke xiv. 26. That is, Christ must have the preference, or have the sinner's chiefest love, and affections of his heart; the lesser love in scripture is called a hatred, Leah was said to be hated, because Gen. xxix. 31. Jacob loved Rachel above her.

VI. A man that designs to become a bridegroom, discovers his intentions to the person, and makes offers of his love to her, so the Son of God discovers to sinners his great love, and also makes most gracious offers of his endeared love unto them.

1. He discovers the earliness of it to them; the Father gave him, "Yea, I have loved thee with an everlasting love," Jer. xxxi. 3. 2. By his entering into that covenant (I mentioned) with the Father for them. 3. By taking our nature into union with his divine person. 4. By his undergoing all those hard things for our sakes, as reproaches, spitting on, plucking off the hair, and by being made a curse for us, and in dying the ignominious death of the cross. 5. By coming to the sinner's door, standing long, and knocking there. 6. By sending his servants (his ministers) as his spokesmen, to entreat and beseech them to grant him their love and affections. 7. By his own importunate invitations, saying, "behold me, behold me,"—"O come to the waters," &c.,—"Come to me all ye that labour, and are heavy laden," Matt. xi. 28. And multitudes of the like gracious invitations. 8. By the many promises he hath made to them that receive and embrace him in the arms of their faith.

VII. A faithful lover respecteth the person of his intended bride, than more than her wealth, beauty, or any thing whatsoever. Brethren, Jesus Christ sees nothing in sinners to move his affections; for they have neither beauty, wealth, honour, nor good conditions, being in themselves filthy, deformed, lying polluted in their blood, and enemies to him.

VIII. A lover uses all due means and the strongest arguments he can, to engage the affections of the person he loves, so Jesus Christ uses most strong and powerful arguments to obtain the sinner's love and affections, and 1. What can be greater, than the worth, dignity, and glory of his person? "I and my Father are one." "I am the root and offspring of David, the bright and morning star," Rev. xxii. 16. "The brightness of the Father's glory, and the express image of his person," Heb. i. 3. 2. He mentioneth also the greatness, strength, and sincerity of his love. 3. His wonderful riches, being the heir of all things. 4. His shedding of his blood. 5. The greatness of his beauty. 6. His admirable wisdom. 7. The greatness of his power. 8. The sweetness, meekness, and humbleness of his spirit. 9. Also the necessity sinners have of him. 10. And the great benefits all that receive him shall partake of by him. "He that hath the Son hath life," 1 John v. 12. 11. He sheds his love abroad in their hearts, by the Holy Ghost. Yea, 12. He circumcises their hearts to love him.

Sinners were pre engaged to many cursed lovers when Christ comes to woo them.

Christ discovered very early his love to sinners that were given to him. Rev. iii. 20.

What arguments Christ useth to obtain sinners love and affections.

See the parable the marriage supper. John iii. 35.

Rom. v. 5.

IX. A lover, when he hath obtained the full consent of the person beloved, espouseth and marries her, so Jesus Christ having obtained the full consent of sinners, How. ii. 20. espouseth, betroths, and marries them to himself, "For I am married to you saith the Lord," Jer. iii. 14. The Lord is thine husband.

X. The Bridegroom hath the bride, she is his only. "I am my beloved's, and he is mine." "He that hath the bride is the bridegroom." Believers are his many ways. (1.) By virtue of election, or by his and his Father's choice. (2.) His by the solemn covenant between the Father and himself, by which covenant they were given to him. "Thine they were, and thou gavest them to me," John xvii. 6. (3.) And his we are also by the right of redemption, he bought and purchased them. (4.) His by virtue of conquest; he hath overcome them, and all their enemies who had power over them, and kept them in bondage and slavery. (5.) His by the holy re-signation of themselves to him. They renounce all other lovers, and cleave to Jesus Christ.

How many ways Christ may lay claim to believers.

XI. The bridegroom (if a prince or a noble person) settles a rich dowry upon his bride, so Jesus Christ settles upon every believer a vast dowry, or bestows on them, a vast inheritance; for he makes them joint heirs with himself, and makes over a crown and kingdom to them.

Christ settles a rich dowry upon his spouse.

XII. A bridegroom rejoiceth over his bride; so doth the Lord Jesus Christ. "As a young man marrieth a virgin, so shall thy sons marry thee; and as the bridegroom rejoiceth over the bride, so shall thy God rejoice over thee," Isa. lxii. 4, 5.

He rejoiceth over his bride.

XIII. A bridegroom marrying his bride (if she was in debt, and in danger of an arrest) she is thereby discharged from all fear and danger, for her husband is accountable for all she owed, so by the Lord Jesus marrying poor sinners, (they being before far in debt, owing ten thousand talents) they are thereby freed, and discharged of all danger and fear of being arrested by divine justice, and sent to the eternal prison of hell and divine wrath.

Sinners marrying Christ, they are discharged from fear of any arrest.

XIV. The person that a prince espouseth and marries, (though she was never so mean and ignoble before, is thereby raised to great honour, having his name put upon her, and is become a queen, and hath also his own retinue, or a noble guard, to wait upon her; so all believers Christ marries, (who were mean, ignoble, and base-born,) are thereby raised to great honour, and are called by Christ's name, and have the holy angels to be their retinue, to guard and wait upon them. "They minister to them that shall be heirs of salvation," Heb. i. 14.

XV. A bridegroom sympathizeth with his bride in all her afflictions, if he be a wise, sincere, and faithful person. So doth the Lord Jesus. "In all their afflictions he was afflicted, and the angel of his presence saved them; in his love and in his pity he redeemed them, and he bare them, and carried them all the days of old," Isa. lxiii. 9.

XVI. A bridegroom makes great preparations for the marriage-day, and on that day both are very gloriously adorned. My brethren, though believers are espoused and secretly married to Jesus Christ, yet there is a day appointed for the public solemnization of their marriage, when the bride will have made herself ready; and in that day the king will appear in his glory, and shine brighter than the sun in his strength, in all his amazing grandeur, and "At his right hand shall stand the queen in gold of Ophir," Psal. xlv. 9, and hence it is said, "When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, we shall also appear with him in glory." Col. iii. 3, 4. And indeed (as I conceive,) this is partly the day to which this parable refers; for though the bridegroom's coming may refer to his more glorious appearance in the last days; yet, (as was hinted,) it may likewise refer to his personal coming.

17. The bridegroom at the marriage-day, hath many virgins to attend him, or wait upon him; it was so amongst the Jews. So many virgins shall go forth with their lamps to meet Jesus Christ, and wait upon him at his glorious appearance; but more of that hereafter.

Secondly, Jesus Christ excels all other bridegrooms in many respects.

1. What noble and high-born prince ever set his heart upon such a mean, low, base, and ignoble person, as Jesus Christ ever did? He loved a leper; set his heart upon such that were very poor, naked, and loathsome creatures; even such that were condemned and cursed by the law, and full of sores and filthy ulcers also.

2. Jesus Christ became poor to make his bride rich. "For you know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that though he was rich, yet for our sakes he became poor, that ye through his poverty might be made rich," 2 Cor. viii. 9.

3. Christ, the spiritual Bridegroom, laid down his life, or shed his own most precious blood to redeem his intended bride, in which he excels all bridegrooms that ever were. Some have died for love, (it is true,) because they could not obtain the object beloved; but Jesus Christ died to obtain our love; he could never enjoy his spouse, unless he died in her stead.

4. This Bridegroom confers beauty on his bride; he makes her comely, who naturally was filthy and very deformed, which no other bridegroom ever did, nor can do. "And thou wast exceeding beautiful. And thy renown went forth among the heathen for thy beauty, for it was perfect through my comeliness which I put upon thee, saith the Lord God," Ezek. xvi. 13, 14.

5. Bridegrooms among men, do not usually clothe and adorn their brides, or the persons they court, at their own proper charge; but Jesus Christ puts on his bride, the glorious wedding-robe whom he found naked or covered only with filthy rags, and also the garment he puts upon her, is of "wrought gold, she shall be brought unto the king in raiment of needlework," &c., Psal. xlv. 13.

6. Many other bridegrooms cool in a short time in their love and affections; but Jesus Christ never decays or cools in his love to his beloved bride, but his love is ever the same, and a love that passeth knowledge; the height, length, depth, and breadth thereof is infinite.

7. Other bridegrooms are sometimes absent from their brides, and evils befall them, which they neither know nor are able to prevent. But Jesus Christ is always with believers, and nothing can befall them without his knowledge, and that which will not be for their good he will prevent. "Lo I am with you always to the end of the world," Matt. xviii. 28. "The wrath of man shall praise thee, and the remainder of wrath thou wilt restrain," Psal. lxxvi. 10.

8. Other bridegrooms and husbands die, and oftentimes leave their wives widows, but Christ never dies. "I am he that liveth and was dead, and behold I live for evermore, amen, and have the keys of hell and death," Rev. i. 18.

9. Death breaks that union that is between earthly husbands and their wives, and they live but a short time together, (though it be sixty years, it is comparatively but a moment,) but Christ and his spouse shall live together for ever; death cannot dissolve this marriage knot; in all which respects, and many more, it appears that Jesus Christ far excels all other bridegrooms on earth, or that ever lived.

APPLICATION.

I. It may be improved by way of admiration. Strange, doth the Creator court the creature! an abused prince fall in love with a rebellious and traitorous subject!

Wonder at the condescension of the Son of God! doth he assume our nature, and become man, that he may be a proper and fit Bridegroom of our souls, and undergo so many indignities and heart-breaking sorrows, to make us so near unto him, as to be his dear bride and spouse, and lie in his bosom for ever; this will be matter of our admiration to all eternity.

2. O sinners, will you not fall in love with Jesus Christ? Can you refuse such an offer? If you do, how will you look him in the face in the great day? He is a coming, his day is near. "Behold the Bridegroom cometh," &c., and do you make no preparation to meet him?

3. What say you who are the virgins? I fear you are asleep, however let all tremble. It seems there are many foolish virgins in the church at the time when Christ comes. You may hate idolatry and all false worship, and yet be but foolish virgins. My brethren, is it not high time to rouse out of sleep, and look out, and prepare, when the Bridegroom is just at the door? let us all arise, get upon the watch, and look out.

SERMON XIX.

"Then shall the kingdom of heaven be likened to ten virgins, which took their lamps," &c.
—Matt. xxv. 1.

Lamps signify a visible profession of the gospel, and the true worship of God.

You have heard the kingdom of heaven signifieth here the visible church, and by the virgins are meant professors of the true religion, and members of the church, and by the Bridegroom is meant the Lord Jesus Christ.

I shall now proceed. "And took their lamps."

I. I shall show you what these lamps are.

2. Show to what custom our Saviour here doth refer.

Commonly by lamps here, is understood a visible owning of Christ, or the profession of faith, which all the members of the visible church should take and hold fast, viz., continue in the practice of all the ordinances of the gospel, and so maintain the public worship of God, and the profession of this faith; all these virgins were found, they all took their lamps. Yet a reverend author saith, "Lamps signify the readiness of the churches to meet Jesus Christ." And according to another author (who wrote upon this parable), "the taking their lamps is meant the furnishing themselves with what might be of use to lead them in their way at such a time."

Mr. Shepherd on the ten virgins, p. 39.
Mr. Stonnam.

All (it is true,) ought to be ready, but five of them were not ready; yet all took their lamps; therefore lamps (I humbly conceive,) cannot refer to a readiness to meet Christ, though none can be ready to meet him, who take not their lamps, or hold not fast the profession of their faith. It is the trimming our lamps, and having them lighted, and burning clearly, and also having oil in our vessels, that renders us to be ready to meet the Bridegroom.

And as to what the other author saith, I answer, What can be of greater use to lead us (more visibly and externally,) in our way, in order to meet the Lord Jesus Christ, "than the holding fast the form of sound words," or a constant maintaining and keeping up the public worship of God, and profession of our faith?

All the virgins took their lamps; viz., they had all the lamps of a visible and external profession, and were deemed true worshippers of God. But,

For the further clearing of this, I shall show you how fitly a visible profession of the gospel may be compared to a lamp.

I. A lamp is provided to contain oil, that it may give light to ourselves and others in the night. So a Christian should have grace, that his lamp of profession may give light to himself and to others.

Why a visible or an external profession of a lamp is compared to a lamp.

II. A lamp may be empty of oil, or have but a very little in it. So a man may have (or make) a profession of religion, and have no true grace (or only a little common grace,) in his heart; for it was only that which made the lamps of the foolish virgins to blaze a short time, for had they had the true and proper oil, their lamps had not gone out; because to true believers more grace is promised, and all their needs shall continually be supplied, according to "the riches of glory that is in Christ, or according to that abundant grace that is in him," Phil. i. 19.

III. A lamp must be supplied with oil from another vessel. So a believer's lamp of profession must be supplied with spiritual oil, and that from a two-fold vessel, (or else their profession will soon go out, and give no light in this dark world.) (1.) Primarily and mediately from Jesus Christ, who is the fountain-vessel of all grace. (2.) More immediately (and in a secondary manner,) a believer's lamp of profession must be supplied from within, I mean his own heart. It is said, ver. 4, "The wise took oil in their vessels;" that is, (as I conceive) they had true spiritual oil, (or true faith, true grace) in their own hearts; and he that hath only a lamp of profession, and not oil in his vessel, will find his lamp not burn, and give light but a little time: but the wise not only profess, but also possess Jesus Christ in their souls.

IV. Lamps may have much oil put into them at first; but that may not be sufficient, they must be recruited, more must be put in; nay, they must be often supplied with more fresh oil from some vessel or another. So a true believer may receive a good measure of grace, when he was first converted, he received the grace of faith, the grace of love, hope, patience, humility, &c. But notwithstanding this, yet he needs more grace, or an increase, an addition, or further, and fresh supplies of grace in his heart, to furnish his lamp of profession, to make it burn continually, clearly, and not go out.

V. It is oil which makes a lamp to burn, and to give light to him that hath it, and to others also, or otherwise the bare empty lamp signifies just nothing: so it is true grace in daily exercise that makes a professor in his conversation to give light, and to shine in holiness, by which his profession tends to his own profit, and to the benefit of others. A bare profession signifies just nothing without true grace and holiness. "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father, which is in heaven," Matt. v. 16.

VI. Lamps must be daily trimmed, or else they will burn very dimly, and give but little light, the trimming a lamp (or candle), is to prevent what hinders (or obstructs) its burning; (we sometimes say, there is a thief in candle) the lamp or candle must be snuffed, or dead ashes, or something or another may hinder its burning clearly, so as to give a good light. Even so must the lamp of profession be carefully trimmed, or everything be removed that may prevent, hinder, or obstruct a Christian profession from giving a clear light. Sin is like a thief in the candle, it will waste it, and spoil or hinder a man's profession from shining, or the corruptions of the heart, the lusts of the flesh, and inordinate love of the world, are like unto dead ashes, that hinder the lamp of profession from burning clear and bright. Therefore sin and corruptions through the Spirit must be mortified. Brethren, we must top or snuff the lamps of profession, or take away the dead ashes of unbelief, pride, carnality, and formality, or else our lamps will burn very dim, and be ready to go out—and indeed the lamp of hypocrites, though they for a time seem to blaze or shine, yet they go in a little time quite out, which is occasioned,

A lamp trimmed gives a clear light.

1. By reason they had not the right oil, it was counterfeit grace, or not the right lamp-oil, or the true faith of God's elect.

2. It comes to pass also for want of trimming their lamps, they neglect their hearts, and are remiss in their lives, and suffer corruption, deadness, and carnality, to prevail in them; for though it was but common grace that made their lamps to give any light, yet had they trimmed them, or took more care of their outward conversations, their profession might have given more light, and have burned longer also.

VII. The going out of the lamp in a dark night is a very dismal and dangerous thing, especially when a person hath the greatest need of it; so it is a dismal thing for a professor to have the lamp of profession to go out in the dark time of temptation, or in a time of dark providences, or perhaps just before the Bridegroom's coming.

Secondly, To what custom doth our Saviour here refer, or by taking lamps alludeth unto?

1. Answ. No doubt our Lord hereby alludes to the custom of the Jews and other people in those eastern countries, who held their nuptial or marriage feasts in the night, from whence this parable is taken. The custom was this, viz. :—Young men and virgins in the night went forth to meet the bridegroom, as he was coming to the marriage chamber; among the Grotius. Jews, it was with lamps, and among the Romans with torches. Among the Jews all that were invited were bid to bring their burning lamps with them, and by the bright shining, or clear light of their lamps, the glory of the marriage solemnities was much greater, the light of those lamps shining by them; and such who had not lamps lighted and burning, were not admitted into the wedding-chamber.

The custom of the Jews at their weddings.

2. Our Saviour also may allude to lamps here, because a lamp or a candle is a proper light for us in the night; and hence David saith, "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet," Psal. cxix. 105; not only a light as of the sun by day, or in prosperity, but as a lamp in the night of adversity, or under dismal and dark dispensations, or amazing providences, and times of temptation.

3. A lamp burning with clear light, may denote a true believer's readiness for to meet the Bridegroom in the marriage-chamber; the righteousness of the saints in Sion "is compared to a lamp that burneth, and to this our Lord alludeth in another place: "Let your loins be girded, and your lights burning, and you yourselves like unto men that wait for their Lord, when he will return from the wedding, that when he cometh and knocketh they may open unto him immediately," Luke xii. 33, 36. That is, be every way ready. The Bridegroom being come to the marriage-chamber amongst the Jews, it seems on a sudden knocked, to let the virgins of the bride-chamber in; but none, as I said, were admitted but such who had their lamps lighted and clearly burning. So none shall be admitted into the marriage-chamber by Jesus Christ, but such who are ready, having not only lamps, but oil in their vessels, and who in grace and holiness shine in their conversation.

Some in our days pretend to have oil in their vessels (i. e.), saving grace in their hearts, who have not right-made lamps, that is, they have not the true profession of the Christian faith; they boast of the power of godliness, but contemn the true form, or have not kept Rom. vi. 17. that form of doctrine that was once delivered by Christ and his apostles.

It is also called the "form of sound words, and also the form of godliness." These men "have a form of their own" devising, 2 Tim. i. 13, iii. 5; but neither have the true constitution of a gospel church, nor the doctrine and discipline thereof, but pretend to walk by the light which is within them (and in all men), which cannot either discover the true Christ, the true faith, nor the true church: for neither of these are known but by the gospel, (or the sacred word of God)—it is good and commendable to have lamps, nay, absolutely necessary, and such that are also fashioned by the unerring pattern, though without oil that lamp will avail no man anything, we must have both the form and the power of godliness.

"And went forth," &c.

1. Their going forth doth doubtless imply that all these virgins looked upon themselves to be chosen and invited persons, (or such that were called to attend the bridegroom on the marriage day) i. e., they all thought themselves to be saints and godly Christians, though some of them were mistaken.

2. Their going forth may denote their great expectation of being received and kindly entertained by Jesus Christ, when he comes; this certainly must needs be meant hereby: who would go forth to meet the bridegroom as virgins of the marriage-chamber, (according to the custom of the people in those eastern nations) that did not conclude they were some of those select and chosen ones, to attend the bridegroom?

3. It may also signify that desire and longing which they seemed to have, to see and behold the Lord Jesus Christ at his coming.

4. Their going forth be sure denotes that visible profession they made of Jesus Christ, owning his worship and ordinances, which our Lord hath appointed to remain in the church until he comes, as baptism and the Lord's supper: "Let us go forth to him without the camp, bearing his reproach." To this also the Holy Ghost alludes in the sacred song, "Go thou forth by the footsteps of the flock," Cant. i. 7.

5. This going forth to meet the bridegroom in the wise virgins, may denote their great love and affection to the Lord Jesus Christ, and their longings to see him, as when Isaac went forth to meet Rebecca; and Joseph went forth to meet his father Jacob, Gen. xlv. 29; it is for full enjoyment of the Lord Jesus Christ.

6. It may also denote that great confidence that was in all these professors and church members. My Brethren, there are a number of persons that may have great confidence, both living and dying, and yet at last may be disappointed. Nay, and Christ (as one observes) can hardly beat them off from their hope and confidence. "I tell you, I know you not—I profess I know ye not." The wise virgins knew not there were so many foolish ones among them, they took them to be true Christians. O what need have we to try and examine ourselves, and see whether Christ be in us or not, or whether we have oil in our vessels or not. Some think they are in a good estate, because they are hearers of the word; but alas, these did not only hear, but obeyed Christ in all his external ordinances, and were members of his church, and held communion with the saints, and went out into a visible profession, with expectation to meet the Bridegroom.

Doctr. That Jesus Christ at his second coming, cometh, or will come, as a Bridegroom to his people, to marry his spouse, and then will publicly hold his marriage solemnity.

Those expositors, who in speaking to this parable, make it their chief business to open the soul's espousal to Christ, I humbly think, greatly mistake the scope and design of our Lord; for that I think is not so much intended here, as it is to put us in mind of his coming to the marriage chamber at the last day, and to be ready for it: as to the espousing of Christ, which I have spoken to that in opening the parable of the marriage supper, to which I shall refer my reader. I shall not therefore insist upon matters of that nature here.

See the parable of the marriage supper opened.

Now in speaking to this proposition,

1. I shall prove the truth thereof.

2. Show what a day of solemnity that day will be. 3. Apply it.

I have showed already that Christ is the bridegroom here meant; and the present time, my brethren, is the wooing time, or the day of our espousal to the Lord Jesus Christ; and it is said, a virgin espoused is a man's wife, and from hence the church is called the Lamb's wife, who shall be presented a chaste virgin unto Christ, which shows the public marriage day is not yet come, though ministers (as Christ's spokesmen) are said to espouse sinners to him, and they are also said now to be married to him. "Let us be glad, and rejoice, for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready," Rev. xix. 7. This time refers to the day of Christ's second coming. But,

2 Cor. vi. 2.
Rom. vii. 4.

Secondly, to show you what a glorious solemnity that marriage day will be.

1. It will be a day of clearing up, or resolving of all doubts, and for ever scattering of all fears. May be many godly Christians now do much question the truth and sincerity of their faith in, and love to, the Lord Jesus Christ; but then it will be fully known they did truly believe in him, and sincerely love him, and they shall never have any more doubts about it.

What a kind of day the marriage day will be,

II. This marriage day will be the day of the manifestation of the greatness of the love of Christ to his spouse, and unto every believer; I mean they shall more clearly and sensibly know the greatness of his love to every one of their precious souls in that day; "and to know that I have loved thee," Rev. iii. 9. True, by his word and providences, Christ makes this partly known now, but not so fully as he will in that day, and not make it manifest to themselves only, but others shall in that day know it also, who perhaps thought that Christ loved them not, because he so sorely afflicted them whilst in this world.

III. It will be a day without clouds; all darkness shall then for ever be vanquished, and all tears wiped away from the faces of all God's children; it will be the day of joy and gladness of Christ's heart, Cant. iii. 11, and of the hearts of all believers; (crowns were wont to be worn on the marriage day of a prince): so Christ then will not only have his crowns on his head, but his spouse and beloved bride shall be crowned also; yea, every believer shall in that day have a crown of glory on his head; Christ will rejoice over his bride, and she shall rejoice with him with unspeakable joy, their hearts shall rejoice; "But I will see you again, and your hearts shall rejoice, and your joy no man taketh from you," John xv. 22. No day like this marriage day, and good reason there will be for it.

IV. It will be a day of great glory and splendour, which may appear by considering these things following.

1. Jesus Christ will appear then like a glorious king in all his royalties, such a king before did no created being ever behold; (though in a figure Peter, James, and John had a small representation of his glory in the holy mount in the transfiguration). My brethren, some have been amazed to behold the glory of an earthly prince on his marriage-day, and no doubt but the marriage of king Solomon with Pharaoh's daughter (which might be a type of this solemnity) exceeded all that ever was on earth. But O what will be the glory of this day, when the Son of God will have on all his rich and glorious wedding robes, and appear in the glory of the Father, and when his spouse the queen shall also be brought unto the king, in raiment of needle-work, and stand before him clothed with wrought gold of Ophir," Psal. xlv. 9. "When Christ who is our life shall appear, we shall also appear with him in glory," Col. iii. 4. The heavenly Queen will on that day shine in rich heavenly pearls, jewels, and diamonds.

2. In respect of that glorious attendance or retinue, which Jesus Christ and his bride shall have to wait upon them; viz., all the mighty and glorious angels, whose glory be sure will be very great, and no doubt but their glory (though they are spirits) shall be manifested to the saints. Sirs, poor believers now lie among the pots; but what saith the Lord? "Though ye have lien among the pots, yet shall your wings be as the wings of a dove, covered with silver, and her feathers with yellow gold," Psal. lxxviii. 13.

V. The glory and happiness of the saints in that day will be wonderful, in respect of the sight that will be then seen.

(1.) The admirable glory of the Father, which will appear in the person of Jesus Christ, for otherwise no created being could behold; for they shall see God. I do not say the essence of God, for such who affirm that (I humbly conceive they know not what they say; not in Christ's person as a proper medium we shall see the Father. And,

(2.) We shall behold Christ as he is, now glorified in heaven.

(3.) We shall also see all the holy patriarchs, prophets, apostles, blessed martyrs and ministers, and all the saints of Jesus Christ, that ever lived; O what a sight that will be.

VI. It will be a glorious solemnity, in respect of that heavenly melody; O what songs will they be, that the heavenly hosts of saints and angels shall sing; no mortal (be sure) could hear it; it will be so ravishing, when all the saints shall join with the angels, and sing in sweet comfort.

VII. In respect of those rivers of celestial pleasures, which will abide for evermore; they will be pure, sweet, and soul-satisfying pleasure, without any sting, cloying or surfeiting; all the choicest (and lawful) delights and pleasures of this world are, my brethren, but a shadow of those heavenly pleasures: "In thy presence is fulness of joy, and at thy right hand are pleasures for evermore. Thou wilt make them drink of the rivers of thy pleasures," Psal. xvi. 11; Psal. xxxvi. 8.

Rivers denote the quantity or abundance of them: thy pleasures, thy joys they are the joys of our Lord, that signifies the quality of them.

VIII. In respect of that wonderful knowledge believers shall attain unto: "When that which is perfect is come, then shall that which is in part be done away. But then we shall know as we are known," 1 Cor. xiii. 10. 12.

Whilst, brethren, we are here in this body, we know as children, see as children, but then we shall arrive to perfection in knowledge; we shall know fully, or in great and wonderful manner, though not in the same degree of the fulness and perfection whereby God knows us, for that is impossible, how large soever the vessel be, for God is infinite and we (though glorified) are but finite creatures. However, we shall have a wonderful knowledge of God, and of Jesus Christ, and of the secrets of God, of his decrees and purposes, which here we understand and look darkly unto: and also shall know more fully the nature of God's redeeming love, Christ's redeeming love, and his espousing love. Moreover, we shall have a full knowledge of one another, and of all the saints, whom we never saw before, though we hear much of them. Certainly one great part of the glory of that day will consist in that amazing knowledge we shall arrive at. My brethren, we shall know then what heaven is: ah what a little do we now understand of that glorious place, which is called paradise, and the throne of God.

IX. I might speak of the power, rule, and authority, which the saints shall have in that day, and how kings shall bow down before them, and men and devils be judged by them; the saints (with Christ) shall judge the world.

APPLICATION.

1. Infer. We may from hence see what fools the men of the world are, who slight all the joys above, and condemn the glory of this happy day; they are more pleased with toys and rattles, than with true riches, glory and satisfying delights and pleasures of heaven; they value the shadow above the substance, they would be seemingly happy for one day, and choose that rather, than be really and eternally happy, or happy indeed; if there was, sirs, no punishment of loss, to lose God, Christ, and everlasting joys and consolations, what is such a loss?

2. Be exhorted you that are professors and children of God, to prepare to meet the Bridgroom of your souls. Exhort.

FOR MOTIVES.

1. Consider, the design and scope of this parable, is (as I said) to excite us all to a due preparation, or to be ready for the marriage day. Motives to prepare to meet the Bridgroom.

2. Consider that you are espoused, who are true believers, by Jesus Christ; you are the person whom the king in that day will publicly marry, and embrace in his arms, and crown with glory, and set down in his throne. O make ready, hast to the wedding chamber. Rev. iii. 21.

3. You are gone forth by your visible profession to meet the Bridgroom, you are gone out of yourselves, trust not in yourselves, and be gone out of Babylon, and out of all false worship; you are therefore called virgins, this is really so, or but in appearance only. O how sad will it be, if be not in reality; let this motive stir us all up to a due preparation for the marriage day.

4. Consider that now the Bridgroom's coming is very near; now the slumbering time of the virgins is upon us, though near gone, and all things long towards the time of the end. Some years ago what a cry was heard, behold the Bridgroom cometh, and with what expectation did many in this nation go forth to meet him, not thinking he would yet tarry: this is that time in which he is said to tarry, but it is near expired. Though I look for a dark hour just before the day-break.

5. Consider the end and design of the whole of the Christian religion, is to enjoy the lovely Bridgroom. Brethren, the end I say, of all our religion, faith, and expectation is lost as to us, if you and I are not prepared and absolutely ready to meet Jesus Christ. Why did Christ die? why is the gospel preached? why is grace given? why are prayers made? why is holy watchfulness pressed upon us? why is grace to be exercised? why are trials and afflictions patiently borne, but that we might glorify God and Jesus Christ here, and be ready or fully prepared to meet him, be embraced by him, and glorified with him for evermore? Is our hope in this life? God forbid; for then we are of all men most miserable. Is not the end of our faith the salvation of our souls? The design of the whole of all religion is to fit and prepare us for the Bridgroom's coming.

6. None but they only that were ready, went into the wedding-chamber, the door was shut against all others; or rather it will be shut, and how vain then will all their religion be, who are unprepared! what will the foolish virgins do at that day? Many professors do but deceive themselves and others, who think they are going to heaven, when they are indeed going to hell.

7. It is, my brethren, a great disparagement to the Lord Jesus Christ; nay, a slighting of him, and a casting contempt upon his glorious appearance, not to be prepared for his coming, as if he was not worthy of our utmost diligence, or as if this was not matter of the highest importance.

8. Consider, that our carelessness about preparing for Christ's coming, bespeaks want of love to him: what! love the Lord Jesus, and not prepare for the marriage day? Moreover, it may bespeak the want of faith touching his appearance, and this because he seems to delay his coming. About fifty years ago what a mighty expectation was there of Christ's coming, and of the near approaching of his kingdom; (but lo, an amazing hour intervenes) and a second war is commenced by the beast, and all this tending to the slaying the witnesses, by which great security seized upon the Lord's people, and but few now think or speak of Christ's kingdom; it is but little talked of, and doth not this intimate a declension of love to him? "The love of many waxeth cold." Most professors pursue the world, and, I fear, serve the world, and forget their Sovereign, and as the proverb goes, out of sight, out of mind.

9. We read of great preparation, and purifications of virgins for their marriages with earthly princes; and shall not these spiritual virgins labour after soul-preparation and purification for their marriage with the Prince of heaven and earth? see Esther ii. 12. "Now when every maid's turn was come to go to the King, after she had been twelve months, for so were the days of their purification accomplished, to wit, six months with oil of myrrh, and six months with sweet odours." Thus these virgins were prepared and purified to be accepted by the king Ahasuerus, and shall not believers much more strive to be prepared, beautified, and perfumed with all the sweet odours of divine and rich oil of the Spirit, and precious grace, for the embraces of Jesus Christ, the Bridegroom of their souls, and King of heaven and earth?

II. By way of caution. Let the virgins take heed they are not mistaken touching their state, and by self-confidence, or by a feigned, and mere presumptuous faith, deceive themselves, and rest in a hope that will make them ashamed, such as the foolish virgins had. A true believer's hope is such that it maketh them not ashamed: "And hope maketh not asbamed, because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost," Rom. v. 5; no, no, it is a hope that he that hath it, is purged and purified: "He that hath this hope in him, purifies himself even as he is pure," 1 John iii. 3. This hope! what hope? why hope when Christ appears to be like unto him, prepared for him, and to see him as he is. Grace, whether it be the grace of faith, hope, or love, is of a soul-transforming and heart-purifying nature; grace hath in it a sanctifying quality.

III. Trial, my brethren, what need is there that we try and examine ourselves as to our graces and safeness of our condition, and about that due preparation called for. And in order to this, let me hint some of my fears. Sirs, the present state of professors makes it appear doubtful, whether many have true faith in, and love to Christ or not.

1. For religion in the notion of it, it may be feared is got too much in the heads of many, but too little, if at all, into their hearts and lives.

2. Many also are found smiting their fellow-servants, by reproaching and vilifying them. What scandals have some ministers unjustly cast upon others, and some wicked members, false brethren, raised and spread of faithful ministers.

3. What may we think of the general decay of the power of religion and practical godliness? the power of which lies, (1.) In a contempt of this world, and in being weaned from it, or in dying to all earthly things. (2.) In self-denial, humility, and self-abasement. (3.) In holy walking with God in prayer, watchfulness, meditation, mortification, and in a great restlessness after a further likeness unto God. (4.) In preferring the good of others, and promoting Christ's public interest with the peace and unity of the churches. But now, alas, all generally seek their own things, not Christ's things, not his interest, not the good of one another, not contemning, but rather loving the world; not seeking peace, love, and union, but rather foment strife, discord, divisions, and contention in churches; no doubt but these things are bad signs that there are many foolish virgins in the churches in these days, and that the Bridegroom is near.

4. What is the reason the coming and kingdom of Jesus Christ is no more talked of? Are we, my brethren, like those the psalmist speaks of; "They shall speak of the glory of thy kingdom, and talk of thy power, to make known to the sons of men his noble acts, and glorious majesty of his kingdom," Psal. cxlv. 11. Alas, now-a-days these things are little talked or spoken of, but professors talk of the world, of their trades, of their losses, or else of their notions, but not how to revive the cause of Christ, how to strengthen and preserve peace, love, and union, and to provoke one another unto good works; but to conclude with this proposition.

Sinners, what say you concerning Christ's coming? you hear some that have Counsel and warning to sinners. lamps, and go forth to meet the Bridegroom, shall not be suffered to go into the wedding-chamber. O then what little ground have you to expect it! if professors fall short, what will become of you that are profane? you have no oil, no lamps, nor see any beauty in Christ to desire him; certainly your case will be very sad in that day; you are married to the world, to your lusts, to your own foolish opinions of your good condition, while others are married to the law, or to their own righteousness, and others to idolatry, to the traditions of men, and to foolish superstitions, and some others to their errors, and to abominable and damnable heresies.

O come, resolve to cleave to the Lord Jesus, embrace him, get faith in him, cry to him, and leave your cursed sins and wicked ways; for know assuredly, Christ comes, he comes: "Behold I come quickly, and my reward is with me, to give unto every one according as his works shall be," Rev. xxii. 12. If you do not go forth to meet him, he will quickly meet you, but not like a bridegroom, not like a lamb, but like a lion, like an enemy to tear and devour you in his wrath.

SERMON XX.

And five were wise, and five were foolish.—Matt. xxv. 2.

FROM hence observe,

Doct. That in the church in the latter days, though there will be some wise or pious Christians, yet there will be many foolish professors, or false and hypocritical ones also.

In speaking to this point of doctrine, I shall

1. Show what is meant here by wisdom, or by being wise.
2. Show wherein the wisdom of pious Christians does consist.
3. Show wherein the folly of the foolish also consisteth.
4. Apply it.

I. Negatively, I shall show you wherein the wisdom here meant does not consist. Wherein true wisdom consisteth not.

It consisteth not in that which the men of the world call and count wisdom.

1. Not in being wise or crafty to get the world, and to grow great and rich, or in getting abundance of earthly wealth; such men I know are counted wise, but these being not rich towards God, the Lord calls fools: "Thou fool, this night thy soul shall be required of thee." Is not he a fool that labours for the wind, and pursues a shadow, who, in gaining the world, loseth his own soul?

2. True wisdom is not in studying more the knowledge of the law of our country, or laws of the land, than the knowledge of the law of God, and the knowledge of Christ and his glorious gospel; though some cry up this sort to be wise men, understanding men, they know the law, and can give as good counsel as lawyers themselves; and so they may, and yet be but grand fools, in respect of the wisdom meant in this parable; they study the law, but study not the knowledge of themselves, they know the law, but know not Jesus Christ.

3. True wisdom consisteth not in human learning, or in the knowledge of the tongues, or of human arts and sciences; it is not in them who esteem of the knowledge of these things above the knowledge of a crucified Christ, they have attained to natural, moral, and metaphysical, and all curious philosophical notions, and these men are counted by some the only wise men; and such who have not this knowledge, though endowed with true spiritual knowledge and gifts from Christ, they are slighted and contemned by them. But this wisdom is not that by which men come to know God in Christ. See what Paul saith, "Hath not God made foolish the wisdom of this world? Again he saith, "for after that in the wisdom of God, the world by wisdom knew not God," 1 Cor. i. 23, 21; after that way, or according to the profound depths of God's wisdom, the world by their wisdom knew not God; no, they were so far from approving or understanding the wisdom of God in a mystery, or as it is revealed in a crucified Christ, that they count it foolishness; that wisdom that God counts foolishness is magnified, and esteemed the chief wisdom, and the wisdom of God accounted by them foolishness.

4. Nor doth this wisdom consist in bare head or mere speculative knowledge, though it be in divine things; "Men may understand all mysteries, and have all knowledge," 1 Cor. xiii. 1, 2; that is whatsoever is notional or speculative, whether divine or human, and yet have not one dram of saving wisdom. Knowledge puffs up, &c., such are conceited, and wise in their own eyes, and therefore fools, and not wise men.

5. This wisdom lies not, or consisteth not merely in a wise and prudent behaviour, or in a man's wise and discreet management of himself, and of all his worldly affairs; for though much folly may be in those who prudently manage their earthly business and concerns, yet such who with prudence order such matters, may utterly neglect their souls, or seek not, regard not the things of another world. In a word, the wisdom our Lord refers to, is not worldly wisdom, or the wisdom that is from beneath.

2ndly. In the affirmative.

What it is to be wise indeed.

1. This wisdom consisteth in the true fear of God. "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom," Prov. ix. 10; the beginning of knowledge, "But fools despise wisdom and instruction," Prov. i. 7. And again Solomou saith, "The fear of the Lord is to hate evil, pride, arrogancy, and the evil way," &c., Prov. viii. 13.

No man is truly wise, that is not truly godly; all sinners are fools, and are often so called.

True wisdom lies in knowing the chief good, and how to obtain and possess it.

2. This wisdom lies in the knowledge of the chiefest evil, so as to escape it, and in the knowledge of the chief good so as to obtain and possess it. Sin is the chiefest evil, and God is the chief good, and to know God truly in Christ, or with a saving knowledge, is that wisdom our Lord refers here to.

3. True wisdom consisteth in knowing what we want to make us truly happy, and to endeavour to obtain that good which will make us blessed for ever. "This is life eternal, to know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent," John xviii. 3. He that hath this knowledge, i. e., that understands the principle, together with the means, and end, that universally is necessary to the possession, or enjoyment of that which renders a man blessed in soul and body for ever, is certainly a wise man. These things more generally show what is true wisdom.

A wise man knows himself and the worth of his soul.

I. A man that is truly wise knows himself; he knows the worth of his own soul, together with the vast capacity and comprehension of it, and what object can answer all its wants, fill all its desires, and yield it full and perfect satisfaction; which nothing can do but an interest in God himself.

He knows what originally made him miserable.

II. Now in order to this, he must know what it was which made his soul miserable, nay, both soul and body, which was the loss of God, and of his blessed image by sin.

He knows the nature of God, and of the law of God.

III. True wisdom consisteth in the knowlege not only of the rectitude of God's holy nature and attributes, but also in the knowledge of the law of God, which is a written impression of his image.

IV. Moreover, it consists in knowing how impossible it is for a man in his fallen state to be justified by his own righteousness, in obedience either to the law or gospel; he is wise that knows how God's wrath is appeased to him; and his justice satisfied, and hath obtained remission of sin through the blood of Christ. The foolishness of the Jews appeared in their ignorance of these things. "Being ignorant of the righteousness of God," &c. Rom. x. 3. And in this also appeared the folly of the Greeks. "Alas! they counted justification by Christ's obedience, or by a slain or crucified Christ, to be foolishness, and thereby showed themselves to be fools, the worst of fools, who thought all fools but themselves.

True wisdom consisteth in the knowledge of the way, means and ends.

V. True spiritual wisdom consisteth not in knowing the way of salvation only, but the means of it also. A man must know the means as well as the way, and the end of every great undertaking; and so in this he that knows that Christ is the way of salvation, the end, the eternal enjoyment of God, yet if he knows not the means how to obtain an interest in Christ, and to abide in the way so as to obtain the end, is a fool.

A man that wants health, or is sick, may hear of a remedy that infallibly will cure him, but if he knows not how it must be applied, may die of his sickness, notwithstanding the remedy he is told of. The means is union with Christ, faith in Christ; the Spirit must apply the remedy, viz., Christ's merits, Christ's blood; and he that makes use of this means, as he is in the way, so he shall obtain the desired end, i. e., the salvation of his soul. "He that believeth on him shall not perish, but have everlasting life," Jobu iii. 16. And he that thus believes, as all wise virgins do, attains to true wisdom. Pray remember Christ is the way, God is the end, and closing with Christ by faith is the means.

Matt. vii. 26. See that similitude opened.

VI. From hence it appears that the wisdom of the wise virgins consisteth in building alone on the true foundation; not only knowing it, but in building rightly upon it. Some build on sands, and these our Lord compares to foolish men; some build on self principles, or without a foundation, and what folly is that?

True wisdom consisteth in

VII. True wisdom consists in a right and direct motion towards the end; he that misseth the end, which is the glory of God, will miss of happiness, miss the end, and all endeavours and knowledge are vain and fruitless. Some aim at a good name, some seek applause, some follow Christ for profit, or for loaves; now all these are foolish persons; the wise only aim at God, seek the glory of God, the honour of Christ, and to enjoy him for ever.

a right and direct motion towards the great end.

But perhaps self happiness is the only end some aim at, all their care and business is to be saved, and some of this sort are ready to say, what may I not be saved, if I do not this or that? may I not be saved except I am baptized, and come into this or that church, and break bread, or though I pray not so often as some do, and hear not so many sermons, as if nothing was to be done for Christ's sake, or to glorify God, and to manifest our love to Jesus Christ, and our subjection to him as our prince as well as our Saviour.

VIII. The true wisdom of the wise virgins does consist in a timely making use of the means; they would not be contented with empty lamps, nor would they fall into a slumber before they have provided oil in their vessels, or have it to seek when the Bridegroom was come. The foolish ones missed it here; they took lamps, but no oil in their vessels, nor saw the need of it until it was too late. "Why is there a price in the hands of a fool to get wisdom, seeing he hath no heart to it," Prov. xvii. 16. He is a wise man that takes hold of the present opportunity, or who redeems the time; such as soon as they are sick, will seek out for a physician, and another buys what he wants before the market be over, and also sows in the proper season, and not defer sowing to the time when he should reap.

True wisdom consists in a timely making use of the means.

IX. True wisdom consisteth in preferring the concerns of the soul above the body, or in a greater care how to live for ever hereafter, than how to live here for a moment, or in labouring more for the meat that perisheth not, than for that which perisheth.

X. In value grace above a visible profession, or in prizing the grace of God's word above the hearing the word of his grace; the one is for the cabinet, the other for the jewel; the one is for the gospel in word only, the other is for the gospel in its power, and inward efficacy also.

XI. He that is truly wise will try his heart, try his love, and ponder his paths, understand his way, and look well to his goings, he will not take up things on trust, nor see with other men's eyes (as to matters of faith and practice). Moreover, he is for the reduction of what he knows unto the rule of practice. "Be ye doers of the word, not hearers only, deceiving your own selves," James i. 22. They are fools that are contented with bare hearing. Such that are wise, are greatly concerned about the state and frame of their hearts, being not satisfied only to have life, but would be lively also.

A wise man tries his heart.

Prov. xiv. 8.

Matt. vii. 24.

XII. True wisdom does consist in getting a sure title, and a proper meetness for eternal life; the wise virgins had a sure and certain title to eternal blessedness, though they were fallen (through Satan's temptations) into a slumbering frame, and also it appears they had a meetness for heaven, and entered into the wedding chamber. I do not say they had this meetness to such a degree when they fell asleep, but they were awakened, and trimmed their lamps, and so fitted for the Bridegroom's coming.

True wisdom consists in having a sure title and meetness also for eternal life.

APPLICATION.

1. We may from hence infer, there are but few truly wise. O what folly abounds in the world. Infer. 1.

2. It informs us also that the men of the world are justly to be charged with the greatest folly, in counting the godly fools; for that which wicked men think is their folly and madness, is the greatest wisdom. Inform.

Exhort. Labour after this wisdom, let this be all our care.

For motives,

1. Consider that many professors are fools in their profession; O how sad is it! men count them fools because they are professors, and God calls them fools because they are no more but professors.

2. Consider this spiritual wisdom is the only true wisdom, and none but the saints, none (as I told you) are wise, but believers, or godly persons.

3. This is the way to honour, "The wise shall inherit glory, but shame shall be the promotion of fools," Prov. iii. 35. That wisdom which raises some men's name and honour in the world, is foolishness with God; but godly men Christ honours, and the Father will honour them also. Exhortation.

4. These persons God will commend for ever for that wisdom he gave : when all others shall be confounded for their folly and madness.

But to proceed,

“ And five were foolish.” That is five were no more than professors, or not sincere Christians ; they had no more than a name, or lamps, and no oil in their vessels ; they were graceless wretches ; the church, it appears, hath good and bad in it, hypocrites, as well as true believers.

Doct. Hypocrites are foolish persons, or false professors are fools.

1. I shall show you wherein the folly of these professors does consist. 2. Apply it.

Wherein the folly of the foolish vir-gins consisteth.

1. The folly of these professors, called here foolish virgins, consisteth in their attaining to some degrees of the knowledge of the way of salvation, and yet have no interest in the blessed Saviour, and so prefer an empty or bare profession without the power of it, or in getting lamps but no oil, and so prefer the name of Christ above the nature of Christ ; this discovers they are fools.

Not to use means, or not rightly and timely to use it is great folly.

2. In that they had the means but never used it, a price in their hands, but no heart to improve it ; not to use the proper means to attain any great thing, or to rest wholly in the means, are like folly, or grand foolishness ; but all these acts of folly, are these professors or foolish virgins guilty of ; they might be under the proper means, viz., the preaching of the world, but used it not, they made use of false means, i. e., they went to buy oil of the wise virgins, they went to him that sold oil, but was not timely, but when it was too late, and no doubt rested wholly in a long time upon the bare use of the external means, as the preaching of the word and outward ordinances.

Not to provide for a time of need is great folly.

3. To sleep in harvest, or come to the market when it is over, certainly argues great folly in such persons ; to know that winter will come, and yet make no provision for it, discovers the man void of wisdom ; to foresee the evil, and yet take no due care to prevent it, is great folly. “ A prudent man foreseeth the evil, and hideth himself ; but the simple (i. e.,) pass on, and are punished,” Prov. xxii. 3. And according to the nature of the evil foreseen, or forewarned of, when endeavours are not used to avoid it, such is the degree of the folly ; now what is a greater evil than the loss of God, Christ, and the immortal soul ? but these evils they might have foreseen, and of which they had warning, yet persisted on in the neglect of laying hold of Christ, or in seeking timely faith in him, and so to be prepared for his coming.

Folly to run
the greatest hazard till no help for it.

4. Their folly consisteth in running the greatest hazard, and yet think themselves safe, though told they are running into a lion's den. What greater madness can there be, than not to see nor believe most dismal danger (though told of it a thousand times) until it is too late, and there is no remedy ; none can help them ; in this their folly consisteth.

Folly not to professors refused to pull out a and refused to

5. Is it not great folly to refuse to cut off a corrupt and rotten member, when told death will inevitably ensue, or their life must go if it be not done ? or for a person to refuse a bitter portion, and rather choose to die than to take it, this shows the person is either not sensible or else a great fool. Now these persons rather choose to be damned for their sins, than to suffer the pain of the mortification of their sins, therefore were fools.

Folly to believe Satan, or trust a deceitful heart.

6. Their folly consisteth in believing the father of lies, and in trusting in their own hearts, when nothing is more deceitful ; Satan no doubt persuaded them their hearts and states were good, and they saw not how they were deceived, until the bridegroom came. Is it not folly to think to reap, and never sow ? or sow tares, and yet hope to reap wheat ? or to expect to get the victory and never fight, or to win the prize and never run ? or to delay that work which will take up all our days on earth, to one hour or moment a little before death ? It discovers the greatest folly any can be guilty of ; but this folly appears in these persons, and therefore might be well called foolish persons.

7. To value the good opinion, and have the approbation of men, above the love of Christ and the approbation of God, is folly with a witness ; but this these foolish virgins do ; they desire to be called saints, though they are sinners, and strive to keep up in the good opinion of men, but never laboured above all things to be accepted of God, and therefore are fools.

8. Their folly consisteth in losing the love, both of God and the world ; nay, and in exposing themselves to the wrath of God and man, for because they are professors of religion, and free from idolatry, and will not worship with the world, or be defiled with popish superstitions, they are hated of men, and perhaps suffer hard things; for a man may give his body to be burned, and have no true love to God; and because they are hypocrites, or no more than bare possessors, God hates them, so that they may be said to lose earth and heaven too, and therefore are called foolish virgins.

APPLICATION.

I. We may from hence infer, that the visible church is made up of a mixture; the net of the gospel takes good and bad. 1 Inference.

II. We infer also that hypocrisy is hard to be discovered; for had the foolish virgins been known to the church, be sure they had not so long continued in it; but doubtless the wise virgins knew them not, but took them for true Christians; nay, (as one observes) could hypocrites be discerned, they should not be received, because matter fit to ruin a church, are not fit to make a church. 2 Inference.

III. We infer that it is no wonder there is so much trouble in churches, such contention, strife, and quarrelling, and many disorderly walkers (for though it is true, through temptation, it may sometimes be occasioned by such that are sincere) yet commonly no doubt it riseth from the rubbish, I mean, hypocrites that get in among them; and from hence it is there is so much work on the days of discipline, and also by reason of this sort religion and the church of Christ is exposed to reproach. 3 Inference.

IV. Also from hence it appears that no church is pure or free from chaff or hypocritical members; nay, and in the latter day it appears the church does abound with false professors; "five were wise, and five were foolish." I will not say there are as many foolish as are wise, (though some think it may be so from these expressions) yet certainly it signifies that there are or will be many corrupt and false-hearted ones in the churches in these latter days. 4 Inference.

Quest. From whence doth it come to pass that so many unsound persons get into the churches?

1. Answ. Certainly, it ariseth from the subtilty of Satan, who by his cunning wiles deceives poor mortals, together by the reason of that great deceit or deceivableness that is in the heart.

2. From the malice of Satan, who is an enemy to purity, who being an unclean spirit himself, if he could, would make heaven itself unclean, but that being beyond his power or policy; hence he strives to pollute the visible church, and stain the beauty and glory thereof.

3. It may arise from the carelessness of the church and ministers thereof, in not being so strict and careful as they ought about examining all persons, whom they receive as members among them: and this also should be a mighty caution to them to watch, and be very diligent and careful in this matter. "While men slept, the enemy sowed tares."

4. It also may arise from the carelessness of these foolish ones themselves, in not trying, searching, and thoroughly examining their own hearts; for certainly many think who are hypocrites, their state is good, and they are true believers; moreover, common grace, common operations of the Spirit, much resemble true and saving operations.

V. From hence let all professors and church members be exhorted to have a jealous eye over their own hearts, lest they are deceived and be undone for ever. Exhortation.

But to proceed,

"They that were foolish took their lamps, and took no oil with them," ver. 4.

Pray well observe the first verse of this chapter.

"They took their lamps and went forth to meet the bridegroom."

That is, all of them, but the foolish took no oil with them; that is (as I noted) in their vessels, i. e., they had no true grace in their hearts. This going forth some think refers to the time of the witnesses finishing their testimony. We know that there was a wonderful expectation of the coming of the Bridegroom about fifty years ago, in this street of the great city, where (as I conceive the witnesses about those times arrived to the top of their testimony) and then might be said to go forth, in expectation of Christ's sudden coming to set up his more visible and glorious kingdom.

"Took no oil," &c.

Certainly, they going forth in the night, or in a day-time, had some kind of oil in their lamps that gave some light, though it was not of the right sort; for else how could they say as they do afterwards, "Our lamps are gone out?"

Doth not that imply their lamps had been lighted and did burn for a time? therefore by their taking no oil must be meant no saving grace, or they went forth without having obtained like precious faith, or the faith of God's elect; they were graceless persons, and had not the Spirit of God in its saving graces and operations in their souls. For by oil I understand is meant the Spirit of God, which is often compared to oil: "Therefore God thy God hath anointed thee with the oil of gladness above thy fellows," Psal. xlv. 7; this is that anointing which we have received in Christ, and that abideth in us, or that unction from the Holy One, 1 John ii. 27, by which we know all things necessary to salvation.

Secoudly, by the oil here also most expositors understand is meant saving grace: thus one expresseth himself; by oil I understand (saith he) the saving grace of the Spirit of Jesus Christ, true justifying faith, repentance, never to be repented of, and love out of a pure heart. And by taking no oil I understand (saith he) the true saving grace of God in the heart. Another worthy writer also saith, (having confuted the foolish notions of the blind papists) but by oil is meant the Spirit of Christ, and the graces of it, peculiar to all the elect.

Now the Spirit and graces of the Spirit may be, and is, compared to oil from the nature or quality of it. Grace is compared to leaven from some of the qualities of leaven; to the wind, to water, to fire, upon the consideration of the nature of those things; and so here the Spirit and saving grace is compared to oil, from the qualities of nature thereof, though in respect of one or two of its properties chiefly in this place.

1. Oil is of a softening, and a mollifying and healing nature; and so is the Spirit and grace of God.

2. Oil is contrary to scorpions, and expels poison; so is grace also contrary to Satan, that old serpent, and it also expels the poison of sin and Satan's temptations.

3. Oil will not mingle or incorporate with other liquid things, but it will be always uppermost: so grace, whether considered in the spring (from hence it proceeds,) or in respect of the subject of it, and its own quality; it will not mingle with any other thing, it will not mix with a man's own righteousness; it will not mingle or mix with works, much less will it mingle with sin, or the inordinate love of the world; neither will free-grace mix with free-will. Take grace for the favour of God, the rich bounty and good will of God, it will not mingle with any of these things, or take it (as principally meant here,) for the fruits of the Spirit, or effects of God's special grace and love; it will mix with nothing that is contrary to its own nature: Moreover, grace will reign, predominate, or be uppermost where it is received.

4. Oil is of a reviving nature, and opens obstructions, causing a man to breathe freely. So grace revives the soul, and removes all obstructions of deadness and unbelief, and causeth a believer to breathe forth his desires freely unto God.

5. Oil is of a feeding and fattening nature, as well as beautifying; it causeth the face to shine. So grace feeds, nay, fattens the soul, and makes the soul shine in holiness and good works.

6. And lastly. And more directly, (as intended here,) it is oil that makes the lamp to burn, that feeds it, and continues its light. So the grace of God in the heart of a believer makes his life, profession, and conversation to burn, and give much light, and also as more grace is given, so the believer's lamp is continued burning.

7. If the lamp be not fed with oil, with proper lamp oil, it will soon go out. So for want of true grace in the heart, the lamp of the foolish virgins went quite out; and were not true believers supplied day by day with more grace, their lamps would go out also. There must be oil in the vessel as well as in the lamp; and so there must be grace in our hearts as well as gracious acts and holiness in our lives, or in the lamp of profession, and in our conversation.

Pray observe, both the wise and foolish virgins had their lamps; both professed the true faith, owned the doctrine of the gospel; both went forth together into a visible profession; both were church members; both were taken for true Christians; both went to meet the Bridegroom.

From hence note.

Doct. That false professors or foolish virgins may go a great way in a profession of religion, and be taken for true believers.

In speaking to this proposition,

1. I shall briefly show you how far the foolish virgins may go.

2. Show wherein the wise outdo them, or differ from them. 3. Apply it.

My brethren, having, in opening the parable of the sower, showed you how far the stony and thorny-ground hearers may go. I shall be very brief in speaking to it here.—
But,

I. They may hear the word, and seemingly retain it, those persons signified by the highway-side, heard the word; but Satan caught it presently out of their hearts. But the foolish virgins do more, they for some time seem to keep the word, it takes some rooting in these.

How far the foolish virgins may go in a profession of religion.

II. They may for a time appear very zealous, and forward, in hearing the word preached; this sort of professors followed our Saviour from place to place, nay, took shipping to go after him; but it was not (as our Lord told them) "because they saw the miracles which he did," John vi. 26. Not from a love to his person, nor to his word, but because they eat of the loaves, and were filled.

III. They may seem to delight to hear the word, and to know the ways of God. "And delight to know my ways as a nation that did righteousness. They take delight in approaching to God," Isa. lviii. 2. These foolish professors in Israel they knew the will of God, and inquired after the Lord. "They come unto thee as thy people come, and they sit before thee as my people, and they hear thy words, but they will not do them," Ezek. xxxiii. 31, 32. Nay, the word seemed sweet and pleasant to them. "Thou art to them as a very lovely song of one that bath a pleasant voice, and can play well on an instrument," &c. Who would think these were not sincere persons?

IV. They may receive the word. So the stony and thorny-ground hearers are said to do. They heard the word, and anon they received it; they received the word into their heads, and were somewhat enlightened by it. They may believe. "Simon also believed," &c., Acts viii. 13. "Many believed on his name, when they saw the miracles he did; but Jesus did not commit himself to them," John ii. 23, 24. So in John viii. 30, they may have the faith of credence, a presumptuous faith, a historical faith, a temporary faith; nay may have the faith of miracles, and cast out devils, and yet not have grace, no charity, no true love to God, nor true faith in Jesus Christ.

V. They may leave all gross acts of sin, and reform their ways as to their outward conversation, and so escape the corruptions of the world, through that knowledge which they have attained of Jesus Christ. Herod, when he heard John the Baptist, reformed many things.

VI. They may be "enlightened, and also taste of the heavenly gift," Heb. vi. 4; those high attainments the apostle mentions in Heb. vi. 4—6, are no other than the operations of the Holy Ghost, which foolish virgins, or hypocritical professors, may attain unto.

1. They may be enlightened or instructed in the clear doctrine of the gospel, or be illuminated with some kind of supernatural light and knowledge, by partaking of the common operations of the Spirit.

2. As to be under the sense of the evil of sin, in respect of the guilt thereof; and see that sin is against the nature of God, and hateful to him, but never come themselves to hate and abhor it, in respect of the defiling nature of it.

3. They may also be so far enlightened as to know God is man's chief good; for if heathens came to discern this, much more this sort that had the common illuminations of the Spirit.

4. They may be enlightened so far, as to know all the essentials of the true Christian religion.

5. To know the true Christ, and the church in his nature, constitution, government, and discipline thereof.

VII. They may also taste of the heavenly gift. (1.) The doctrine and ordinances of the gospel are an heavenly gift, and of this gift they may taste. (2.) The extraordinary operations of the Holy Ghost are called the gift of God: "Because thou hast thought the gift of God may be purchased with money," Acts viii. 20. This heavenly gift false or foolish professors may taste of: "In thy name we have cast out devils. And though I have all faith, so that I could remove mountains, and have not charity," 1 Cor. xiii. 1, 2; that is, true love to God: which shows it was possible a man might have such a faith, and yet have no true grace, or not have the grace of faith. (3.) The gospel dispensation in general is an heavenly gift, of which dispensation these have a taste of.

VIII. They may partake of the Holy Ghost; so it is expressed, "And were made partakers of the Holy Ghost," &c. This, as Dr. Owen shows, is (in effect) the same thing mentioned before (though in different words expressed) they may partake of the common operations, and common gifts of the Spirit, which keep their lamps for some time burning.

IX. They may taste of the good word of God.

1. The good word of God intends the gospel, which word they give credit unto, and so with some kind of faith tasted it, and so are said to believe, or by and by "to receive the word with joy," as the stony-ground hearers are said to do, Matt. xiii. 20.

2. They may taste some sweetness in the word of God, particularly in the doctrine and promises thereof; but a bare tasting may be where there is not a true spiritual feeding on that doctrine, and on those blessed promises of the word of God; nay, they may partake of such great gifts of the Holy Ghost, as to become eminent preachers of the gospel, but whatsoever taste the foolish virgins have of the good word of God, they never digested it, so as to be fed, and nourished thereby.

X. They may taste of the powers of the world to come.

Two things let me note here.

1. What is meant by the world to come.

2. What by tasting the powers thereof.

(1.) Some here by the world to come assert is only meant the gospel church state, or spiritual kingdom of the Messiah. Dr. Owen seems to be of this opinion; and if this be meant by the world to come, then their partaking of the miraculous operations of the Spirit, was their tasting of the powers thereof.

(2.) But by the world to come I rather think the apostle alludes to the glory of the kingdom of Christ, (when he appears the second time) which will be that new heaven and new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness," 1 Pet. iii. 13, Rev. xx. 1.

(3.) As to their "tasting of the world to come," it may be this, i. e.

1. They believe the truth and certainty of the glory of the world to come; they give full credit to the truth of that future state, in respect to the resurrection and eternal judgment, and to the mighty power that will attend both; they believe the revelation of those things concerning the world to come, and so are said to have a taste of them.

Moreover, they may taste some fancied sweetness in hope of the joys of the world to come, and be under the restraining power of the Spirit, through dread of the punishment of the world to come.

XI. From hence it appears that the foolish virgins may be baptized, break bread, and so have external communion with the wise in the church of God; for nothing is more clear than this, viz., that they were visible church members, nay, they may obey all external ordinances of the gospel, or precepts of Jesus Christ.

XII. They may desire grace; "Give us of your oil:" they desire it, and ask it, but not of him, (or not in a right manner) who hath it to give.

XIII. They may pray, nay, be much in prayer; for thus did the Pharisees, and desire others to pray for them. For so did Pharaoh, and may have also much seeming zeal for a time, and contribute to the poor saints, though not from a principle of love.

XIV. In a word (to close with this) they may be under a great visible change, being formerly profane and ungodly persons, they may be reformed, and to appearance become other men, even great and notable professors of religion; and all may take them for saints, and very little difference may appear between them and true Christians. Moreover, they talk of Christ's coming, and go out to meet him with the wise.

Secondly, I shall show you wherein the wise virgins outdo them, or differ from them.

1. The wise hear the word, and hear it not with joy only, but understand it also; that is, they have a true experimental knowledge of the divine power of it upon their hearts. Their hearts are thoroughly changed by the efficacy and effectual workings of the Spirit; so that regeneration passeth upon all their souls, they are not only other men, but new men; they do not only assent to the truth of the word, or receive it into their understanding, but with a full consent of their will close with Christ, and yield obedience to him from the heart.

2. They are not under the common, but special illumination of the Holy Ghost; their convictions are not legal but evangelical; they are not convinced of the guilt, but also of the filth of sin; their convictions are not chiefly of scandalous sins, but it reaches their hearts and secret sins also, and not only actual sins, but the evil of original sin likewise; and not only as sin is against them, but also as it is against God, and hath wounded the Lord Jesus Christ; these things are the chief cause of their grief and sorrow: "Against thee, thee only have I sinned, and done this evil in thy sight," Psal. li. 4. It canseth them (from hence) to loathe themselves; yea, "to abhor themselves, and to repent in dust and ashes," Job xlii. 6. Common convictions rise from the sense of God's wrath, but special convictions flow from the sense of God's love in Jesus Christ; they seeing a free pardon of all their sins through Christ's blood offered to them, this melts them into tears of sorrow, mixed with joy.

3. They are not only convinced of sin, (and particularly of the sin of unbelief) but of righteousness also.

II. They have not only a taste of the good word of God, but feed also upon it; their taste and eating ariseth from spiritual hunger, or from a true sense of want; they have a craving appetite, and nothing but God in Christ can satisfy their souls; they digest the word, they feed upon it, or live upon Christ by faith, and to them the word is "sweeter than honey, or the honey-comb," Psal. cxix. 97; that which they eat, is turned into good nourishment, it being mixed with faith, it strengthens, revives, and comforts them.

III. The wise virgins do not receive the Holy Ghost only in the gifts of it also, they have true faith, unfeigned love to Christ, and hope that maketh not ashamed, and also attain to humility, temperance, patience, and brotherly kindness.

IV. The wise virgins have all those things that accompany salvation, or such things that accompany a saved state. (1.) The Holy Spirit, as the great new covenant promise. (2.) Union with Christ. (3.) A new heart, or the image of God created anew in them; they are justified, adopted, and sanctified. (4.) They have a dear love to the saints, and as they are the members of Christ's mystical body, they minister to them, which is more, or a higher attainment than any of the foolish virgins arrive at.

V. The wise virgins are sincere Christians, really in heart before God what they appear to be before men; they act from right principles and from right motives; the love of God and the love of Christ stirs them up to follow him, to cleave to him, and to obey him in whatsoever he commands them; also they act to a right end, that God may be glorified, and Jesus Christ may be exalted.

SERMON XXI.

While the Bridegroom tarried they all slumbered and slept.—Matt. xxv. 5.

SOME think this slumbering and sleeping of the virgins refers to the "sleep of death; they all slept, that is, (say they) they all died. But certainly they are greatly mistaken who are of this opinion.

1. Because when they were awakened, the foolish virgins were bid to go and buy oil, which will not be said unto any at the day of the resurrection.

2. Because all the virgins are said to rise out of this slumber and sleep at one and the same time, and trimmed their lamps; but no hypocrite or unbelievers shall rise from the dead, when all that sleep in Jesus shall be raised, which will be at the very time when Christ comes; "The dead in Christ shall rise first," 1 Thess. iv. 16.

3. Because they rose out of this sleep some time before the Bridegroom came; the foolish virgins after they were awakened, went to buy oil; "But while they went to buy, the bridegroom came," ver. 10.

Before I speak to the slumbering and sleeping of the virgins, I shall speak to the "Bridegroom's tarrying."

1. Some think our Lord refers to that long time between the ascension of our Saviour, and his second coming, and how long that will be we know not, though most believe not more than two thousand years.

2. Others think he refers to that time which is between the time of the soul's espousal to Christ, or conversion, and the marriage day.

3. Others perhaps upon better grounds conclude, it refers to that distance of time, that will be between some remarkable signs and expectation of Christ's appearance and his actual coming, and I rather adhere to this.

To what time the tarrying of the Bridegroom doth refer.

Certainly, These words refer to a time when all the virgins shall be full of expectation of Christ's coming; nay, and when many would be very confident of it, by means of some providences, signs, and appearances, which I take was about fifty years ago; do but call to mind what an hour the church was then under, and what wonderful expectation was amongst the people of God in these nations, and in other nations and kingdoms also? Oh what preaching and writing about the coming and kingdom of our Lord, was there then, and what mighty things were upon the wheels, of which I gave you some brief hints before!

Archer, Brightman,
Tillinghorst,
Dr. Holmes, and many more.

But lo after this time the Bridegroom tarries; he then came not, but all those brave men saw they were mistaken, and a dark cloud (not expected) comes upon the Lord's people both here and in other kingdoms and nations; and this seeming delay, I conceive, was partly the cause of all the virgins falling asleep, or into a sleepy and slumbering condition, which drowsy frame of spirit we are still under, and shall I fear be for some time.

But know assuredly, that though the Lord Jesus seems to tarry (or tarries past that time his people longed for him) yet he will not tarry one hour longer than the appointed time. "For yet a little while he that shall come will come, and will not tarry." The least moment shall not exceed the fixed time, that is determined: "For the vision is for an appointed time, but at the end it shall speak, and not lie, though it tarry, wait for it, because it will surely come and not tarry," Hab. ii. 3.

Yet from those words, whilst the Bridegroom tarried, we may note,

1. That Christ comes not at that time, when many of his own people looked for him, and this we have seen clearly fulfilled.

2. That he will come when he is not expected; "In such an hour ye think not, the Son of Man cometh," Matt. xxiv. 44; and that also some shall be left to such temptation, as to say my Lord delayeth his coming, but such who say thus in their hearts, our Saviour calls evil servants, ver. 48.

3. Moreover know, that when our Lord comes, he comes suddenly, even as a thief in the night; and it will be very surprising, like a cry at midnight, when many will be asleep, or very secure. And are not many at this present time ready to say in their hearts, the day is afar off, and perhaps one reason of it may be from the boldness of some good men, who have unadvisedly spoken of the accomplishment of those things, which are to precede his personal appearance, as the passing away of the second wo, and the utter downfall of mystical Babylon, by the sounding of the seventh angel, "when the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ," Rev. xi. 14, 15. The seventh trumpet must sound, before one of the seven vials are poured forth; and by the pouring forth of all the seven vials will the utter ruin of the beast and mystery Babylon be accomplished. For as a worthy writer hath noted, the seventh trumpet cannot declare the ruin of antichrist, unless the seven vials be poured out under it, and the seventh trumpet soundeth soon after the slaying of the witnesses, which I hope is past: I cannot with some others be yet of another mind, but that they have a few years since been slain, and are now upon their feet, and that we are in that cloud (though perhaps it may be yet darker) in which they shall ascend: doubtless they that think that several of the vials were poured out under the sixth trumpet, were grandly mistaken, and were dark as to that part of the sacred vision.

But those good men, who too boldly formerly, and of late time fixed upon this and that time or year, having been mistaken, hath, as I hinted, caused many to be secure, and others to turn scoffers, and say, as St. Peter intimates; "Where is the promise of his coming? Though the Lord is not slack concerning his promise," &c., 1 Pet. iii. 2. It greatly becometh us to consider of the great danger, which attends some people by means of those great disappointments they have seen, and by means our Lord seems as they think to tarry; the longer the night is the more oil we shall need, and greater patience must be exercised.

Quest. Why doth our Lord Christ seem to tarry?

Why Christ tarries. I Answ. It may seem to us in respect of the length of the time between Christ's first and second coming, and also because the primitive Christians thought his coming would have been very soon, even in their days: whereas there are more than sixteen hundred years since that run out, and yet they waited for his coming from heaven, and thought the time very near; though Paul laboured to inform them better, as you may see 2 Thess. ii. 1—3.

II. He may seem to us to tarry, by reason our days are short, and we reckon not as God doth, to whom a thousand years are but as one day, but it chiefly riseth from our ignorance of those mystical numbers left in God's word about the end of the wonders, and also of those many things that must and shall precede Christ's second glorious appearance, which were we informed in and about, we should not say our Lord tarries, or delays his coming.

III. It may also arise by reason of our impatience, or want of a due and quiet exercise thereof; he that believeth maketh not haste: also by reason of those disappointments some have laid us under, their times being not the time "the Father hath put in his own power," Act i. 7. Certainly the curiosity of some men in late days deserve rebuke with them of old, who said, "Lord, wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?" ver. 6. To whom the Lord answered, "It is not for you to know the times and seasons," &c. It is (as if he should say) reserved for some in after times: but I refer not here to the day nor year of Christ's personal coming, but to the beginning of Christ's kingdom, upon the sounding of the seventh trumpet.

IV. Christ may seem to tarry out of pity and compassion to poor sinners, his elect must be all called or brought in; he is not willing that any of them should perish, nor can they perish; therefore he for their sakes seems to tarry, for many of them amongst the Gentiles shall not be called, nor can they have the gospel preached to them, until Babylon is overthrown: for then will be the time, when multi-^{Isa. lx. 3, 4, 8, 22.} tudes in many nations and dark regions of the earth shall flow in to Jesus Christ, then, and not till then, shall the fulness of the Gentiles come in, and until that is done, blindness will remain upon the poor Jews, as Paul clearly showeth; but then they shall be that nation, that God hath foretold shall be born at once; "And so all Israel shall be saved," Rom. xi. 20. And this brings me to the next reason.

V. Because all things which God hath spoken in his holy word, (as antecedent to his coming) must be accomplished. (1.) The image power must be utterly broken "into pieces, and become like the chaff of the summer threshing floor," Dan. ii. 35, 44. (2.) And to this end the stone must smite the image upon the feet, which I daily wait to see. (3.) "The gospel of the kingdom must be preached to all the world, and then cometh the end," Matt. xxiv. 14; but not until then. (4.) "The little stone must become a great mountain, and fill the whole earth," Dan. ii. 35, 44. (5.) Whether the Jews shall be called before the coming of Christ, or not, is a doubt to some, but none to me; because when Christ comes his bride is completely ready, not one member of Christ's mystical body shall be wanting.

The Jews shall be converted before Christ comes.

VI. Therefore he seems to tarry, that all his elect may be brought home. The bride must have her full time allowed her in order to be ready; shall Christ be married to an imperfect bride? There shall not, my brethren, be one member of his mystical body in that day wanting or uncalled, or not actually united to the glorious head. "Let us be glad and rejoice, and give honour to him, for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready," Rev. xix. 7. It may be also in mercy to them who are already called, that they may be in an actual fitness for his coming, and also to try their faith and patience.

VII. It may be that so the harvest and vintage of the earth may be fully ripe; "Thrust in thy sharp sickle, and gather the clusters of the vine of the earth, for her grapes are fully ripe," Rev. xiv. 18. The children of Israel could not possess the land of Canaan, until the sins of the Amorites were fully ripe. Moreover, by Christ's tarrying and offering to the world so long a time, through the exercise of his patience, he will leave the world without excuse; for God came not upon the old world, before he gave warning; nor will he come to destroy this present world with fire, without giving them sufficient warning of it.

VIII. And lastly, our Lord may seem to tarry, to put all men, especially his own people, upon a constant and continual watch: "What I say to one, I say unto all, watch." We have time given us to get upon our watch tower, and enquire what of the night?

APPLICATION.

Sinners, take heed you are not found among the scoffers that the apostle speaks of; "Knowing this first, that there shall come in the last days scoffers, walking after their own lusts, and saying where is the promise of his coming, for since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation," 2 Pet. iii. 3, 4. Beware of harbouring any atheistical or unbelieving thoughts, and of growing bold in wickedness, because Christ seems to tarry or defer his coming; it is, you hear, for holy and wise ends: the old world would not believe what Noah told them, but were fearless of any such flood; "They builded, planted, married, and were given in marriage, until the flood came and took them away." They found the word of God spoken by his servant was true, though it was deferred an hundred and twenty years, though they believed him not, but reproached him. Many, it may be, believe not, (because they see all things remain as they were from the beginning) hence think that Christ will never come, and so this world never have an end; and the world to come never begin, but it will not be long before they will see themselves deceived.

2. What a dismal state will they be in, who are found not ready when the Lord Jesus cometh, better they had never been born. O look out, what signs have we of the last days upon us; how are many "eating and drinking, and smiting their fellow servants?" Such who pretend they are Christ's servants, his ministers, and yet live an abominable course of wickedness, and have been, (and long again to be) persecutors of their fellow servants, and say in their hearts, the Lord delays his coming: how many gluttonous, and drunken, and whoring preachers are in these days?

But to proceed.

"They all slumbered and slept."

What is meant by the virgins slumbering and sleeping. This slumbering and sleeping I showed you is not the sleep of death: by slumbering, &c., therefore I understand is meant a want of that due watchfulness which is required in all the disciples of Jesus Christ; they all fall into a drowsy and secure frame of spirit. To slumber is when a man is drowsy and ready to take a nap (as we commonly say.) But sleep is a binding up the senses; but pray note, the wise virgins do never so sleep, but their hearts are awake, they therefore sleep not as others do.

Doct. The wise virgins as well as the foolish are subject or liable to spiritual slumber and sleep: or, the saints may fall into a slumbering state.

1. I shall show from whence this cometh to pass.
2. Show you the signs of a sleepy frame of heart.
3. Discover the danger that attends such a state and condition:

What causeth the virgins to sleep and slumber. 1. Sleep or spiritual drowsiness riseth from those gross vapours which seize on and clog the soul; I mean in-bred corruption, or that body of sin and death; as gross vapours in the body incline to natural sleep: "The spirit indeed is willing, but the flesh is weak," Matt. xxvi. 41. The spirit sanctified by divine grace stirs up to constancy in duty, but the flesh, the sensitive part, is apt and prone to temptation and remissness, and is soon weary; and this part is too apt to overpower the soul in its spiritual activity and liveliness; besides, Satan hath great influences upon the fleshly part.

2. Slothfulness, or a careless and dull frame, hath a great tendency to produce sleep, as Solomon saith, "Slothfulness casteth into a deep sleep," Prov. xix. 15. When a man refuseth to labour or is idle, gross vapours gather and becloud the senses, and hold us as prisoners for awhile; and so it is with the soul, when a Christian is idle or of a slothful disposition, the spiritual senses are soon darkened or beclouded, and the soul (for some time) is as it were a prisoner.

3. Wearisomeness; Solomon saith, "The sleep of a labouring man is sweet;" that is, when he is tired out or weary at his work. Some Christians are too apt to be weary and to faint in their minds, especially when they see little comes in, while they labour, they hear, read, and pray, but profit little, gather hardly any strength or comfort, and so are ready to faint and be weary, and to drop asleep or fall into a drowsy and indifferent frame of heart.

4. A dark and cloudy day, (we find by experience) is very ready to put us into a drowsy frame: so a dark time or dispensation of God's providence under which we may be exercised, is very apt to cause us to fall into spiritual drowsiness, if not to fall asleep; we may perceive this is so in the case of the disciples of our Lord, upon his crucifixion; it was in such a dark and cloudy day that they were ready all to fall asleep. And from hence one said, "I go a fishing," they were ready to give up all their hope, and cease being fishers of men any more, but thought to go to their old trade.

5. An apprehension that it is a great while to-day. Though a man waits for the morning, yet if he thinks it is not midnight, he lays himself down again to sleep; so a Christian that apprehends it will be a great while before Christ will come, or death will come, tends to cause sleep, or inclines him to give way to slumber through the temptations of Satan. What need I (saith he) to be so much concerned? my state is good, and I shall have time enough to set in order what is yet wanting, and provide for the coming of Jesus Christ; such that apprehend the night almost gone, and the day approacheth, ought to rise and look out, but I perceive no such thing. I may have many days on earth, and it will be hard to hold the pace I have hitherto run; I may slack or abate a little in that heat and zeal I have showed.

6. Moreover, when a man apprehends no danger, or hath no fear seizing on him of approaching evil, when he is in bed, or inclined to drowsiness, he from thence is apt to give way to it; he fears no thieves breaking in upon him, nor hears the cry of fire, nor of amazing providences. Thus many poor Christians seem secure, and are not sensible they are both beset with thieves, nor perceive the danger and dismal hour they are in, though some talk of amazing judgments and providences very near, but they see no cause to believe or fear any such things, and so give way to a slothful and sleepy frame of spirit, pursuing the world, and loving their ease. Jacob's sleep departed from him, for fear his sheep should come to harm, Gen. xxxi. 40. Some men know not what rich treasure they are entrusted with, and so fear not the enemy of their souls.

7. Some distempers or diseases which] scize upon the body, causeth an unusual sleepiness, so that all the means made use of, can hardly prevent the sleeping and dozing of such persons.

So, my brethren, a spiritual lethargy, a cold earthly distemper, seizeth on too many professors, by which means their spiritual senses seem much gone, and excessive drowsiness overtaketh them to such a degree, that nothing can awaken them; no, neither the word of God, the reproofs of his ministers, the threatening judgments that draw near, nor the secret rebukes and checks of their own consciences, though they may perceive their love to Christ, to religion, to the church, to ministers, and to the people of God, is much abated.

8. Surfeiting and drunkenness causeth immoderate sleep, or an excessive use of the creature. What a sleepy frame was Lot in by means of drinking too much wine, and how sad was the effects of it! Our Lord intimates that by surfeiting and Luke xii. 45. drunkenness, many professors in the last days would fall asleep, and put the day of his coming afar off. Some are drunk with riches, others with earthly pleasures, and others with errors, and so are giddy-headed, and by such means drop asleep: "They stagger, but not with strong drink," Isa. xxix. 9, 10; God hath left them to delusions, and poured upon them the spirit of deep sleep. How doth our Saviour give us warning against all excesses. "Take heed to yourselves, lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting and drunkenness, and the cares of this life, and so that day come upon you unawares," Luke xxi. 34.

9. Experience shows, that a sleepy company a man may be among, tends to cause him to fall asleep also. So loose, carnal, and sleepy professors, with whom a lively Christian may walk, and daily converse, is too subject to have ill effects upon him: with the froward we learn frowardness.

10. Long watching tends to produce inordinate sleeping. These virgins had watched long, looking and waiting for the Bridegroom, but he tarrying, or not coming when they expected he would, they all fell asleep, or into a slumbering frame of heart, to which I might add, the withdrawing of the quickening influences of the Holy Spirit; if the Spirit be grieved, and withholds his quickening operations, how soon do poor Christians fall asleep!

Secondly, I shall give you some signs of a sleepy and slumbering frame of heart.

The signs of a sleepy frame of spirit.

1. When a man cannot hear, though one calls aloud unto him, it may be a sign he is asleep.

So when a Christian cannot hear the voice of the word, or not discern God's voice, or that it is Christ that calls him, it may be a sign that he is asleep, or in a sleepy frame. Thus it was with Samuel: "Samuel was laid down to sleep, and the Lord called, Samuel: and he ran to Eli, and said, here am I," 1 Sam. iii. 3, 4. The Lord called him again, but he knew not that it was the Lord that called him. So many do not know or discern the voice of God (when they hear the word) from the voice of the poor minister; certainly such who hear the word as if it was only the word of man, and not the word of God, are asleep; or if they cannot discern the word is spoken to them, but rather think it concerns such or such persons, and that they are not concerned in it, it may be a sign they are in a sleepy, or in an insensible frame of heart. Or if they cannot hear the voice of the Spirit, nor of their own consciences, nor the voice that is in the rod, slumber hath taken hold of them.

2. Dreaming is a sign a person is asleep. Some weep in their sleep who have cause to rejoice, and others laugh who have cause (perhaps) to cry; and some dream they eat, and dream they drink, when it is no such thing. So many professors think their state is very good, but alas they are asleep, and do but dream. Some mourn and are ready to conclude that their condition is very bad, when it may be very good: they do but dream, it is a sign they are in a sleepy or insensible condition. Also others doubt not but that they are believers; they presume Christ is theirs, having great confidence, and doubt not; sin troubles them not; they ask not for pardon, but it is but a dream: "He that hath a dream, let him tell a dream; and he that hath my word, let him speak my word faithfully: what is the chaff to the wheat, saith the Lord," Jer. xxiii. 28. The doctrine some preach, and others believe, is but a dream, and none of the word of God: it is "As when a hungry man dreameth, and behold he eateth; but when he awaketh, his soul is empty," &c., Isa. xxix. 8.

3. Men who are asleep neither know their state or dangers, but are secure in a storm, as Jonas, who was fallen asleep when the ship was ready to sink to the bottom. So such professors who know not their present state and condition, know not whether Christ be theirs or not, or that Christ is in them or not, or whether they are true believers or not, certainly are asleep, or insensible; perhaps they are ready to drop down to hell, but doubt not but they are true believers; the foolish virgins who fell asleep, knew not the danger they were in.

4. Such that are asleep know not what is done to them, as Adam when he was in that, deep sleep, as also Sampson when he was asleep; many professors know not what God is doing in them, for them, with them, nor against them in the way of his providences; this argues they are asleep.

5. A person that is asleep forgets his business, or the work he was about, or ought to be exercised in; so a secure professor, or one spiritually asleep forgets the Lord, his works, his will, and what he ought to do also. Take a believer awake, and then he can remember the Lord, his covenant and his works, and what it is the Lord commands him to do.

6. A person asleep fears no evil, until it comes upon him; so a sleepy professor foresees no evil, fears no danger, like the old world in the days of Noah, and the people of Sodom, until the flood came upon one, and fire and brimstone from heaven upon the other. Job speaks of some that "their houses are free from fear," Job xxi. 9.

7. In sleep the senses are not exercised, the eyes sees not, the ear hears not, the mouth tasteth not; so a person spiritually asleep is very insensible; his spiritual senses are stupified, and motion also ceaseth.

The difference between the sleeping of a hypocrite and a true Christian.

But spiritual slumber greatly differs from deep sleep.

1. Hypocrites are asleep, but a true Christian though he is said to sleep, yet it is but a slumber comparatively to the sleeping of the other; true Christians may lose the sense of God's love, yet they dread to sin against him.

2. A wicked man lays himself down to sleep, but though a true Christian sleeps and slumbers, yet he strives against it, he loves not sleep, though it overcomes him, yet he strives to shake off his drowsy frame.

3. A true believer is soon awakened; that means will awaken him, that will not, cannot awaken a wicked man; for nothing less than almighty power can do it, (for they sleep the sleep of death); indeed the foolish virgins were never thoroughly awakened, but only so far as to be convinced that their state was bad, and that their lamps were gone out.

4. Such that are in a deep sleep, all their senses are bound up, or they are utterly insensible; and thus it is with hypocrites and wicked men, their hearts are asleep; but as I said, (and as the spouse said) though a true believer sleeps, yet his heart is awake.

5. Slumbering denotes an indisposition of the soul, or a short cessation of action; a godly man may be under deadness, and omit his duty for a short time, through the weakness of the flesh, and Satan's temptations; but an hypocrite is utterly destitute of any principle of activity, to perform any true spiritual acts of obedience unto God.

But to proceed.

Thirdly, I shall show you the danger of a sleepy state, or frame of heart.

1. Such cannot see how to escape danger, or are out of a present capacity to prevent the evils that may be near or just coming upon them.

2. They that are asleep lie open to the enemy; a weak person may destroy a strong man, a great champion, when he is asleep, as Jael slew Sisera when he was asleep, by driving a nail through his temples. O then what need have we to keep ourselves awake, who have powerful enemies, that watch an opportunity to destroy us. We may soon lose our strength (though not our lives) as Sampson did, if we once fall asleep, Jude iv. 21.

3. Our sleeping time is that season Satan waits for, for if he can but catch us napping, he will fall upon us and wound us be sure. It is well he cannot murder our souls, it is not whom he would, but whom he may, that he devours.

4. It was while men slept the devil sowed his evil seed; great part of the wrong and mischief the churches and our souls sustain, is by means of our giving too much way to sleeping and slumbering.

5. Our danger is very great by means of our slumbering, by reason Satan never sleeps, he is always awake, and is a very vigilant enemy; nay, and know also, this world is full of devils, who go to and fro to see who they can find off their watch.

6. Such that are in a sleepy and slumbering condition are in danger to be sore amazed and dreadfully affrightened, when awakened, by a sudden outcry, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh!" How was the jailor amazed, when by an earthquake he was awakened out of sleep: and so the foolish virgins at the midnight cry will be greatly terrified.

7. They that sleep in harvest, lose their gathering time; and so are in danger of losing their souls for ever, besides the day of death, or the day of Christ's coming, will come upon them unawares.

APPLICATION.

I. Let us bewail and lament over the present generation of professors, and Lament.
mourn over ourselves. O into what a drowsy and sleepy age are we fallen! are not all the virgins now asleep, or in a slumbering frame of heart, and yet know not but the midnight cry is very near? Remember Christ's words, "What, can ye not watch with me one hour?"

II. Yet this may inform us of a vast difference there is between the sleeping Inform.
of the wise and foolish virgins.

1. The wise sleep and slumber in a good state; they are converted persons; they have oil in their vessels, though their lamps want trimming: but the foolish sleep in a fearful state; they have no grace, no oil in their vessels.

2. The wise made good use of their time, the proper season to provide themselves; but the foolish will not seek oil until it is too late.

3. The wise through Satan's temptations fell into a sleepy and slumbering frame, but their great work was done; but the foolish fell asleep before any of their work was begun.

4. The sleeping of the wise is dishonourable unto Christ, and hurtful to themselves, it is the wounding of their souls; but the sleeping of the foolish will be to the utter and eternal undoing of their souls.

III. Exhort. O be exhorted to arouse, let us cast off sleep from our eyes; Exhortation.
you that are believers, awake. For,

MOTIVES.

1. Consider, what pains God took to awake you and I out of our former sleep, that sleep of spiritual death: did he not send his Son from heaven to awaken us, and sent his word and Spirit to this end also; was it not the effects of infinite love, wisdom, and power! O let us then strive to be in a wakeful frame.

2. Our enemy is upon us, as it was said to Sampson, so it may be said to every one of us.

3. Consider, Jesus Christ is come to visit us, to feed and feast us; lo, he is now at our doors and knocks, and shall any of us say, I sleep, as the spouse did, so may he withdraw and be gone, and we may perhaps seek him, but find him not.

4. You are the children of the day. "They that sleep, sleep in the night," 1 Thess. v. 7. You profess yourselves to be awake, and freed from the gross ignorance of the children of darkness, you see the evil of the inordinate love of this world; are you overcome with surfeiting and drunkenness, and with the cares of this life?

5. What great things do we look for? Is not the thought of this enough to stir us up to watchfulness? And are we not also bid "to watch and pray always, that we may escape all those things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of man?" Luke xxi. 36.

6. Consider, how many will be found asleep, and unprepared when the Lord comes; nay, how many foolish virgins there will be in those latter days, who fall asleep without oil in their lamps, and whose lamps also go out.

IV. Admiration. Let us wonder at the patience, forbearance, and long-suf- Admiration.
fering of God! O how good and gracious is he in that he comes not forth in his wrath, to take vengeance upon sinners, though he is, and hath been so longed provoked! see what sparing mercy he shows to the world for his elect's sake; had he not left us a very small remnant, we had been made as Sodom, before this day; there are also many yet not called, but when once all his elect are brought in, he will stay not one moment longer.

V. It may be of use also by way of caution; the Bridegroom seems to Caution.
tarry after the time some have spoken of, for doing his great and wonderful works: let none prefix times any more, till the vision speaks more plainly, since all that have presumed so to do, have been mistaken. The time of the end of the wonders is not fully known; the time is set, but perhaps not yet revealed to any; though it is no doubt very near, and God may give to some more light into those things, than many others have at present; and let none condemn those who search into the sacred oracles, and say, when will be the end of wonders? For this very thing was prophesied of, (i. e.,) that one saint shall thus say unto another saint, but the words are closed up and sealed till the time of the end," Dan. xii. 9.

VI. We may take an encouragement in this, Christ will come, believe this Encourage.
doubt not of this; "Behold I come quickly," &c., Rev. xxii. 12. He comes, he comes, and that too suddenly, and will surprise the world, but that day shall not come upon believers as a thief, a biessed day it will be to them.

Terror. VII. Terror; but woe to the wicked, to all hypocrites and unbelievers, for he will "come in flaming fire to take vengeance on all that know not God, and who obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ," &c., 2 Thess. i. 8. And woe to such that say in their hearts, the Lord delays his coming, "he will cut them in sunder, and appoint them their portion with hypocrites, and unbelievers, there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth," Matt. xxiv. 50, 51.

VIII. Let us all make provision for Christ's coming.

1. Get oil in your vessels; let us see we have sincere love to Jesus Christ.
2. Let us trim our lamps, and awake out of sleep to do this.
3. Let our lights be clearly burning.
4. Every one be full of great expectation.
5. And beware of the evils of these latter days, in which dangerous principles and corrupt practices do abound; and many having their hearts set inordinately upon the things of the world.

SERMON XXII.

And at midnight there was a cry made, behold the bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him.—Matt. xxv. 6.

IN these words we have these several parts.

1. An act done; there was a cry made.
2. The matter of the cry; "the bridegroom cometh."
3. The time when, viz., "at midnight."
4. Attendance and notice required; "Behold," &c.
- Take notice of it, it is a matter of the highest moment.
5. Counsel, or a call, "Go ye out to meet him."
6. The subjects required thus to go forth [ye] ye wise and foolish virgins, or all that makes a profession of the gospel.

Doct. That a little before Christ's second coming, notice will be given of it, or there shall be an alarm of his near approaching or glorious appearance.

In speaking to this proposition, I shall

1. By way of premise lay down two or three explanatory propositions.
2. Show what may be meant by this cry, and what a kind of cry it will be.
3. Why Christ will give warning of his coming.
4. Show why called a midnight cry.

Explanatory propositions. Propos. 1. That though Christ by his word gives warning, and shows fully that he will come again the second time, yet he will some other way alarm his people, or give notice of his near approaching: then shall appear the sign of the Son of man.

Propos. 2. That there will be some short distance of time between the midnight cry, and our Lord's visible personal appearance. And this city is the harbinger or forerunner of his coming, to give warning to the virgins to trim their lamps, and to be ready.

Propos. 3. That this cry will awaken all, both the wise and the foolish, or sincere Christians and hypocrites.

Secondly. Show what may be meant by this cry.

1. It may (as I conceive) refer to some mighty impression upon the hearts of all professors, especially upon the spirits of faithful ministers, of Christ's sudden coming; for who are capable at midnight to wake a city, or give warning, but the Watchman? Ministers are called watchmen: "Son of man, I have made thee a watchman—If therefore thou givest warning," &c. Ezek. iii. 17. "I have set watchmen upon the walls of Jerusalem," Isa. lxii. 6. And these watchmen tell what of the night it is: "Watchman, what of the night? Watchman, what of the night?" &c. Isa. xxi. 11.

2. Possibly it may be some amazing dispensation of God's providence to rouse all secure professors. Perhaps the earthquake mentioned, Rev. xi. It will doubtless be some remarkable event, that precedes the coming of our Lord.

3. May be it will be that providence that makes way for the fall of Babylon, and the universal preaching of the gospel: I presume none yet know directly what it will be.

Thirdly. Why Christ gives warning of his coming in some remarkable manner?

I. Because of the sublime majesty and glory of his person; shall an earthly king notice his near approaching or coming to his people from the awfulness of his person; and shall not Jesus Christ do it much more? The appearance of our Lord will be most glorious, and therefore long warning is given of it in the word and by his ministers, but at last more loud warning, signified by a cry.

II. Because such wonderful things depend, as the effect of his coming the second time; it is matter, my brethren, of the highest moment or concernment.

1. As the raising of the dead, for just at his personal appearance, all that sleep in Jesus shall be raised, and all believers that are alive, shall be changed in a moment, or twinkling of an eye, and their bodies shall be fashioned like unto Christ's glorious body.

2. The passing away, dissolving or burning up the heavens and the earth that now are, so this will be one of the effects of his coming; but the day of the Lord will come, as a thief in the night, in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, and the earth and the things that are therein shall be burned up," 2. Pet. iii. 10.

3. The utter and final overthrow of Satan's kingdom, and the settling and establishment of the kingdom of our Lord in its highest glory.

4. The final cessation of the ministration of the gospel, or offers and means of grace to the world; then it will be said, "Let him that is filthy be filthy still, and he that is holy be holy still," Rev. xxii. 11. Such that are filthy and unjust shall even so remain, and they that are righteous shall arrive to no further degree of inherent holiness.

5. The glorious manifestation of the children of God, and the celebration of the marriage of the lamb—and many other amazing things.

III. Jesus Christ will give warning by such a cry, because of that slumbering and sleepy state of the virgins just before; but this cry will awaken them with a witness; it may be a voice of some Boanerges, or a son of thunder.

IV. To leave all formal and hypocritical professors without excuse; for should not the Lord give warning a little time before his coming, (since just at his appearance he will come as a thief very suddenly); the wicked might pretend that he dealt severely with them, they having not had warning of his coming, and it may be that his own elect ones may be every way actually fitted and prepared for that day.

Fourthly. Why it is called a midnight cry.

1. It may be so called, because midnight is a time of great darkness; so this cry will be in such an hour when the people will be in a cloud of thick darkness, and not know what time of the night it is until they hear this cry.

2. Midnight is a time when all generally are asleep, and very secure; and perhaps it may be called the midnight cry, because just at that time all the people of God will be in a secure state, or almost all asleep.

3. Because at midnight every thing seems to be still, and no noise in the street, neither doth fear possess the mind of people; they are in their beds, and seem to be in safety.

4. It may be called the midnight cry in respect of the effects of it, for like as a dismal cry at midnight is very amazing, people being (as it were) frightened out of their sleep; so this cry will have much like effects upon the sleepy virgins.

5. Christ may call it a cry at midnight, to excite and stir us all up to watch, and not to sleep or be secure in a night of darkness, or in a dark and gloomy season.

APPLICATION.

1. See the great love and goodness of God to his saints; he will awaken them, that they may prepare themselves, and be ready for Christ's coming.

2. This may teach us who live in these latter days, to take heed that we fall not asleep, and to consider how much better it is to be awakened if we are fallen into a drowsy frame by a sweet still voice, than to stay till the midnight cry is heard; for is it not terrible to be awakened with the cry of fire, fire, fire? O what tremblings of heart doth attend such a cry in the street at midnight?

3. Consider also how near this cry may be, nay, is it not begun already? though it will rise higher, or be much louder; for no doubt but it will be a very loud cry, inasmuch as it does awaken the very foolish virgins, who no doubt will be fast asleep till then, and also it will be an amazing cry, though to wise and sincere professors a very gracious and merciful cry.

4. When you hear at any time a cry at midnight, think of this cry, and enquire also what time of the night it is now; I mean, observe well the signs of the times.

5. This no doubt is that time, when the sinners in Sion will be afraid, and fearfulness surprise the heart of the hypocrites; fear then will seize them.

“Go ye out to meet him.”

Note from hence, that the design of God in causing this cry, is to call professors up to prepare to meet the Bridegroom.

“Then all those virgins arose and trimmed their lamps.”

Observe, that as these words show they had been all asleep, so it shows that they were not awakened until this cry was heard; but this voice will quicken them. Believers may be drowsy, and their faith may be low, and their love be much decayed, and their lights burn also very dim, and ready to go out. O how apt and liable are the saints to lose their life, strength, and vigour, or that heat of zeal which sometime they had.

Note also, a child of God may have his lamp to trim, when he hath the greatest need of it; or that he may be under the greatest decay, when he should have obtained the greatest growth in grace, in faith, and holiness; he may have faith, but it is weak, and not in exercise, or though he believes, yet he may not have the joy of faith. Moreover, observe, that though believers' lamps may want trimming, yet they are not gone out; they do burn, though they give not a clear light.

Quest. What is meant by trimming of their lamps?

Ans. It may signify their supplying their lamps with oil; this expositors conclude is one thing which is hereby intended. In trimming the lamp (saith one) there is usually a supply of oil, if it want it, as when it hath burned long it must be supplied: the oil being spent, it will not live except it be supplied. So the wise virgins trimming their lamps, is their fetching more grace by fresh acts of faith and prayer to that fulness of grace that is in Jesus Christ, perceiving their oil almost all spent.

2. It may also denote the stirring up of the grace which remaineth in their lamps: “Stir up the gift that is in thee,” &c. 2 Tim i. 6. That so their conversation may shine in grace and holiness.

3. The trimming the lamp is also the raising the wick, it being burned low. A poor believer may be in such a declining condition, that his graces and spirit also may be low, and therefore must be raised by a more lively exercise of faith in Jesus Christ.

4. Moreover, the trimming of the lamp denotes the cleansing of it, and the taking off the dead ashes that hinders the light, or prevents its burning so clearly as otherwise it would. Now what is this, but the putting away of all iniquity by faith and unfeigned repentance: our conversation or lamp of profession is subject to gather filth, and the dead ashes of corruption hinders oft-times the shinings of our lives, to the glory of God. Unbelief, deadness, earthliness, and self-confidence, are like to a thief in the candle, or dead ashes in the wick of a lamp, and therefore must be snuffed by mortification, lest the Spirit of God be grieved and depart from us, as to his quickening and comforting influences.

APPLICATION.

Let these things, this cry, stir us all up to this duty, i. e., to trim our lamps: are not we in a slumbering frame of heart, and do not our lamps need trimming? besides, is not the Bridegroom ready to appear?

MOTIVES.

1. Consider, though the midnight cry may not yet be heard, yet God uses means to awaken you; he hath stirred me up to cry unto you, and call aloud to you to this end: O pray that God would restore your souls, quicken you in his ways, Ps. xxiii. 3.

2. Consider, that until our lamps are better trimmed, they will not burn clear, that others may see our good works, and glorify our Father which is in heaven.

3. Until then we may not enjoy the light of joy, peace, and comfort in our own souls, nor be of that use and benefit unto others, nor beautify our holy profession.

4. Until then we shall not be fit nor be prepared for death, nor for the coming of the Lord. Besides, the night is far spent, and the day is at hand, therefore we should “Cast off all the unfruitful works of darkness, and put on the armour of light,” Rom. xiii. 12, 13.

But I shall proceed to another proposition.

Doct. That though a sincere Christian may fall into a sleepy frame of heart, yet he shall awake, and shall not sleep the sleep of death: or, the day of Christ shall not find them asleep. I shall

1. Premise one or two things touching the happiness of a true believer's state, though in a sleepy frame.

2. Show from whence it is (or comes to pass) that he shall awake.

A true believer's state is always good and safe.

A believer is always in a good state, they may be in an ill frame.

1. Because he is a child of God, a son of God, and he cannot lose that relation, and from hence an heir of heaven. "If children then heirs, heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ."

2. A true believer (it follows from hence) is always in a state of union with Christ, though he may not know it, and the bonds of this union cannot be broke; it is an indissoluble union.

3. He is ever in a justified state, and all his sins (as to vindictive justice) are forgiven for ever, there being "No condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus," Rom viii. 1; them that he justifies he also glorifies.

II. From hence it also follows, that no true believer can finally and totally fall away; though the foolish virgins sleep and finally perish, yet the wise, whatsoever sleep or slumber they fall into, yet can never perish.

No true believer can finally fall and perish.

Yet believers may fall foully, and lose the sense of God's love, and be deserted, and be almost ready utterly to despair and give up their hope. For thus it was with Heman: also Job saith, that "His hope was perished," Psal lxxxviii. A godly man, my brethren, may sin away his joy, peace, and comfort; and all lively acts of faith may cease.

He may also for a short time through Satan's temptations falter in his profession, and neglect his duty, so that his lamp may grow very dim, hardly burn at all.

Nay, and when Christ comes to give them a gracious visit, they may be (as the spouse was) asleep: "I am come into my garden, my sister, my spouse," Cant. v. 1. But what an ill frame was she in! "I sleep, but my heart waketh, it is the voice of my Beloved that knocketh, saying, open to me, my sister, my spouse," &c., nay, and gracious persons may let Christ wait long before they arise to open to him. "For my head is wet with dew, and my locks with the drops of the night." Christ waits long, knocks hard, and calls aloud at their door, and yet they arise not, no not until he is withdrawn and is gone. "I rose to open to my beloved, but my beloved had withdrawn himself and was gone; I sought him, but I found him not," ver. 5.

They may, moreover, sleep and not awake, until some amazing providence comes upon them, which is here signified by the midnight cry.

Secondly, I shall show you from whence it is, or cometh to pass, that believers may, and sometimes do, fall into such a sleepy frame.

1. Certainly, it riseth from that corrupt part that is in them, I mean the body of sin.

From whence it comes to pass that believers fall into a sleepy frame.

2. From Satan's temptations. "I have put off my coat, how shall I put it on? I have washed my feet, how shall I defile them?" Cant. v. 3. They perceive their state is good, and their work is done, and so the devil gets advantages against them, to neglect their indispensable duties.

3. It may also be occasioned by means of the snares and allurements of this world. O how ready are we to have our hearts too much run out to earthly things. "All seek their own, not the things that are Jesus Christ's."

4. It may likewise come upon them, as you heard, through the Bridegroom's tarrying, or by reason of their long watching; but having spoken to this already, I shall say no more to it now.

Thirdly, why shall true believers awake out of their sleepy and slumbering frame?

Ans. 1. Because they have a principle of spiritual life in them; whilst life is in a man, though he be asleep, there is ground enough to believe he will awake; but if a man falls asleep and his life is gone, there is no hope of his being awakened. The Spirit of God remains in believers for ever, they have a principle of eternal life in them.

Why believers shall be wakened out of sleep.

2. Because "the path of the just is as the shining light, that shines more and more unto the perfect day," Prov. iv. 18. Though their path may sometimes seem dark, yet that darkness shall vanish, his leaf shall not wither; he shall be green, and flourishing in his profession; though it may seem to fade for a short time.

3. Because of the nature of that union they have with Jesus Christ; "Because I live, ye shall live also," John xiv. 19. Union with Christ is as a spring that feeds or fills their vessels and lamps with fresh oil, as the branches receive sap from the root, by which means they grow, flourish, and bring forth fruit.

4. Because of that great love of God to them, the love God hath to them will not suffer them to sleep long before he in a gracious manner awakens them; besides his promise is, that he will return again and revive them: "They shall revive as the corn," Hos. xiv. 7. "He will revive the hearts of the humble, and the spirits of the contrite ones," Isa. lvii. 15. Such that we love, we will not suffer to sleep in a dangerous hour, to their utter ruin, if we can awake them; now the love of God to his saints, exceeds our love to any dear friend, and he is able to awaken and quicken his people.

5. Because their Head never sleeps; "He that keepeth Israel doth neither sleep nor slumber." In this consisteth the safety of believers, and from hence the soul shall be awakened both from a dead frame in respect of spirits and their bodies also at the last day.

APPLICATION.

1. This discovers the great difference that there is between the state of the wise and foolish virgins.

2. Let believers be exhorted to holy watchfulness.

1. Because otherwise the word of God and the means of grace may be ineffectual to you, and you may lose much sweet comfort by Christ's gracious visits, and be brought under many fears and doubts about your state.

2. Though your state is good, yet you may not be actually ready to meet the Bridegroom.

3. Consider what love you had to Christ when you first believed. "I remember the love of thine espousals, when thou wentest after me in the wilderness," Jer. ii. 2, &c. Nothing is more offensive and grievous to Jesus Christ, than to see his people cool in their love to him. "Yet nevertheless I have somewhat against thee, because thou hast left thy first love. Remember therefore from whence thou art fallen, and repent, and do thy first works," Rev. ii. 4, 5, &c. Take holy Paul's advice: "But call to remembrance the former days, in which after you were illuminated, you suffered a great fight of afflictions," Heb. x. 32.

4. Consider that Christ's love is ever the same; he never grows cold in his affections to his spouse, and dear saints, nor hath he given to us any cause to decline in our love to him: "Have I been a barren wilderness to Israel, or a land of darkness?" Jer. ii. 31.

Take two or three directions.

Direction to a wakeful frame. 1. Strengthen that which remains that is ready to die; do not lose the little faith, love, zeal, and resolution you have, but labour after an addition of every grace.

2. Be restless in your spirits until you find Christ again, if he be withdrawn: tell him you are sick of love; let it appear that you are troubled and do mourn in his absence. Thus it was with David; "Thou hidest thy face, and I was troubled;" labour after poverty of spirit.

3. Labour to die to the things of this life; take heed of surfeiting and drunkenness, get loose in your affections to all perishing things; beware of the cares of the world and the deceitfulness of riches; know ye not that ye are pilgrims on earth, and are travelling to another country?

4. Be much in prayer, and watch therein. "Pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of Man," Luke xxi. 36. Let us watch our hearts, watch our tongues, watch our eyes, and watch our whole conversation; our lamps also must be watched, lest they grow dim, or oil fails. "Let your loins be girt, and your lamps burning." Strive to be much in secret prayer, closet prayer, and see how your hearts are affected to that.

5. Think much upon another world, contemplate on death, and on the day of judgment, and the coming of Christ: consider how short and uncertain life is; our days are but as a shadow, or as a vapour that flies away.

6. Improve all those providences of God under which you are exercised; observe God in all his dispensations, Satan in all his temptations, and your own hearts in all their inclinations; strive to discern the voice of God from the voice of Satan, and know that God tries us for approbation, but Satan for our destruction; God sets our sins before us to humble us, but Satan to ruin us by slavish fear and unbelief.

7. Delight in the company of the wise, and wakeful Christians, and avoid conversing or keeping company with loose and carnal professors, much more with the profane and ungodly, who condemn all religion and godliness.

8. Receive reproof kindly, especially from your minister, who is commanded to rebuke some (as occasion may be) sharply. "Let the righteous smite me, it shall not break my head," saith David. If you hate him that reproves in the gate, it is a sign your hearts are not right with God; "Rebuke a wise man, and he will love thee," Prov. ix. 8.

9. Look every day to your lamps; the lamps of the sanctuary were to be dressed every day ; “ He dressed them, and made them ready every morning,” Exod. xxx. 7. The care of trimming our lamps, must be our business morning and evening.

10. Take heed ye do not grieve the Holy Spirit by slighting his motions, nor by undervaluing his work and operations (which I fear they do, who affirm the state of the elect is as good before grace, before effectual calling as after); do not grieve the Spirit by adhering to Satan, and by siding in with unbelieving thoughts, nor by yielding to any sin, nor by ascribing that to yourselves which belongs to the blessed Spirit.

“ Then all those virgins arose,” &c.

Quest. What is meant by the foolish virgins arising, and trimming their lamps ?

Ans. Their arising denotes, that they were more apprehensive of their danger than they were before ; they were altogether so senseless as formerly they were ; also it may signify that they reformed their lives, and became more seemingly devout and pious, and were oftener in their duties ; may be now they pray, and hear the word with greater diligence ; their consciences being awakened : note from hence,

What the rising of the virgins may denote.

Doct. An awakened conscience will put wicked men and hypocrites upon doing somewhat in reforming their ways.

But alas, they think by this means to get into a good state, as well as into a good frame. The foolish virgins do it, to get a title to heaven, the wise to get a meetness for heaven ; the foolish think by repentance and reformation of life to be saved.

“ And the foolish said unto the wise, give us of your oil, for our lamps are gone out,” ver. 8.

Observe, Doct. Foolish virgins, or hypocrites, may see their want of grace.

Quest. From whence is it that hypocrites may see the want of grace ?

Ans. Their sense of want of grace ariseth from the inward horror of their heart, or sight and sense of their woful condition ; it is not from the sense of the evil of sin, but of the misery which they fear is near.

2. It is not from the sense of the worth of grace in itself, in respect of the sanctifying virtue of it, but thinking thereby they may be saved ; hypocrites may desire grace as a bridge to carry them to heaven, but it is not that they may glorify God, and render the name of Christ as sweet odour ; it is indeed for their own sakes, not from love to God, but love to themselves.

3. It is rather a passive sense than an active inquiry of their hearts ; when distress and want comes, fools will see their folly ; like as some careless traders, who cast not up their books, but when want and poverty comes upon them, are perplexed ; an arrest of conscience terrifies these foolish ones.

4. These see their wretched state, but not the sinfulness of their former neglect and remissness ; it is a natural sense, not a spiritual grace, makes a man spiritually poor ; but they that never had it, cannot be affected for the simple want of it ; it is only from the light of common convictions, and not from saving illuminations, it flows not from those shining beams of the Sun of righteousness.

5. It is from a sense only of the want of oil in their lamps, not for the want of it in their vessels. They see the want of a holy life, but not of Christ, and a changed heart ; they are more troubled for the guilt of sin than for the filth and pollution thereof ; oil in the lamp commends us to men, but oil in our vessels, (i. e.) in our hearts, commends us to God. David wanted a new heart ; “ Create in me a clean heart,” Psal. li. 5 ; and Paul cries out of the body of sin and death. An hypocrite may have an awakened conscience, but not a renewed mind.

6. It is a sense of the want of oil at last, nay, when it was too late, and now they mourn, as Solomon saith, Prov. v. 11—14, “ And thou mourn at last, when thy flesh and thy body is consumed, and say how have I hated instruction, and my heart despised reproof, and have not obeyed the voice of my teachers, nor inclined mine ear to them that instructed me ; I was almost in all evil in the midst of the congregation,” No doubt but Esau might at last see his folly in selling his birthright for a mess of pottage, but could not then obtain the blessing, though he sought it with tears, Heb. xii. 16, 17.

Quest. From whence is it that the foolish virgins came no sooner to see their want and woful condition ?

1. Ausw. They a long time deceived themselves. Saul held out pretty well until Samuel died, and may be thought his state good, but afterwards he saw God was departed from him : self love is a great deceiver.

2. The good opinions the wise virgins had of them, might partly deceive them ; the approbation of godly Christians go a great way with some persons ; they indeed prefer that above the approbation of God.

3. It may be from the evil and depths of deceit that is in their own hearts ; that hath the quickest sight, the most piercing eye, may not soon penetrate into the dark corners of his own heart : " Who (saith David) knows his errors ? " Psal. xix. 12.

4. They might see it no sooner from their great remissness, in not searching and proving themselves. That which lies deep, or is hid, must be searched ; this wisdom the foolish virgins wanted. A true child of God thinks he can never thoroughly or sufficiently search his own heart and life, and therefore cries out, " Search me, O God, and know my heart, try me, and know my thoughts, and see if there be any evil way in me," Psal. cxxxix. 28 ; though he himself was not an idle searcher : " I communed with mine own heart, and my spirit made a diligent search," Psal. lxxvii. 6. But this he saw was not sufficient, therefore desired the Lord also to search him, but this wisdom the foolish virgins had not.

5. No doubt it was also partly from the subtilty of Satan, all the devil's endeavours are to keep sinners ignorant of their state and condition ; one while he persuades the poor deluded wretch his state is good, but when he sees the sinner's eyes are a little opened, he persuades them it is too late, or there is no cure, or else directs them to false and indirect ways to obtain it. And as the devil strives to keep an unsound professor ignorant, that he may not be saved, so he endeavours to keep a sincere person ignorant of his condition, that he may hinder him of the joy of salvation, or spoil all his peace and comfort.

6. It may arise from that similitude or seeming likeness there is between a form of godliness and the power thereof, or between convictions of natural conscience and true evangelical illuminations ; or between true faith and counterfeit faith, and betwixt reformation and regeneration. Similitude (saith one) is the mother of mistakes. Bristol stones seem like true pearl, and steel cut like diamonds appear like true diamonds. A limner can draw very much like the life, or him whose face it represents.

7. It may be occasioned through the ignorance and blindness of some teachers, whose ministry they may sometimes attend to lead men out to rest upon a presumptuous faith, and will not allow their hearers to try themselves by signs or characters of true grace ; such that desery all evidences of grace, or a reflex act of faith, to know how it is with them, I look upon to be preachers of pernicious doctrine ; we can never be pressed too much to sanctification, and to show our faith by our works.

8. Perhaps it may be a just and righteous judgment of God upon them, that they see not their state no sooner, they are paid off in their own coin ; since they deceived others, and were not willing to try themselves, God leaves them to spiritual blindness, and to the deceit of their own heart. " Jerusalem would not see the things that belonged to their peace," Luke xix. 42 ; therefore our blessed Lord said, " Now are they hid from your eyes."

Quest. Why are the foolish virgins said to ask oil of the wise ?

1. Answ. It may be partly to discover they are fools ; for who that are wise would go to men, to saints, or to ministers for grace ?

2. It may signify that hypocrites in their distress, know not what course to take ; they catch hold of any thing, though it be most unlikely to relieve them.

3. It may be to convince all that God will make it appear, that though some seem to be wise and knowing persons, and can perhaps dispute and argue excellently about principles of religion, yet at last that they are mere fools ; is he not a great fool that will go to his fellow-creature for the true grace of God ? or that a saint can give grace to another, or hath any to spare ?

4. Perhaps it implies this, viz., they fly to, and depend upon the prayers of the wise ; " Give us of your oil," that is, improve your interest with God, your faith in prayer to God for us ; but certainly there is more than this meant by the wise virgins' answer, " Not so," they would not deny them of their prayers, but they denied them what they asked. " Go to them that sell ;" pray yourselves to God, we cannot help you. Sirs, such who depend upon the prayers of others, and pray not themselves, are certainly foolish persons.

5. It denotes God leaves them to themselves, and to horrid blindness.

Quest. When will the hypocrite's hope and profession fail him ?

Answ. When conscience is awake and terrifies him, and when he is in the greatest need ; moreover, be sure it will fail him at death, and in the day of judgment. O see the woful state of hypocrites !

SERMON XXIII.

And the foolish said, Give us of your oil, for our lamps are gone out,—Matt. xxv. 8.

DOCT. Lamps of hypocrites will first or last go out.

1. I shall show you the cause why the lamps of these professors go out.

2. Apply it.

1. One reason why the lamps of the foolish virgins go out, because they took no oil in their vessels; the wise took oil in their vessels with their lamps: but hypocrites go forth into a visible profession without true faith, or the saving grace of the Spirit in their hearts. It is positively said that the "foolish virgins took their lamps, but took no oil with them," ver. 3. A profession of religion without grace, and the saving knowledge of Christ, will come to nothing.

2. Because the oil they had in their lamps (as I told you) was only common grace, by the virtue of which they made a visible profession of religion; their consciences might be enlightened, and their affections moved with some seeming heat and zeal, but never were thoroughly converted; and thus it was with Judas and many others, who were called Christ's disciples, and followed him for a time.

3. No doubt but that they had some taste of the good word of God, and arrived to some kind of faith, but were without the indwelling of the Spirit, being neither united to Christ, nor having sincere love to him; but some sin or another was allowed and lived in, and had power over them; they were counted saints, but were not thoroughly sanctified; and though they escaped outward profaneness, yet were not inwardly purged; and from hence their lamps went out.

U S E.

1. From hence we may infer, that God will at some time or another constrain foolish professors to confess their own folly, and be self-condemned. "Our lamps are gone out." 1 Sam. xxiv. 17, Saul was brought to confess that "David was more righteous than he." God will make the stoutest heart to yield and give judgment against itself, and so "cause the arrogance of the proud to cease," Isa. xiii. 11.

2. We also infer that there are several sorts of hypocrites; some will not own that their lamps are without oil, but conclude their state is good, and that their lamps burn as clear as any.

Quest. By what signs or characters may such whose lamps are going out, be known?

1. Answ. When a person can hardly keep up a bare outward profession, or his outward conversation from some scandalous sin or another; some (whose hearts are not upright) may walk in appearance before men without blame, or in a holy conversation; but if a professor falters here, and his life is observed to be scandalous, he being loose, earthly, and carnal, or lives in some way of sin or another, it shows that his lamp is gone, or is going out.

2. When temptations are too strong, and given way unto, and indispensable duties are neglected, and they will not be reclaimed, though often sent to and admonished, yet, neglect of prayer, attendance upon God's public worship is persisted in, and yet they seem little concerned, but will have one excuse or another.

3. When some notions of religion are more affected than real godliness, love, and unity, and a person seems proud and conceited, and on every small occasion he is ready to throw off his communion with the church.

4. When convictions of sin, either of sins of omission or commission are not cherished, or a person grows weary of duty, or very cold and remiss in them, or resteth upon the bare performance of them, though very dully performed, and though they grow earthly and lukewarm, yet are insensible of it, and think they are "increased in goods, and have need of nothing," Rev. iii. 17.

5. When comfort is more sought and desired than strength against sin, and purity of heart; some pretend they cannot profit under any ministry that presses practical holiness; no, but only that doctrine pleaseth them, that raiseth their affections, and fills them with joy and consolation; they eye more what Christ hath (as they think) done for them, than what by his Spirit he hath wrought in them.

"But the wise answered, saying, Not so, lest there be not enough for us and you," &c., ver. 9.

Here are three things to be observed.

1. The request of the foolish virgins, what it was, and also that it was denied by the wise.
2. The reason why they denied their request, "Lest there be not enough for us, and you."
3. The advice and counsel which the wise virgins gave to the foolish, "But go rather to them that sell," &c.

Some expositors think the answer of the wise doth not contain serious advice to go to Jesus Christ, but rather that they spoke upbraidingly or ironically, according as God speaks, "Rejoice, O young man, in thy youth, and let thy heart cheer thee, and walk in the ways of thine own heart," &c. Eccl. xi. 9. Or, as Elijah said to Baal's priests, "He is a god, cry aloud," &c., 1 Kings xviii. 27.

If it be thus taken, then it follows that hypocrites in their distress meet with no pity, either from God or his people; God mocketh them when their fear cometh, nay, the Lord "laugheth at them, and he shall have them in derision," Prov. i. 26, Psal. ii. 4. This is spoken after the manner of men, to show how God will aggravate the sinner's misery on him at the last. Moreover, it is said, that "the righteous also shall see and fear and laugh at him," Psal. lii. 5.

They that take the answer thus, intimate as if the wise virgins should say, Go to your workmongers, your meritmongers, go to your dry bottles, go to your empty duties; as saith God, "Go to your idols, or to the fat of your sacrifices;" you have made lies your refuge, now go and shelter yourselves under them.

But I rather think that the wise virgins gave them serious and sober advice, and spake not ironically to them.

Quest. But why do not the wise rather reprove them (seeing their lamps were gone out) than so calmly advise them?

Ans. Because it becomes their modesty to deal gently and mildly with them, also they would not provoke them; we are commanded to follow peace with all men, also a Eph. ii. 8. gentle answer turns away wrath.

2. May be the wise might perceive, that they were not capable to bear rebuke, or perhaps they might express to the wise a great sense of their folly in sleeping so long, and to let their lamps go out, and so needed no sharp reproof.

3. Besides the wise virgins might not know their state, and would not censoriously judge, nor charge them.

4. Or (as one notes) may be the foolish virgins might be persons of higher rank, (in respect of their outward state or interest and esteem in the church); and this might put the wise upon a temptation not to be too tart with them, (for the soundest professors are not always the richest, nor had in the highest esteem) or the foolish might be, (saith he) men of greater parts, or seem like stars of the first magnitude.

Quest. What is the meaning of the denial the wise gave them?

1. Ans. Negatively, they did not deny them any civil kindness, nor help of their prayers, nor any seasonably advice and instruction.

2. In the affirmative, 1. Their denial might be a sober and just reprehension for their coming unto them for oil, without taking any further pains, or be at any cost for it; perhaps they would have grace, but not part with their sins. Wisdom is to be sought with the utmost diligence, nor can a man be a disciple of Christ, but he must deny himself, and he that bought the pearl of great price, sold all he had to purchase it; but these foolish persons might not like the price on which Christ offers himself; for though oil and wine is had without money and without price; yet a right-eye sin, and a right-hand sin must be parted with, and the creature's old rags must be cast off.

2. Their denial may denote (as indeed it is partly expressed) that no sincere Christians can part with any of their oil, their faith or grace, to give it unto others; no, they can give no faith, no grace, to a wife or dear children; they cannot believe for them, nor repent for them, nor will the parents being in the covenant of grace, be any saving benefit to one child; they must believe themselves, others cannot (I say) believe for them, though we may instruct poor relations and neighbours, yet we cannot give to any the saving knowledge of Christ; no, though a saint be filled with the Spirit, or is full of grace, yet he can impart none of it to any other. God only is the giver of grace; faith, as it is not of ourselves, so it is the gift of God.

3. It denotes, that sincere Christians have grace little enough for themselves, and none to spare, (as they have no power to give to others) for he that hath the most, sees he hath but a little, he never thinks he hath enough for himself, and therefore is always desiring more; nay, all true believers see a great want of more grace, more faith, more love, more humility; though he be humble, yet he would be more humble, and therefore he cries for more grace. (1.) Because of the sense he hath of the corruptions of his own heart, and of the strength of Satan's temptations. (2.) Moreover, he knows not what times of need may come. (3.) Also the means of grace may fail, a famine of the word may overtake him, and times of greater expense, when he may be forced to live partly upon the old stock. (4.) Or he may be called to harder work, though the grace he hath may serve his present turn, or to discharge his present duties, yet he may meet with harder duties, he may be called to suffer for Christ, or to offer up his Isaac, (as Abraham was) which calls for a strong faith.

4. Their answer signifies that believers are humble persons, they are not so rich as to help their neighbours; the wise see they have nothing to spare.

5. It may denote the high regard they have for the honour of Jesus, or will not eclipse his glory, who only hath grace to give to sinners. Go to them that sell, to the fountain of grace, and not to the creature, nor to your duties; none can help you but Jesus Christ alone.

6. It may signify that the wise virgins would have the foolish see with their own eyes, and believe with their own hearts.

Some people live upon borrowing; so would the foolish virgins. Some leave it to their ministers to believe for them, they pin their faith on their sleeves; my minister is a learned man, I believe as he believes. Some also would have their parents' faith serve their turn, and give a right to them, both to the promises and to ordinances. This is indeed like going to the wise for oil.

7. Their answer may signify that great love the wise had to the souls of the foolish, they send them to Jesus Christ; and who also says to them, "Buy of me," Rev. iii. 18.

Lastly, perhaps the wise were weary of their company, and willing to be rid of them, since their lamps were gone out, and with a loathsome stink, they being of ill and unholy lives might bring a reproach upon religion and a dishonour upon Jesus Christ, being professors and church members.

"But go rather to them that sell, and buy for yourselves," ver. 9.

We have no oil for you; go to the Father, and to Jesus Christ the Mediator.

Quest. Why must they go to God, and to Christ Jesus, or to God in him?

1. Answ. Because no grace is to be had of any others, or anywhere else; "Every good and perfect gift cometh down from above, from the Father of lights," Jam. i. 17. And the light of knowledge, grace, and all spiritual gifts in a peculiar manner are from God.

2. Because Jesus Christ hath bought or purchased the oil of gladness, and all spiritual blessings, for all who see the want of these things, and come to him believingly for them.

3. Because Jesus Christ the Mediator is the great repository of all grace, though all truth and grace is essentially in God, yet it is all communicated to the person of Christ, considered as Mediator, it is laid up in him; "In whom are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge," Col. ii. 3; hid from the world, lodged in him, to be secured for believers, and not exposed to view of every eye, but are given forth as he sees good to whom, and in what measure he pleaseth; it is from his fulness that all grace is received, and as Jesus Christ is the repository of all grace, so also the outlet or conduit-pipe of it also. "Of his fulness have all we received, and grace for grace," John i. 16. And this is to exalt Jesus Christ, to magnify the person of Christ, and set forth his glory, and therefore all that see a want of grace must go to him; for as Pharaoh put all the corn of the land of Egypt into the possession or hands of Joseph, and all that wanted corn, (who came to him) he sent them to Joseph. So all that need grace, wisdom, knowledge, or any spiritual good things, must go to Jesus Christ.

4. Because Jesus Christ is said to sell all things which sinners need. "Ho, every one that thirsteth come to the waters, and he that hath no money, come buy wine and milk," &c. Isa. lv. 1; compared with Rev. iii. 18. "Buy of me gold tried in the fire," &c.

Quest. But what is meant by buying oil, and why do they bid them go and buy?

Answ. For the clearing of this part of the parable, which may seem to some difficult, and opposite to the doctrine of free grace, I shall lay down for the opening of it, one or two explanatory propositions.

1. Proposit. Nothing is or can be more freely given than the grace of God, (i. e.) the spirit and graces thereof; I need not cite Scriptures to confirm this.

2. Proposit. That the buying and selling mentioned here must therefore be quite different from buying in the common acceptation, as among men.

Gen. xlix.
30. Ruth. iv.
30.

I. This appears, because in buying something is commonly laid down or given which is of intrinsic worth and value with that which is bought. But no man hath anything to give in worth or value with the graces of the Spirit; besides we have nothing that we call our own, but all we have is the Lord's. Moreover, what is in value with this blessed oil? "Who knoweth the price of wisdom? her price is far above rubies, no man knoweth the price thereof," Job xxviii. 13.

2. Because this is a buying without money, and without price, that is, without money or money's worth. This shows it is a quite different sort of buying from what is among men. Moreover, that which is had or bought without money, or price, is given freely.

3. Because he that buys anything in the common acceptation of the word, deserveth what he so buys; he giving its full worth either in money, or goods, and he may demand as his just due what he hath so bought; but no man dare say that he deserveth the least morsel of bread at the hands of God, much less the saving grace of God, nor can any man demand it of God as his due, upon the account of what he hath paid for it.

4. Because, in common buying of any commodity, the buyer who hath given a full price for it is not looked upon beholding to the seller, I have given you your full demands, saith he, I am not obliged to you, but you rather to me for my kindness in buying of you.

But O how are sinners obliged unto God for all those good things they receive of him, especially for grace and all spiritual blessing, and this indeed, because all is given freely to them as undeserving; nay, to ill-deserving creatures, also. "What do we give to God, or what receiveth he at our hands?" Job xxxv. 7.

Quest. These things being so, why are they bid to go and buy?

The reasons why we are said to buy.

I. Answ. It may be to show us the worth of these things, for those things that are very precious, as jewels, &c., are commonly bought, though the paper and pack-thread, with which a jewel may be bound up, is given freely, but the jewel was bought and paid for, so Christ and saving grace is of infinite worth.

II. And more directly, because in buying something is parted with by the sinner, he must part with all he hath (as I have showed the merchantman did for the pearl of great price,) but alas they are things or no worth, but contrariwise are hurtful to his soul; yet there is a necessity of parting with them.

1. By virtue of God's command, he requires all poor sinners so to do.

2. By reason of the sinner's unfitness, or moral incapacity of enjoying these spiritual things, unless he so do; for he must deny himself, that is, sinful self, religious self, and natural self also. For,

3. A dart that sticks in the flesh must be pulled out; if a man wounded therewith could be cured, if a member be corrupted and rotten, it must be cut off, and old filthy rags must be cast off, if a man would be clothed with a rich robe; sin and grace cannot reign in one and the same heart at one and the same time; a man cannot truly seek the honour of Christ, that chiefly seeks the honour of men. "How can you believe that seek honour from one another, and not that honour that comes from God only?" John v. 44.

Lot must leave Sodom, if he will escape the consuming flames; and Moses must forsake Pharaoh's court, if he will be a servant of God, and a deliverer of Israel.

III. It may be called a buying, because men commonly high prize such things, that they have bought and parted with all they had to be possessed of for it. Paul set an estimable value upon Jesus, for the sake of whom he parted with all things that were before counted gain to him; he that will not part with his sins or unrighteousness, will not part with his own righteousness to be possessed with grace, and clothed with the righteousness of Christ; which shows he little values Christ or the graces of Christ.

IV. Because that which a man buys he hath a proper right to, and propriety in, and is sure of; we call it our own, though we gave never so small a matter to have it, and also they know the time when they came to be possessed of it; no man can have Christ who is not brought for his sake to deny himself, take up his cross and follow him; if we do not forsake our old lovers, Christ will not espouse us.

V. Moreover, that which a man parts withal he hath to enjoy it, he will not soon part with; we are bid to "buy the truth, and sell it not," Prov. xxiii. 23; get it whatsoever the cost be, but never part with it; get Christ, the fear of God or true wisdom, let the terms be what they will, you will have a good bargain, and if you could have all the world, yet sell it not, part not with what you have obtained.

3. Profit. That buying which is here meant, is not a purchasing or a procuring condition, or a previous qualification for grace, or to obtain Christ and his saving benefits (as some speak of) I mean it is no federal condition on our part to be performed, viz., such a condition which a sinner must answer, and the blessing will be withheld until he has on his part answered it, for this is a plain buying with money.

No, all federal or covenant conditions in this sense were performed by Jesus Christ our covenanting Head—yet we will, if you please, grant it a condition by way of connection; as thus, if you will have union with Christ, you must receive the Holy Spirit, or if you will put on the new man, you must put off the old man; and if you will be justified, you must believe in Christ, or if you would be saved, you must be regenerated; so if you will have the pearl, or oil in your vessels, you must part with all you have to enjoy it: but pray remember, faith to believe in Christ is as much the gift of God's grace, and Christ is his gift, whom faith receives. Moreover, we need the same power of God in a way of free grace, to cast off the old man; as we do to put on the new man; we can as soon remove a mountain, as regenerate or change our own hearts; yet this is required of all that will be saved, Lazarus must rise up out of the grave, if he lives again; sinners are commanded to arise from the dead, as Christ commanded Lazarus to come out of the grave; but yet a sinner has no more power to do it of himself, than Lazarus had to raise himself after he had been dead four days. My brethren, a new heart, faith, and regeneration are a part of the covenant, or contained in the free promise of God to poor sinners, as much as the Spirit and Jesus Christ is part of it, as promised to be given freely, and therefore a new heart, faith, and repentance, cannot be federal conditions of the said covenant of grace.

VI. In a word, this buying denotes God's infinite love and grace to all such who timely come and do buy, as any thing else whatsoever; for no man can or will part with all he hath for Christ, until the Spirit doth convince him of the infinite worth that is in him, and of that necessity of union with him, and also not until almighty power works faith, by infusing a principle of life in the soul. These poor wretches might go and ask the price of oil, but never came to God's terms; many would be saved who like not the terms contained in the gospel, and as they have no power to come up to those terms, so they seek not to God, nor improve the means (or at least wise not timely) which God directs them to.

APPLICATION.

I. From hence we infer, that that which is said to be bought by us, is freely of God's own sovereign grace given to us. And this will further appear, if we consider these things following.

1. Because what the Father, or the Son are said to sell to us, the Son bought for us, and paid a full price for it, it was purchased for all God's elect by Christ with his own money; divine justice having received full payment; but to us Christ, "his righteousness and all things are freely given," Rom. v. 19, who were unworthy of the least favour, being guilty criminals; we merited not, bought nothing with our money, but Christ bought and paid for all with his own money only; Christ purchased, and we possess, and thus buying and free given are consistent with each other. Doth the Father sell the same things twice, or require double federal conditions! and though Christ's money went for part of payment, our money doth procure the actual possession of the bargain or inheritance? God forbid any should argue after such a manner.

2. Because God freely also gives grace though he be said to sell it, and we to buy it.

(1.) This must be granted, because our buying is no gain to him. "What dost thou give to him, or what receiveth he at thy hands?" he empties our vessels, and then with his own rich and precious oil he fills them.

(2.) Because a heart and power to buy, or to receive Jesus Christ, the Spirit, and graces of the Spirit, are as much an act of Christ's love, and his free gifts to us, as grace itself, and all those blessings received; it is of his working in us that we are made willing, "for it is God that worketh in you, both to will and to do of his good pleasure," Phil. ii. 13.

(3.) Consider, (though God is said to sell, and we to buy) what a vast difference there is between the worth of what we part with, and that which we receive of him; see what he saith, "To appoint unto them that mourn in Zion, to give them beauty for ashes, and the oil of joy for mourning, the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness," Isa. lxi. 3. The oil of joy, this is the oil the foolish virgins went to buy; and see what God saith to humble souls, he hath appointed the oil of joy for mourning; but he knowing the hardness of a sinner's heart, and that they cannot mourn for sin, until he breaks them into pieces, "he pours upon them the Spirit of grace and supplication," Zech. xii. 10; and by means they are helped to look up to him whom they pierced, and then they mourn, and not till then.

2. Exhort. Be exhorted, you poor sinners, who have no grace, no oil, to Exhortation. go to Jesus Christ; go you that have no money, he offers it freely, whatsoever Christ saith, be sure that do, bring your empty vessels; before him, go as sinners, as having nothing, no money, resolve to to give up all as lost for Christ, and count whatsoever you have valued formerly, as dung; this is the way to buy; and are not these easy terms? confess your ignorance, and cast off your false confidence. What fools are they who refuse to buy of one that sells on such terms, what, without money and without price, and yet will any refuse to buy of him?

III. Here is comfort and encouragement to believers. Ye doubting and drooping saints, though you have oil, yet you may need wine, O buy wine and milk, wine to cheer you; you may have whole flagons in the covenant promises, to revive your sinking and fainting spirits; and you, babes in Christ, who want milk, Christ sells milk as well as wine; attend upon the word, lay aside all earthly business, and draw at the breasts of the promises and ordinances, you may boldly come, be supplied with whatsoever you need; if any thirst, Christ hath water of life. "Whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely," Rev. x. 17.

SERMON XXIV.

But rather go to them that sell and buy for yourselves.—Matt. xxv. 9.

I HAVE opened the nature of this buying, and answered several questions; there is yet one or two more, which I purpose to resolve.

Quest. What directions are further necessary about gospel buying?

The answer shall be twofold.

1. By way of parity.
2. By way of disparity.

1. By way of parity; you that would buy of Christ, must see or be convinced of the need of that you would buy; (thus it is among men that go to the market,) those in Laodicea did not know the want of anything; they thought they were "increased in goods, and had need of nothing," Rev. iii. 17.

2. Nay, such that would buy of Christ, ought to be convinced in the highest degree of their need, or see the necessity they have of oil, wine, and milk. People may want many things, but they may do well enough without them; but some things men want, they must have, or they cannot live. So sinners must have grace, they must have Christ, the bread of life, or else they will perish for ever. Thirsty persons must have water, and something to drink, and naked people must have clothes to cover them. So sinners must have water of life, and Christ's white raiment to clothe them; they must believe. "He that believeth not shall be damned," Mark xvi. 16. It was mere necessity that moved Jacob to send his sons down to Egypt to buy corn, "that we may live (saith he,) and not die." You sinners that see no necessity of Christ, and of the Spirit and graces of Christ, will not buy upon gospel terms. The foolish virgins for want of oil were shut out of the marriage-chamber, and they not seeing the necessity of their want of it sooner, was the cause they went to buy when it was too late. There is a necessity of grace.

(1.) Because there is no man can be converted or regenerated without it.

(2.) None can believe, until they receive the Spirit, which is the seed of faith.

(3.) They cannot see until they have Christ's eye-salve to open their understandings; faith is the eye by which we see Christ, the feet by which we go to Christ, the hand by which we receive Christ, the mouth by which we taste how good he is.

II. He that would buy, considers as he hath not the things he wants, and as there is a necessity of them; so also he must know whither to go, to be supplied with them. So sinners must know that they have nothing of their own to supply their wants; and also must go to him that sells: they must not look within for light and righteousness, they have within no evangelical light, nor justifying righteousness. What good will natural, moral, or legal light, or righteousness do them? Even none at all, as to justification and eternal life; and this they will see at last, whatsoever their confidence may be now, through blindness and delusions of sin and Satan, and deceivers.

"Go to them that sell."

This denotes they must go out of themselves; their hearts and vessels are empty, and not one dram of oil in them naturally, but are wholly in darkness. "And if that light which is in thee, be darkness, how great is that darkness!" Luke xi. 34, 35. Grace is only in Christ, and life also. "Whither shall we go, thou hast the words of eternal life," John vi. 68.

III. You must also know the worth of grace, and how to use it, and not make a Saviour of faith, or think faith as a habit or as an act, is that which is your righteousness, or the matter that justifies your persons; no, though thereby you receive Christ and righteousness with him; yet you must know you cannot have Christ nor righteousness without faith, and therefore ought to know the worth of it, or that it is more precious than gold that perishes, nay, than gold tried in the fire. Who will buy the pearl that knows not it is a pearl of great price? Will he sell all for it unless he is convinced of the infinite worth that is in it?

IV. Such that would buy, must know the market-place, or where what he wants are sold, (as well as who sells them:) so sinners must know the spiritual market-place and market-days; they must go to the assemblies of God's people, and attend upon the word of God on those days where and when it is truly preached. Merchants resort to the exchange, and attend exchange-times. So must sinners know God's exchange-time, and get among the people of God, and learn experiences of them who are old traders, and not go where counterfeit goods are sold, or they may soon be undone by being cheated, and think they have got Christ and true faith, when they have not, but it is a false Christ, and counterfeit faith, or nothing but a common, a temporary, or a presumptuous faith.

V. They must come to the market timely, or not delay until the market is over, or the summer is ended. The foolish virgins were ruined by their folly in this case, they went not to buy until it was too late. "Behold now is the accepted time, behold now is the day of salvation," 2 Cor. vi. 2. "To-day if you will hear his voice, harden not your hearts," Heb. iii. 7, 8.

VI. Such that would buy, would do well to go before the price of what they need be raised. My brethren, Jesus Christ seeing sinners slight and abuse his favours, contemn and make light of his word and heavenly manna, or refuse his calls and gracious tenders of grace, sometimes withholds, and keeps back the precious things of the gospel; so that they grow scarce, and are hard to come at, and he raises the price of his blessed commodities this way; nay, he threatens a famine, "Not of bread, nor of thirst of water, but of hearing the word of the Lord," Amos viii. 11. You may not have hereafter those precious things your souls need, but it may cost you dear, even the loss of your liberties, goods, nay, perhaps the loss of your lives, or the word of God may be "so precious, that there may be no open vision," 1 Sam. iii. 1.

VII. You that would buy, must not come to cheapen only, but resolve to buy whatsoever it cost you; for Christ will not abate you anything of the old price, i. e., of "denying yourselves, taking up your cross, and following him," Matt. xvi. 24, 25; and if you think the price too hard, and that it may cost you your lives; know "He that seeks to save his life, shall lose it."

VIII. You that would buy, must not consult with your friends, no, not with father or mother, son or daughter, husband nor wife; you must not ask them whether you shall buy or not, become a disciple of Christ or not, and refuse so to do unless they consent; you must not say with the man in the gospel, "Suffer me first to bid them farewell that are at my house, or suffer first to bury my father." No, or you must not consult with flesh and blood; proud flesh thinks scorn to receive all freely; no, he will pay for what he hath, he will buy with his money, or have no Christ, something (he thinks), he must do; others consult their carnal ease, their outward honour among men, but you must do as Paul did, "Not consult with flesh and blood."

Secondly, By way of disparity.

1. You must carry no money to the market with you; this perhaps some will say, is a strange way to buy.

2. You must buy, and yet you cannot, unless you die; I mean die to sin, to self, and to this world.

3. Believers, you must buy, though you see not, feel not, "believe in hope against hope," though everything seems to lie against your sense, and above your carnal reason, yet believe; though you are sinners in yourselves, yet believe in Christ you are perfect, and without spot or blemish. And sinners, though you are never so vile, yet believe in Christ for righteousness; and you saints that are in darkness, and have no light, "Yet stay yourselves upon your God," Isa. l. 10. Some could buy, if they could but find all sin dead in them, and they were more spiritual and holy or lively, and what is this but to buy when you have got some money, or something of your own?

4. Think not that you shall have oil or any spiritual blessing for the sake of anything you must, and are commanded to part with, or that the terms of the gospel are a purchasing condition. But having spoken to that already, I shall say no more to it now.

U S E.

1. You may learn from hence the mystery of gospel buying.

2. This may inform poor sinners of the danger they are in, by following the dark principles of human reason, and the natural and legal light that is in them.

3. Moreover, by what means many are deceived, and perish for ever; and may learn hereby to know whether they have yet bought or not, those things their souls need.

“And while they went to buy, the bridegroom came, and they that were ready went in with him into the marriage-chamber,” ver. 10.

In these words are four parts.

1. An account of what the foolish virgins did.—They went to buy.

2. Their disappointment.—While they went to buy, the bridegroom came.

3. The happiness of the wise.—They were ready.

4. The woful state of the foolish.—The door was shut.

Doct. Some persons go to buy or provide oil for Christ's coming, when it is too late.

In speaking to this, I shall show you,

1. What their going to buy may denote.

2. Show you at what time or times it will be too late.

3. Show why Christ will come before some are ready.

1. Their going to buy, may signify some thoughts or inclinations they had, to lay hold of Christ by faith. Some say, we go sir, but go not, they have a faint resolution, but never prosecute it; the foolish virgins made a show of going to buy.

2. It may denote their going to the market, I mean to hear the word of God, which perhaps they before had much neglected; they went to the assemblies of God's people, with some kind of resolution to get ready, or prepare for another world, above what they had done before or in former times, being awakened by the cry that was heard.

3. Their going to buy, may also denote their cheapening or asking the price of those things they wanted; like those people the prophet speaks of. “And they come to thee as the people cometh, and they hear thy words, but they will not do them,” Ezek. xxxiii. 31. The love of the world, or of some beloved lusts, hindered them from buying.

4. And it may denote also their crying to God, or their calling upon him more than they had done by prayer, for this is one way of going to buy; but perhaps they rested upon the bare performance of this and other duties. Many think hearing and praying is buying; but, my brethren, asking is one thing, and receiving is another, or else they asked amiss, or continued not, without fainting in their prayers and cries to God; for hypocrites will not always call upon God.

5. Some are always going, but never go, and may be this is signified here by these words.

Secondly, I shall show you what time, or times will it be too late to go to buy.

I. When the market-day is over, or when the summer is ended; “The harvest is past, the summer is ended, and we are not saved,” Jer. viii. 20, Prov. x. 5. Some sleep in harvest, so too many sleep away that time which God allows them to provide for their souls, which is their spiritual harvest-time.

Our fathers sowed the seed of the gospel by their prayers and tears about sixty years ago, and we have had a plentiful harvest, and our harvest is at present great, but I fear we by our sins are like to lose what they procured as the answer of their prayers. Our harvest may soon be ended, and the market-day of buying is gone.

Prov. vi. 8. The wise, like the ant, gather their food in the harvest, whilst the foolish, like the sluggard, is asleep; this is the sinner's day, the day of his visitation. “If thou hadst known, even thou, at least in this thy day, the things that belong to thy peace, but now they are hid from thy eyes,” Luke xix. 42. The old world had their day, and the Jews had their day, in which the gospel was preached to them; God allows men a day or season of grace, but they know not how long it may last, and when that day is gone, it will be too late, and the sinner's case then is desperate.

II. When the Spirit of God hath done striving, or will strive no more with sinners; then it will be too late, the door will then be shut. “My Spirit shall not always strive with men,” Gen. vi. 3. The Spirit strove to convince the foolish virgins of their sin and danger, and showed them their need of Christ, and of true faith in Christ, or of having oil in their vessels: but they regarded not the strivings of the Holy Ghost, but resisted his motions and operations, and the reproofs of their own consciences, and when the Spirit is grieved, and withdraws from poor sinners, and all its influences cease, then it is too late to get oil, and all endeavours then will be in vain and fruitless.

When or at what time or times it will be too late to provide oil.

III. When God gives men up to their own hearts' lusts, or in judgment hardens their hearts, and gives them up to blindness of mind, it will be too late to repent, or to seek oil: "But my people would not hearken to my voice, Israel would have none of me, so I gave them up unto their own hearts' lusts, and they walked in their own counsel," Psal. lxxxii. 12. What blindness of mind, unbelief, and hardness of heart were the Jews left unto, and abide under the power of unto this day, for their rejecting of Christ and the gospel.

IV. When death comes and cuts the sinner off in his sins, then it is too late; such that die in their sins are lost for ever; and O how often doth death come suddenly upon many persons! they think of many days on earth, and that it is time enough, they boast themselves of to-morrow, though "they know not what a day may bring forth," Prov. xxvii. 1. Many are well to day and dead to-morrow; nothing is more uncertain than natural life, death comes upon some when they little think of it. "Thou fool, this night thy soul shall be required of thee," and such fools were the foolish virgins.

V. When the Bridegroom comes, if men are not ready, it will be too late, for then the door will be shut. O how many will the day of Christ's coming find unprovided! He will come "as a thief in the night," i. e., very suddenly, unexpectedly, and very surprisingly upon the world, and upon many professors also.

Thirdly, Why will our Lord come upon some before they are ready?

I. Answ. The exact time, my brethren, of Christ's coming is determined, and when that time is come, he will stay not one moment longer, whether men be prepared or not. "He that shall come, will come, and will not tarry," Will the Lord put off the time of his coming (which is fixed by an unalterable decree) because some slothful servants are not ready? No sure.

Why will Christ come upon some before they are ready.

II. Because when Christ comes, all his elect will be gathered in, and no sooner is that done, will he stay one day? no, not one hour; all his patience and forbearance with the world, is for his elect's sake; therefore such who are not prepared in that time, or are not converted or provided with grace, before the whole number of the elect are brought home, Christ will come upon though they are wholly unprepared, or unprovided for his coming; for all means of grace then will cease for ever.

III. Because when Christ comes the harvest will be fully ripe, all men will either be ripe for salvation or for damnation, all the wheat will be then ripe for Christ's garner, and the tares will be also ripe to be cast into the fire.

IV. Christ will come upon some who are not ready, because all had warning given, sufficient warning, and great means God used with them, and gave time enough also to get ready, which they neither regarded nor improved. But,

Consider a little further, the warning Christ gave to, and the means he used with the foolish virgins.

(1.) They had the word preached to them, and other ordinances as well as the wise. (2.) They had the beauty, glory, and excellencies of the person of the Bridegroom displayed before their eyes, and also the need they had of him. (3.) They had the Spirit to strive with them; and their consciences also awakened to discover their folly, in that they took their lamps, but no oil in their vessels. (4.) They conversed with the wise, and their advantages were not small upon that account, they might have learned more wisdom of them; and by their telling them their experiences, their foolish hearts might have received instruction. (5.) They were told of the woful state and end of all hypocritical professors. (6.) They saw how long Christ waited before he came.

V. Christ will come upon the foolish virgins before they are ready, and will yet leave them without excuse, because they heard that the Bridegroom was coming; they heard, nay, were told of his near approaching and glorious appearance, but took not timely warning to get ready. In God's ordinary providence in coming upon a people in a way of judgment, he commonly gives them warning. "Now thus will I do unto thee, O Israel; and because I will do thus unto thee, prepare to meet thy God, O Israel," Amos iv. 12. This being so, we may be sure Christ will give warning before he comes at the last day. And thus he will leave not only the foolish virgins but all the world without any excuse.

God usually gives warning before he comes upon a people in a way of judgment.

VI. Because should our Lord wait longer, or stay longer before he comes, he knows that these professors would be the same, and not take warning, but adhere to the devil and to their own deceitful hearts. He foresees that no further means will make them better.

“Why should ye be stricken any more, ye will revolt more and more?” Isa. i. 5. “Let favour be shown to the wicked, yet will he not learn righteousness, in the land of uprightness will he deal unjustly, and will not behold the majesty of the Lord,” Isa. xxvi. 10. This being so, it would be vain for him to wait longer upon them.

VII. Because God will glorify his justice on such who have abused his mercy, and slighted all the offers of his grace, goodness, long-suffering, patience, and forbearance; as well as glorify his grace, love, and mercy on such who are the vessels of mercy. God will be as much glorified in the destruction of the wicked, as in the salvation of the righteous. And hence his “Ministers are unto God a sweet savour of Christ in them that are saved, and in them that perish,” 2 Cor. ii. 15.

VIII. Because the wedding-day will then come, even the set time; for though none know of the day nor hour of Christ’s personal coming, yet that day is fixed, and when it is fully come he will wait no longer (as I showed you before). Will an earthly prince, that hath determined and set the very day of his marriage, and provided all things for that solemnity, and his princely bride hath made herself ready, put off the marriage-day because some slothful servants are not prepared for that day? No certainly, all will say he will never do that, much less will the Lord Jesus, since his coming is prefixed by the eternal and irrevocable decree of his Father.

APPLICATION.

Exhort. Be exhorted whoever you are that be not yet ready, to buy oil, and be prepared to part with all (and that timely too) you have, for the “Pearl of great price;” do not delay to get true faith, and a holy and sanctified heart, lay hold upon the present time, fall in with the motions of the Holy Spirit, and with the convictions of your own consciences; and you that are professors and church-members, do not rest satisfied with your lamps, having no oil in your vessels.

For Motives,

1. You hear of the great and wonderful favour and goodness of God, in giving you such repeated warnings of the danger you are in, and how inexcusable he will leave all men, and you especially at the great day.

2. That the Lord Jesus hath tarried long, and hath “spread out his hands all the day long,” is there any thing of such moment as this? doth it not concern the eternal happiness of your precious souls; O how will many cry out when it is too late, and wish they had been so wise to have considered their latter end, and not spent that time on earth about eating and drinking, and living well for a moment in the world, when there was one thing ten thousand times more needful which was neglected, by their being incumbered with many things not worth regard comparably.

3. Consider the fearful state of such whom that day, or the day of death finds Christless, and graceless. O how will they wish they could but live over those years and days again which God gave them when on earth, so as to enjoy the favour of God, and means of grace they then had! But alas! all will be in vain, such wishes will be fruitless, for perish then for ever they must; therefore “because there is wrath, beware lest he take thee away with his stroke, when a great ransom cannot deliver thee,” Job xxxvi. 18. “The wrath of God is revealed from heaven,” Rom. i. 18, against all wicked and graceless sinners; nay, such who believe not in Christ are under wrath; all in the first Adam are “children of wrath,” Eph. ii. 3; and until they have an interest in Christ that “wrath abideth on them,” John iii. 36. But no wrath will be more dreadful than that wrath that hath been long a kindling in the heart of God, some are said to heap up wrath against the day of wrath, and the blood of Christ cannot then deliver them.

4. Consider the happiness of those who are truly wise, who shall then be received into the marriage chamber. As the sorrows of the wicked will be inconceivable, so will the joys and consolation of the godly.

SERMON XXV.

And the Bridegroom came, and they that were ready went in with him to the marriage chamber, &c.—Matt. xxv. 10.

FROM hence note,

Doct. The Lord Jesus Christ will come again, or appear the second time.

In speaking to this proposition,

1. I shall prove that Christ shall or will come again.
2. Give some reasons why the Lord Christ will come again, or appear the second time.
3. Show how he shall appear.
4. Lay down a few of the signs of his coming.
5. Show how we may be said to be ready.
6. Who they are that will not be ready.
7. Show what may be meant by shutting the door.

I. First, to prove he will come again.

1. Because he hath himself assured his saints, or all his people, of this very thing, he hath promised us that he will come again. "If I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again and receive you to myself, that where I am ye may be also," Johu xiv. 3. The particle if, in this place (as our annotators observe) denoteth no uncertainty of the thing whereof he had before assured them, but the certainty of it. As sure (as if he should say) as I go away, or to my Father, so sure know that I will come again. Now they after this saw him go away, or ascend up into heaven, so that this is a full proof of his second coming. I might add many other promises which our Saviour himself made of his coming again, before he ascended; in the 10th verse, "I will come to you."

Christ will come again because of his own promise.

2. We have the promise of God the Father also; the Father hath promised that he will send Jesus Christ again. "And he shall send Jesus Christ which before was preached to you, whom the heavens must receive until the times of the restitution of all things," &c., Acts iii. 20, 21. Thus we have the promise both of the Father and the Son for the coming of the Lord Jesus the second time. But because this will be further confirmed in the reasons I give to show why he will come, I shall proceed to speak to the next thing.

The Father hath promised to send his Son from heaven.

Secondly, why will the Lord Jesus come again?

1. Ans. Because he will answer the prayers of his people; the prayers of his people will not let him rest until he comes as (I may so say) "I have set watchmen upon thy walls, O Jerusalem, which shall never hold their peace day nor night; ye that make mention of the Lord keep not silence, give him no rest," Isa. lxii. 7. And (if you look back to the verse going before) he shows the Bridegroom would come and marry, and rejoice over his Bride, as he hath promised. The prayer of the saints is continually, "Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly," Rev. xxii. 20. Their prayers must be answered. "Shall not God hear his own elect, that cry unto him both day and night?"

Christ will come because his saints pray for his coming.

2. Our blessed Lord will come again, because his people look for him, or wait for his appearance, they expect his coming; and "the expectation of the poor shall not perish for ever," Psal. ix. 18. The virgins waited for his coming, nay, went forth to meet him, and the wise with the greatest expectation imaginable, and shall they be ashamed of their hope? no sure.

(1.) Their expectation is well grounded, they build their hope and expectation upon the truth or veracity of God.

(2.) They earnestly expect Christ's coming; nay, the creatures are said thus to do. "The earnest expectation of the creature waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God, and not only they, but ourselves also which have the first fruits of the Spirit, even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body," Rom. viii. 19. The whole creation waits and expects virtually this day, but God's people actually and believably expect it. How the creation waits with earnest expectation, "and shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the sons of God," I think this is one of these things very hard to be understood. Though some think the apostle refers to the state of the whole creation in the time of the thousand years reign, which commenceth from the first appearance of Christ when he comes the second time, then the curse shall be taken off from all creatures, which are made slaves of by man.

(3.) The saints have long expected the coming of Christ.

(4.) His coming is and hath been the expectation of all the children of God, or the members of the whole universal church.

(5.) It is the expectation of the souls of believers who are dead; as they died in full expectation of it, so their souls cry under the altar, "How long, Lord, holy and true, ere thou avenge our blood?" Rev. vi. 10. That will not fully and for ever be until Christ comes.

3. Christ will come to perform or make good his own most gracious promise, and the promise of the Father, for such scriptures as well as others cannot be broken. Our Lord did not only when he was upon the earth, and before he died, promise that he would come again, but also after he went to heaven. "He that testifieth these things, saith, surely, I 21st verse compared.

come quickly, and my reward is with me, to give unto every one as his works shall be," Rev. xxii. 12. Observe it well, they are some of the last words of the holy Bible; as the Old Testament ended in Malachi with the promise of Christ's first coming, so the new ends with Christ's own promises of his second coming. The apostle Peter saith, "That in the latter days many scoffers will say, where is the promise of his coming?" 2 Pet. iii. 4. We can show such scoffers; multitudes of clear promises is the true and faithful witness, and he hath commanded these promises to be written. "And he said write, for these words are true and faithful, I am Alpha, and Omega, the beginning and the end," &c., Rev. xxi. 5, 6.

4. Because of that general testimony that is borne to this truth, viz., to the second coming of the Lord Christ. The Father and the Son have not only borne witness to it, but also.

All the prophets bear witness to Christ's second coming.

(1.) All the holy prophets since the world began. Before the flood Enoch. "And Enoch the seventh from Adam prophesied of these, saying, behold the Lord cometh with ten thousand of his saints, to execute judgment upon all," &c. Acts iii. 21. This must refer to our Lord's second coming, for when he first came, he came to execute judgment upon none.

All the apostles also bear witness to Christ's second coming.

(2.) All the holy apostles also have borne witness hereunto. Peter in two or three places, both in the Acts, and in his Epistles. Paul in several of his Epistles. "Waiting for the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ," 2 Pet. iii.

10. "He that shall come, will come, and will not tarry," 1 Cor. i. 7. John also beareth witness to Christ's second coming. "Behold he cometh in the clouds, and every eye shall see him," &c. 1 Thess. ii. 19. James doth the same; "Be patient brethren to the coming of the Lord," Rev. i. 7. "Be patient, establish your hearts, for the coming of the Lord draweth near," Jam. v. 7, 8. And Jude bears witness to it in citing

The Holy Spirit beareth witness to the second coming of Christ.

Enoch (mentioned before); many truths are fully confirmed, but certainly but few like this. The Holy Spirit hath it appears also borne witness to this glorious truth, because both the prophets and apostles in these things (as well as in all others) spake as they were inspired by the Holy Ghost. The Spirit spoke in them, and by them; and as the Spirit beareth witness hereunto, so both the Spirit and the Bride desire Christ to come. "And the Spirit and the Bride saith, come," Rev. xxii. 17.

The angels bear witness to Christ's second coming.

Lastly, the holy angels also witness to Christ's second coming, as they bore witness that our Lord was risen from the dead. "And while they looked steadfastly towards heaven as he went up, behold two men stood by them in white apparel, which said, ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven, this same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven, shall in like manner come as ye have seen him go up into heaven," Acts i. 10, 11.

Christ will come because that is his marriage day.

5. The Lord Jesus, the blessed Bridegroom, shall come again, because the Bride makes herself ready for that day, and then, and not until then, expecteth her marriage with him will be solemnized.

Christ will come to manifest his glory.

6. Christ will come that his glory may be revealed. Christ's glory is veiled now, and is not seen to men, nor saints on earth, as it will in that day. "Thine eyes shall see the king in his beauty. When Christ who is our life shall appear, then shall ye appear with him in glory," Col. iii. 3.

To execute vengeance on his enemies.

7. He will come to take vengeance on all his and his peoples' enemies; this is one reason wherefore he will come again. He will then execute his wrath on them, for he will appear in that day like a lion, and come upon princes as upon mortar.

8. The Lord Jesus will come, because all the kingdoms of the world are given unto him, and he shall reign a thousand years upon the earth with his saints," Rev. xx. 4. I see no room for any to doubt of this, though some take it for a mystical reign. A king shall reign in righteousness, and princes decree judgment. These princes are the saints no doubt; the time then will come when the saints shall fully and quietly possess the kingdom, "Yea, all the kingdoms under the whole heavens. Blessed are the poor, for they shall inherit the earth," Dan. vii. 27.

9. He will come to judge the world, they that deny Christ's second coming, may as well deny the eternal judgment, or the day of judgments. "Who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearance and his kingdom," 2 Tim. iv. 1. The judgment cannot be in heaven, for no unholy persons can enter into heaven; it must therefore be either in the air or on the earth, but it is said, "his feet shall stand in that day on the mount of Olives;" the saints also, "when raised, and those that shall be changed shall be caught up to meet the Lord in the air," 1 Thess. iv. 16, 17; which clearly shows, he designs to come hither, besides all those places and promises that relate to Christ's coming, must be understood of his coming upon the earth, where he once was and suffered shame, from whence our Lord ascended; from whence he will ascend, he will descend, but he ascended from the earth, therefore he shall descend to the earth; and to deny this, is to deny his second coming.

Lastly, Christ will come again, because all shadows must fly away, he comes to put an end to shadows; "until the day break, and the shadows fly away. Turn my beloved, and be like a roe or young hart upon the mountains of Bether," Cant. ii. 17.

1. All shadowy ordinances, (1.) Baptism and the Lord's supper will cease then: "As often as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup, ye show the Lord's death until he come," 1 Cor. xi. 26; these ordinances shall abide till then, and no longer. The apostle refers not to his extraordinary coming in Spirit, in pouring out of the Spirit, because he received a charge from Christ to administer this ordinance, and to leave it in the church to abide after Christ came in that extraordinary manner. Paul was not converted for some time after the day of Pentecost, when Christ came to his saints in Spirit, according to his promise, so in the case of baptism such were commanded in the name or authority of Christ to be baptized in water, that were baptized before with the Holy Ghost, see Acts x. 47, 48. "Can any man forbid water, that these should not be baptized, who have received the Holy Ghost as well as we?—and he commanded them to be baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus."

2. Christ appears to vanquish all shadows and clouds of God's dark providences, then we shall see and behold things clearly, that now are not discerned by us.

3. To expel all clouds and shadows that interpose between himself and his church, and that obscure his own glorious beauty.—And

4. The shadows of death, sadness and darkness, when Christ comes shall fly away; they shall obtain "Joy and gladness, sorrow and sighing shall fly away." So much as to this.

Thirdly, "I shall hint how he shall appear, (but because I have before, and in opening another parable spoken to this,) I shall be very brief on it here.

1. He shall appear personally, it is his personal appearance I speak of here: "The same Jesus that you have seen taken up into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven," Acts i. 10, 11. The very body, though glorified, that died, rose again, and ascended, not another body but the same.

2. He shall appear very glorious. (1.) "He shall come in the glory of the Father, and the holy angels," Matt. xvi. 27. What glory of the Father will shine forth we know not. (2.) In his own glory: "When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him," &c. There will be a glorious manifestation of the glory of his own Person. (3.) He shall then sit upon the throne of his glory: "that when his glory shall be revealed, ye may be glad also with exceeding joy," 1 Pet. iv. 13. Again it is said that "he shall appear in power and great glory," Matt. xxiv. 30. But this will be to the comfort and joy of all believers. For, (4.) To sinners he will appear terrible, even in "flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God," 2 Thess. i. 8.

Fourthly, I shall give you a few of the signs of Christ's second coming.

1. The world abounding with false teachers, and the rising of false Christs, is laid down to be one sign of his coming. "There shall arise false Christs The signs of Christ's coming. and false prophets, that if it were possible, they should deceive the very elect," Matt. xxiv. 24. No days certainly like to these we see upon this respect.

2. Strange "signs in the sun, moon, and stars, and upon the earth distress of nations with perplexity," &c., Luke xxi. 25. See what our Saviour further saith, "And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up, lift up your heads, for your redemption draweth near, even at the door.

3. Pestilence, amazing earthquakes, wars and famine in several places.

4. As it was in the days of Noah, so shall the coming of the Son of man be, eating, drinking, building, and planting, marrying, and being given in marriage; all generally will be very secure, and act as if the world was but just begun,

5. The slumbering state of the virgins is also laid down by our Lord as one sign of his coming, which certainly is upon us in these nations, and in all other nations, where Christ hath a people professing his gospel and blessed truth.

6. The passing away of the second woe, and sounding of the seventh angel, and the pouring forth of the seven vials, or the seven last plagues, and utter overthrow of Babylon will precede the coming of Christ, and be a presage thereof.

7. The preaching of the gospel to all nations: "The gospel of the kingdom shall be preached to all the world for a witness unto them, and then cometh the end," Matt. xxiv. 14. The heathen or Pagan nations and Mahometans, must have the gospel preached to them before the coming of our Lord, and so shall the Antichristian nations also, which cannot be till the fall of mystical Babylon: and this will be the bringing in the fullness of the Gentiles.

8. The calling of the Jews will be another sign of Christ's coming; though some think they shall not be called until Christ appears.

They that were ready went in with him into the marriage chamber, &c., this brings me to the next thing.

Fifthly, I shall show, who they are that may be said to be ready, or what the bride

What it is to be ready for the bridegroom's coming.

being ready may denote or signify.

1. To be ready doth denote our having not only lamps, and oil in our vessels, and so habitually ready; but our lamps being lighted and burning clearly, and so being actually ready also.

2. It may denote our being every way rightly prepared, clothed, and adorned as a bride for the Bridegroom's coming, or for the marriage-day, having on all our glorious attire, "The bride hath made herself ready, and it was granted that she should be arrayed in fine linen clean and white, for the fine linen is the righteousness of saints," Rev. xix. 7, 8. This certainly signifies the exercises of all our graces, and our shining forth in faith and holiness: "Let your loins be girded, and your lights burning, and ye yourselves like men that wait for their Lord, when he will return from the wedding," Luke xii. 35, 36. To have our loins girded, is to be established in the truth, and sincere and upright in heart; "Having your loins girt about with truth," Eph. vi. 14.

3. To be ready is to have all our sins mortified, or in a good measure (by the power of the Spirit) subdued, every lust having received its death wound, or having in some considerable degree overcome all the enemies of their souls; such have doubtless mourned over their former sins, deadness, lukewarmness, earthliness, and so do labour to do their first works, for they are such that overcome, "that shall sit down with Christ in his throne," Rev. iii. 21.

4. To be ready, is to have done the whole will of God, or to have with Paul "fought the good fight, to have finished our course, and kept the faith," 2 Tim. iv. 7, 8; he having done this, saith he was ready to be offered, or ready to die, and to go to receive the crown of life. "David, when he had done the will of God fell asleep." Our Lord himself until he had finished his whole work, was not ready to go to his Father; "I must work the work of him that sent me while it is day," John ix. 4. A man that hath any work to do (that appertains to such a precise day) is not ready to go to bed, until he hath done it.

5. To be ready denotes a waiting posture; a person cannot be said to wait for the coming of his friend to go out with him, who is not ready.

6. For the bride to be ready may denote the whole body of the elect being called, and so the mystical body of Christ complete; for until every one is renewed and united by the Spirit to the Head, the bride is not ready.

There are four things essential to render the bride ready:

1. The bringing in or calling of the Gentiles.
2. The calling of the Jews, therefore they must be called before the marriage-day.
3. The uniting both the Jews and Gentiles in one body.
4. The raising of the bodies of all the saints; for until the bodies of all saints be raised or changed, and their souls and bodies are united together, the bride is not ready.

APPLICATION.

1. From hence we may further learn, what the reason is why Christ seems to tarry. (1.) That the wicked may fill up their measure of sinning, and so be ripe for the harvest. (2.) That the godly may "fill up their measure of suffering, that are behind for his body's sake, which is the church," Col. i. 24. (3.) That the whole church may be complete and every way ready. (4.) That all the promises and prophecies contained in the scriptures, relating to the latter days, may be fully accomplished.

2. Exhort. Take heed you do not say in your heart, My Lord delays his coming, and so lay yourself down to sleep, "or eat and drink with the drunken," Matt. xxiv. 49.

3. Let us awake out of sleep, and stir up ourselves, and speedily hasten Exhort. to attend upon Christ in the wedding chamber, or to be ready for eternity for Christ's coming, and for the judgment day. Let us see that we are like a bride dressed and every way adorned for the marriage-day. (1) The earth (as one observes) is our trimming-place for heaven. (2) It is the property of virgins to be adorned, (their greatest care is to see to that) who know the set day of their marriage, and that is very Motives to be ready. near: "Can a maid forget her ornaments, or a bride her attire?" Jer. xxxii. 1. (3) Christ hath provided changeable raiment, and divers sorts of rich and precious ornaments for his bride, and shall she not get them on? we must not think it is enough in order to be meet for Christ's coming, to have only on the robe of justification, but also the garment of sanctification: "Take away (saith the Lord) his filthy garments, and put upon him change of raiment," Zach. iii. 4; would you have only a title to heaven, and not a meetness for it also? (4) Consider, that believers are the King's daughters, and ordinary garments and ornaments will not become them: "The King's daughter is all glorious within," Psal. xlv. 13. (5) Would you not be a shame to your Father, and to the whole heavenly family? O then get completely ready. (6.) Consider, what a long time Christ hath given us, and how long he hath waited to have us ready. (7.) The Lord also hath given us all a strict charge to be ready; "And be ye also ready," &c., Matt. xxiv. 44. (8.) It is his expectation, he looks to see us all ready on the marriage-day, and such who are not, he will not admit to enter into the wedding-chamber. (9.) God hereby will be honoured, and it will also tend to the glory of the Lord Jesus Christ, and to our own honour likewise, since he hath been at so great charge to provide such noble and rich ornaments for us, to have them all on upon the marriage-day, that his riches and glory in his saints may shine forth. (10.) And by this means we need not fear any evil that may come upon the world, no judgments, nor be afraid to die. (11.) This also will hasten (to speak after the manner of men) the Bridegroom's coming; he only waits to have all his elect ready. (12.) Moreover, by this means we shall be put upon an earnest desire and longing for his appearance, such that are ready, may say, "come, Lord Jesus, come quickly. (13.) Consider, in what glory the Bridegroom will appear, how richly and gloriously he will be clothed and adorned, ought not there to be in some degree a proportion or suitableness between the grandeur of the queen with that of the King. (14.) Sinners hasten to be ready for hell, or to be damned, and shall not we be ready for heaven and salvation? It may be feared that we are not yet ready, and perhaps know it not; therefore be exhorted to look in the glass: you virgins look in the glass, see whether you are every way completely dressed, and all things on in a right manner; our dressing-glass is God's word, and by looking into that, and then viewing ourselves, we may see whether we are ready or not. But let us be sure to take a full sight, and not only a cast, and be gone.

Terror. This may be cause of great terror to all the foolish virgins, though Christ tarries so long, yet when he comes they will not be ready.

Comfort. You believers, never fear if you are sincere Christians, Christ will not come before you are ready.

All God's elect shall be ready,

1. Because they were all chosen to salvation. First to believe, and through faith to eternal life, and not ordained to salvation without holiness, but chosen to believe: "And as many as were ordained to eternal life, believed," Acts xiii. 48. And as they are chosen to believe, so to be holy also: "According as he hath chosen us in him before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy and without blame before him in love," Eph. i. 4. None (saith Mr. Loveday) are chosen but such that are ready, our being ready is not the cause of our being chosen, but our being chosen is the See Loveday on the talents. cause of our being ready.

2. Because all God's elect have a place prepared for them in heaven, John xiv. 2; shall a place be prepared for them, and they not be prepared for that, or shall there be one empty place in heaven? Certainly, God hath not prepared places for such that he never designed to prepare for those places.

3. Because all the elect are bought or purchased with a dear price; "To be redeemed from all iniquity," Tit. ii. 14. Redemption is from sin as well as from wrath, and shall Christ die to redeem one soul from sin that shall never be actually redeemed? his Spirit was as well purchased to sanctify us, as his righteousness to justify us, and shall the Holy Ghost fail in his work and office? doth the love of the Father in electing, the love of the Son in dying, exceed the love of the Spirit in renewing and sanctifying, and yet all one and the same God in essence? This cannot be.

John xvii. 24. 4. Because Christ hath prayed and desired of the Father that all he gave him, may be with him where he is, and behold his glory.

5. Because Christ shall not have an imperfect body; now all the elect are members of his mystical body, and therefore the weakest or smallest member shall not be wanting.

6. Because the covenant and promises of God are sure, and eternal life is promised to every one that believeth; nay, "He that believeth on him hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation," John v. 24; Heb. vi. 18—20. Of this they have a sure and certain hope; "And hope maketh not ashamed," &c., Rom. v. 5.

7. Because God will perform that good work he hath begun; Paul was confident of this, and what cause have any in our days to doubt of it, Phil. i. 6. He that laid the first stone, will lay the top-stone, crying, grace, grace unto it.

8. Come, my brethren, our Lord's design in his death shall not be frustrated; no, no; see what Paul saith: "As Christ also loved the church, and gave himself for it—that he might sanctify, and cleanse it with the washing of water by the word—that he might present it to himself a glorious church, not having spot or wrinkle, or any such thing, but that it should be holy and without blemish," Eph. v. 25—27. Every believer shall be thus presented by our Lord when he comes; shall the promises of God fail? God forbid; well, what of them? hath he not said, "When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, we shall also appear with him in glory—and that we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is," Col. iii. 4; 1 John iii. 1, 2.

Lamentation. Alas! poor sinners, how unprepared and unready are you for Christ's coming! what will you do, that know not God, and who obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ? how will you stand when he appears in flames of fire, for so he will come upon all ungodly sinners and unbelievers.

SERMON XXIV.

And the door was shut.—Matt. xxv. 10.

FROM hence note,

Doct. The door of heaven will be shut against all formal professors, as well as against all profane sinners.

I shall briefly do two things.

1. Show you what may be denoted by shutting the door.
2. Show you against whom the door shall be shut.

What Christ's shutting the door denotes.

1. It is said Jesus Christ will rise up and shut the door; "When once the Master of the house is risen up, and hath shut to the door," &c., Luke xiii. 25. This no doubt signifies the wrath of the Son of God, the wrath of the Lamb will then come, he will show his displeasure against all foolish professors in that day, by rising up himself to shut the door against persons that knock. What! O then be sure he is offended, and is enraged against such persons; and this certainly denotes, I say, the great wrath of the Lord Jesus Christ against those sinners.

2. It signifies that the day and kingdom of Christ's patience is expired and then ended for ever; the day of grace will last till all the elect are called, but then there will not be one of them wanting, and so no offers of grace to sinners any more for ever at that day. Now a great door is opened, (the Lord grant it may be an effectual one), but then it will be shut.

3. It signifies that no false professor, or no unrenewed or un sanctified person, or that no unclean thing shall or can enter into that holy place, or have an entrance into the presence of Christ and his glorified saints; though they may remain or be among them in the church militant, yet they shall have no place among them in the church triumphant.

4. My brethren, this refers to that general shutting the door; there is a particular and a general shutting the door: God oftentimes shuts the door of grace against some sinners, after they have abused his patience here in this world; (as he shut the door against the unbelieving Jews, and wrath came upon them to the uttermost): but the door here may be opened to some, though it may be shut against others: but at that day it will universally be shut, and never be opened again.

5. It denotes that after death there is no means of grace, no gospel to be preached, and that it is impossible then for any to believe or to repent, because the night is come upon sinners, in which no man can work, the Spirit being utterly withdrawn for ever, it shall strive no more with any man, John ix. 4.

Secondly. Who shall the door be shut against ?

Ans. Against all profane persons, or notorious sinners : “ Without are dogs, whoremongers, and idolaters, and whosoever loveth and maketh a lie ; that is, without the gate of heaven, such shall not be let into the holy city, for another gate will be opened for all such who lived and died in open profaneness, for they shall “ have their portion in the lake that burneth with fire and brimstone, which is the second death,” Rev. xxi. 8.

Against whom the door shall be shut.

2. All unbelievers and misbelievers, or whosoever do not truly or savingly believe in Jesus Christ. For, my brethren, though some are not openly wicked, but seem to hate gross and abominable profaneness, yet being unbelieving, and making light of Christ out of love to this world, or have not a right faith in him, the door will be shut against them also : “ Except ye believe that I am he, ye shall die in your sins,” Rev. xxi. 8. The fearful and the unbelieving are by the Holy Ghost put together, as such that the door of heaven shall be shut against, and the door of hell be opened unto ; and against all carnal worldlings and covetous persons, or such who have made the world or their belly their god.

John viii. 24.

3. All hypocrites, or loose, proud, foolish, and vain professors. This sort are particularly here mentioned, to warn such that are members of churches in the latter days (especially) to take heed of their state and condition, lest they have the door shut against them at the great day.

4. All apostates or backsliders, who die in apostacy, together with all impostors, who have cast off the true faith, either in respect had to Christ (the immediate object of worship) or any essential principle of the gospel, or of the worship of God itself ; embracing most abominable errors and heresies ; for such “ bring upon themselves swift destruction,” 2 Pet. ii. 1.

And against all apostates.

5. Even all that die without union with Christ and regeneration. “ Verily, verily, I say unto you, except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God,” John iii. 5.

Lastly, the door will be shut against all that have not got on a wedding-garment ; this is signified in another parable, “ Friend, how camest thou hither, not having a wedding garment ? and he was speechless. Then said the king to the servants, bind him hand and foot, and cast him into utter darkness,” Mat. xxii. 12. And such in the church that have no true faith in Christ, have not the wedding-garment, and so the door will be shut upon them.

“ Afterwards came also the other virgins, saying, Lord, Lord, open to us ; but he answered and said, Verily, I say unto you, I know you not.”

These words close this parable ; it appears the foolish virgins came too late.

Afterwards, that is when the door was shut.

Note from hence,

Doct. That though the foolish virgins cry Lord, Lord, yet in that day all will be to no purpose, they shall be repulsed, because Christ knows them not ; prayers nor tears avail not any thing in that day.

In the explanation of this proposition,

1. I shall show the purport of these words ; “ Lord, Lord.”
2. Show what those words do denote, “ Open to us.”
3. Show why the foolish virgins are so importunate to have the door opened.
4. Show in what respect Christ may be said not to know them.
5. Apply it, and so conclude with this parable.

1. Their saying, Lord, Lord, may signify that hypocrites shall confess to their shame, and to the glory of God, that Jesus Christ is Lord ; they call him Lord, but cry not Abba, Father, but their confidence no doubt will then be much abated : before they did not only call Christ Lord, but also called God Father, but we hear nothing of that in their prayer now.

What opening may denote.

2. This title they give to Christ, may signify that knowledge they had of the person of Christ, the glory that then our Lord will appear in, will convince all the wicked that Christ is Lord ; he may be known by the crowns on his head.

3. It may also signify that they know, and shall in that day know, it is Christ’s prerogative to open the door of heaven, none but he hath the power and right to let men into heaven ; they cry not to Paul, nor to Peter, nor to the virgin Mary to open the door, but to Christ himself, who opens and no man shuts, and shuts and no man opens. The blind papists then will no more invoke the saints, they will see their abominable idolatry then, and be ashamed and confounded for ever, and must suffer the vengeance of eternal fire, for giving that divine adoration to saints, that belongs to God alone.

4. They perhaps called him Lord, because they thought they were his servants and disciples; and indeed they were looked upon as such, and called the servants of Christ, though in that day they will appear to be wicked and slothful, or deceitful servants; yet it is common for disobedient servants to say to their master, Lord, Lord: besides, they were not brought upon their trial yet, were not judged and condemned.

5. Our Lord no doubt by these words discovers how sad the state of all false professors will be in that day; O what bitter cries and doleful lamentations will they make, when they see the door of salvation, the door of heaven shut against them; Lord, open to us! ah Lord open to us! O what, wilt thou shut us out of thy presence? Lord have pity! But Christ shows all such prayers and tears will signify nothing to such who come too late, or delay the great work of preparation for death or to meet Jesus Christ.

6. It may signify that some shall pray to him then, and own him to be God, who would not pray to him, but denied his Deity before; they shall then cry, O thou art Jehovah, thou art God blessed for ever, now we believe, we were blasphemers, and have degraded thy glorious person; we are convinced of our sin now, and therefore on thy name blessed Jesus we call, and to thee we cry, Lord, Lord; but then it will be too late; they who have denied his godhead, and contemned his power, and defaced his glory, must perish for ever.

7. These words may denote the agony they will be in, and the earnestness of their desires for admittance; Lord, Lord, open presently; Lord save us, O shut us not out, we perish, we begin to sink, hell is ready to open her mouth and to swallow us up; O quickly open Lord, or we are lost and undone for ever.

Secondly, What do these words denote, "Open to us?" what would they have?

1. Answ. They desire that Christ would own them to be his; as the wise virgins had looked upon them to be saints or true believers, so they beg that the Lord Jesus would acknowledge them to be also, they having professed themselves to be his servants, and had obeyed his precepts, having been baptized in his name, and received into his visible church, and had often broke bread with his people, and having tasted of the heavenly gift, and borne shame and reproach for his name's sake; but alas none of this will do, their hearts not being right with God, pride, vain-glory, or self love, being at the bottom of all.

2. That they might be entertained in the marriage chamber, and have the sweet smiles of the blessed Bridegroom, and be embraced in his princely arms, and not behold his frowns and angry countenance, and be happy in heaven for ever.

3. It may denote that great sense they had of the dismal consequences of an utter denial of his favour at that day: Lord, open now, or we are eternally ruined; now before the door of grace is shut: if Christ opens not to them now to-day, there may be hope he may to-morrow, but then they will see that it is the last time of any hopes being left them for ever; if no door be opened then, it will be shut to all eternity.

4. It may denote how unwilling the wicked will be to go to hell, or what fearful horror Isa. xxxiii. 4. will seize upon them, fearfulness with a witness then shall surprise the hearts of hypocrites, such who fly not now to Christ, who hath borne God's wrath for poor sinners, must then for ever bear it themselves, and this they then shall have the full apprehension of upon their hearts, and therefore they cry, Lord, Lord, open to us.

Thirdly, What should be the reason the foolish virgins should be so bold and importunate with the Lord Jesus Christ?

Why the foolish virgins are so bold to desire the opening the door.
Answ. It may be occasioned through that ignorance and blindness that had taken hold of them, and which abode with them to the last; they were deceived, and saw not fully their desperate state, though by finding the door shut they might have great cause to conclude they were none of Christ's approved servants.

2. Perhaps their being virgins, or not being defiled with idolatry, nor guilty of gross sins, or of open profaneness, might make them somewhat bold and confident, having had fellowship with the visible church, and often (as I hinted) eat and drank in Christ's presence, and may be some of them had prophesied or preached in his name, (as some we find will say in that day.)

3. Or perhaps they may know some were admitted in, who they might think were more unlikely than themselves: Lord, hast not thou received into the wedding chamber such and such, why we know they were men of as many great infirmities as we, they grieved thy ministers as well as we, and exposed thy name to reproach as well as we. My brethren, a sincere believer may be guilty of as many human frailties, or of unbecoming practices (in their outward lives) as some hypocrites, but their hearts are right with God in the main. David was a man that was guilty of very great enormities, but he being a "man after God's own heart," none of his sins were cast in his face, but those foul and abominable acts of wickedness in the case of Bathsheba and Uriah the Hittite. Where there is sincerity of heart, God overlooks many great and grievous sins, though not without his bringing them to repentance for them, and helping them by faith to plead the blood of the cross for the pardon of them.

4. Consider and well observe the matter of their request: Lord, we beg no outward mercy of thee, nor to be indulged in any sin; but yet we find not they desired grace to change their hearts, but would enter in without a proper meetness. Alas, without a true right and title to heaven, and a suitable meetness, there will be no entering into that holy place; all that they desire now at last is but to be saved.

The foolish virgins only desire to be saved, and regard not a fittedness for heaven.

5. May be their melting frame might make them hope to find mercy; they pleading with sighs, tears, and bitter cries, may think that might move the heart of a tender and bleeding Jesus, they knowing what bowels and pity he had showed to undone sinners; but they came not to him until the day of grace and his patience was gone. Christ may say, you seek me now early, but it is the hour of your calamity, "when I called, you refused;" and were you not told that you should in the day of your distress "call upon me, but I would give you no answer, and that then you should seek me, but not find me," Prov. i. 18. The Lamb-like nature or carriage of the blessed Jesus in that day towards sinners will be gone, and he will appear like a lion.

6. Consider the manner of their department, they make supplication; they do not seem to press in, or offer to force an entrance, but only stand and knock, and entreat for admittance, and plead not their deserts, but beg for mercy.—But may not our blessed Lord say, The day of your visitation you did not improve, the merits of my blood you did not apply; you desired grace to be saved, but not to glorify me, and to have communion with me. You only sought and now seek self-preservation, now you cannot sin any more as you have done, nor enjoy the things of the world you cannot longer, or have your riches and your earthly pleasures, and now you would be saved; "Go ye cursed, I know ye not."

See how reverent they seem to be, "Lord, Lord, open to us;" we confess thy authority, thy sovereignty, it lies in thy own power, if thou please thou canst save us, and deliver us from God's terrible wrath, that begins to take hold of us; but nothing will avail any sinner then, it is vain to plead for mercy when the day of mercy is gone and for ever ended.

Fourthly, What doth the Lord mean when he says, "I know ye not?"

1. I answer first negatively, it doth not signify that Christ knew not who they were, or was ignorant of them; no, he is God, and knows all men, all things, all hearts, there is nothing that he knows not. "I know Ephraim, and Israel is not hid from me," Hos. v. 3. Christ knows the hypocrisy of their hearts, their states, their thoughts and their fears.

What meant by Christ saying I know ye not.

Secondly, In the affirmative. (1.) The Lord Jesus did not know them to be his sheep, "I know my sheep, and they follow me:—The Lord knows who are his," &c., John x. 27. (2.) He knows them not so as to approve of them; he will say, "I never knew you," Matt. vii. 23, that is, I never approved of you. (3.) Knowledge sometimes refers to love and affections; it is all one as if Christ should say, I love you not, you are not the objects of my affections, you are none of them that were given to me; "he that loveth God, is known of God," that is, beloved of God. (4.) Knowledge is sometimes taken for intimate communion, and they are such that never had this knowledge of Christ, nor Christ of them.

APPLICATION.

1. See the end and woful state of all formal and unsound professors, they will at the last day be all disowned by the Lord Jesus Christ. O what signifieth the approbation of men, if we have not the approbation of God, or are not known or approved of by Jesus Christ? Many go for saints on earth, who will not be found saints in the great day.

2. We may infer from hence the dismal state of all profane sinners; for if many professors who escaped the gross pollution of sin and open wickedness, and performed many duties of religion, shall be shut out of heaven at the last day, what will become of notorious and abominable transgressors, as swearers, drunkards, whoremongers, thieves, idolaters, and all carnal worldlings?

Obj. But perhaps some may say, doth not this place show the soul is mortal? for if the soul was immortal, these persons knew they were damned, the judgment of God being passed upon them; and how is it then that they at that day are said to plead for mercy?

The foolish virgins strictly may refer to such that are alive when Christ comes.

Ans. (1.) These persons may be such that shall be found in the visible church alive in the body at the time when Christ comes, and doth not refer to such that were raised from the dead.

(2.) For such that are dead, that died not in Christ, shall not be raised when our Lord first appears, or with those that sleep in Jesus.

(3.) The state of the body in which the wicked shall be raised, having not their bodies changed and made like Christ's glorious body, will discover their state to them. besides the horrid guilt they will find in their consciences, which will lie heavy upon them.

(4.) All that die in their sins pass a particular judgment when they die, and that makes a clear discrimination of their future state.

(5.) Some think this may refer to Christ's coming at the sounding of the "seventh trumpet," and not to his personal appearance. For the day of grace to some may then end, though to others it may then begin.

(6.) But in the last place, pray (once again) remember that parables run not always on all four, but have their disparities. The scope and main design therefore of our Saviour in these words ought chiefly to be observed, which is to show that when he comes, all grief, tears, and prayers of unbelievers, and hypocrites, will be fruitless, the door will be shut against them for ever in that day, and they shall be utterly disowned; and this is to excite all the members of the visible church not to neglect the present time, but prepare for the coming of our Lord.

3. I infer it is a very dangerous thing for professors or ungodly sinners to delay to provide grace for themselves before the door is shut; some it is to be feared will not regard what is laid before them, and thus pressed upon their consciences, until they cry out when it is too late, Lord, Lord, open to us. Alas, Christ now says, Open to me, and you will not, and how just will it be in him not to open to them in that day.

4. I infer, that the Lord Jesus is not so made up of mercy, but that he is just as well as merciful, he being God, all the perfections of the Godhead are in him, and when mercy is turned into fury, who can stand before him? We read of the great day of the "Wrath of God and of the Lamb."

5. We may also infer, that the false professors, or foolish virgins are in as bad a condition as profane sinners, if not worse. Certainly, their condemnation will be very great, they "must dwell with devouring fire, and with everlasting burning," Isa. xxxiii. 14.

6. We infer likewise, that some awakenings will not profit many persons, because they sleep in a secure graceless state too long; the foolish virgins were awakened, but Christ came upon them before they were provided with oil. Moreover, that some preparations and endeavours after grace are in vain, and that many will meet with sad disappointments at the last day who thought themselves in a good condition.

7. Also we may infer, that such that come to Christ too late for grace, will come too late to him for glory; and many will come to have the life of glory, that refused to come to have the life of grace.

"Watch therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of man cometh," ver. 13.

That is, neither the day nor hour of Christ's coming to us by death, nor his coming to judgment at the last day, and therefore we ought to watch and be ready.

The uncertainty of the precious day of the Lord's coming is mentioned by himself, as a motive to be ready, also the nearness of it: this was pressed by the apostles also as an argument to watchfulness, and if that was a motive to them, much more to us, to watch and be ready, since we have so many of the signs of the last days upon us; and sad it is no more enquiry is made by ministers, who are watchmen, into the prophecies relating to the fall of Babylon, and the sounding of the "seventh trumpet," and the signs of the times; because all have been mistaken in many things touching this matter, who have written of them, some despair of ever attaining to the certain knowledge of the time of the end of the wonders, and therefore will not search; as if Christ had left those mystical numbers on record for no other reason but to amuse the hearts of his people: no, certain it is that such who have wisdom, might understand and give warning to his people to be ready.

But at present I shall say no more, but thus close with this parable.

Few ministers inquire in these days about the end of the wonders.

SERMON XXVII.

For the kingdom of heaven is as a man travelling into a far country, who called his own servants, and delivered unto them all his goods.—Matt. xxv. 14, 15, &c.

1. I SHALL open the design of our Lord Christ in this parable (as I have endeavoured to do in speaking unto all other already opened.)

2. Consider and explain all the parts thereof.

3. Raise several propositions or points of doctrine from the principal matter contained therein, and distinctly prosecute them.

First, Open the scope and design of our Lord herein.

The scope of this parable.

I. It is no doubt to stir up all his servants and disciples to watchfulness.

II. to provoke them to the uttermost of their power, to improve all sorts of gifts, grace, and endowments they have received.

III. To take his disciples off from an expectation of a present, visible, glorious kingdom; for they no doubt did (for some time) expect a different kingdom at the coming of the Messiah than that which they found to be the purpose of his first coming. I must go (as if our Lord had said) a long journey into a far country to receive my kingdom, and it will be a great while before I return in all my glory, and set crowns upon your heads.

IV. His design also herein is to show that we have nothing of our own, but what we and all men have, is given unto us by the Lord Jesus Christ.

V. To show that as all men have received some talent or another from God, so he expecteth, and requires the careful and due improvement of them to his own glory, and that according to our improvements shall our rewards of grace be.

VI. To show that the non-improvement of the least talent God hath given us, will be the final cause of the condemnation of the sons of men. So much to the scope.

The chief parts of this parable are,

1. To show what is meant by the kingdom of heaven.
2. Who this man is that is said to go into a far country.
3. What may be meant by his servants.
4. What by his journey.
5. What may be meant by the talents.
6. What by his returning again.
7. And what by his calling them unto account.

First, "The kingdom of heaven is like," &c., here (as our late annotators observe) the kingdom of heaven is the œconomy of God's providence in the gospel dispensation.

"Is as a man travelling into a far country."

By the man travelling into a far country, is meant our Lord Jesus Christ, who is Lord Treasurer, and Dispenser of all the Father hath, or doth bestow upon the children of men.

"Who called his own servants."

By his servants some think are only meant the members of the visible church; but I see no reason to restrain the sense so, but that more generally all men may be hereby comprehended, both the godly and ungodly, or those in, and those out of the pale of the visible church.

The parts opened See Pool's annotations on this parable.

All men are called Christ's servants.

1. For all men may be called the servants of Christ, he is Lord of all, though most of the sons of men are unfaithful servants to him.

2. All men receive all things whatsoever they have, or do possess from Jesus Christ; and every thing is the fruit or effect of his purchase, or of his mediation, and they are either given in a way of mercy, or judgment: he gave all men their beings, their souls, and the faculties of their souls, their riches, their possessions, their time, their strength, and their days upon the earth.

3. Moreover all men must be accountable unto our Lord Jesus Christ; for all they have or do enjoy at the last day.

Secondly, yet more especially by the servants here may be meant, the members of the visible church, or such who are called into his house.

1. For these in an especial manner may be called his servants, they being called by his word and ministers into his service, to labour in his vineyard.

2. Because such do in an especial manner profess that he is their Lord and Master, or that they are his, and no more their own.

3. They are his by the Father's free donation, (though not all) "The Father gave them me," John xvii. 2.

4. His by purchase, "Ye are bought with a price, be ye not the servants of men," 1 Cor. vii. 23. Do not serve your lusts to please wicked men, or serve men in disobeying your great Master, who purchased you with his own blood.

5. They may be said to be his servants as being hired by him, which hiring denotes his winning their hearts over to him in love to serve him, though may be some had an eye to something else, viz., they pretend to serve him, but it is out of byends; it is more to serve themselves than to serve Jesus Christ.

6. They that are sincere, may be called his servants by way of resignation of themselves to him, and to his service.

"Travelling into a far country."

By the journey into a far country is meant no doubt Christ's going to heaven, or being absent as to his bodily presence from his people on earth, until he comes again at the last day.

"And delivered to them his goods," &c.

What the goods are that Christ delivered to his servants.

1. Some would have these talents intend only common gifts, exclusive of Christ's special saving grace, but for what reason they so take them I know not.

2. Some men have had strange apprehensions about these talents; one thinks the ten commandments are meant hereby; others the five books of Moses, others the five senses.

(1.) But doubtless the talents may be considered more generally, (as the servants may intend all men.) 1. The soul and all his faculties, judgment, wit, conscience, the affections, memory, and all the powers and passions of the soul, with all natural habits, human endowments, and acquired parts, learning, knowledge, and means of knowledge, together with riches, honour, and dignity, &c., for these may all be called Christ's goods, and are as talents given by him to be improved to his glory and their own good.

(2.) Also by some of these talents may be meant those spiritual gifts, which when Christ "ascended up on high, he gave to men," Eph. iv. 8. For evident it is, the great Lord divideth his goods to his servants (as our annotators note) unequally, according to his own good pleasure and sovereignty; and that not only natural light, knowledge and abilities, but also riches and honours, &c., and spiritual gifts also: and some have more, and some less than others.

(3.) And shall we think that the chiefest of all Christ's goods are not here at all meant, I mean that great gift and talent of special and saving grace; for doth not these servants among others comprehend Christ's own beloved domestic servants, and did he not give to them this choice part of his goods, which they are to improve with all faithfulness? Why should any once suppose this gift or talent not to be here comprehended?

(4.) The holy gospel and the sacred doctrine thereof, with all seasons and gracious opportunities, spiritual illuminations, convictions and operations of the Spirit, may be also comprehended by these talents, or by some of them.

(5.) Spiritual privileges, dignities, and prerogatives, which some men in the church receive from Christ above others, may also be hereby intended; some are pastors, teachers, deacons, and are made rulers in the house of God, and are not these talents given to them to improve to the glory of Jesus Christ, and profit of his church?

(6.) The holy sacraments, and all the ordinances and discipline of the house of God are also glorious talents, with an able and painful ministry, "Whether Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas, all are yours," 1 Cor. iii. 22, all as rich and glorious talents are given unto you.

Quest. "Are not all the talents of the same kind and species, though some had more, and some less, they are called pounds, also the Lord's goods, and his money," Luke xix. 12, 13.

Ans. The Arminians, (who seem to make great use of this parable, to confirm their corrupt notions) would have all the talents of the same nature or quality; viz., that they comprehend such grace as is sufficient, being improved to save every man and woman in the world, and that eternal life is entailed to the improvement of these talents; which error I shall detect before I close with this parable.

Talents not all of the same species.

For though the non-improvement of the one talent is the cause of his damnation, who had it given to him, yet the improvement of it could not, cannot save him.

These talents certainly are not all of the same species and kind, neither can they be supposed so to be; provided by the servants are meant all mankind, for,

Reasons to prove the talents are not all of the same species.

1. Have the Heathens, the Indians, or Pagans, the same talents as to species, with those talents Christ hath given to true Christians? Are the sun, moon, and stars, and works of creation and providence, or the natural light that is in their consciences, (or law of God in their hearts) of the same nature or kind with the gospel and glorious ministration thereof.

2. Is common grace of the same kind with special and saving grace?

3. If all the talents which are given unto all men, were of one and the same quality, it would follow then that God hath no special love to some men more than unto others, which is directly contrary to his blessed word.

Did not God love Jacob more and better than he loved Esau, and gave him talents that were of a far more excellent nature than those which he gave to Esau? And did not God love the offspring of Abraham, or the children of Israel better than all the people that then lived on the earth: and also give to them quite different, and more choice talents than he gave unto any other people under that dispensation?

Deut. vii. 6-8.

4. Doth not Paul say, "Having then gifts differing according to the grace that is given to us," Rom. xii. 6. Grace differs from other spiritual gifts, and though some gifts may not differ in their quality in one respect, yet true and saving grace is a more excellent way, or far exceeds all gifts, howsoever different they may seem to be in themselves.

5. If all men have received the same talents with true believers; then all mankind have received the Holy Spirit, which our Lord Jesus Christ says "the world cannot receive," John xiv. 17. And Paul saith, that "the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit, neither can he know them," 1 Cor. ii. 14.

6. If the talents which Christ hath given to all men, are of one and the same nature or kind, then all men have received true grace, as well as true believers; and if so, then it will follow all people shall be saved, for I challenge all men in the world to give an instance of any one person that received true grace, who hid it, or totally neglected the improvement thereof, and so perished eternally; and if a man may receive saving grace, and yet be damned, let it not be called saving grace any more.

7. If all the talents are of one and the same kind, and salvation depends upon the improvement of these talents, then eternal life is not of the free-grace of God, nor the gift of God, but it is of man's free-will, or wrought out as the reward of man's own labour, pains, and improvements, and so he who is saved hath wherewith to glory or boast, but in our salvation all boasting is utterly excluded, Rom. iii. 27.

I must needs confess (could I believe with some men) that none of these talents do consist of saving grace, or comprehend the Holy Spirit and graces thereof, then they may be all one kind, namely natural, acquired, or common gifts, which I call one and the same as to quality, though they may differ in some respects) because carnal men and hypocrites, or such that perish, may receive them; for howsoever gifts or talents may differ, yet I distinguish them under these two heads, viz., common and special, or spiritual gifts and saving grace.

Two sorts of different kinds of talents.

But as I have newly hinted, it may seem strange that our Lord at this time, when he speaks of giving forth his treasure, his goods, his money to the sons of men, upon his ascension or going to heaven, should not mean or refer in the least to his chiefest goods or treasure in these talents, which he is said to give, and promised to give when he went away; therefore I am of the same judgment or opinion in respect to these talents, with our late annotators: Take what they say, "I see no reason (saith he) to restrain these gifts to such that flow from Christ as Mediator, but rather choose to interpret it generally of all the gifts of God, whether of providence or grace, whereas ver. 15, it is said this man divided his goods to his servants unequally, to one five, to another two, and to another one, to every man according to his several ability. It signifies only God's unequal distribution of his gifts to the children of men, according to his own good pleasure, which is true both concerning natural parts, as wit, understanding, judgment, memory, as concerning those the Heathen call good things, as riches, honours, and dignities, under which notion also come all acquired habits or endowments, such as learning, knowledge, moral habits, &c., which though acquired are gifts, because it is the same God who gives us power to get wealth, as Moses speaks, who gives men power also to get knowledge, Deut. viii. 18, and upon study and meditation to comprehend the nature and causes of things—or the gifts of more special Providence, or distinguishing grace," &c. They bring in special divine and distinguishing grace are here comprehended, &c.

"And after a long time the Lord of those servants comes to reckon with them," ver. 19.

By this great man's coming again to reckon with his servants, is meant our Lord's coming at the end of the world to judge all mankind, both the quick and the dead. Christ, my brethren, will come again, he will return, though the time seems long; this denotes his descension, as his going a long journey into a far country, denoted his ascension up into heaven: "This same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven," Acts i. 11. That is,

1. Visibly: "Every eye shall see him," Rev. i. 7.

2. In a cloud.

3. By his own power.

4. With the like majesty.

5. With the same body, though more glorious, for he shall come in the glory of the Father with all the holy angels.

And then he will reckon with these servants, (i. e.,) he will call them all to an account about the improvement, or the non-improvement of those talents given to them. Now, since the scripture saith, all men shall be brought before the judgment seat of Christ, to give an account unto him! and here is no mention made of any that he will reckon with, but these servants; I conclude, these servants include, or comprehend all mankind.

APPLICATION.

1. We infer from hence, that all good gifts, or whatsoever any have received or do possess, they received it from the Lord Jesus Christ; "What hast thou which thou hast not received?" 1 Cor. iv. 7, what of natural or spiritual abilities? it is applicable to all good things, and it is according to Christ's gift, or his giving, that one man differs from another; if one hath saving grace, saving knowledge, or understands the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven, it is because that grace, that light and knowledge is given to him, which may not be given to another: "Unto you it is given to know the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven, but to them it is not given," Matt. xiii. 11. Many have the gospel in the notion, or history of it, and they can preach it to others; talk and discourse about it, but have no saving or experimental knowledge of the mysterious power and efficacy of it upon their own hearts: "I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, because thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes. Even so Father, for so it seems good in thy sight," Matt. xi. 25, 26. How absurd is it for any to affirm, all receive like talents, as to their nature or quality, or that men may by improvement of common light, and the means of grace God affords them, gain saving or special grace; no, no, "it is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that sheweth mercy," Rom. ix. 16. God gives to every one according unto his own sovereign will and pleasure.

True, God directeth men to improve all means of light, grace, and knowledge, but an heart and power to do it is as much the gift of God as the means itself, or else it is not God that makes the difference which is in one from another; nor is it of God's free grace, but of man's free will: "God opened Lydia's heart, that she attended upon what Paul preached," Acts xvi. 14.

2. We infer, that some men receive not only more than others, but also that which is far better as to its kind or quality; some have more riches, more honours, greater dignity; some receive more common light and knowledge, have larger souls, or greater capacities than others, and some have more spiritual knowledge, greater spiritual gifts, and some have more divine and special grace; it is as God is pleased to give to every man.

3. We may also infer from hence, that such who do receive not only common gifts, common light and knowledge, but also the special grace of God, they do carefully improve those talents, though not all with like care and faithfulness; for though he that received the five, and he that received the two, are said proportionably to make improvement, yet we are not to think thereby, that all that are faithful servants, or that are true Christians, do with like diligence, care, and faithfulness acquit themselves! parables thus run not on all four, yet it cannot be denied, that any person who receives the talent of saving grace, utterly and finally neglecteth the improvement thereof, so as to be found at the last day a wicked and slothful servant; for then it would follow, that true believers may totally and finally fall away from grace, which is a grand error for any to affirm.

Neither are we to conclude from this parable, that always such who have most given to them, do make the best improvement of them; for as common experience proves the contrary, so our Saviour shows that some are faithful in the least, and others in the most.

4. We may also learn from hence, that according to the nature and quantity of those talents, Jesus Christ is pleased to bestow upon all persons, he expecteth their utmost improvement of them, where he gives much, the improvement of much.

They that have store of earthly riches, small improvement of them is not sufficient, perhaps a man of small parts, knowledge, and ability, may be more useful, or do more good than he which hath received far greater parts, or more knowledge, and abilities, and so may he that hath received but a small portion of earthly riches, he may give more to the poor saints, or to support the ministry and common interest of Christ, than some who are very rich, or that have much of the world; and this indeed to our sorrow on the one hand we have often seen, which as it is a high commendation in the one sort, so it is a great shame to the other. How did our Lord praise or commend the poor widow, who cast into the treasure two mites, even all her substance, he declared that she had done more than them all, though some of them might cast in great sums out of their vast stocks.

5. Moreover, we infer, that he (or such) that received but one talent, who did not improve that one, that one talent could not be a talent of saving grace; because no man that ever did receive a talent of saving grace, ever proved a wicked and slothful servant, and so perished for ever.

6. Object. Did not the Lord design good to him to whom he gave but one talent? and was he not capable to improve that one? if neither of these be granted, it will follow that he designed the greatest evil unto him?

1. Answ. I answer, No doubt but his Lord did design good to him, for God is good to all, he out of his common goodness imparts his blessings and good things to all men; the sun and showers that fall from heaven, and fruitful seasons, are blessings God bestows upon all mankind, and this for their good, his tender mercy is over all his works.

But there is not like good things given to all, nor are all good things that God gives designed to the same end, nor do they proceed from him as the effects of the same love; certainly there was in God a more special and peculiar love to some from everlasting than to others; and so his design in giving his Spirit, his grace, his special grace to some, was for a higher good to them, than ever he designed in giving to others; the great Turk hath vast dominions, grandeur, and riches, and God gives men of the world their portion in this life. Besides, who can frustrate God in his designs and purposes? but if God in giving the gospel to many thousands, designed absolutely to effect the salvation of them all, but the wills of some complying not, his design is frustrated, as if the will of men may contradict God's will in his absolute designs and purposes.

2. We readily grant, that he who receives but one talent, may and ought to improve it, and shall be condemned for the non improvement thereof, he not being faithful in that which was least.

6. Yet this ought always to be granted, viz., that a heart to improve each talent, which God is pleased to give to any, is wholly from God, it is given to us by him as much as the talent itself: "For he worketh in us both to will and to do of his good pleasure," Phil. ii. 13. God worketh not only by suasions to gain our assent, but by a special energy effecting what he would have us to do, in a victorious and efficacious manner, or powerfully inclining the wills of his elect; for otherwise they would resist all the motions of his Spirit, and all arguments or suasions would be as ineffectual, as a man may use to persuade a dead man to rise out of the grave. God taketh away the "heart of stone, and gives a heart of flesh," Ezek. xi. 19. ch. xxxvi. 26, causing light to shine out of darkness, and so renewing the will, and destroying the enmity that is therein; by which it comes to pass we choose that which is good, and attend upon the word of God, and are helped to improve those talents God hath given to us. It is not (as one observes) that man may only be able to will, and able to do, but God worketh in us both to will and to do, which connotes the very act itself: thought to will is our act, as to live is our life. Lazarus lived (after he was dead) and the life he had was his life, but Christ gave it to him in a supernatural and miraculous manner; so we will, act, and do by virtue of the same almighty Power in all things that are truly and spiritually good.

SERMON XXVIII.

Who called his servants, and delivered to them his goods, &c.—Matt. xxv. 14, 15.

WE have opened divers parts of the beginning of this parable, and have showed that the talents are not all of one kind, or of the same species; what though talents given out by a lord to his servants are all of one species, all that ever wrote on parables, confess they run not always so on all four, that in every thing there must be an exact parity; for such who affirm that, will run into great errors and absurdities.

Parables of ten run not on all four.

But to proceed, from the exposition I have given you of the last day, I shall now proceed to note one or two points of doctrine, as necessarily rising therefrom.

Doct. That God doth not give to all men talents alike, neither in respect of the quality nor quantity of them.

He that shall be so bold as to deny the truth of this proposition, shows no small ignorance, because the truth thereof (as to matter of fact) the whole world may daily see most evident before their eyes, yet to put it out of doubt.

1. I shall endeavour clearly to prove this great truth.

2. Give some reasons why the Lord doth this.

I shall prove it. Pray did not God give more and better talents unto Abraham, than he gave to multitudes in his days? also,

Did not the Lord give him more light and knowledge in divine things, than to thousands; the generality of the world in his days had no more knowledge of God, so far as we can gather, but what the light of natural conscience by the help of the things of the visible creation, and common providences of God discovered to them. But God called him out of the idolatrous world, and in a supernatural manner revealed himself unto him, and gave himself to him to be his God, and entered into covenant with him and all his true spiritual seed, giving by free promise an assurance of Jesus Christ, who should be born of his seed, and eternal life through the same blessed Jesus; was not this a different talent in specie, better in quality, and more in quantity, than he gave to the rest of mankind?

For

1. Had not Abraham special grace given to him, or the faith of God's elect, which is a most precious thing in respect of the nature thereof?

Did not God give him a special interest in himself: "Fear not, Abraham, I am thy shield and thy exceeding great reward," Gen. xv. 11. Did God give himself to all the people of the world in that sense in Abraham's days? No, none dare affirm, that he did give that talent, that promise, that covenant, that grace, nor that special interest in himself, but to a few of his natural seed, even to none of them, but the elect that were among them only.

2. Did God give Christ or the knowledge of Christ, (to come and to suffer death for his elect seed) to all people then. "Your father Abraham rejoiced to see my day, and he saw it (saith the Lord) and was glad," John viii. 56. He saw my coming in the flesh, and my dying for his sins on the cross, and the publication of the gospel in all nations, that in me all that believe may be blessed.

3. Did not God also give greater talents, yea, better in kind, and more in quantity, to all his natural seed, than he gave to all other nations and people of the earth. For which shows that covenant made with them, as so considered, was not the covenant of grace, for that was only by free promise, and only made to the true seed who were heirs of the special promise, and could not be disinherited without God's violation of his word and oath to Abraham, and to all them in him who were ordained unto eternal life, as the apostle proves.

1. Did not God enter into a legal, external and relative covenant with Abraham's natural seed, as such, and gave them the promise of the land of Canaan, and the rite of circumcision to all his male children that sprang from his loins by Isaac, as a sign or token of that covenant upon their performance of the federal conditions proposed to them, unto which they subscribed or restipulated, and engaged to perform on their parts: for evident it is that the covenant God made with his natural or fleshly seed as such, was upon mutual restipulation, they being obliged to discharge the federal conditions, on pain of being cut off;

2. Did not God give to the natural seed of Abraham his holy and visible worship, and constituted them his own visible church, and gave them his laws and ordinances? Were not these things the Lord's goods, or talents given to them his servants, and were not they different in nature, kind, or quality to all whatsoever he gave to any other people of the world at that time?

III. Did not God give to Isaac more, and better talents, and quite different, or of a contrary species to those he gave to Ishmael! Did God give and confirm the covenant of grace to Ishmael, or give him his saving grace, and the promise of himself, which precious talents he gave to Isaac? or did God give to Esau the same talents in kind or specie which he gave to Jacob? the one had the blessings of the fat things of the earth, the other he gave the fat things of the covenant of grace, and of eternal glory in heaven.

The Jews or people of Israel had talents that differed in specie.

IV. And when we come to Moses' days, did not God give to the whole people of Israel, talents different in kind to any he gave to the Gentile nations? or doth not the true church state and visible worship of God, and all the laws and ordinances of God under that dispensation, differ in kind from what the Heathen world received for near two thousand years? "What people have laws and statutes so righteous as this law is?" Deut. iv. 8. "Or what nation is so great, who hath God so nigh unto him, as the Lord our God is in all things that we call upon him for?" ver. 7. Were these talents, given to God's servants, or no talents? and if talents, and the Lord's goods, how different were they from what any other people had! "He showeth his word unto Jacob, his statutes and his judgments to Israel,—he hath not dealt so with any nation, as for his judgments they have not known them. Praise ye the Lord," Psal. cxlvii. 19, 20.

Moreover, doth not Paul say upon this very account the Jews had the advantage of the Gentiles, viz., "Because unto them were committed the oracles of God," Rom. iii. 2.—And not only so (for we will admit the ten commandments do not differ in kind to the law or light within, or law of God written in the hearts of all mankind.) "But unto them pertaineth the adoption, and the glory, and the covenants, and the giving of the law, the service of God, and the promises," Rom. ix. 4. Sure many of these were different talents, or of another kind to those the Gentiles had.

IV. Let us come unto the New Testament times. Pray did not our Lord give talents of a quite different nature to his disciples, than any he gave to others? and were they not quite of another kind, and of a far more excellent quality than what Christ gave to such who refused to be his disciples? "It is given to you to know the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven, but to them it is not given." And yet will any affirm the talents to all men are of the same species, or kind?

2. Did not the Lord Jesus give the Holy Spirit unto those servants? or is the Holy Ghost in its blessed saving operations and influences thereof given to all men? Have all a spiritual vital principle in them, or union with Christ? are all renewed and sanctified? The Spirit and the graces of the Spirit certainly are talents given to some of Christ's servants, even to all that are his faithful servants, and are these the same in nature or quality with what is given in common to all men?

The Holy Spirit and saving grace are talents given to some.

V. To come to matter of fact in our days.

I. Hath not God given quite different talents to some nations than what he hath at this present time given to others, or to the Pagan, Mahometau, and antichristian world? Have they the gospel given to them as England hath? or is the gospel no talent given to some of God's servants? if a talent, a great talent, doth it not differ in specie to those talents God hath given to the Heathen world? O what nation hath such light of the gospel, such clear knowledge of Christ, and of gospel truths and mysteries? as also sweet and peaceable seasons of worship, as well as the gospel church, and true gospel worship and holy ordinances.

England hath talents different from most nations of the world.

2. Moreover, doth not God give better talents (excelling in their nature or quality) to some people in England and other nations, than he gives to many who dwell here? All perhaps have the gospel, but all have it not (in many parts and corners of this nation) in that clear revelation of it, as some cities and towns have of it. Besides, where the gospel is clearly and powerfully preached, yet many have it but in word only; and indeed none but the elect have it in the power of it; for if it is by the power of the gospel coming upon men's souls, the elect are known from others; then what I say clearly follows. And that this is a great truth, see what the apostle saith. "Knowing brethren beloved, your election of God, for our gospel came not unto you in word only, but also in power, and in much assurance," &c., 1 Thess. i. 4, 5. By this Paul knew they were elected. Now is not that divine power God puts forth upon the souls of men a quite different thing, and a far greater blessing, than to have the gospel in word only? Multitudes have the outward word, but few have the inward power. Though many have the gospel of grace, yet but a few have the grace of the gospel as a talent given unto them.

VI. To sum up the whole, to prove all men have not talents of the same species, consider, God gives not himself, his Son, his Spirit, his saving grace, light and knowledge unto all; God gives not a new heart, pardon and justification, adoption, communion, peace, true consolation unto all: now since these are our master's goods or talents given to some which so vastly differ from all other talents whatsoever, I infer the talents are not all of one species or kind. But to proceed, Secondly, I shall give you the reasons of this, or show you why God gives talents that differ in specie or quality to others, to some servants only.

1. Because God loves some persons better than others, shall one dare to say that God loved from eternity all men alike, or that it is only for some men's doing well that causeth him to love them better than others; the consequences of such an error all men may see are abominable.

But to prove this, that it is from his love to some that he gives better things, and blessings unto them. Pray what was the cause that Joseph gave to Benjamin a double mess? was it not because he loved him better than his other brethren? Even so God loves some with an everlasting, with a special and peculiar love. "Yea, I have loved thee with an everlasting love, therefore with loving-kindness I have drawn thee," Jer. xxxi. 3. If God loved all nations, or all persons in all nations alike, no doubt but he would bestow like talents of peculiar and special blessings upon them, or if not the same in quantity, yet the same kind or quality; why had Jacob different blessings from Esau? is it not positively said, "Jacob have I loved, and Esau have I hated?" And was it because Jacob had done something to procure the love of God? No, "For the children being not yet born, neither had done any good or evil, that the purpose of God according to election might stand, not of works, but of him that calleth." Not of works, that is, not for any works foreseen in Jacob, but merely because God loved him. And also why did God give those peculiar talents to the people of Israel? The Lord showeth, it was not from anything he saw in them, but because he loved them. "He loves and hath mercy on whom he will have mercy," Rom. ix. 18.

Deut. vii. 6,
7, 8.
Eph. i. 4.

2ndly. Because as God loved some with a special love, so them he also elected, or choose to be a holy people, or "ordained to eternal life," Acts xiii. 48; this is the prime and efficient cause of all special favours and spiritual blessings any receive. "Whom he foreknew or approved of, or loved, he predestinated to be conformable to the image of his Son, and whom he predestinated them he also called," &c. Rom. viii. 26, 30. These he gives the choicest and richest treasure and talents unto.

3rdly. Because Jesus Christ died only to save some, and not all people in the world. "His name shall be called Jesus, because he shall save his people from their sins," Matt. i. 21. His people, that is God's elect. "Thine they were, and thou gavest them to me," John xvii. 6; and it was for these he died: "I lay down my life for my sheep," John x. 15. "He purchased the church with his own blood," Acts. xx. 28. If God gave Christ, which is the greater gift for all men, then he would give the lesser gifts to all men; all should then have equal talents in kind or quality, even all things tending to make them truly happy; this is the apostle's argument. "For if when we were sinners we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son, much more being reconciled we shall be saved by his life," Rom. v. 10. That is, through his intercession, who obtains all grace, strength, and whatsoever his elect want, and this he will give much more. What God give Christ to die in the stead of all! what a gift is that! and will he not give the gospel to multitudes of them, nor give his Spirit nor faith to apply the atonement! Sirs, according to Arminian notions, Paul was out, he was mistaken; God may be reconciled to all mankind by the death of his Son, he doth give the greater, but withholds the lesser. But see how our apostle again confutes their notion, "He that spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all, how shall he not with him freely give us all things?" Rom. viii. 32. That is, all things "that pertain to life and godliness," 2 Pet. i. 3.

If all spiritual gifts and peculiar talents were purchased at so dear a rate for all, all shall have them, because God is just and faithful; and will Christ give his life to save such that he will not give his Spirit unto to renew them: what, give a million for an estate, and not part with ten pounds to take it up?

4. If Christ paid every sinner's debts, and bore the wrath of God for them, or in their stead and room, it would not be just and righteous in God to let them perish in hell to satisfy (if that could do it) divine justice, and yet justice fully satisfied before for all their sins, this is strange. I hope they do not deny the satisfaction Christ made, was God only reconcilable by the death of his Son, who is it then, or what is it that reconciles him? is it the creature's repentance, faith and obedience? if so, the creature hath great part of the glory of his own salvation, nor is sin so great an evil as the word of God declares, if imperfect repentance, faith and obedience can satisfy divine justice, or reconcile sinners to God; but pray is not the making the atonement one thing, and the application of it another. We do not say any sinner is actually discharged without faith or the work of the Spirit in the application of Christ's blood; but to say faith satisfies or reconciles us unto God, is very absurd, and tends to degrade or lessen the merits or satisfaction of Christ.

5. Would not the Holy Spirit work grace in all, if Christ died for all, with an intention to save all; the love of the Father in election, the love of the Son in redemption, and the love of the Holy Spirit in application and renovation, are of equal extent, being but one and the same God.

The Spirit would apply Christ's blood to all if Christ died to save all.

4thly. All have not talents alike, but some have not only more but better in kind or quality, because God acts only in a way of sovereignty in the distribution of his talents, even according to the good pleasure of his will. "May I not do what I will with my own?" &c., Matt. xx. 14. Shall God have less power to dispose of his favours and rich treasure than men have to distribute their favours and bounty? Must he because he will redeem mankind, redeem the fallen angels also? or because Christ died for some, must he die for all Adam's offspring? or because some have the gospel preached to them, must all have it preached to them? must a rich man because he gives five pounds a piece to a hundred widows, give as much to all widows in the whole kingdom, or else be counted unjust?

See the parable opened of the householder hiring servants in his vineyard.

But because I have more largely opened the nature of God's sovereignty in speaking to that parable, Matt. xx. 12, &c., I shall say no more to it here.

APPLICATION.

1. How doth this reprove them that foolishly affirm the talents are all of one kind that God gives to men, because they may be so that a lord may give to his earthly servants, as if there were no disparities in parables; besides, to argue from a parable remote especially from the scope of it, shows great weakness.

Obj. But doth not this parable say, the Lord gave to every man according to his ability?

Answ. And what of this? doth it follow from thence, that every man hath like spiritual talents, as men may have to improve external talents; this is to strain the parable beyond the scope of it also.

2. God gives to the heathen talents according to their abilities to improve; are not they able to improve their natural light and knowledge? (Some of them formerly seemed thus to do) and to such to whom God gives the ministration of the Gospel, he requires improvements according to their light and advantages. So to them that God gives special grace, he gives assistance or ability unto, to improve that grace.

Every one hath talents according to their abilities to improve them, but I know no man that is dead is able to improve any talent; and such who are spiritually dead in sins, are not able to improve any spiritual talent to God's glory, nor to his own profit, until he is quickened by Jesus Christ. Men may act like men, and improve natural and external powers, and shine in morality, but no man can improve grace nor gracious habits before grace is implanted in his heart, and let no man say that God is obliged to give all men these divine habits, or bestow his Spirit upon all, that all may have equal abilities; as Christians, as they may in some sense be said to have considered as men. But more to this hereafter, when we come to that part of the parable.

3. How doth this also tend to reprove such that attribute all to the will of man, and that all men may have eternal life by improving those talents God hath given to them though they never believe in Christ, nor know him, nor are born again; and that affirm, grace depends upon the improvement of nature, and that God will never bestow the greater gift on such that improve not lesser gifts.

4. We may also infer, that all improvements of the talents of special grace, is as much of grace as the talent or stock itself, or that what we do, or will to do, is as much from God (or by his immediate assistance) as grace itself.

Olij. But how can God be just if he act in a way of sovereignty, and gives not to all alike?

1. Ans. Can any man be charged for bestowing his favours, his gifts, and bounty as he pleaseth!

2. God is just, because he is no man's debtor, to whom is God obliged? Moreover, to deny his sovereignty is to eclipse his glory, and cast contempt upon his holy majesty; is not his word true? and doth not that say, "He hath mercy upon whom he will have mercy, and whom he will he hardeneth," Rom. ix. 8.

3. There was no constraint laid upon God, to save any man, and do not all deserve his wrath for ever? Why will God save man, and not fallen angels? or, why us and not others.

4. All men naturally are undeserving creatures, and therefore if God should cast off all mankind, and not show mercy unto any, he would be righteous, and no man could charge him with injustice, or with doing him any wrong; suppose that thousands of men should rise in rebellion against their lawful sovereign, and conspire to dethrone, nay, murder him, and yet he should pardon some of them, and execute the rest, is he unjust in saving of a few, because he did not extend his favour and compassion unto them all.

5. God is just in his distributions of his favours to some only, and manifesting his displeasure on the rest, because there are none who perish in their sins, that improved according to their abilities the talents God gave unto them; for where is the person that ever did to the uttermost of his power live up to that light, knowledge, and abilities they received from the Lord.

6. God's doing more for some than for others, makes not the state of such he passeth by worse than it was, (they were condemned before) though it makes the state of those he shows favour unto better; for did not God out of sovereign grace pluck some out of the fire by his almighty power, every soul of man would have perished for ever.

Secondly, How should the consideration of this raise our hearts in praises unto God, for casting our lot in England, or in a land where the blessed gospel is preached; we might have been born in India or in Turkey, and trained up either in Paganism or Mahometism, or in some popish country where nothing but idolatry and hellish darkness predominates, and where the wretched people think it is their duty to give divine adoration to idols, even to a wafer cake.

But much more cause have believers to bless the Lord, who hath given them to know the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven, Matt. xiii. 11. And to work grace in their hearts, or in giving his Spirit unto them, which he hath not given to many others, though they have the gospel preached unto them; therefore I may say as our Saviour did to his disciples in the like case: "Blessed are your eyes, for they see, and your ears, for they hear," Matt. xiii. 16. All the spiritual good we receive is alone an act of God's sovereign love and favour to us; we cannot say it is because we did more than others, or deserve more than others, that God gives to us two talents, or five, and to others but one, it is as the great Lord pleaseth.

Thirdly, This therefore may reprove them that say, God loves all men alike; nay, that he loved Judas as much as Peter, until by his sin he incurred his displeasure. Was not Peter's sin very great in denying his master, and in swearing he did not know him? did he not deserve to be cast off for ever, as well as Judas? and was it not because of that special love God bore to the one above the other, that one hath repentance given to him, and the other had not, but died in his sin, that he might go to his own place? If Peter was upright hearted, and not the other, who gave him that heart? Is not a new, a sincere and an upright heart given of God? The hearts of all men naturally are only evil and full of hypocrisy, and did not God restrain Satan, would he not enter into every man's heart, and stir them up to commit the highest acts of wickedness?

4thly, Therefore in the last place, let us take heed who differ from others, to ascribe it wholly to the free grace of God: "for what have we which we have not received," 1 Cor. iv. 7. And if we have received it from God, let us not glory as if we had not received it of him, but as the fruits and effects of our own power and improvements, or for doing more and better than others.

SERMON XXIX.

And to one he gave five talents, to another two, and to another one.—And then he that had received the five talents went and traded with the same, and made them other five talents.—Matt. xxv. 15, 16.

FROM hence note,

Doct. That the children of men, who are called Christ's servants, are traders, and they ought with their utmost diligence to improve their talents, or their Lord's money.

As I hinted, I shall—1. Lay down one or two explanatory propositions, the better to open this truth.

2. Show that all are traders, and ought to improve their talents.

3. Show that Christ's own household servants are entrusted with his most choicest treasure.

I shall begin with the first of these general heads.

Proposit. That all mankind may be said to be Christ's servants, and are entrusted with some of his goods, or with one or more talents.

Some restrain the servants here only to the special servants of Christ, namely to church members.

Christ is is Lord of all, all owe subjection to him.

But this I think ought not to be done, for the reasons following.

1. Because Jesus Christ is Lord of all, and all men ought to acknowledge his dominion and sovereignty over them, and to submit to his authority: "as thou hast given him power over all flesh," John xvii. 2. Even over unbelievers, as well as over believers, to judge and to condemn them that believe not, as well as to justify them that do believe in his name. All things, all persons are put under his feet, and all shall "bow the knees to him, and confess Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father," Phil. ii. 10, 11. There is no difference between the Jew and the Greek, for the same Lord over all is rich unto all that call upon him," Rom. x. 12.

2ndly, Because all receive (or have received) one or more talents from the Lord Jesus Christ, if not as he is Mediator, yet as he is considered Creator: will any say the heathen have not so much as received one talent, though as I hinted one talent may be in quantity either more or less; for parables are not to be strained, as some suppose, or that a talent must be so much and no more, and all talents of the same quality also.

What talent the pagan world hath received.

The Gentiles have the law written in their hearts, the very same as to the substance of it as the Jews had in tables of stone, and afterwards in a book. Christ as Creator is the "true light, which lighteneth every man that cometh into the world," John i. 9. What reason, understanding, knowledge or light any have, they receive it from the Word, "who was in the beginning with God, and all things were made by him," ver. 2, 3.

Is not rain, fruitful seasons, and all other good things of this world, a talent given to mankind by the blessed God: he gives the poor heathen his gold, silver, and rich gums, and precious spices, with vast kingdoms to possess? And do not all these things amount so much as unto one talent? or are not these things given to men to be improved to their Master's use? Moreover he gives this sort the talent of trade and outward commerce and traffic with Christians.

3dly, All have received one or more talents from Christ, because they shall all be called to an account by him: at the last day when he comes to judgment, will he only call professors or church members to give an account to him? "He shall judge the secrets of all men," Rom. ii. 16.

4thly, And for the non-improvement of those talents, gift or gifts men have received, he will condemn them, as this parable and other scriptures clearly show.

2. Proposit. That according to the nature or quality of that talent or talents men have received, such is and will be the nature of the improvement thereof; it cannot be improved to things of a higher or different nature to the principle stock itself.

To open what I mean, consider—1. That he that hath no more than the light of nature, by the highest improvement thereof, he can arrive but to mere natural knowledge, or to simple morality, he cannot attain thereby to the supernatural knowledge of God in Jesus Christ, though he may excel many in mere natural religion, or moral virtue, as some of the heathens of old did.

The improvement of talents of the same species with the talents themselves.

2. So he to whom God gives the riches of this world, and not spiritual riches or the talents of grace and spiritual gifts, by the improvement of their outward riches (to the benefit of the commonwealth ; or to the profit and comfort of the poor) though they cannot obtain to true grace and eternal life, yet they may gain thereby the character of good and charitable men, and excel others in morality and human honour, and attain and keep a good conscience towards men.

3. So they that have natural gifts, and attain acquired parts, cannot arrive to true and saving grace by the improvement of such gifts and parts, though they may thereby increase in further knowledge of those things : as such that study any art or science, by improvement may grow more acute, and excel others in those arts or sciences. But, my brethren, the knowledge of the tongues, of logic, &c., or philosophical learning, cannot bring men to the saving knowledge of God and Jesus Christ : "What man knoweth the things of a man save the spirit of a man that is in him ; even so the things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit," 1 Cor. ii. 11.

That which I drive at (1) is this, viz., that the seed of true grace must be first given as a talent ; nay, every grace of the Spirit must be infused into the souls of such that are truly gracious, before they can improve true grace (or any one of the graces of the Spirit.)

(2) And that no improvements of any common talents or gifts can procure the special grace of God, or be improved to any other talent differing from their own species or qualities. And this brings me to the next thing.

4thly. That such that God hath given special gifts and saving grace unto, can only improve those gifts and precious graces to that high and most noble end for which they were given, viz., the glory of God ; and to an increase of more true spiritual knowledge of God and Jesus Christ, and growth in grace, and so to a further meetness for eternal life : in a word, according to the quality or nature of the principal stock or talents received at first, such is the nature or quality of the improvement made of them. Such as is the one talent, (as to its nature or kind, such is the nature of the improvement thereof, and so of the two talents, &c.

And that this is so, it clearly appears, 1. Because the effect cannot exceed the cause ; thorns cannot produce grapes, nor thistles figs : do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles ? Every kind begets its own nature or kind.

2. Because special grace is God's special gift ; the seed and habit of all grace is first given as a stock to trade with, and to improve, and is not obtained by man's natural industry or improvement of common gifts ; the Holy Spirit must be first received as seed sown in our hearts, before grace can grow in us : a man may plow and plow again, and manure his land long enough (if he sows it not) before any corn grow up : "The fruit of the Spirit is Gal. v. 22. love, joy, peace, long-suffering, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance. These things are not the fruits of nature, nor the product of man's natural improvements, or any thing he can do.

Object. Do not men obtain these graces by improving the gospel, or the means of grace, &c.

1. Answ. The outward means ought to be improved ; God having appointed it in order to our obtaining grace ; but no man by the best industry he can use in the improvement of the outward means, or the preaching of the gospel can obtain saving grace ; no, that is the gift of God alone, and peculiar to himself, or his own prerogative to bestow upon whom he pleaseth ; it is only to them the gospel comes in power unto, (by the mighty working of the Spirit) that grace is wrought in the hearts of some.

Do any think God is obliged to give special grace to them that improve common grace ; or to give the greater, because they improve the lesser ? God is a free agent, and though he will, and sometimes doth bless the means, and also ties us to the improvement of it, yet he works how he pleaseth, he is not tied to it ; if grace be the simple product of our improvement with God's common blessings ; or as he blesseth the labour of the industrious husbandman, then we have somewhat to boast of or glory in ; but we have nothing to boast of or glory in, we cannot say grace is the product of our labour and industry, but simply the free gift of God.

2. Because the saving knowledge of Christ is not, cannot be revealed or attained to, but in a supernatural way by the Holy Ghost ; it is not had by the improvement of man's reason, or man's-wisdom, industry, or what outward means soever God hath or doth afford to men in common : "And Jesus answered and said unto him, blessed art thou Simon Bar-Jona, for flesh and blood hath not revealed this unto thee, but my Father that is in heaven," Matt. xvi. 1. By flesh and blood our Lord meaneth the reason, wisdom, learning, and industry of man, he attains not the true knowledge of Christ by learning or by tradition, or any dictates from man and improvements he himself can make, through the help of all his natural powers or

God is obliged to none of his creatures.

No attaining to the true knowledge of Christ but by revelation.

common influences of the Spirit, but by the immediate and special operations and illuminations of the Spirit; it is God who this way begets a full assent and consent and persuasion of the truth made known to us. Yet is not the word preached useless, because God makes use of it as an instrument of his power, by which ordinarily he works faith and all grace in our souls.

3. Because grace in our hearts is called the image of God, and also the forming of Christ in our souls, and a creation work, and therefore peculiar unto God himself; for we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus to good works, which God hath ordained that we should walk in them," Eph. ii. 10. Can we by our industry and any power of our own, form Christ in our souls, and create the image of God therein, who cannot form a fly or a worm? and from hence it appears it is the free gift of God, and his peculiar workmanship, let him work how he pleaseth.

And how absurd then is it for any to assert this is the product of man's own improvements of common light and means of grace.

Obj. How can these things be as you say, (i. e.,) that all improvements of talents are of the same species or nature of the principle and original stock? do not some merchants trade in toys, and get by trading gold, pearl, &c., or things of a different species?

Ans. It is a mistake, those things merchants venture to sea with, though in one respect they are, it is true, of different species to the things they gain by trading, yet in the sense I speak of, they are all of one and the same species, viz., all earthly and corruptible things, for here are generally but two sorts of talents, or things that differ in specie, (i. e.,) all are either earthly, or heavenly, common or special.

Obj. To what purpose then is it for men to attend upon the means with the greatest care and diligence, as praying, hearing? &c.,

Why we must attend upon the outward means.

1. Answ. I told you before, because this is the way God hath ordained, and commanded us to wait upon him in, and which commonly he powerfully blesseth to that great end I speak of; shall not we hear the word when required so to do? we are to "fill the water-pots full of water," John ii. 7. But that contributes nothing to the turning of that water into wine; no, that is the work of Christ alone, shall not we pray for that grace or talent, which is the gift of God; indeed could it be obtained or procured by our industry or improvements, there was not altogether that need and reason that we should cry unto God for it.

2. When God gives us his Spirit he gives us himself; we can do nothing which either can deserve or procure such a gift, or oblige God to bestow it upon us; besides a new heart, the Spirit, grace, and God to be our God, are all contained in God's absolute promises, not made upon any federal conditions or previous improvements made by us, or qualifications in us, so much as to prepare us for them. What did the thief on the cross, or Paul for the obtaining the grace they received? who can oblige God, or plead for such a talent as saving grace is, or plead for it, for the sake of any thing wretched sinners can do.

3. Is it not said, that "it is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that sheweth mercy?" Rom. ix. 16. It is not of our good desires, good inclinations, nor our diligent hearing, praying, nor of our highest improvements, or from any foresight God had of any of these things; no, but of the mere love and mercy, and good pleasure of God. This text, as our late annotators note, wounds Pelagians under the fifth rib: God is a debtor to no man, what are all our poor, lame and imperfect endeavours?

U S E.

1. By way of reprehension to such who hold Arminian and Pelagian errors, who affirm that men by their improvements of common grace, common light, and knowledge may obtain to the true and saving grace of God; nay, that God is obliged to give that grace to them that so do, even Christ and all the blessings of Christ, and charge God with injustice if he doth not bestow him and his Son on such industrious persons.

2. It may also serve to reprove them that assert, that all the talents are of one species or kind, because the talents which an earthly Lord gives out to his servants, are or may be all of one and the same kind, as if in a parable there could be no disparity.

3. It may also tend to humble sorry mankind, and cast contempt upon him, and bring down the pride and vain glory of man's will, or cast free-will into the dust, and wholly exalt free grace.

4. It may also teach poor sinners to cry to God for an original or beginning stock of special grace from God to trade withal, who would bring glory unto God, and enjoy peace in their own souls, and also stir them up to a thankful improvement of the means God directs them unto, in order to their obtaining it; and may likewise serve to excite all true believers to improve that blessed stock they have, and so add other two or five talents more unto those which they first received when they began to trade.

Secondly, all men are traders, and ought to trade and improve the talents they have received,

How all men may be said to have talents and be traders.

I shall open this parallel-wise.

1. A trader either trades with his own, or with another man's stock, whose servant he is. Now, my brethren, no man hath any stock or talent of his own, but all their talents which they are required to improve and trade withal, are the Lord's, "What hast thou which thou hast not received?" 1 Cor. iv. 7.

1. Hast thou a rational soul, wisdom, knowledge, and great understanding? it was given unto thee by the Lord, and that soul thou oughtest to take care of, and that wisdom, knowledge and understanding, to improve to the great end he gave them to thee, and thou must be accountable unto him in this matter.

2. Hast thou riches or much wealth? it is the Lord's money, "The silver, and the gold is mine, saith the Lord," Hag. ii. 8. And again he saith, "I will take away my corn, and my flax : " Hos. ii. 9. If these things are not improved to the end they are given, the Lord will either take them away, and blast all your endeavours, or else cut the possessors of them off, only with having their portion in this world.

3. Hast thou acquired parts, great learning? this is also thy master's goods, he gave thee those faculties by which means thou wast capable to attain to such learning, and also time to arrive at it.

4. Have you the gospel, and the ministration of the word? this is also the Lord's goods, and must be improved.

5. Have you faithful ministers still continued to you, to dispense the word of life, and open the sacred mysteries of the gospel, and to feed you with knowledge and understanding, and lead you into the way of truth? why ministers are the Lord's, and you should make the best improvement of them, and put them into the best capacity you are able, to minister unto you, and submit to them, and obey them in all things in the Lord.

6. Or have you the precious talent of time, and the opportunities of time? this you are intrusted with by the Lord.

7. Or have you health, strength, and advantages to attend upon the word and means of grace above many? all this is from the Lord, and ought to be improved as he commandeth.

8. And have you spiritual gifts and saving grace? those talents you also received of the Lord, and what better talents have any servants of Christ? he doth not give these to all, no but a very few have these rich and precious talents?

9. Are you fathers or masters, and so have authority over, and entrusted with families, children, and servants? these are talents received of the Lord. Or are some of you ministers or magistrates? Certainly you are intrusted with a great talent, and the Lord looks for a due improvement of those places of trust and dignity, for we are but stewards of whatsoever we have or are entrusted with.

Secondly, Traders ought to know the worth of those commodities put into their hands, and entrusted to trade with. So every man ought to know the worth of his own soul, the worth and preciousness of their time, the worth and preciousness of the word of God, and of the worth of grace, and of all other spiritual blessings and good things; and as we should know the great worth and excellencies of spiritual things, that are traders, so likewise we should know the little worth and value of all earthly things when compared to spirituals. Or whatsoever we call our own, the little worth of earthly riches, pleasures and honours, human learning, and all acquired parts; as also the little worth of our own duties, external privileges, and inherent righteousness, in comparison of the righteousness of Christ. If we know not this, we may soon overvalue the one, and undervalue the other; and so in our dealing through ignorance be cheated and run out of all, even esteem of earthly things and riches above the riches of heaven, or human learning above the Spirit's teaching, and the gifts and graces thereof; or your own righteousness (which Paul esteemed but as dung) above "the righteousness of God which is by faith," Phil. iii. 8, 9. Some are unskilful traders, they have not wisdom to know how some commodities excel others; and so some spiritual traders through ignorance know not the worth of the truth, and other things they trade in, the worth of reconciliation, union, justification, pardon of sin, peace with God, and communion with the Father and the Son, and of that free access we have to God, or to trade with the Father in and through Jesus ; they know not the worth of ordinances, nor the worth and preciousness of the promises, and from hence refuse to trade with Jesus Christ for them. Should not merchants, jewellers, or goldsmiths know precious stones, gold and pearls? they else may be cheated, or refuse to buy when they might be greatly enriched, and so may poor mortals here also through ignorance be cheated, or refuse to buy of Christ "Gold tried in the fire," &c., Rev. iii. 18.

Thirdly. Traders must not be timorous or fearful in laying out their money ; no more should such that are traders in a spiritual sense, they should lay their strength out, spend their time freely in God's service, and part with all they have to gain the pearl of great price.

Fourthly. Traders should know where to buy, or of whom, and who to trade with ; so should spiritual traders ; they must know it is of Christ they must buy, "buy of me, &c."

1. Consider, that Jesus Christ is never without all sorts of goods, and also hath great plenty of them, he hath all things we need or can need.

All things we want are in Christ.

2. He will cheat no man, and being faithful, never sells counterfeit goods ; and so just, that he never fails, or breaks his word, or promises. "All the promises of God are yea, and amen in Christ Jesus," 2 Cor. i. 20.

3. Christ is also very rich ; it is dangerous to trade with some persons, and bad to trust them, because they may break ; but no fear of that here, for all the riches of grace and glory are his ; the Father hath put all things into his hands. Do you trade for gifts? "Christ hath received gifts for men," Eph. iv. 8. Or do you trade or seek to him for grace? "He is full of grace and truth," John i. 14. Do you trade for pardon? "He will abundantly pardon," Isa. lv. 7. Do you trade for strength? He is our strength, "He is mighty, nay, all-mighty to save," Isa. lxiii. 1. "He giveth power to the faint, and to them that have no might he increaseth strength," Isa. xl. 29. "In the Lord Jehovah is everlasting strength." Do you want counsel? He is the mighty Counsellor ; "Counsel is mine," &c., Prov. viii. 14. Do you want wisdom? "In him are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge," Col. ii. 3. "If any man lack wisdom let him ask of God that giveth liberally and upbraideth not, and it shall be given him," Jam. i. 5 ; or do you want purity and holiness, he is the fountain to wash in, and cleanse us from all filthiness, "He loved us and washed us from our sins in his own blood," Rev. i. 5. Are you sinners, and want peace with God? He hath made our peace and full reconciliation ; peace is in him, though it is given to none but to such that apply themselves to God in and by faith in him. Or do you need righteousness? "He is the Jehovah our righteousness; he is the Sun of righteousness," Mal. iv. 2. The sun is not fuller of light than Christ is full of righteousness. O who would not trade with the Lord Jesus Christ.

Fifthly, Traders must know the terms upon which they are to trade, or how to buy : some trades call for ready money, others exchange one sort of goods for others ; so poor sinners that would trade with Jesus Christ, must know on what terms they may have what they need.

Traders must know the terms how to buy goods.

(1.) It is not with money ; "Buy wine and milk without money," Isa. lv. 1, 2. Justification without any previous qualifications, or any righteousness of your own ; also it is without price, that is without money worth, you are to give nothing that hath any value or worth in it for what you receive of him, yet it is upon exchange, and therefore called a buying, but what must we exchange, or what do we receive thereupon? even "beauty for ashes, and the oil of gladness for mourning, and the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness," Isa. lxi. 3. Not that you can mourn for sin until he gives you the spirit of grace to help you to look unto him : you must part with your filthy rags, if you would be clothed with this robe of righteousness, and so will you be clothed with the garment of praise, or with joy and singing also ; though these things purchase not what we receive of him, yet we must part with all these, sell all we have, to win Christ.

Zech. xii. 10.

(2.) Indeed all things we need, are freely given of God through Jesus Christ :—"Let him that thirsteth take the water of life freely," Rev. xxii. 17. Justification freely, pardon of sin freely, for his own namesake ; for the whole design of this trade is to advance the riches of God's free grace.

Sixthly, Traders must know in whose name they must trade, and come for what they want, whether in their own or in their master's name ; it is not allowed for servants to trade in their own names ; neither perhaps should they so do would they be trusted ; so sinners and all that would trade for another world, must know whether they must come to God in their own names, or in the name of another. (1.) Not in our own names, for if we do, we shall receive nothing of God, our credit being gone, he will not trust us. (2.) We must trade in our great Master's name, the Lord Jesus Christ. "Whatsoever you ask in my name, that will I do for you," John xiv. 13. That is, upon the account of his merits, for his sake, and by means of his worth, and by the virtue of his intercession, and also by his authority, he having impowered us, or given boldness and free access unto us to come to the Father: and also in his name denotes, that we should do all to his glory, and assume none of it to ourselves, but that we should wholly labour to glorify the Son, and the Father in him.

Traders must trust, so must Christians trust Jesus Christ. Seventhly, Traders trust, or else perhaps they will have little or no trade at all, and great traders are acquainted therewith; they trust sometimes six or twelve months, so such that trade with Christ, or with God in Christ's name, and improve their talents, must trust the Lord Jesus; if you cannot trust him, and rest by faith upon him, and take his word and promises, you will receive nothing of him, neither righteousness, pardon, peace, strength, and comfort, nor salvation. What is, my brethren, believing in Christ, but trusting him, or depending upon his word and faithful promises, relying upon the sufficiency, merits, power, and faithfulness of the Lord Jesus Christ. "In him all that believe are justified from all things," Acts xiii. 39, &c. They are poor traders that must have all in hand presently paid down: some poor weak Christians, who are not rich in faith, they cannot trust God, or wait for the accomplishment of his promises. How long did the Father trust the Son, or take his word that he would come and pay him all our vast debts! and how long did Abraham trust God for the performance of his promise of giving him a son, or before the child of the promise was given. "He believed in hope against hope," Rom. iv. 18. And saith David, "In the Lord have I put my trust." "Blessed is the man that trusteth in the Lord, and whose hope the Lord is," Jer. xvii. 7. "Trust in him at all times, ye people," Psal. lxii. 8. Though the providences of God seem to cross his promises, or God seem long before we have the promise made good to us, or to his Son; yet we must trust in him, and not doubt but in due time he will perform whatsoever he hath promised. Now there are two or three things to strengthen our trusting in God.

Great security, or grounds given to us to trust in God through Christ Jesus.

1. That though we deserve nothing, can merit nothing, yet Christ hath merited all things that are needful for us, and he is deserving, God will not deny us the merits of his Son's blood.

2. God who hath promised is immutable, he changes not; he never changes his mind, nor his absolute purposes and decrees. "He will not lie to David, nor alter the thing that is gone out of his lips," Psal. lxxxix. 34, 35.

3. We have not only his promise, but his oath; this denotes that the Lord foresaw how hard it would be for us to trust or believe in him; and also it shows the wonderful condescension of God to his poor creatures. Moreover, it discovers the greatest ground for us to believe in him imaginable. Shall God not only promise but oblige himself by oath! Stand and wonder O ye heavens! See what the Psalmist saith, "once have I sworn by my holiness," &c. Again it is said, "When God made promise to Abraham, because he could swear by no greater, he swore by himself," Heb. vi. 13. An oath among men is to put matters out of all doubt, and so put an end to all strife. "Wherein God willing more abundantly to show to the heirs of promise, the immutability of his counsel, confirmed it by an oath, that by two immutable things, in which it is impossible for God to lie, we might have strong consolation, who have fled for refuge to lay hold upon the hope set before us," ver. 17, 18. That man must needs see cause strangely to reflect upon himself, that cannot trust in God, in the true God, especially when his oath is passed in the case. O what horrid unbelief is there in our hearts!

4. Because no soul whoever that trusted in the Lord missed of help and succour in the proper season, when he saw it would do them the most good. "God shall help her, and that right early." No man ever trusted in God through Jesus Christ, and waited patiently upon him, but received most sure and seasonable returns from him. Shall God lose his credit, and not be believed by his creatures? Nay, shall his own children not trust in him, and rely upon his faithfulness?

5. If God seems to delay the performance of his promises, it is to try and put our graces into exercise, to try our faith in him, and our love to him, and the grace of patience also; or else he sees we are not ready to receive what he promised, or the time is not yet come when the mercy will do us the most good, and bring the greatest honour and glory to his own name.

6. That mercy which we have long waited for, will be very sweet and consolatory unto us, when it comes. If men are sure of safe and great returns, they wait with much patience, content, and satisfaction. "Hope deferred makes the heart sick, but when it cometh it is a tree of life," Prov. xiii. 12.

Ninthly. Traders or merchants (as I showed you in opening another parable,) must keep their books well, and see that their accounts stand fair, and know whether they thrive or go behind-hand. So every Christian or spiritual trader, should see how things stand between God and his own soul, that he may know whether he grows in faith, in love, in zeal, in humility, and in holiness, or not; and if he finds he is grown more cold, more earthly, proud, and unbelieving, it is a sad sign of breaking, or that his heart is not right with God, or at least that he is under some sore temptation, and also under the withdrawals of the quickening presence of Christ, nor can such tell where their partial apostacy may end. However, "The righteous shall hold on his way, and he that hath clean hands shall grow stronger and stronger," Job xvii. 9.

Christian traders should keep their accounts well.

Tenthly. Some traders do not improve their Lord's money, and though entrusted but with one talent, yet improve not that, but mind more their own private business, than the concerns of their Lord. And this as our Saviour shows in this parable, many to whom he hath given but one talent do not improve it, but hide it in the earth.

Some spiritual traders do not improve so much as one talent.

Eleventhly. Some traders break, and expose such that are faithful dealers to loss and shame. Even so also some professors backslide or revolt from God, and turn spiritual bankrupts, to the great dishonour of God, the reproach of religion and faithful Christians; and these are exposed and in great danger every day to fall into the hands of divine justice, into the hands of the living God, and to be cast into prison; where under eternal wrath they must abide, until they have paid the uttermost farthing.

SERMON XXX.

Then he that had received the five talents, went and traded with the same. And likewise he that had received the two, &c.—Matt. xxv. 16, 17.

Doct. That the children of men who are called Christ's servants, are traders.

I have opened this, and showed how fitly they may be compared to traders, which closed with the second general head of discourse.

Thirdly, I shall shew, That Christ's own domestic servants are entrusted with his most choice treasure.

I have before proved, that these talents are not all alike in quality, as the text shows they are not in quantity.

1. Some, nay, multitudes in the world (that Christ will call to reckon with when he comes to judgment,) have only natural or external talents given to them, as natural light, knowledge, riches, and other common endowments; but true believers, who are Christ's domestic servants, have special, spiritual and heavenly talents given to them, true spiritual light, knowledge, grace, riches, and righteousness.

The excellency of some talents above others.

And now all must acknowledge these in their nature and quality, as they differ from the other, so they far excel or are much better than those the Pagan world or mere earthly men and reprobates have, or are entrusted with. "The merchandize of wisdom is better than the merchandize of silver, and the gain thereof than fine gold," Prov. iii. 14. By wisdom here, most conclude, is meant Jesus Christ, who is called the wisdom of God; and also takes in true grace, or the true fear and saving knowledge of God. "They shall die without wisdom," (or instruction) speaking of wicked men, Prov. v. 23. "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom." O how few have this talent.

2. They must be the best talents, if we consider further more particularly the matter of them, or what is contained in these talents, even as was hinted, the blessed God himself, and Jesus Christ himself; he gives himself to some, though but to a few, and this is the great covenant promise, "I will be your God, and you shall be my people." O what a talent is the gift of the Spirit and true grace, and all those things that accompany it!

3. That they are the best talents, or far excel them that are given to others, appears, because they that have them are by the Lord pronounced happy. "Happy is the man that findeth wisdom, and the man that getteth understanding," Prov. iii. 13. Such are truly happy here, happy while they live, and shall be happy at death, and also eternally happy. Their riches are the best riches, their honours are the best honours, and their delights and pleasures far excel all the sensual delights and pleasures of wicked men.

No man can comprehend what good is in God. 4. Who can count up, or compute the riches and infinite worth that is in God, and in the Lord Jesus Christ, who is the believer's portion. "Their lot is fallen in pleasant places, they have a goodly heritage," Psal. xvi. 6. Who can reckon up all the blessings of the covenant of grace, or what is contained in the promises of the gospel? They are, my brethren, of an incomparable nature, far exceeding the onyx, the sapphire, the crystal, or the chiefest pearl.

5. Their nature and excellency may be known, if we consider the spring or rise of them, and that also they are a certain token or pledge of the special love of God. The Father's love is the spring or fountain from whence they come. God loves all his creatures with a common love, and he gives them his common favours. But he loves his elect with a special and peculiar love, and therefore he bestows on them his special and peculiar blessings, or talents that far excel all such he gives to others. "Yea, I have loved thee with an everlasting love, therefore with loving kindness have I drawn thee," Jer. xxxi. 3. Moreover, these special talents or choice treasure God hath given to his people, are as a certain pledge to them that they were comprehended in his eternal love, and are some of his own elect. When God gives his Spirit to any man, saving grace to any man, it is also a pledge to them of their being justified and pardoned, and that they shall be eternally saved; therefore the talents these have, far exceed in worth and excellencies, all others whatsoever; these are soul-enriching, soul-raising, soul-exalting, and soul-satisfying treasures; they that God gives these talents to, may say with Jacob, "They have all."

6. Their great worth also appears, by that wonderful price that was laid down by the Lord Jesus Christ to purchase them. These talents were the special purchase of the blood of Jesus Christ. True grace is the special fruit of Christ's merits, or glorious purchase. True, we have them cheap enough, being given to us freely, yet we part with our all for them, and so did every one that ever was possessed with them; had an enlightened sinner kingdoms and crowns, rather than he would not have or should be denied of these things, he would part with them presently, and condemn all earthly crowns and kingdoms, as Moses did the glory of Egypt, in comparison of these things.

Spiritual things costly to God and to Christ. O costly wares, (saith one) God's all goes, Christ's all goes, and the sinner's all goes also, to enjoy them.

The magazine and treasures of heaven are emptied, yet do not mistake, the sinner finds the flesh must be crucified, the old man must die, if he possess the talent of grace and the new birth. O, the woundings, the lancings, the bleedings, the heart-pricking pangs that often attend the new birth, these lead the van to this banner of love; these are like storms and tempests to the flesh, to the old man, or body of sin and death; self is wounded, the life of sin, and the love of this world is at once let out.

7. The gain by trading in these commodities is great, and hath the best increase or incomes.

"Thou deliverdest to me five talents, behold I have gained besides them five talents more," Ver. 20.

They may be improved to double increase, to as much more in respect of the quantity; but this is not all, he that improved his two talents, is made a ruler over two cities, and he that improved his five talents, is made a ruler over five cities; besides, what a believer may arrive to here in improving of his special talents of grace and saving knowledge. As to a further likeness to God, or communion with him, or in comfort and consolation, there are great rewards of grace attends the improvement of grace, and all other spiritual and peculiar gifts of God.

8. The duration of these things shows forth the excellent nature of them, they are eternal things, love to God, peace of conscience, and a likeness to God, we shall carry out of the world with us. The Lord that gives grace, gives also glory to his faithful servants.

Lastly, The returns that these traders meet with, shows it is the best trade and the choicest treasure.

Christ makes the best returns to them that trade with him.

1. Great things for that which is of very little value; what is a cup of cold water to a crown of glory? what are ashes, or mourning, or a spirit of heaviness, in comparison of that glorious beauty, spiritual joy and eternal praises, which Christ returns for those small things.

2. Quick returns, see what the Lord says : “ Before they call I will answer,” though it is not thus always, Isa. lxx. 24.

3. They are always certain returns, none miscarry ; no ship is cast away that is well freighted with grace.

4. Seasonable returns, just when the Lord sees we need the mercy, and it will do us most good, then we shall have it.

U S E .

1. Be exhorted to choose this trade, the trade of godliness ; you that are willing to be hired and become some of Christ’s special and domestic servants, shall receive of these talents to trade with.

2. O begin early, you young men, enter upon this trade in your youth, it is best and soonest learned then, and then you will have the longer experience, and the more time to grow rich and increase in heavenly treasure.

3. Take heed you do not begin in this trade without a stock of saving grace, or think you can manage this calling with a stock of simple morality, or only with common light and knowledge, or by improving your natural abilities for procuring the Spirit and grace of Christ. And you that are true Christians, mind well, and be sure follow this your general calling, and labour you do not go back. But to proceed.

“ And so he that received the five talents came and brought with him other five talents, saying, Lord, thou deliverdest unto me five talents, behold I have gained besides them five talents more,” ver. 20.

“ He also that had received two talents, came and said, Lord, thou deliverdest to me two talents, behold I have gained two other talents besides them,” ver. 22.

“ Then he which received the one talent, came and said, Lord, I knew thou wert an hard man, reaping where thou hast not sown, and gathering where thou hast not strewed,” ver. 24.

“ And I was afraid, and went and hid thy talent in the earth, lo, there is that is thine,” ver. 25.

Note from hence.

Doct. That such who have received five talents, and two talents, do improve them, but he that received the one talent, improved it not.

I do not mean by this proposition (that lies clear to me in the text) that all true believers who have received most from God, or the greatest talents, do always improve them, proportionably above such who have received less light, knowledge, parts, &c., but that all who do receive the true and saving grace of God, light, and knowledge, do more or less improve those talents, or gain more, but that he that receives but one talent, never improves that one as he ought and might do. No man certainly hath received less than one talent.

1. I shall lay down several propositions, the better to open the nature of the talents.

2. I shall show what may be meant by five, and by two talents, and what by the one talent.

3. What may be meant by hiding of the one talent.

4. Why such may be said to hide that one talent.

1. Proposition. All talents, as I hinted, are of two sorts, earthly or heavenly, temporal or spiritual, common or special.

2. Proposition. That the two talents, and the five, though they differ in quantity, yet I conceive they do not in quality ; for both these servants, or all signified by him that had the five, and him that had the two, were faithful servants, and were saved ; now the same grace, the same faith, the same knowledge, as to kind that one true believer hath, all have ; hence the apostle Peter speaking of the faith of God’s elect, calls it like faith. “ To them who have obtained like precious faith with us, through the righteousness of God and our Saviour Jesus Christ,” 2 Pet.

i. 1. It is not like in respect of the degree or measure of it, but in respect of the kind or nature of it, and the object of it. All have true faith, unfeigned faith, faith that works by love, the faith of God’s elect, and the faith of the operation of God ; by all these and other names is faith called, but some have but a weak faith, others a strong faith, some a little, and others a great faith ; so some good Christians have small knowledge, gifts and parts, in comparison of what some other good Christians and ministers have. Now these things being matter of fact, and well known to all God’s people, as well as confirmed by his holy word, none need to doubt the truth thereof.

Moreover, will any dare to say, that a man to whom God never gave a stock or talent of saving faith, can by any power or improvement of the talent he hath, arrive unto eternal life ?

What the five and two talents are as to their nature.

Grace is of one and the same nature in all believers.

3. Proposition. That no man living, or ever lived upon the earth (to whom God gave talents) ever improved them to the utmost they might have done.

All the godly ever confessed how they have failed therein. Moreover, they that received the one talent, it is evident, did not improve it to the end it was given; and as many saints are signified by him that had the five talents, and many by him that had the two talents. So a multitude no doubt are signified by him that had the one talent, even all that eternally perish, and they are those who never received (nor may be never desired) the saving grace of God.

4. Proposit. That God gives more to them that are saved, than he gives to them that perish, and this I think is as fully intimated by our blessed Lord in this parable, as any thing whatsoever; if it is not partly one grand design of our Lord therein, and did he not indeed give more to, and do more for them that are saved (or for his elect) than for others, they would certainly perish with the rest of mankind; for such that are saved, who had the least given to them, had more than one single talent, or that talent which all men generally receive from God.

If therefore these talents do comprehend all mankind, and take in the special grace of God also, as our annotators declare they do, and other worthy expositors; then what I say, I am sure, cannot be denied, but that the things I have hinted in these previous propositions may be safely drawn from what is signified by the five, by the two, and by the one talent.

Secondly. Show what may be meant by the five and two talents.

1. I conceive by these talents are comprehended, even in the two and five, all things whatsoever that is the Lord's goods, or that grace, light, and saving knowledge, &c., given to all God's elect. Though some of the saints receive more of those precious things than others.

1. Some have greater grace, greater measures of knowledge, greater gifts both temporal and spiritual; some have much of the riches of this world, which they as good stewards improve from a principle of love to Christ, to the glory of God, and support of the gospel, the church and ministry of the gospel in the world, which will in the life to come be remembered and redound to their account, as an act of God's free grace to them who will not "forget their work of faith, and labour of love," Heb. vi. 10.

2. Some of the saints are in greater places of trust, and in higher stations in the world and church also, as well as endowed with greater parts, gifts, and learning, and so are capacitated to do more for God, and bring greater glory to him, and profit to the souls of men, and good to the church of God. How useful have some ministers been in their day, what pains and labour did they take, and how have they been a blessing to the world and people of God!

3. He that received the one talent, (and all those signified in him) may be such that only received outward favours or temporal good things, together with common and external gifts, knowledge, parts and attainments of the like nature whatsoever, and which in respect of that different and peculiar talent of special grace, it may be partly called one talent. He having not talents of differing species, as all the true children of God have, viz., both common favours and saving grace also.

4. Therefore I conceive the one talent may in quantity be more or less; as for example, the Heathen (none will deny) have one talent, but they have not so great a one talent as such who have the outward ministration of the gospel, and all other advantages in a land of vision, besides the great natural and acquired parts, and learning some of them, may and do attain unto. Yet I say this may nevertheless be called but the one talent, being all but common endowments, common grace, gifts and knowledge, and not any of them having received the holy sanctifying Spirit of God, nor so much as one dram of saving grace.

5. And as I said, it appears that he that received the one talent, did not faithfully according to his ability improve his talent; so it may signify that no mere natural men (that have received that which is the least) do improve it as they might (or are able), and so may be condemned for not doing what they were empowered to do, or for wasting, hiding, and slighting the light and means of grace that was afforded them, under idle and frivolous pretensions, though the fullest improvement of one talent cannot bring any person into a state of grace or save him, because the seed of grace, (or the prime and original stock) must be first given, before there can be an exercise or an improvement made of it; and all know that without true faith in Christ and regeneration no man can be saved; and as evident it is that "the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit, neither indeed industry of his own, but it must be given to him immediately from the Lord.

Christ gives more to, and does more for those that are saved than for those that perish.

Object. It will then follow that no Heathen or Pagan can be saved?

1. Ans. That may be a great mistake, for some of the Heathen might hear of Jesus Christ, and have faith in him; by some means or another it might be revealed to them (though the light of nature cannot do it) and so receive more than the one talent.

2. Some that lived before Christ came, might converse with the Jews, or have knowledge of Moses' writings, as history makes appear many of them had, as well as the word of God shows the same thing.

3. It is said that there was among the Gentiles, women that prophesied of Christ's coming, and of his bloody passion, &c., that were called Sybils, (though some think what is said of them is fabulous).

4. Or might not God in some supernatural way (when he spoke in divers ways and manners unto the fathers) make Christ known unto them?

To conclude with this, certainly God will condemn men for not doing those things which he requires of them; and where the gospel comes, how do many slight it! and though "Light is come into the world, men love darkness rather than light," John iii. 19. And this our Saviour saith is the condemnation.

"And hid thy talent in the earth," &c., ver. 25.

In ver. 18 it is said, "He digged in the earth and hid his lord's money."

Question. What may be meant by his digging in the earth, and hiding his lord's money?

Ans. Digging in the earth may signify his labouring "for the meat that perishes more than that meat which endureth to everlasting life," John vi. 27; or his minding earthly things, being more busy in pursuing after the world, than in improving that knowledge he had of divine things, or of the means of grace which God was pleased to afford him.

What may be meant by hiding his one talent.

2. Hiding his talent may also denote his concealing those convictions he might have in his conscience in respect of sin or of duty. Some men may be convinced of many sins they live in, and of their duty in closing with Christ and following him in a way of obedience, but they strive to stifle those convictions, and keep all in their own breast; and will not improve that light and knowledge they have, but wholly give way to earthly thoughts and to the temptations of Satan, and so dig in the earth rather than look up to heaven; and what is this less than a hiding their Lord's money? they will not declare to others what troubles, what fears, and terrifying thoughts they sometimes have had, concerning the state of their souls and of eternity, but strive to quench the motions of the Spirit, and so put out that fire that was kindled in their hearts, and will not make a profession of what they sometimes experienced God had done for them by the common influences of his Spirit and workings of their own awakened consciences.

3. Perhaps one great part of his talent lay in earthly riches, and that he laid up and refused to improve it by distributing according to his ability to the poor, and to support the interest of Christ. Some who have the one talent no doubt may be church members, and this way the young man mentioned in the gospel, hid his talent, who when our Lord bid him "sell all he had, and give it to the poor, and follow him, went away very sorrowful;" he hid his talent in the earth, and would not trade for heaven.

4. Or perhaps part of this one talent might lie in spiritual gifts and abilities, in the improvement of which he might have been useful to the church, or for the good of others, but he might utterly refuse to exercise those gifts, but hid or concealed them, and by pursuing with an inordinate warmth the things of the world, might hide his talent, if neither earthly riches or spiritual gifts are improved as God requires, they may be said to be hid.

5. Or perhaps God gives men much health and many precious opportunities to attend upon the means of grace, but out of love to their trades and secular affairs they spend all their time, health, and strength, about the things of this life, and though the word of God be preached daily but a few doors off where they live, yet they will not spare an hour or two in a whole week to attend upon the ministration thereof; and when they are told of their great neglect, they find one excuse or another, and so hide their Lord's money, or will not improve the talent God gave them.

Thirdly, Why do such who receive the one talent hide it?

1. Ans. No doubt but it may be from that multiplicity of earthly concerns that is in their hand, they have so much business of their own, and are carried away so much with self-love, that they can find no time to worship, obey, and serve the Lord Jesus Christ. The love of the world is in their heart, they can find no leisure time yet to think seriously of their immortal souls, and of eternal things.

From whence it is that some hide their talent.

2. They may hide their talent, because the fire burns too hot for them, I mean convictions are too strong, that have taken hold of their consciences, or that candle that is lighted, if they put it not under a bed, or quench the fire kindled in them, they fear they may come under reproach and be derided by their ungodly neighbours or company they used to keep, or perhaps they may foresee the fire will waste too much of the fuel, I mean their substance, perceiving religion may be too chargeable for them, and from hence are led by Satan to hide their talent.

3. By what our Saviour here intimateth in respect of this person's plea, one chief reason of his hiding of his talent, is upon a false apprehension of the blessed God; he confesseth he had not traded with his Lord's money, or had not improved his talent well: and what answer doth he give? what was the reason of his unfaithfulness? See what he says:

“And he said, Lord, I knew that thou wert an hard man, reaping where thou hadst not sown, and gathering where thou hadst not strawed, and I was afraid and went and hid thy talent,” &c., vers. 24, 25.

He chargeth his Lord with the highest injustice, not only that he was an austere or a severe man, but a cruel and unreasonable man, for so much and no less is implied in his answer. Is not he a cruel and an unjust man, that would reap where he never sowed? this person seems to talk like an Arminian, some that hold those notions, argue much as this man doth. Thou dost expect that I shall improve what thou gavest me, and yet thou never didst give me thy saving grace, nor sowed the seed of it in thy heart, and all the improvement I can make of the talent thou hast given me, (I am told by thy servants) will not bring me to heaven, what should I labour to improve what I have, for, it will bring no saving profit to my soul? If thou hadst done for me as for some others, I should have done as they did, the fault is not in me, but if I perish, the cause is because thou didst not sow the seed of true grace and holiness in my heart.

But the answer his Lord gave him, may tend to silence him, and all free-willers in the world.

“His Lord answered and said unto him, Thou wicked and slothful servant, thou knewest that I reaped where I sowed not, and gathered where I have not strawed,—thou oughtest therefore to have put my money to the exchangers, and then at my coming I should have received my own with usury,” ver. 26, 27.

1. What though God acts in a way of sovereignty, and gives more to one man than he gives unto another, yet ought not he that receives the smallest talent, or but one, to improve that one?

2. May not God require of man that which he hath lost, that power which originally he had? man had power to keep the law of perfect obedience, and it was by his own sin he became weak, and is made unable now perfectly to keep it; yet is it not his duty still to keep it? hath God lost his power to command, because man hath lost his power to obey? and because man cannot change his own heart, nor wash himself from his iniquity; can he not reform his ways, nor cry to God for help, and improve the means God directs to in order to faith and regeneration.

3. Or because God's elect are helped to believe and to obtain eternal life, shall any ungodly wretches have an excuse in the day of judgment to say, thou reapest where thou hast not sown, or requirest that of us thou gavest us no power to do? I tell you again, that all men are condemned for the breach of the law or covenant of works; and their slothfulness and neglect of improving the means and talent God hath afforded them, will aggravate their condemnation.

All men should labour to see themselves effectually called.

Contin. of Pool.

4. If God hath chosen some, all should strive to see that they are effectually called, for none can know that they were elected but by their being effectually called.

5. He that hath but one talent, is in a capacity to improve that one, and God commands him so to do, and for his non improvement of it our Lord shows in this parable, he shall be cast into hell. “And cast the unprofitable servant into utter darkness.” Take here what our learned annotators have said upon the answer of this person. The Lord of the unprofitable servant tells him that the fault lay in his own sloth and wickedness, and his dread of his Lord's severity was but a mere frivolous pretence, and unreasonable excuse; for if he had dreaded any such thing, he would have done what he could. And shall not God as justly another day reply upon those who think to excuse their low and wicked lives, their impenitency and unbelief from their not being elected, not having power of themselves to repent and believe, nor receiving efficacious grace. O you wicked and slothful wretches, did you suspect or fear you were not elected, why then did you not give all diligence to make your calling and election sure? Do you plead the power of your own will to repent and believe, and that I did not give you special and effectual grace? But had you not a power to keep from taverns and ale-houses? and to keep from lying and swearing, and open profanation of my sabbaths? had you not power to read, to hear, and to pray, if you had to the uttermost used the talent I gave you, and I had been wanting in my further necessary influences of grace, ye might indeed have said something, but when you made no use of the talent you had, why should I trust you with more? Faith comes by hearing, reading, praying, you had power to improve these talents you had, if you took me to be so severe a master, why did you not do what was in your power to do? &c. Thus the annotators.

Wicked men do not improve the talent they have. He that is condemned at the great day, (it appears by what our Lord shows in this parable) will be charged with this, they do not use the means, nor cry to God for faith, to enable them to believe; but sin against the light of their consciences, and hate the light, or love darkness rather than the light, and this will be their condemnation.

APPLICATION.

1. Reproof. This reproofs such that say, the one talent is saving grace, Reproof. or of the same species with those who are sincere believers, or the two, or the five, and if indeed it was so as they affirm, then all men in the world have saving grace, because there are none that have less than one talent, and then it also follows God hath no special love to one man more than another, and then also mere natural men have power to "receive the things of the Spirit, and they can discern them," and yet the apostle says, they cannot; and then also salvation would not be of God's free grace, but of man's free will.

2. Exhort. Be stirred up every soul of you, to a diligent improvement of the means of grace, and of the talents you have received. Have you the gospel? have you gospel sermons and gospel seasons? have you convictions? have you knowledge, have you gifts, labour to improve them; for know, God will leave all men without any excuse at the great day.

Be exhorted from hiding your talents.

FOR MOTIVES TO EXCITE.

1. By hiding your talent you will show, that either you are ashamed or afraid to own and confess Jesus Christ, or else that you have earthly hearts, and are idle and slothful persons in spiritual matters; and either of these show the badness and baseness of your hearts.

2. God also by this means loseth that glory which he expected from you, in bestowing those talents upon you. We should remember that the talents are given to trade with that we may bring honour unto God, and profit to ourselves and to others also. "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven," Matt. v. 16. Though we can add nothing to God's essential glory, yet we may predicate and manifest his glory, and the glory of his rich grace in us.

3. Otherwise also you will be great losers, for the profit of improvement will redound to you. "He that is righteous, is righteous for himself." Properly God receives nothing of us, the more thou gainest by trading, the richer thou wilt be, the more rich in faith, rich in love, and rich in good works, and more rich in experiences, and the more joy, and comfort, and peace of conscience thou wilt find.

4. Hereby also others will receive the more profit by thee; the world suffers loss by the non-improvement of those talents the servants of Christ have received; how can we be the lights of the world, if we hide our candle under a bushel, or put it under a bed? they that are in the house will have no light by it, which is indeed to go about to frustrate the very end and design of our heavenly Father in lighting our candle.

5. Besides consider, that hereby thou wilt appear to be a faithful servant of Christ, and not a slothful and idle person, and thou wilt also have the more faith to live on in "the day of need," Heb. iv. 16. "Thou knowest not what evil may be in the earth," Eccl. xi. 2; thou mayest be taken off of thy trading. "The ant gathers her food in the summer," Prov. vi. 6, else how should she live in winter? These opportunities of improving thy talents may fail, our day may be darkened, and dismal storms may soon rise, and our spiritual trade be obstructed by our enemies.

6. If you hide your talents, you will certainly be undone, you will come to utter beggary; "For so shall thy poverty come upon thee as one that travaileth, and thy want as an armed man," Prov. vi. 11. What is the fruit of idleness but shame and poverty? Such shall beg at harvest, and have nothing.

7. Moreover, consider, thou art but a steward of thy master's goods, and shalt be called to an account when he comes, and the non-improvement of thy talent will bring eternal destruction upon thy soul; he will say, "Take the unprofitable servant, and cast him into utter darkness," &c., ver. 30. You will certainly one day repent the non-improvement of your time, your health, your treasure, your opportunities, your gifts, your light and knowledge, or whatsoever God hath bestowed upon you, and expects the improvement of.

SERMON XXXI.

And after a long time the Lord of those servants comes and reckoneth with them.—Matt. xxv. 19.

Christ will judge all men at the last day.

THIS coming of our Lord refers to his coming the second time, and it also shows, that when he appears, he will call all men to an account, or judge the whole world.

1. And now that our Saviour will come again the second time, we have fully proved in opening of the precedent parable, no one truth is more clearly confirmed in the word of God.

Also we have showed how, or after what a glorious manner he will appear, and pray observe, that when Christ comes, our working time will be over, the harvest then will be ended, the servants shall then receive their rewards; "He will reward every one according as his work shall be," Rev. xxii. 12. "We shall all stand before the judgment seat of Christ," Rom. xiv. 10.

Note also. That though Christ will come again, yet it seems long before he comes. "After a long time the Lord of these servants comes."

1. It seems long to the world, even so long that many say in their hearts, that he will never come again.

2. Also the time seems long to the saints, who love him, and long for his appearance, especially to such who are persecuted and in great tribulation; and the slothful servant by this means says, my Lord delays his coming. But come he will, and when he comes the godly will rejoice with exceeding great joy, it will be a happy day to them, but be a dismal day to the wicked, and to all idle and slothful servants; they do not desire that day, no, they have abused his mercies, and contemned his grace, and wasted his goods, he will come "in flaming fire," 2 Thess. i. 8; to all such, to take vengeance upon them, and let out his fierce wrath. "Sinners in Sion then will be afraid, fearfulness shall surprise the hypocrites," Isa. xxxiii. 14.

U S E.

What do you think concerning the coming of Christ? do you love to hear of it? if you are true Christians, you believe he will come; but do you long for his coming, and are you prepared for that day? do you pray for his coming? do you say, come Lord Jesus, come quickly?

Do you expect to be called to an account when our Lord comes? he will reckon with all his servants; you will be asked how you have improved your time, your strength, your wealth, your parts, your gifts and your graces; be persuaded to manage things so well now, and make such improvement of the talents you have to his glory, that you may be willing to give up your accounts to him: and this brings to the next words,

"And so he that had received five talents, came and brought other five talents, saying, Lord, thou deliverest to me five talents, behold I have gained other five talents more." ver. 20.

"He also that had received the two talents, came and said, Lord, thou deliverest to me two talents, behold I have gained other two talents besides them," &c., ver. 22.

We my note from hence,

1 Doct. That Jesus Christ hath some faithful servants.

2 Doct. That a faithful servant of Christ freely acknowledgeth all things whatsoever he hath received of Jesus Christ.

What every true Christian hath received, he owns, and is ready to acknowledge it; Lord, thou gavest me my precious soul, endued me with reason, wisdom and Deut. iv. 9. knowledge, and gavest me the charge of it, to keep it with utmost diligence, and to see it well clothed, fed, healed, cleansed, sanctified, adorned, refreshed and comforted; thou gavest me the riches of the world, and much health, and many children; and thou gavest me the gospel, and a gracious ministration thereof; thou gavest me many gifts, and many choice graces, thou gavest me a time of great gospel light, and sweet liberty to worship thee, thou gavest me a great dignity and honour in thy house, thou gavest me many precious promises and blessed ordinances, I was placed in a high station among thy people.

Whatever they have received, they readily confess and acknowledge it to the Lord Jesus; his Lord and he agree in their accounts, he is charged with receiving five talents, and says, Lord thou deliverest to me five talents. Some now are not ready to confess what talents they have received, no, but seem to lessen them, as if they had not that time, that strength, that wisdom, that wealth, and those advantages and opportunities of doing good, and of serving Christ, his people and interest, as indeed they have; and this gives great ground to fear that they are not faithful servants. Again,

I have gained besides them five talents.

Note—2. Doct. That a faithful servant of Christ is ready to produce the increase, as well as the principle stock first received.

In speaking to this,—1. I shall show what may be meant by gaining five and two talents more.

2. Apply it.

1. It may denote an equal improvement of every particular talent; he had not only improved one talent, and omitted to trade with and improve another, to the honour of his great Master; no, but he had improved every one which he had received; not only his temporal or earthly good things, but his spiritual good things; and not only his spiritual good things likewise: he was not only faithful in much, but in that also which was the least. Some perhaps may improve their spiritual gifts, be ready to instruct others in spiritual things, and help them that way, nay, may be they are very forward to be preachers, none perhaps have greater zeal that way than they; but God having given them also a talent of earthly riches to improve, or a considerable portion of the good things of this world, but that they improve not; no, though the ministers of Christ and the poor want, they pretend they cannot give, cannot spare their money, no, that they keep for themselves, and convert it all to their own use; now these discover they are unfaithful servants, every talent proportionably is not improved.

A faithful servant of Christ improves every particular talent he hath received.

And in like manner another may be ready to improve a talent which he hath received, the improvement of which not exposing him to any outward loss, but he having the word of God to attend upon, and the talent of time and opportunity to attend thereon, and strength and ability to visit the sick, or look after the concerns of the church; but that talent he has no heart to improve, pretends he cannot spare his time: as if his time was not his Lord's goods, and chiefly to be taken up in his service, to his honour, and to the good and profit of his people; now this manifesteth the baseness of the man's heart; if he hath five talents given him, he would never gain other five, viz., equally improved every one, and make them double, or at leastwise make great increase, satisfactory increase of each in particular.

Quest. Wherein doth the gain by his improving his talents consist?

Ans. In three or four things.

1. They gain for themselves. (1.) They gain more spiritual knowledge; by exercise they increase in the knowledge of God, and of our Lord Jesus Christ. (2.) In their gifts. (3.) In grace; they make their small faith to become a great faith, they gain also more love, more patience, more meekness, and more humility; they "add to their faith virtue, and to virtue knowledge, and to knowledge temperance, and to temperance patience, and to patience godliness, and to godliness brotherly kindness, and to brotherly kindness charity," 1 Pet. i. 5, 6, 7. In these things they abound, and in these things their gain consists. (4.) They also gain double experiences of God in all his ways, ordinances, and providences.

Wherein Christ's faithful servants double their talents.

2ndly, Others also gain by them. (1.) They that want spiritual strength, spiritual comfort, are both strengthened and comforted by "them with the same comfort wherewith they themselves are comforted of God," 2 Cor. i. 4. Others receive an equal portion of comforting, by improving their stock. (2.) They that want light, being very ignorant of God and of Christ, they by improving their knowledge in instructing them, gain perhaps in a little time as good an understanding as themselves, may, perhaps do exceed them through God's blessing their endeavours. (3.) Others who are poor and want the good things of the world, gain a comfortable supply of whatsoever they need, by their free contributing to them out of the talent or stock they received; and to others they perhaps lend five, ten, twenty, or a hundred pounds, and so put some in such a way to live, that in a few years they grow as rich as they themselves, and so their talent is just doubled.

3rdly, God also by the improvement of their talents gains honour to his great name. (1.) This is done when by their means many poor souls are gained to Christ by their holy doctrine, and holy lives and conversations. (2.) When by their means religion is commended, gains honour and reputation in the world. (3.) When the church of God by the care and faithfulness of his servants, is increased, preserved in love, unity and sweet concord, and flourishes in all the fruits of righteousness. O what glory doth hereby redound unto God! (4.) When by your holy and shining conversations the mouths of such that scoff at religion are stopped. "For so is the will of God that with well doing ye may put to silence the ignorance of foolish men," 1 Pet. ii. 15. Christ's servants by carrying it wisely towards all men, submitting to every ordinance of man not repugnant to the word of God, and in living godly and pious lives, bring double honour unto God; for, 1. They hereby stop the mouths of some; and, 2. Are instruments to convert others. (5.) Hereby also they gain a double reward to themselves at the great day; for according to every servant's improvements of his talents, our Lord shows such shall his honour be when his Lord cometh.

APPLICATION.

1. We infer from hence, that true grace is of a most excellent nature, it is a fruitful seed; for in whomsoever it is sown, if cherished, it brings forth plentifully.

2. This also shows that such who are sincere and faithful servants of Jesus Christ, they equally improve every talent which they are entrusted with, they will not offer unto the Lord that which cost them nothing, but do honour the Lord with their substance; their time, their strength, and their wealth, is all improved to the honour of God, and the good of his people.

3. We also infer, that according to the quality and quantity of those talents we have received, Christ looks for our improvement of them; he that hath received five, it is not enough to trade with two or three of them, and never improve the other; no, every one according to the nature of it must be laid out and used for the honour of our blessed Master, the Lord Jesus Christ.

4. Let churches from hence learn to take notice who they are that have received any considerable talent, and observe whether they do faithfully improve them, whether their talents consist in spiritual or earthly good things. Moreover, if they find some do not do it, they ought to lay their sin before them, and labour to convince them of their evil, and if they persist in a continual neglect after all due means used, they ought to deal with them for their unfaithfulness to Christ and to his people; is it not strange that none are brought under a church censure for the horrible sin of covetousness; is there any instance in this case to be given? Certainly either there are no members of our congregations herein guilty, or else there hath been too palpable omissions of the discharge of duty herein.

5. Moreover, it may severely tend to reprove those ministers and churches who have profitable gifts among them, which if called out to the exercise of those gifts and talents, might be a great blessing to the churches, and interest of Christ in the present and future time: why were these ministerial gifts and talents given? were they not to the end Christ might by them receive glory, and the church and souls of men profit, perhaps the evil does not lie in the persons themselves; for they may say, would you have us impose ourselves or our gifts upon the church, or run before we are sent; we must be tried, and have the regular call of the church, before we undertake to preach; besides, no man is a competent judge of his own abilities for the ministry.

6. We may also perceive from hence how acceptable and well pleasing a thing it is in the eyes of our blessed Lord, to see every one of his servants to improve their respective talents, to the end he gave them.

Churches re-proved that honour of Christ.

“Well done good and faithful servant, thou hast been faithful in a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord,” ver. 23.

See the high commendation Christ gives to these servants, “good and faithful servant.” None is originally, essentially, and perfectly good but God alone, goodness here refers to a man’s sincerity and serviceableness; he that is a faithful, true and laborious servant, we call a good servant, in contradistinction to a slothful and evil servant. It is said “Barnabas was a good man,” &c., Acts xi. 24. That is a very sincere and godly man, one full of zeal and of the Holy Ghost. The acceptableness of the uttermost improvement of our talents in Christ’s sight appears.

1. In that commendation he gave him in calling him a good and faithful servant.

2. In that he makes him ruler over many great things, that had only been faithful over a few things; the Lord Jesus hath not made our burden under the gospel hard; no, his burden is light comparatively to the bearing of the duty and ordinances under the law. O what a multitude of statutes, laws, and ordinances were given to the Jews and Jewish church! and this will tend to aggravate their sin, who refuse to obey the Lord Christ in some of those few things required of us then.

3. In letting him into his Master’s joy; for though it was not the faithfulness of the servant that gave him a title, and entrance into this joy, yet Christ takes his faithful obedience as well, as if he had procured thereby a title to heaven; nay, perhaps more kindly, because it was love to his master, and respect to his name and glory, that was the great motive of his obedience and faithfulness.

“Ruler over many things.” Note from hence,

Doct. That Christ make his saints and faithful servants rulers, yea, rulers over many things.

When the saints shall be rulers.

1. They shall reign and rule with Jesus Christ; the government of all the earth shall be given to the saints; they shall not only a thousand years inherit the earth; but shall be kings and rulers. “And thou hast made us unto our God kings and priests, and we shall reign on the earth,” Rev. v. 10. And again it is said, “And they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years,” Rev. xx. 4. Over many things, i. e., Over many nations, and over many people. “A king shall reign in righteousness, and princes shall decree justice.” Compare these scriptures with that in Daniel. “And the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heavens shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him,” Dan. vii. 27.

Some think that all the kingdoms of the earth shall be given to the saints before Christ comes. No doubt but there will be a glorious state of the church in the last days, that now draw very near, and will commence at the sounding of the seventh trumpet; but the peaceable and universal reign will not be until the king comes; for Daniel and all the saints that are fallen asleep, shall have their lot in rule, government, reign and glory of the kingdom of our blessed Lord.

“Enter into the joy of thy Lord!”

The joy of our Lord is too great to enter into us, and therefore we shall enter into that. It is our Master’s joy: (1.) That joy he hath procured for us, through his sorrow and sufferings. (2.) It is his, because given and granted to us by the Lord Christ; it is he that hath the only power to give it. (3.) It may be called our Master’s joy, because to its nature or quality, it will be the same he now himself swims in, or is possessed with, and filled full of, viz., heavenly joy. (1.) It will be great joy as it is heavenly, so it will be exceeding great, even joy unspeakable and full of glory. (2.) It will be soul-satisfying, and soul-ravishing joy. (3.) It will be unmixed joy, joy without sorrow, and light without darkness. (4.) It will be everlasting joy: “they shall obtain joy and gladness, sorrow and sighing shall fly away,” Isa. xxxv. 10. O who is able to conceive, much less to express the nature or greatness and sweetness of the joys of heaven!

U S E.

1. What fools are those poor wretches, who are so much taken with, and delighted in earthly joys, which as they are but for a moment, so they are full of mixture of sorrow and misery, and can give no person ease and satisfaction.

2. But what fools are they then who value the joys of heaven, and resolve they will not part with their brutish lusts, though they never taste of the joys of our Lord, but expose their souls to eternal pain and sorrow in hell.

3. May not the joys of our Lord provoke us his servants to be very faithful and industrious in his service? No doubt but this was left on record on purpose to be a motive to press us to holy diligence, and faithfulness in the work of the Lord, our labour shall not be in vain. O what wonderful rewards will the rewards of grace be! Certainly there are none wise but such who contemn the glory of this world, and all the vain and sinful joys and delights thereof; they that have tasted how good the Lord is, or have tasted of heaven, cannot but prefer the blessed God above ten thousand worlds. Whom have I in heaven but thee? neither is there any on earth that I desire besides thee," Psal. lxxiii. 25.

4. Be exhorted ye that are Christ's servants not to faint in your minds, nor be discouraged, though you meet with sorrow here; "For your sorrow will be turned into joy, and your joy no man taketh from you," John xvi. 20, 22. Your sorrows are but for a moment, but your joys will be for ever, and the greater sorrows you meet with in this world for Christ's sake, or bear patiently to his praise, the greater and sweeter will your joy be hereafter.

5. What folly then are they guilty of, that hide their talent in the earth! they choose to trade for the earth rather than heaven; that talent that should be improved for the good of their souls they hide in the earth.

SERMON XXXII.

His Lord said, well done good and faithful servant, &c.—Matt. xxv. 21.

WE are not a little pleased when our parents say, well done my good child, or a master says, well done good and faithful servant, but what is it then to have the praise of Christ.

Note. Doct. That the consideration of Christ's commendation of his servants faithfulness, should move the hearts of all his servants to holy diligence and faithfulness in improving their talents.

Quest. What talents ought they with their uttermost care and faithfulness to improve.

Answ. I answer:

Time ought to be improved.

1. The talent of time. Time is a most precious thing, which God bestows upon all, though to some a larger talent of time than others.

Time may be considered as twofold.

1. Time itself.

2. The opportunity of time.

1. The time of youth. Some have the time of their youthful days, though others have lost that time and cannot recall it, and now mourn to think how foolishly they wasted and consumed those precious days, without bringing glory unto God, or reaping profit and comfort to their own souls, but contrariwise greatly dishonoured their blessed Lord and Master.

I have showed in opening of another parable, how the time of youth should be improved. God calls for this time. "Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth, before the evil days come," &c, Eccl. xii. 1. Of all persons, such who improve the days of their youth, are accepted of the Lord Jesus Christ. "I love them that love me, and they that seek me early shall find me," Prov. viii. 17.

2ndly. The time of health. Before sickness and bodily distempers take hold of us; many have by sickness, lameness, or one distemper or another, been taken off, being in no capacity to attend upon the word and means of grace. Moreover, experience shows how unable in sickness and under pains and diseases, we are to dedicate ourselves to the work and service of Christ, or to discharge the duties of religion; we have then enough to do to bewail ourselves, and to bear up under our infirmities, therefore whilst health and strength lasteth, we should, with all our might, do whatsoever the Lord requires of us.

Secondly, the opportunity of time should be improved.

The opportunity of time must be improved.

We have many opportunities allowed us, or particular seasons and advantages put into our hand. "Wherefore is there a price in the hand of a fool to get wisdom, he seeing he hath no heart to it?" Prov. xvii. 16. Why have we so many opportunities to attend upon the ministry of the word, who have no heart to lay our earthly business aside, and diligently wait upon God in those opportunities. O how would some in other nations rejoice, and prize such seasons which in our land about this city have afforded us, nay, many poor hungry souls in some dark corners of this kingdom would not a little rejoice could they be entrusted with this talent; some go six, nay, ten miles to hear a sermon, and yet cannot perhaps have such opportunities but once in a month, while we have them every day in the week; but alas, alas, many will not go out of their houses, nor leave their earthly concerns for one hour in the week, though the word is preached very near their dwellings; I am afraid this sort will not be able to give a good account to their Lord when he comes, about their improving of this talent; they shew that they hunger not for "The word of God, nor rejoice at it as one that finds great spoil," Psal. cxix. 162; as holy David did; neither do they prize a meeting with Christ, or communion with Christ in his ordinances; for hath he not promised to be in the midst of them that are met together in his name," Matt. xviii. 20. Besides, they consider not what reproach hereby they cast upon the worship of God, and what grief they bring upon his people, especially his ministers; they are commanded to preach the word out of season as well as in season; and is it not, my brethren, your duty as much to hear it out of season, as ours to preach it? and do you not hereby shew to all that you prefer the gain of the word. Alas, man knows not his time, he considers not the worth of time, nor knows how short his time may be; he may also perhaps have a heart to improve opportunities of time hereafter, when he may not have opportunities to improve: they might learn more wisdom by the children of men. Husbandmen improve the time of sowing and the time of reaping; tradesmen observe their fairs and markets, and merchants their exchange time; nay, the bees and ants observe the time to labour, and provide in summer against the winter. If men lose the proper seasons and opportunities of improvements, in vain do they think to thrive.

Thirdly, Every man and woman should labour to improve the helps God affords them to the great end of glorifying God. (1.) The dictates and convictions of their consciences. (2.) The reproofs of his Holy Spirit. May be conscience accuses and convinces a man of this or that sin he hath committed, and the Spirit under the word severely reproofs them also, and yet they neglect, slight, and quench the Spirit, and seek to stifle their own consciences, which to do is an abominable evil, and dangerous also; for if those convictions go off, it may be long before they find them again: when a fire is almost gone quite out, it may cost much pains and blowing before it kindle again. A mariner, if he loseth a fair wind, he may lose his voyage.

The convictions of the conscience, and the movings of the Spirit of God should be improved.

Fourthly, all that light, knowledge and those gifts God hath given to us, we must improve, wherefore are these talents given? but this I have spoken largely to in opening another parable.

Fifthly, Are you intrusted with a portion of the good things of this world? you have heard this talent God expects that you should improve to his glory, and to the carrying on and supporting his interest in the world, and also his ministers and poor members, that which they are to have, he hath put it into your hands, and made you his stewards of it, and if you fail or be unfaithful in the discharging your duties, so that the cause of God languisheth in your hands, his poor ministers discouraged, wanting what is necessary, and his poor want bread to eat; you will have a sad account one day to give to your great Master. "Will a man rob God?" Mal. iii. 8. Methinks that high commendation Christ gives his faithful servants, should set you on fire to do your utmost in distributing your Lord's money to his children that need it; "Well done, good and faithful servant."

Sixthly, The talent of special grace, nay, every grace of the Spirit, must be improved.

Grace must be improved.

1. Indeed grace is the chiefest talent, the best of our Master's goods, and it is a talent also (you have heard) which he doth not intrust all men with; no, none but such he hath a particular or special love unto. Brethren,

Our faith and other graces may be but small or weak at first, but by a due improving of them, they may in time grow strong, and flourish in our souls. Paul observed after what a precious manner the faith of the saints at Thessalonica grew: "we are bound to thank God always for you, brethren, as it is meet, because that your faith groweth exceedingly, and the charity of every one of you towards each other aboundeth," 2 Thess. i. 3.

The way how grace comes to grow, may be twofold.

(1.) By God's infusing new degrees of it, or further measures, and so adding to the first stock.

(2.) By their daily exercise, for that way grace is augmented, and grows in believers also: indeed he that improves the grace he hath, God hath promised to give more grace unto: "But he giveth more grace, wherefore he saith, God resisteth the proud, but giveth grace to the humble," Jam. iv. 6. Such shall be helped to mortify sin, to resist Satan's temptations, and to discharge acceptably all religious duties, and to bear all reproaches and heavy burdens for Christ's sake.

2. But by the non-improvement of grace, that which we have may be much spent and wasted.

3. Consider, what great advantages we have in order to growth in grace; what fruitful seasons, fruitful shinings, and fruitful showers; the sun approacheth near, and shines hot on us, beyond what it doth may be on thousands. And God affording such seasons of grace, expecteth suitable improvements of grace: "what could have been done more to my vineyard which I have not done in it?" Isa. v. 4.

4. We had better have loss, waste, and decay in our earthly substance a thousand times, than to waste or decay in grace, zeal and holiness: also a saint may so far decline or decay in faith and other graces, that he may fear he hath not one dram of it left in him, and so fall under great darkness and despondency as to cry out with Job, "my hope is cut off."

5. Moreover, according to our growth and increase in grace, will our peace, joy and consolation be; would you lose that through slothfulness and neglect of improvement of your strength and time, and opportunities in one year, that you did not arrive at until many years passed over your heads?

Quest. What hinders our growth in grace?

Pet. ii. 11.

1. Ans. Giving way to those fleshly lusts that war against the soul; also a neglect of a holy and diligent watch over our own hearts, or not endeavouring to mortify sin, but let the weeds of vain thoughts lodge in us, greatly tends to the decay of faith, and weakens all grace in our souls.

2. By letting earthly things take up too much room in our hearts, by giving way to inordinate desires after riches or about the cares of this world.

3. By grieving the Holy Spirit, by which means he may withdraw his sweet influences, whereby all grace is strengthened. Indeed, no grace can thrive when the Holy Spirit is withdrawn from a poor believer.

4. Or it may be through neglect of prayer, hearing the word, meditation, and Christian converse: can the babe grow that refuseth the breast? we should "as new-born babes desire the sincere milk of the word, that we may grow thereby," 1 Pet. ii. 2.

5. By preferring worldly gain above spiritual gain and profit; a little of the world will not satisfy some professors; no, they can be better satisfied with a little faith, a little zeal for God, a little holiness, than with a little gold and silver. God from hence may blast them in their gifts, and cause their grace to decay. When men do not increase in their bounty to God's people, he lets them decay and wither in their souls, and sometimes in their trades and estates also.

Quest. How should all our talents be improved?

1. With uttermost care and diligence; "whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might," Eccl. ix. 10, &c. It is said that Mary did what she could; it is the diligent hand that maketh rich: through slothfulness the evil servant failed, and his unfaithfulness consisted partly in his negligence.

2. According to the degree and measure every one hath received, (as before I shewed you,) he that hath five talents must improve those five, and he that hath received two must improve those two, and he that hath received one, must improve that one.

3. All the talents we have received, must be improved so as to answer the end for which they were given.

(1.) To the honour and glory of God, this is the first and main end why God gave talents to his servants.

(2.) To the good of others, even the good of all men, but especially the people of God.

Hast thou the true knowledge of God in a greater degree or measure of it than others, thou must not conceal or hide this talent, but when opportunity presents thou must speak for God. Perhaps,

1st. Thou mayst be cast where some may make violent opposition against some main truths of Christ, or points of faith, and thou art by: now if thou holdest thy peace and let the truth suffer, and yet art able to maintain and defend it, thou mayest be deemed to hide thy talent; therefore then thou must stand up for thy Master's cause, and with all wisdom plead for that truth thou seest is opposed, and neither be afraid or ashamed though it may be to thy outward loss; shall truth suffer through thy silence?

2ndly, or thou mayst be cast among poor ignorant persons, who know not Jesus Christ, and if thou seest they are willing to be informed, thou must improve thy talent to their instruction and profit ; but be sure thou dost it in all sincerity of heart, in love to God and to their precious souls, and not to be taken notice of, or to get applause of men, or out of vain glory.

3rdly, Let it be our care to instruct the ignorant, and to reduce such, if possible, that are gone astray, and led into errors, or corrupted with heresy ; and also,

4thly, to strengthen those that are weak, and confirm the feeble-minded, and such that are wavering.

5thly, To succour such that are tempted or in trouble.

6thly, To comfort such that are dejected or cast down in their spirits.

7thly, To encourage the fearful in a day of persecution. And 8thly, To reprove backbiters and tale-bearers, and rebuke the unruly and such that go on impudently in sin and ungodly courses.

9thly. To do what lies in us to quicken the slothful, and exhort them to their duties, and in all things to seek the peace and good of that church where God hath set us, that God in all things may be glorified.

Thirdly. We must so improve our talents, that we may be ready to give up our accounts with joy, that we may hear our blessed Lord say to us when he comes ; “ Well done, good and faithful servants.”

U S E.

This tends to reprove all such that never consider what talents they are which they have received, neither regard the due improvement of them.

Also it reproves such that are slothful or negligent in their duties, or barren persons, or like Israel of old, “ empty vines, that bring forth fruit to themselves ;” as if their time, strength, knowledge, wealth, and all they are entrusted with, was their own, and should never be called to an account about the improvement or non-improvement of them.—

But to proceed.

“ Then he which had received the one talent, came and said, Lord, I knew that thou wert an hard man,” &c., ver. 24. “ And I was afraid, and hid thy talent, lo there thou hast that is thine,” ver. 25.

“ And his Lord answered and said unto him, Thou wicked and slothful servant,” &c., ver. 26.

Note from hence.

Doct. That he that improveth not that talent God gave him, but hideth it, is a wicked and slothful servant, he is charged with slothfulness.

In speaking of this I shall do two things.

1. Show wherein the wickedness of this servant consisteth.

2. Give you the character of a slothful persop.

1. He is a wicked person, and part of his wickedness lies in his slothfulness. All men in the whole world are of two sorts, godly or wicked, good or bad, believers or unbelievers. Also Christ's domestic servants, those of his own house are also of two sorts, either faithful or slothful servants, wise or foolish, sheep or goats, wheat or tares.

2. The wickedness of the slothful servant lies in hiding his talent in the earth, viz., in his earthliness, or in preferring outward or external things above those things that are spiritual and eternal, or in loving this world above the love and favour of God.

3. In his charging God with injustice, or being hard and cruel, laying the cause of their destruction upon God himself, in commanding them to do that which they have no power to do ; whereas the Holy God showeth that he will pass the sentence against them for their non-improving the talent he gave unto them.

“ Thou knewest that I reaped where I sowed not.”

It is spoken ironically ; well, if this were so, yet shall I therefore not reap where I did sow ? It is the genius of wicked men to have hard thoughts of God, and to lay the blame of their miscarriages upon God himself ; “ I should do better if God would but give me grace :” such seem to dread injustice in God rather than his justice, whereas God could as soon cease to be, as cease to be just and righteous.

4. Ironical reprehensions, or rebukes of God set forth, is dreadful displeasure ; Can the blessed Jesus bear the falsehood or misrepresentations of wicked men ? “ Thou thoughtest I was altogether such a one as thyself, but I will reprove thee, and set them (that is thy sins) in order before thine eyes.—Now consider this ye that forget God, lest I tear you in pieces, and there be none to deliver you,” Psal. l. 21, 22.

5. The wickedness of unfaithful or slothful servants consisteth in their slighting the Lord Jesus Christ through their unreasonable unbelief: "Ye have said it is vain to serve God, and what profit is it we have kept his ordinances?" &c., Mal. iii. 14. They think all that is done in the service of God is lost labour, neither bringing profit to God, nor any to themselves; better sit still, or hide our talents, and do nothing, than to do it to no purpose:—"Wherefore have we fasted, say they, and thou seest not, wherefore have we afflicted our souls?" &c., Isa. lviii. 3. They complain (like this wicked servant) of hard usage from God, though they did nothing in a right manner, from a right spirit or principle, not to a right end, yet would be rewarded for the base and hypocritical services they had done.

Had the wicked servant believed what his great Master had done, and rested wholly upon him, or believed in him, though there was no reward for his own work, yet love to his Lord would have engaged his heart, and drawn him forth to have done his uttermost to the glory and honour of his blessed Master. The more severe wicked men apprehend God is, the more careful and strict they should be to improve their time and talents; for if they look upon him as a hard man, or a usurer, they might from thence learn to bring him the more increase, so that out of their own mouths they will be condemned. What have they such thoughts of Christ, and yet trade not at all, but return back only the principal stock? "Take that which is thine."

The wicked servant will be condemned out of his own mouth.

Quest. How can a sinner give or restore that to Christ he received of him.

Ans. Here lies an absolute disparity, a disparity in this parable, and not only in this, but also in some other things, it runs not on all four. For though it is true, a servant among men may return the principal stock back to his Lord, of which he made no improvement, yet sinners cannot be said thus to do; for they like the prodigal (as they improve not what they have) so they waste what was first delivered to them.

6. The wickedness of this servant consisted in saying in his heart, my Lord delayeth his coming, (as our Saviour shows in another place;) this wicked person certainly thought his Lord would never come again, he being so long gone. Now this is an abominable evil, considering the repeated promises our Saviour has made of his second coming; it is indeed to charge Christ with breach of his promise, and his word not to be believed.

Secondly, How may a slothful and wicked servant be known?

The character of a wicked and slothful servant.

Ans. 1. By his negligence in and about the Lord's work; he is a wicked servant that basely omits or neglects the service of the Lord Jesus Christ, and has his heart much more set upon his own worldly business; he cries I have business of great moment to do, I cannot come, I have bought five yoke of oxen, I must go and prove them; and another saith, I have bought a farm, and I must needs go and see it. And, saith a third, I have married a wife, (one perhaps that is an enemy to religion) and I cannot come.

2. He is such a person whose heart is wicked, he being never changed or renewed by the Spirit of God; and therefore one that remains in the old nature, having enmity in his carnal mind against God, Rom. viii. 7, being filled with uncleanness, and covetousness, whose god is his belly, and that glories in his shame, minding earthly things, Phil. iii. 19; every wicked servant is not to the like degree openly profane. For some of Christ's domestic servants; such, I mean, that are members of the visible church, are wicked and slothful servants; yet these are more close and secretly wicked, and some of them not known or discerned to be such persons, yet they may be partly discovered by their proud, niggardly and covetous tempers, and by their neglect of the most hard and most difficult part and duties of religion, being not indeed and in truth what they profess to be, nor the same abroad and in the closet, which they are thought, or taken to be by some, if not generally by all, yet their idle, slothful disposition manifesteth they are wicked persons.

Quest. How is that known?

1. A slothful person is soon weary; if you set him on work, he is tired presently, he takes no delight in his work, and thus we find God complains of some, "Ye said also, Behold, what weariness is it, and ye have snuffed at it, saith the Lord of Hosts; and ye brought that which was torn, and the lame, and the sick; thus ye brought an offering: should I accept this at your hands? saith the Lord," Mal. i. 13. It seems to me, that which made them weary of God's service, was partly the great charge that attended his altars and sanctuary, they would not bring the best of their flock and herd, and therefore saith the Lord; "Cursed be the deceiver which hath in his flock a male, and voweth and sacrificeth unto the Lord a corrupt thing," ver. 14.

Thus some in God's house grow weary of his service, the charge is too great for their carnal hearts, and though they offer the lame and the blind, I mean some small matter, yet they are weary in doing so much; they can keep good tables, and clothe themselves and children in rich clothing, and spend pounds idly on unnecessary occasions, but one shilling ounce in the week to Christ is too much, they are weary, and so render themselves wicked and slothful servants.

Secondly, A slothful servant neglects his vineyard and his fields: "I went by the field of the slothful, and by the vineyard of the man void of understanding—and lo it was all over with thorns, and nettles had covered the face thereof," Prov. xxiv. 30, 31.

Just thus it is with a wicked and slothful servant of Christ, or one that professeth himself so to be, he neglects his own vineyard, I mean his own heart, he labours not to mortify his sins and inordinate lusts and desires, but lets the weeds and nettles of corruption grow therein, and earthly thoughts are given way to, also he neglects praying, hearing, and meditation, alas, he has no time for such duties, his own business is so great that lies on his hands; and this shows that he is a wicked and slothful servant.

A slothful professor neglects his heart, neglects mortification, &c.

3rdly. A sluggard or slothful person is ready to make many excuses, and small matters hinder him from attending upon the worship of God.

"The slothful man saith, There is a lion in the way, I shall be slain in the streets." He dreams of danger when none is near; what lion or devil should hinder us from attending upon our Lord's works? But this is indeed a ground to fear, a lion hath got hold of him, i. e., Satan by his temptations is too hard for him, but this lion he sees not; no, it is a lion of another nature which he fears.

A slothful servant makes frivolous excuses.

4thly. A slothful person's endeavours are not agreeable to his desires: "The desires of the slothful killeth him, for his hands refuse to labour, he coveteth greedily all the day long," &c., Prov. xxi. 25, 26. He is a man of desires, but no man of endeavours; his desire torments him almost to death, whilst he passionately desires that peace and satisfaction which he hath not, nor is ever likely to find, unless his mind was changed; he desires inward joy, and fain would be saved. "Let me die the death of the righteous, let my last end be like his," but he will take no pains to procure what he desires, nor improve the means to so great an end. And this his idleness exposeth him to want, and so to death; it will kill him at last, or be the cause of his damnation. "He coveteth greedily all the day long." If desires, wishes, and wouldings would procure what he wants without endeavours, he would be a happy man; he is not like David. "One thing have I desired of the Lord, and that will I seek after," &c., Psal. xxvii. 4. He did not desire it only, but he resolved that his endeavours should be according to his desires; and thus the prophet Isaiah speaketh also, "With my soul have I desired thee in the night," Isaiah xxvi. 9. Well, was that all? Did he only desire God? No, see his next words. "And with my spirit within me, will I seek thee early," most affectionately and sincerely, and also timely; he desired and longed for the Lord and his endeavours were suitable to his desires; and thus the spouse acted also. She desired her beloved, and she rose to seek him, and never rested until she had found him; but this a slothful person does not, and as his endeavours are not for Christ; so also his desires are not after Christ neither; no, but only after salvation; he would be saved, but loves not the Saviour so much as he loves the world; he is for the portion, but cares not for the person.

A slothful person desires, but his endeavours are not agreeable to his desires.

Can. v. 5, 6.

5thly. A slothful person cries, "Yet a little more sleep, yet a little slumber," Prov. vi. 6. Just thus some professors cry in their hearts, a little more liberty to pursue the world, I will be more diligent in Christ's service, and thoughtful of his church, but at present O let me have a little more rest, dispense with my omissions a little while longer; and thus they slumber and sleep away their time, which should be improved to the honour of Christ, and to the good of his people, and the salvation of their own souls, until poverty and destruction comes upon them. "So thy poverty shall come upon thee, as one that travaileth," &c. That is, swiftly and unexpectedly, and unavoidably, no escaping it.

6thly. A wicked and slothful person is confident of the goodness of his own estate. "The sluggard is wiser in his own conceit, than seven men that can render a reason," Prov. xxvi. 16. He may say, Christ is his hope, it is on his righteousness, or that he dependeth upon Christ alone; and saith, "He is rich, and increased with goods, and hath need of nothing," &c., Rev. iii. 17. Alas, sin is a small thing in his sight, and he troubles not himself about duties of religion, nor perhaps loves to hear the doctrine of sanctification and inherent holiness preached. Sirs, I am afraid many of this sort will appear slothful servants when our Lord comes; for he that loves not the doctrine of holiness, loves not be sure the practice of holiness. Come, such persons who exalt their own wisdom and knowledge above others, and are proud and conceited of their parts and attainments, and magnify their wisdom above seven wise men, (that is the perfect body of orthodox Christians) that can give a reason sufficient to convince them of their errors; have a black character upon them, for though they live in sin and are ungodly, yet are confident of their salvation.

7thly. A slothful person cannot encounter with difficulties; "The sluggard will not plough by reason of the cold, therefore he shall beg in harvest, and have nothing." Prov. xx. 4. It is not said in winter he shall beg, but in harvest, which I conceive refers to the Matt. xiii. 29. great harvest day, viz., the end of the world, which our Lord calls the harvest, such that labour not to plough up the fallow-ground of their hearts, and sow to the Spirit, shall in that harvest day cry, Lord, Lord! but though they then beg, they shall have nothing. These persons hate, and strive to avoid all laborious and difficult work, though there is a necessity of it to be done. If an idle faith, a presumptuous faith, or Acts xv. 9. faith without works, will serve their turn; they have got that, but none of that faith that purifies the heart, and that leads them to "deny themselves, and to take up Matt. vii. 13, their cross and follow Christ," Matt. xvi. 24. But these things are too hard¹⁴ for them, they must be saved in an easier way, they cannot enter in at this strait gate, nor walk in this narrow way, they cannot bear the cold blasts of afflictions, temptations, reproaches and persecution.

Mr. Fool's Annotat. 8thly. A slothful person feeds not upon that which he hath gotten. "The slothful man roasteth not that which he hath took in hunting," Prov. xii. 27. Some think, Solomon meaneth that which he hath got unjustly, or by fraudulent practices; but this I humbly conceive, is not meant hereby, but rather when a man hath got by his endeavour the things of this world, he does not live upon them, he enjoys not the fruit of his labour, though he may catch venison, yet lives upon mean diet. So some spiritual slothful persons, they may hunt for food for their souls, go and hear this and that minister, and search the scripture to know the way of life; but when they have attained to some great degree of light and knowledge, may be know Christ only is the way, yet they believe not on him, they find by hunting this and that promise, but do not make food of it, i. e., do not by faith apply those promises to their own souls; also they see this and that ordinance Christ hath appointed, but they obey them not, submit not to them, and also they find there are such and such severe threatenings pronounced against all unbelievers, impenitent and disobedient persons, but they fear them not; and thus the slothful servant roasteth not what he hath took in hunting.

9thly. The way of the Lord to a slothful person is as an hedge of thorns, that is, it is grievous to him, or there are in it such difficulties, that he despaireth to pass through, and never striveth to overcome them. "The way of the slothful is as an hedge of thorns," Prov. xv. 19. The Holy Ghost alludes to that way which he ought to walk in, it is grievous to him, like pricking thorns; now the reason of this is because his heart is not changed, for all believers found, before they received the grace of God, and were renewed, how grievous the work of religion was to them. The old nature hates true piety; "Because the carnal mind is enmity against God, it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be," Rom. viii. 7. "But the way of the righteous is made plain," Prov. xv. 19. And hence the beloved disciple saith, "And his commandments are not grievous," 1 John v. 3. They that are true believers, having obtained a new nature and sincere love to Jesus Christ, the hardest command is easy and not grievous to them, though it may be hard to the fleshly or unrenewed part, yet after the inward man they delight in the law of God; and this shows the absolute necessity there is of regeneration, and what a woful state such are in, who only have their understandings somewhat enlightened, but have not their hearts, their wills, and their affections renewed or changed, for religion is but a burden to them; and this discovers that a vast difference there is between a true, sanctified person, and all others.

10thly. Slothful persons live not up to what they know of God, they do not improve their uttermost strength and abilities, but know more than they will do, and this our Lord shows very clearly in this parable, in respect of this wicked servant; they do not bring up the bottom of their lives to the top of their light, as it is impossible to obey the truth, and not to know it; so to know the truth, and not to obey it is unprofitable. "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven, but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven," Matt. vii. 21. Divine knowledge (saith one) is not like the light of the moon, to sleep by; but it is like the light of the sun to work by, it is not a loiterer in the market-place, but a labourer in the vineyard. A man may be a great scholar, and yet be a great sinner; Judas was a preacher, and yet a traitor. Many professors know what is to be done, but never do what is to be known.

Thus I have given you the character of the wicked and slothful servant.

“Take therefore the talent from him, and give it to him that hath the ten talents; for unto every one that hath shall be given, but from him that hath not, shall be taken away, even that which he hath,” ver. 29, 30.

The taking away of his talent (saith one) and the taking him away from his talent, is all one. Our Lord no doubt means he shall be stripped of all Christ gave him, even his very soul shall be required of him, and he shall never be trusted any more; this is done at death, and will appear to be fully done in the day of judgment. Though God sometimes before discovers some men to be hypocrites, and all they boasted of, seems then to be taken away, they are utterly blasted, &c.

“And give it to him that hath ten.”

In this there is also a disparity, we are therefore only to attend on the scope and design of our Lord in these words. A lord among men it is true, may take the money, or talent he gave to an unfaithful servant, and give it to another, but I see not how the talent our Lord refers to, can be given to another; neither ought parables to be strained after such a manner, that in all things they must run parallel-wise, and they that see not this, let them remain blind.

1. We are to learn from hence, that whatsoever wicked men have of earthly things, or common talents, they shall lose it, or be dispossessed of all they had.

2. That though Christ's faithful servants shall not receive an addition from those that were wicked; yet that the industrious and faithful Christian shall have much more abundance; or, as the unprofitable servant, shall have nothing; so the faithful servant shall be greatly enriched; and all this our Lord speaketh to encourage our diligence in his service, and in improving all gifts and blessings we have received of him.

Quest. How can that be taken away from him which he had not?

1. Answ. To say he had no talent, is not so; for his Lord gave him one talent; neither can that which a man hath not, be taken away from him.

2. Therefore our Lord doubtless meaneth it was all one as if he had it not, he hid it, he used or improved it not, or had gained nothing by it, and so it may be said he had it not, or did but seem to have what he had.

3. Besides temporal things are said not to be. “Wilt thou set thine eyes upon that which is not? for riches certainly make themselves wings and fly away,” Prov. xxiii. 5. Whosoever has true grace, has really something, i. e., they have that which hath substance in it; but whatsoever is short of this, is in Christ's account just nothing.

“And cast the unprofitable servant into utter darkness, there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth,” ver. 30.

Thus our Lord ends many parables to discover the certainty of the torments of hell. “Unprofitable servant,” &c.

Quest. Are not all unprofitable servants?

Answ. All are unprofitable in the sense our Lord speaketh, when he says, “When you have done all those things which are commanded you, say, We are unprofitable servants,” Luke xvi. 10, that is, that we deserve nothing. God is not a debtor unto us, but whatsoever we have is of his grace alone; the meaning is, God receiveth no benefit by our service. Now if faithful servants are unprofitable, how much more are wicked and slothful servants, they neither bring glory to God, nor profit to men, nor unto their own souls?

USE.

1. How dismal will the end of all wicked men be? Whether profane persons or professors, who are hypocrites or slothful servants.

2. Let the great end, design, and scope of our blessed Lord in this parable be well observed. 1. That though he carries long, yet he will come again. 2. That when he comes he will be as a King, and Judge of heaven and earth. 3. That whatsoever talents any have received, God expecteth the improvement of them. 4. That some have more given to them, and talents that far excel what are given unto others, and that God distributes his own goods and favours as he pleaseth. 5. That all those that he gives true grace unto, do more or less improve their Lord's money. 6. That whatsoever any men have, whether earthly or

What is meant by taking away the one talent.

How that can be said to be taken away what a man hath not.

Prov. viii. 21.

spiritual good things, they received all from Christ, and shall be called to give a strict account to him for them at the last day. 7. That proud and sinful men are subject to charge God and the blessed Jesus foolishly; nay, to censure him as being severe, and even lay the blame of their miscarriages upon him, as if he had not given them enough, or that which was sufficient. 8. That all their mouths shall be stopped, and the justice of God vindicated at the great day, and that their own plea shall silence them. 9. And that, though the rewards God will give, are rewards of grace; yet all pious and laborious servants of Christ shall have glorious rewards. 10. That there will be degrees of glory; one is made ruler over ten cities, another over two cities. 11. That eternal wrath in hell shall be the certain portion of all wicked men. Now to conclude with what I shall say to this parable.

3. Let us all be exhorted to holy diligence in our Lord's work and service. (1.) Consider the weightiness of the work, it concerns our eternal happiness. (2.) Consider, what hard work the Son of God (considered as God's Servant, or Mediator, hath done for us,) and how he sweat and bled at his work. (3.) Consider, what honour, fear, and service, love, and obedience Christ deserveth from us, and what a good Master he is; and God by our fruitfulness is said to be glorified. (4.) Let us consider, whose eyes are continually upon us, whilst we are at our work. (5.) Consider, that now our Lord is very near, or it will be but a very little while before we must all appear before him, to give up our account. (6.) Remember how kindly our Lord will embrace all his faithful servants, when he comes, and what a commendation he will give them, and what joys they shall enter into. And thus I close with this parable.

SUPPLEMENT

EXPOSITION

OF ALL THE

PARABLES AND SIMILITUDES, ETC.

THE

PARABLE

OF THE

CREDITOR THAT HAD TWO DEBTORS.

SERMON I.

There was a certain creditor which had two debtors, the one owed him five hundred pence, and the other fifty. And when they had nothing to pay, he frankly forgave them both. Tell me, therefore, which loved him most? Simon answered, and said, I suppose he to whom he forgave most. And he said unto him, thou hast judged truly.
—Luke vii. 41. 43.

THE reason of our Lord's speaking this parable, we may see, ver. 36. One of the Pharisees desired him that he would eat with him, &c. And he went into the Pharisee's house, and he sat down. And behold a woman in the city, that was a sinner; that is, a great sinner, a notorious sinner, the chief sinner in the city; when she knew that Jesus sat at meat in the Pharisee's house, brought an alabaster box of ointment, ver. 37, and stood at his feet behind him weeping, and began to wash his feet with tears, &c.

The reason of our Lord's speaking this parable.

This offended the Pharisee, and he said, "If this man was a prophet, he would have known what manner of woman this is that toucheth him, for she is a sinner;" and then Jesus answered, and said, &c.

2. As to the scope of this parable, it is,

1. To show, that Jesus Christ came to save sinners, great sinners, such that see the need they have of a Saviour: the Pharisees were sinners, though more close and secret sinners: not sinners in their own eyes, like others, but righteous persons.

2. To show there are degrees of sin, or that some are greater sinners, more notorious in sin and wickedness than others.

3. To show both little and great sins, when the sinner believes and repenteth, there is forgiveness and pardon in God, through Jesus Christ, for them.

4. That all sin is forgiven freely of mere grace and favour.

5. To show, that great sinners, when forgiven, do love Christ more than others; and that the sense of pardon of sin causeth a poor sinner to love Jesus Christ dearly.

But to proceed to speak to the parts thereof ;

1. By the creditor, the great God is meant.

2. By the debtor that oweth Him five hundred pence, is meant Mary Magdalene and other great sinners, that believe.

3. By the debtor that owed Him fifty, any sinner that is not so notorious in wickedness, perhaps a Pharisee, or one who seems not so great a sinner ; though I see not how it may be particularly applied to Simon, for whether he believed in Christ or not, and was pardoned, is doubtful.

Having nothing to pay, or nothing to satisfy the justice of God.

“ He frankly forgave them,” that is, freely, without any payment the debtor made, or could make. Note, Doct. 1. That sin is a debt, and sinners are debtors unto God.

1. That sin is a debt, and sinners debtors : this I shall but just touch upon here, because it is opened more fully elsewhere.

Sin is called a debt, “ forgive us our debt,” &c. By sin we are in debt to God’s justice, we having violated his just and holy law.

Sin is called a debt, ὑφειλήματα, debita, (saith one) sins and debts are used promiscuously, as Luke xi. 4. Compared with Matt. vi. 10. It is generally used in respect of any that are obnoxious to punishment ; the Latins, Pœnas debere, so the Hebrew word נָסַף, is used both for debt and guilt ; it is not called a debt as if it were owing to God, but the contrary, i. e., obedience and holiness ; in sin there is guilt, or an obligation to eternal punishment ; and this is called a debt, &c.

But for the farther opinion of it, consider,

1. A man may rob his neighbour of his goods, or of his good name, and so be a criminal and a debtor : sinners have robbed Almighty God of His holiness. Adam gave more credit to the devil than unto God, and so all wicked men.

2. Man brake God’s holy law, and so became a debtor to His justice, i. e., obnoxious to the penalty denounced.

3. Debts may be more or less, though the least must be satisfied, for, so some sinners are more guilty than others ; here is one that owed Him five hundred pence, and another fifty.

4. Debts may be as great, that a debtor may not be able to pay them, nay, have nothing to pay ; sinners are such debtors they are not able to pay, or satisfy God’s justice for their sins ; they have not one farthing to pay.

5. If a debtor fall into a man’s hand that is for strict justice, unless he or his surety pay all he owes, he must go to prison : now, God being just, infinitely just and holy, justice being a perfection of his nature, unless sinners or their blessed Surety pay all the whole debt, or make a full and complete satisfaction to the law and divine justice, they must go to the prison of eternal darkness : “ And when they had nothing to pay, he frankly forgave them both,” or freely forgave them.

Doct. 2. That sin is frankly or freely forgiven, as an act of sovereign grace alone, to poor sinners, through Jesus Christ.

It is forgiven freely to us, as an act of God’s grace alone, but not without a full satisfaction made by our blessed Surety, being justified freely by his grace, through the redemption that is in Jesus Christ, Rom. iii. 24.

“ Whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation through faith in his blood, to declare his righteousness, for the remission of sins that are past, through the forbearance of God,” &c. ver. 25.

God doth not forgive sinners, as a simple act of mercy, without respect had to that atonement, redemption, or satisfaction, made to his justice by Jesus Christ, and this was signified in all those legal sacrifices, and without shedding of blood was no remission ; to show, Heb. ix. 22, that without the shedding of Christ’s blood there is no pardon, no remission of one sin, whether great or small sins.

Obj. If we, in Christ, paid all our debts, and that his righteousness, i. e., his active and passive obedience, is imputed to us, how can we be said to be forgiven freely ? to this purpose Bellarmin.

1. Answ. We found not the Surety, but God.

2. Men may as well urge the Surety’s money was the debtor’s, because His money pay the debtor’s debt, and it is accepted for him ; nay, and that the bankrupt is as rich as his Surety.

3. Men, after the same manner also, may say they are their own saviours, because saved by One substituted and accepted in their stead, to make an atonement for their sins,

See the parable of a certain king that took an account of his servants, Matt. xviii. 24.

Sin is called a debt.

Pardon of sin is an act of God’s free grace.

How sin is forgiven, and yet Christ satisfy God’s justice.

or to satisfy justice, and save their souls; and thus, instead of magnifying free grace in pardon and justification, men may utterly destroy it, and say they are justified by works, because it is by works of obedience done by our Surety. But nothing is more fully laid down in the word of God than this, viz., That we are forgiven freely, pardoned and justified freely of God's rich grace; it is all in a way of mercy and grace to us, but in a way of merit and desert to Jesus Christ; so that all the glory does redound to the free grace of God, and to Jesus Christ, the great pay-master; and thankfulness on our part: and that we are frankly and freely forgiven on our part, though our debts are paid by Jesus Christ, I shall endeavour to make appear.

Pardon of sin cost
Christ dear.

I. In respect of the spring and rise of the way of our pardon; the satisfaction which was made for us, was contrived as an act of infinite wisdom, which is a greater demonstration of grace than if God had pardoned us as a simple act of mercy, without a satisfaction to his justice: what could be a greater gift of free grace, than to give his Son to die for us?

II. Because whatsoever Christ did for us, was in him also an act of his grace and love; "Ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ," 2 Cor. viii. 9. &c. But farther to prove it;

III. Pray see how the scripture declares it to be wholly of the free grace of God that we are pardoned, justified, renewed, and saved; "It is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth; but of God that sheweth mercy," Rom.

How it appears that our pardon is of God's free grace alone.

ix. 16. As election is of grace and mercy alone, so is justification, pardon of sin, and eternal life also; "By grace ye are saved through faith, and that not of yourselves; it is the gift of God," Eph. ii. 3. Grace may be extended to any object, but mercy refers to persons in misery; and God set his love to the elect, as fallen, and so as objects of mercy: mercy is grace and love to the miserable, though grace properly is love not limited to this or that person, in respect of their circumstances, but only let out as sovereign pleasure pleaseth: yet, I say, no elect person proceeding from Adam whom God manifesteth love and grace unto, but are objects of mercy also; because, they, by sin, were made miserable as well as others. The time when God set his love on us, and Christ loved us, was when we lay in our blood:

Man the object of mercy as well as of love.

and in that condition, from eternity, God beheld us. Observe St. Paul's words, "Not by works of righteousness that we have done, but according to his mercy he saved us, by the washing of regeneration and renewing of the Holy Ghost," Tit. iii. 5; according to his mercy as well as grace and love, though we are pardoned, justified, and saved according to the works which Christ hath done; yet we must not call his works and obedience, ours, not according to works of obedience or righteousness that we have done. Moreover, also the elect are called vessels of mercy, as well as of grace and love.

IV. That pardon of sin, justification, &c., is alone of God's free grace, love, and mercy, will farther appear, because there was no force or constraint put upon God, the Father, or the Son, to undertake our redemption: I mean, God had been just and righteous if he had showed fallen man no favour, no love nor pity; it rose not from any necessity of nature that was in the divine Being, but only from God's sovereign will, grace, and compassion.

V. It also appears in that the gift of his own Son was an act of his free love to us; he was given to die for us, to procure pardon of our sins, and the justification of our persons. What could be a greater act of love than this?

VI. We did not, could not, oblige the Holy God, nor move his heart towards us in a way of grace, love, and compassion. Did Adam entreat, pray, or beseech God to pity or pardon him, or any of his offspring, and send him (or them) a Saviour? No, no, he ran from God, and begged no help nor forgiveness of him, before free grace was manifested unto him.

VII. Did any sinner deserve pardon of God? much less such a way of it that divine wisdom found out. Were not all men rebels against God? it was free grace, sirs, without the least desert or merit; for we were so far from being deserving, that we were ill-deserving, nay, hell-deserving creatures.

VIII. Had sinners anything to pay which could satisfy the justice of God? No, pray read the words of my text, "And when they had nothing to pay, he frankly forgave them both." Alas! they ran every day more and more in debt, and had not so much as one farthing to give, to satisfy for the evil one sin had in it; or had we any friend or brother, or could we find a surety who would oblige himself to pay our debts, was the ransom of our finding? No, no, (saith God) I have found a ransom.

IX. Or did God do all that good he designed to do, and hath done for us, with respect had to some after-recompence to be made by us, or compensation for his great love, grace, and pity, showed to us? No, no, he knew it was impossible for sinners to do that, nor did he expect it at our hands, no, not anything, but a thankful acceptance of his infinite favour. "What giveth thou to him, or what receiveth he at thy hands?" Job xxxv. 7. My brethren, when we have done all we can do, "We are but unprofitable servants, and do no more than what was our duty to do," Luke xvii. 10. How then can we make him any recompence? besides, are not the blessings such that are infinite or inconceivable? i. e., God to be our God; what can finite creatures give in recompence of such a gift? "He (saith Paul) is not worshipped of men's hands, as if he needed any thing, seeing he giveth to all men life, and breath, and all things," Act xvii. 25. Do we, can we give anything to God? faith is the most noble grace of all graces, but faith doth not give anything to God; no, but it is always a fetching from him; we therefore bring nothing but empty vessels to him that he may fill them. Alas! all that we are and can do we owe to him, also faith, repentance, and all ability to do good, we derive from him as his own free gifts; we must therefore say with David, "Of thine own have we given thee," 1 Chron. xxix. 14.

Besides, God is full already, we can put no more into this vessel; there is no empty space in God nor in Jesus Christ; who can add to infiniteness? or fill this ocean fuller than it is? There is, my brethren, no recompence to be made by us to God; no giving to him, nor of his receiving at our hands; God hath no need of us, nor of any thing we can do, though he accepteth of our services in and through Jesus Christ; therefore the all-sufficiency and independency of God, shows it is of his grace alone. Is not God happy, yea, infinitely happy, perfectly happy in himself without us? and was he not as happy before he made the world, either angels or men, as he is now? or can there be any addition made to his infinite or essential glory?

X. Or are there any previous qualifications to be in us, or any gracious act performed by us, in order to pardon of sin, as a cause thereof, or wherefore God doth forgive our sins? May be you will say, yea, there is repentance, and faith required in order to pardon.

Ans. Is not man before grace, or before he is quickened, dead? and are not all his works dead works, and not accepted of God? Can a tree bring forth good fruit before it is made good; either that repentance you speak of is good fruit, or not, (I mean evangelical repentance) or it is not; but such repentance it cannot be before he receives the Holy Spirit; besides, are not faith and repentance the gifts of God, or doth legal repentance, or any evangelical act of the creature, procure God's grace and special favour? or must not God as an act of his own free grace turn the sinner before he can be turned? or because repentance is required as a condition of connexion; is it a procuring condition by way of casualty; or because God commands sinners to make them new hearts? hath the sinner power of himself to do it? or is not pardon, peace, wine, and milk, had "without money and without price?" Isa. lv. 1, 2; if so, our repentance, faith, &c., procures it not at God's hand.

XI. Doth not God act towards man according to the counsel of his own will? and doth not pardon, and all good we receive, alone flow from hence? "Who hath saved us and called us with an holy calling, not according to our works, but according to his own purpose and grace that was given us in Christ before the world began," 2 Tim. i. 9.

XII. Or is there any room left, after all that God has done, for sinners to boast or glory? or doth the will of God depend upon the will of man? or the will of man upon the will of God? Is it not God (who by his almighty power inclines the will of man to move and bow to the will of God? Or shall any have cause to admire themselves in the day of judgment, in respect to the care they have had of their own souls, and for their improving the means of grace? or shall they not admire God's free grace and infinite love to them? or doth not God do more for them that are saved than he doth for those who perish? "Who makes thee to differ from another? or what hast thou which thou didst not receive? now if thou didst not receive it? why dost thou glory as if thou hadst not received it?" 1 Cor. iv. 7. What I have said I hope will fully tend to satisfy all, that pardon of sin, justification, and eternal life, is alone of God's free grace.

APPLICATION.

1. Let great sinners from hence see what ground there is for them to throw themselves upon Christ for pardon; this woman was the city sinner, she was a great sinner; but with Paul she obtained mercy. God's thoughts are not as our thoughts; poor sinners are ready to were not their sins so great God would pardon them; but be not discouraged, though your sins are great, yet Christ's merits, and God's mercy through him, are far greater. We have a great High-priest, therefore say with David, "forgive my sins, for they are great," Heb. iv.

14, Psal. xxv. 11 ; he knew God was great in mercy, he that owed five hundred pence, nay, ten thousand talents was pardoned, as well as he that owed but fifty or a hundred pence. "Though your sins be as red as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow," Isa. xviii. 19 ; it is as easy with God to pardou great sins as small, Christ having atoned for all the sins of God's elect.

2. This reproves those who magnify the power of man, or the will of man, intimating, that after all that God or Christ doth, in order to conversion and pardon, he leaves the whole issue to the will of the creature ; so that it is the will of man that determines the matter, whether the Word shall be effectual or not : God (they say) doth afford equal power, grace, mercy, and love to them that are damned, as he doth to them that are saved : if so, then we must read the text backward, "It is of him that willeth, and of him that runneth, and not of God that showeth mercy."

1. If men, before grace is infused into them, or they are renewed, can act as they say, what is become of that enmity that St. Paul says is in the carnal mind ? he says the will, or "the mind, is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be ;" and these men say it may be subject, without any supernatural or Almighty power is put forth to change the heart, or else they say nothing, but must give up their bad cause.

Hear what one of them says ; and that no immediate operation of the Spirit upon the mind or will is needful for any one that believes, &c. This he strives to prove.

1 Thess. i. 3.

2. They affirm that moral suasions are sufficient to bring men to believe ; so that the power men have to believe, is naturally in them, and not given them immediately by the Lord.

And hereby they deny also, that man is dead in sin, spiritually dead, and cannot act spiritually, nor do anything that is truly good, until he is quickened.

3. Also then we are born again of our own will, or the will of man, and not as it is the effect of the will and good pleasure of God, contrary to the testimony of the Spirit, that says, "which are born again, not of blood, nor of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God," John i. 13.

Moreover, (as one notes) it follows according to their opinion, "that the general love which they would have in God to all mankind alike," is but an indifferent respect to all ; which proves love or hatred, as the sinner's will determines it ; but when they ascribe any particular love to God, it is no other than what rises from the sinner's love to Him, viz., He foresaw what we would do, and how we would repent and embrace Jesus Christ, and be holy, and therefore he chose us.

3. Since pardon is of mere grace, let God have all the glory ; he will not give it to another.

4. Poor sinners, plead God's absolute promises, and though you can find nothing but sin in yourselves, yet cry to God, and cry to Christ, to take the cure of you into His own hand, that you may feel His wonderful operations in the day of His power : it is good to lie at the pool, and wait for the moving of the water, and cry that the Holy Ghost would put you into that Fountain opened for sin and uncleanness.

5. You are pardoned, see that you ascribe all to God's free grace ; O give all the glory unto Him, whose grace I shall the next time show is wonderful ! it is God who, through Christ, frankly forgave you, and also gives all things else you need, with Jesus Christ also ; to whom, with the Father and the Holy Spirit, be glory, wisdom, power, and everlasting praises. Amen.

SERMON II.

And when they had nothing to pay, he frankly forgave them both.—Luke vii. 42.

DOCT. 1. I have spoken to one point of doctrine from hence, viz., "That sin is frankly or freely forgiven, as an act of sovereign grace."

I shall now proceed to another, viz.

DOCT. 2. That the free grace, mercy, and goodness of God, through Christ Jesus, is great and wonderful.

1. I shall show the rise or spring of grace.

2. Prove and fully evince the truth of this proposition.

3. Show that this grace is let out in a way of righteousness.

4. Apply it

What is meant by the grace of God.

By the way, you know that the word grace is variously taken in Scripture; but here by it I mean the favour, goodness, and rich bounty of God.

The rise or spring of grace.

1. As to the rise and spring of grace, it is alone from the glorious and transcendent nature of God: God in himself is good, nay, goodness itself in the abstract. As he is love, holiness, &c., so he is goodness, that is one of the infinite perfections and attributes of his holy nature; and so God is the Fountain from whence all grace and divine favour flows to any of his creatures.

2. The rise and spring of grace is from the Divine will; it flows alone from the fountain of goodness, and as the result of God's eternal counsel and purpose, according to his own good pleasure, wheresoever grace is let forth, it is as the apostle shows, according to the purpose of him "who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will," Eph. i. 11: As it is let out in wisdom, and also freely and abundantly; so it is according to his own sovereign pleasure, "who hath saved us and called us, not according to our works, but according to his own purpose and grace," &c., 2 Tim. i. 9. It hath an amazing rise from God himself, without any motive, or anything foreseen in the creature to excite him; "he is gracious:" No other reason can be given of divine favour.

2. To prove and fully evince, that the grace, mercy, and goodness of God is wonderful.

1. This appears, because where "Sin abounded, grace hath much more abounded," or superabounded: grace did not prevent the entering of sin, yet God had a glorious design and purpose in permitting of sin to enter; "by one man sin entered into the world," Rom. v. 12. Though sin that entered was very evil, the worst of evils, the poison and venom of all evil, yet grace exceeds, far exceeds, exceeds beyond all measure the evil of sin, yet sin had mankind down, and reigned, nay, triumphed over them. Adam's sin set sin upon the throne, and no man nor angel could pull down or destroy this tyrant; for "sin reigned unto death;" all men lay slain and dead at the feet of sin, and it hath (in all it reigns) the chiefest seat in their souls;

Grace far exceeds sin or is much more abundant.

Sin very evil.

they are led, influenced, and brought into subjection to it; it predominates, and has a ruling power in men, and they naturally yield themselves servants and vassals unto it. Nay, and every faculty of their souls is corrupted thereby; the nature of the reign of sin is therefore dreadful, and is attended with horrid guilt, filth, and pollution, causing the sinner to hate God, and filling his mind with enmity against him, making man a slave of the devil, and obnoxious to the curse of the law, the wrath of God, and everlasting torments and condemnation in hell; there is an amazing and frightful evil in sin; and the entering of the law made it appear more evil, yea, exceeding sinful.

Rom. v. 20. ver. 7, 13.

But yet the grace of God much more abounded or super-aboundeth, in that sin, (though it hath so much evil in it, nay, may objectively be said to have infinite evil in it) yet it is but the product of the devil: the fruit or spawn of a degenerate spirit; but grace is the product or fruit of the mighty

In what respects grace may be said to exceed sin.

God; and therefore as the cause (in its nature) far exceeds the effect, so does grace, goodness, and divine power far exceed the evil of sin. What is a degenerate and finite spirit to the holy and infinite God? though sin is very evil in its kind, yet grace is far more good and powerful in its kind, in respect of the cause and fountain from whence it proceedeth.

Sin the product of the devil.

2. If we consider the subjects whom sin defiles, and in whom it reigns, and through whose consent it came to be: grace exceeds sin; sin is of the will of man; but grace is the product of the will of God: what is a poor, weak impotent creature? "What is man?" Sin is brought forth or produced by the consent of the will of man, in yielding to Satan's temptations.

But grace is the product of the will of God, the fruit of a holy and gracious God; therefore, if grace be let forth freely, it must exceed and superabound all sin, as God exceeds the power of the devil, and an infinite Creator a poor finite creature, Grace helps a poor creature to prevail against sin.

3. Because grace manifested to a poor weak creature, can limit, restrain, curb, nay, kill and overcome sin, when it is in its highest power, or hath its greatest strength and dominion in the soul of a sinner, as appeared in this woman, in whom sin had (perhaps) as strong a power as ever in any one soul;

yet the love and grace of God laid sin and Satan sprawling (as I may say) at her feet; she is made to trample upon them both, by the virtue of a small beam of divine grace shining in upon her soul, through Jesus Christ.

4. Grace must needs far exceed sin in its power, to the rooting out and vanquishing of it, because God purposed in his eternal counsel to permit sin to enter into the world, and to suffer it to abound, that he might thereby take an occasion to manifest the nature and infinite power of grace, in pardoning, subduing, and utterly destroying sin, and him whose work it is. To be sure the holy God would never have suffered this monster to have been born, and to have entered into the world, had it not been to magnify his own glory, and especially the glory of his rich and infinite grace: who would suffer such a traitor to get out of prison, (if he could keep him there) whom he knew would be too hard for a whole kingdom to overcome, when once let loose?

God's design in permitting sin to come into the world, was to advance his own grace.

5. Grace must needs far exceed sin, or superabound, because God added the law upon Mount Sinai on purpose that sin might abound, "moreover the law entered;" well, wherefore? That sin might abound; "but where is sin abounded, grace did much more abound," Rom. v. 20. This was the grand reason, viz., That God might display his infinite grace in destroying it. What warrior would suffer his enemy to arm himself with new weapons, and give him to get fresh strength, if he did not know after all, he could with much ease lay himself sprawling at his foot? "The strength of sin is the law, but thanks be to God, through Jesus Christ, which giveth us the victory." Grace, through Christ, giveth us the victory when sin is in the fullest strength. Sin hereby seemed to revive and get new arms, or renew its power in wounding and ruining mankind, (by reason of the weakness that is in them, to perform the righteous precepts thereof). And this, I say, God on purpose, caused to come to pass, that he might reveal the glory and power of his Almighty grace, divine love, and goodness to his elect, in pardoning of sin, and vanquishing of it.

The law entered to make grace abound

6. Nay, God lets the law break in upon the conscience of a sinner, that sin may abound in the soul by the convictions of the Spirit, when first he begins to awaken him, so that the sinner is amazed to see what horrid guilt and filth is in his heart, and what a Holy God he has offended, and what wrath he lies obnoxious unto thereby; and yet all this is but to discover his infinite and inconceivable grace in his free-pardoning of all sin, in the sight and sense of poor sinners, in whom the law thus entered, and sin revived; I say, the commandment came and sin revives, that grace might be magnified.

The law enters on the conscience in convictions, that grace may abound.

7. That the grace of God is wonderful, and doth much more abound than sin appeareth in that sin came into the world by man. "By one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin," Rom. v. 12. But grace, as it enters by the eternal and infinite God, so it is by the grace of all the three Persons in the blessed Trinity. Now, shall the evil of the sin of one man exceed the grace of all Persons in the Godhead? or shall there be more evil done to us by the sin of one impotent man, than the grace of the infinite God, i. e., the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, can outvie or deliver us from, who believe in Jesus Christ?

sin appeareth in that sin came into the world by man. "By one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin," Rom. v. 12. But grace, as it enters by the eternal and infinite God, so it is by the grace of all the three Persons in the blessed Trinity. Now, shall the evil of the sin of one man exceed the grace of all Persons in the Godhead? or shall there be more evil done to us by the sin of one impotent man, than the grace of the infinite God, i. e., the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, can outvie or deliver us from, who believe in Jesus Christ?

8. That grace does superabound, sin appears in respect had to the gift of God, in sending of his only begotten Son to save us from the guilt, power, and punishment thereof. No doubt God suffered man to fall, that his grace and inconceivable love might be revealed this way. O what a gift of God's free grace is Jesus Christ: which way could God manifest greater love and favour, than to give his Son, or not to spare his own Son, but to deliver him up to die the cursed death of the cross for all his elect? Rom vii. 30. Grace (we may be sure) will withhold nothing from us, that hath not withheld the Son of God from being a sacrifice for our sins, and so to procure our pardon. O this is glorious grace, enough to astonish men or angels.

John iii. 16. The gift of Christ tends to make grace abound

9. Grace appears yet farther to be wonderful, because none of the other attributes of God, but this of divine love and goodness, could help and save undone sinners. Could wisdom, holiness, or power do it? No, for as wisdom had never contrived the way, had not grace and favour stirred it up, so had not rich grace broke forth in the gift of the Son of God, justice would soon have put a stop to all the other attributes, (had it been possible for them to have stirred without being moved by the divine will, or God's grace, favour, rich bounty, and goodness).

Grace magnifies the glory of God in all his attributes.

Moreover, it is God's grace that is the spring and rise from whence all the divine attributes (in our Lord Jesus Christ) are magnified, shine in glory, and meet in sweet harmony, therefore divine grace through Jesus Christ is wonderful.

10. How wonderful must that grace be that lay hid in God from all eternity; and O what a way hath divine wisdom found out, to let it forth ways, under different dispensations.

to poor creatures, and which could not, indeed, be manifested without various ways of revealing the divine will, in different times, different methods, and different dispensations of this Grace, as before the law, under the law, and under the Gospel; and hence it is called "The manifold wisdom of God," Eph. iii. 10. Moreover, it is the grace and favour of God to mankind, which the holy angels desired to look into, and which they are amazed to behold. They saw or beheld God in our nature, the second Person of the Trinity, who assumed our nature into union with His divine Person, and this with the greatest astonishment, but chiefly, no doubt, as it is the effects of glorious grace. "He was seen of angels," 1 Tim. iii. 16. We preach the Gospel, we make known the infinite love and grace of God in Christ, which things the angels desire to look into, or pry into, that is, with admiration.

Grace by Christ abounds the favour showed to the first Adam.

11. It is wonderful grace, because it far exceeds all that favour, grace, and rich bounty which God bestowed upon Adam in innocency. It is true he was a son of God, but it was by creation, but by grace and peculiar favour we are the sons of God by adoption and regeneration, and so are heirs of God, heirs of all things, and can never be dispossessed of the inheritance. Adam had the image of God stamped upon him, but was liable to lose it, and did lose it; but grace in Christ Jesus restores that image again, so as never to be lost. He had a glorious earthly paradise, but lost it; but grace in Christ raises us up to possess the heavenly paradise, which we cannot lose.

Greater favour shown to the saints than to the holy angels in some respects.

12. It is greater favour, grace, and goodness (as it seems to me) than what the holy angels possess or partake of. They are the sons of God, but not the spouse of Christ. They have not that honour, but are only servants that wait upon the sacred Bridegroom and his bride. He that is the eternal God is truly man. Grace unites the Son of God and the nature of man, in one person. This grace and favour magnifies believers, who are united to him above angelic nature. "Verily he took not on him the nature of angels, but the seed of Abraham," Heb. ii. 16.

The whole of our salvation is of grace.

13. The whole economy of man's redemption, and all the transactions of the Almighty from the beginning of the world, in and by Jesus Christ, as to the design and purpose of it, was to magnify God's glorious grace: if we spake of those covenant transactions between the Father and the Son, about our salvation before the world began; or God substituting, and accepting, and sending his Son into the world; or of his incarnation, birth, life, death, resurrection, ascension, intercession, and glorification; it is all to manifest the glory of God's rich grace: or if we speak of election, reconciliation, union, justification, vocation, pardon of sin, adoption, final perseverance, and our glorification, it is all but to show the rich bounty and grace of God to his chosen.

14. If we consider to whom (or to what undeserving and ill-deserving creatures) this grace is manifested, it must needs appear wonderful to all; what they were I have already shown. O, what an ill and vile creature was man, and from what an estate to what an estate doth this grace raise all that receive Christ.

15. The beginning and ending, or finishing God's temple-work, is all to glorify rich grace, so that "when the top-stone is laid, it shall be with shoutings, crying, grace, grace unto it," Zech. iv. 7.

16. Mercy, grace, and divine goodness is infinite, immense, and unsearchable; for as God is infinite in power, justice, wisdom, holiness, &c., so he is also in grace and divine goodness; therefore where sin abounded, grace much more abounded, for in Christ the streams of boundless grace and mercy are opened; and therefore grace let out in Christ is wonderful.

17. If the knowledge we have of this grace in this world, be so wonderful, or so much of it as is let out here, what will that grace be, which we shall have opened to us in heaven? For what is glory but the consummating, completing, or perfecting the design and purpose of God's eternal favour and rich grace to believers?

18. Lastly, Grace is wonderful, because it reigns: grace hath erected a throne and is upon that throne, and there reigns; and that grace might reign, it stirred up divine wisdom to find out the way of its advancement on the throne; which was to remove all those obstacles which hindered grace's accession thereunto, and mounting thereon; which was divine justice, the law, sin, and the devil; but by Christ's obedience justice is satisfied, the law magnified and answered, and sin and the devil dethroned. So that "as sin reigned unto death, grace might reign through righteousness unto eternal life by Jesus Christ our Lord," Rom. v. 21. Grace, my brethren, like a glorious and victorious queen, is by Jesus Christ raised to the throne and is crowned; it reigns and prevails against all opposition whatsoever. As he that reigns must first overcome all that attempt to have supreme sovereignty or the pre-eminency, or those that were got on the throne; so hath God's grace prevailed against sin and Satan who before reigned and tyrannized over us. Our Lord "hath spoiled principalities and powers, and made a show of them openly, triumphing over them in it," Col. ii. 15. That is, by the blood of the cross, "And hath condemned sin in the flesh," Rom. viii. 3. And now grace reigns, and shall reign unto eternal life.

Thirdly, I shall show that grace is manifested, and comes to reign through righteousness, or in a way of righteousness. See the text just mentioned. "That grace might reign through righteousness by Jesus Christ," Rom v. 21. Grace is not elevated, it hath not its accessioin to the throne in an unjust or in an unrighteous way, but it reigns through righteousness; not through our righteousness, no, but through the righteousness of God, in His fulfilling His faithful promises to His Son, but chiefly (as I conceive) through the righteousness of Christ, or through His perfect and complete obedience, or that righteousness He wrought out, by doing and suffering. It was through the righteousness of Jesus Christ that grace reigns; for without this righteousness, neither holiness, justice, nor the holy law would let grace reign; but O, how hath divine wisdom contrived a way, in a compliance with the divine will, that grace might reign through righteousness by Jesus Christ! divine justice was upon the throne before, judging and condemning guilty sinners, and grace could not reign; but wisdom hath so provided matters now that grace is upon the throne, and all the divine attributes are mounted with rich grace, being magnified, and shining forth with equal glory; but it is all to advance sovereign grace and infinite goodness.

How grace reigns through righteousness by Christ Jesus.

2. Grace reigns through righteousness by Christ also, in the application of what He hath done and suffered for us; His merits are applied, and His righteousness is imputed to every one that believeth in Him, as an act of sovereign grace; and hereby also it appears grace reigns in subduing a man's self, sinful self, righteous self, and all the powers of darkness in the soul, and in quickening, acquitting, justifying, and pardoning, &c., all sinners, yea, the greatest sinners that believe in Jesus.

3. In persevering in the profession of righteousness, and in a state of life unto the end, God's rich grace by Christ is such that He will not break the bruised reed nor quench the smoking flax, until He hath brought forth judgment unto victory.

4. Grace reigns and will reign through righteousness, by conquering and subduing sin, or all those remainders of corruptions in the hearts of His pardoned ones. Moreover, let our condition or temptations be what they will, "Grace is sufficient for us," 2 Cor. xii. 9; which is upon the throne, and shall reign unto eternal life, and at last will crown with glory all who are under the ruling and reigning power thereof.

5. Grace reigns, and will reign through righteousness by Jesus Christ, in subduing and finally vanquishing the last enemy, which is death. Jesus Christ, by whom and in whom grace reigns, hath overcome death, "And now hath the keys of hell and death," Rev. i. 18; he hath power over death and the state of the dead; "I will deliver them from death: O death, I will be thy plague; O grave, I will be thy destruction," Hos. xiii. 14. So long as Christ reigns as mediator, so long grace will reign in and by Him, "And he must reign until he hath put all enemies under his feet; the last enemy that shall be destroyed is death," 1 Cor. xv. 25, 26.

APPLICATION.

1. Wonder not now, that this woman that owed five hundred pence was forgiven, and he that owed ten thousand talents was forgiven, since divine grace in and by Christ Jesus is so wonderful, and is let out in an amazing manner; or since grace and divine goodness is infinite, the ocean and great deeps of unspeakable love and mercy are broken up, and overflow all banks and bounds. Nothing can stand as a bar in the way of grace; no sin, no unworthiness; for the more sin, the greater sinner, and the more unworthy a sinner is, the more is free grace raised, magnified, and exalted in and by Jesus Christ.

2. How may this silence all the objections any sinner can make against himself? My sins are great. Are they greater than grace by Jesus Christ can pardon? "Where sin abounds (remember) grace has much more abounded," Rom. v. 19, 20.

3. Is grace exalted? does grace reign? is grace upon the throne? O, blessed news to a rebellious world, and to all vile traitors and ungodly sinners. O, haste to this throne; it is one thing to have a gracious king or queen to reign, and another thing to have a gracious Saviour to reign, and grace itself; infinite grace, boundless grace, immense grace, unspeakable grace, inconceivable grace, and unsearchable grace to reign. O, how happy are we under this reign; let all cry, long live this sovereign, this queen, i. e., grace that reigns through righteousness by Jesus Christ, this is the best reign that ever was; no sovereign prince or princess ever reigned through such righteousness: this is a just reign, grace reigns and exalts the infinite justice, infinite righteousness by Jesus Christ; it is a God-honouring reign, a Christ-exalting reign, a law-magnifying reign; it is a sin-condemning, a sin-killing, a sin-destroying reign; it is a hell-confounding and a devil-consuming reign; it is a death-vanquishing, a death plaguing and a death-destroying reign; it is a sinner-enlightening, a sinner-quickening, a sinner-renewing, a sinner-acquitting, a sinner-justifying, a sinner-pardoning, a sinner-comforting, a sinner enriching, a sinner-exalting, a sinner-sanctifying, and a sinner-glorifying reign, &c.

4. O happy souls; in whom, and over whom, and from whom grace reigns, almighty grace, infinite grace, and unspeakable grace: what, O child of God, dost thou fear? who can pull grace off the throne? can men? can devils? no, they can as soon pull God out of heaven, or Christ out of heaven, as dethrone God's sovereign grace, as we may infer and perceive by what hath been said.

5. We may infer what vile wretches they are who despise the reign of grace, or condemn God's sovereign grace magnified in bringing Christ to the throne, and being now exalted in and by him on the throne: woe to such that ever they were born! who had rather let sin reign, their lusts reign, the devil reign, unbelief reign, free-will reign, than that grace, free-grace, sovereign grace, almighty grace, should reign through righteousness by Jesus Christ, to eternal life.

TRIAL.

Doth grace reign in and over you? Examine yourselves: are you united to Christ, for that way grace comes to reign in us? Do you truly believe in Christ for righteousness? are you quickened, renewed, regenerated; for so are they in whom grace reigns? Are you dead to sin, dead to the law, dead to your own righteousness, dead to this world? then grace reigns in and over you; if the life of sin is not let out, or if sin reigns in you, and you obey it in the lusts thereof, grace reigns not in nor over you.

6. O come in, sinners, before grace comes off the throne, and divine justice ascends the throne, to condemn such who have abused sovereign grace; we know not how soon that may be.

7. Rejoice, ye saints, and triumph in rich grace; Satan is under your feet, and subdued by divine grace; the world is overcome, "and sin shall not have dominion over you, because ye are not under the law, but under grace," Rom. vi. 14. That is, the reign, power, and influences of grace.

SERMON III.

Tell me therefore which of them loved him most, and Simon answered and said, I suppose that he to whom he forgave most: and he said unto him, thou hast rightly judged, wherefore I say unto thee, her sins, which are many, are forgiven, for she loved much; but to whom little is forgiven, the same loveth little. He said unto her, thy sins are forgiven.— Luke vii. 42—48.

It appears from hence, that Jesus Christ is the most High God, for he forgave her all her sins; but none can forgive sins, as they are against God, but God himself only. But to proceed, there is one proposition more I shall speak to, viz.

Doct. 3. That all those whose sins are forgiven, do love the Lord Jesus Christ; and such to whom much is forgiven, or who have been great sinners, they exceed others in love to him.

1. I shall speak a little as to great sins, and show you who are great sinners.

2. Show what pardon of sin is.

3. Show why such who are forgiven, do love Jesus Christ; and why great sinners, when pardoned, exceed others in their love to him.

4. Show that pardon of sin is a great gospel blessing.

5. Apply it; and so conclude with this parable.

1. All open profaneness, or all gross immoral acts of wickedness, are great sins, as murder, treason, sodomy, buggery, adultery, blasphemy, swearing, drunkenness, theft, back-biting, railing, lying, cheating, oppression, extortion, &c., these are great sins, and such who are guilty of any of these sins are great sinners, and are to be punished by the judge.

2. Such who deny the being of God, or the blessed Deity, are great sinners, or that wish there was no God; it is thought by worthy men, that all Atheists ought to die.

Atheists are vile sinners.

3. Such that deny Christ to be the most High God, are great sinners: and sad it is to see and hear what multitudes of them are in and about this city; I say, such are sinners of the first rank that deny the Deity of Jesus Christ. For,

Such that deny the Godhead of Christ are notorious sinners.

(1.) They justify the unbelieving Jews in their cursed evil, in charging our blessed Saviour with blasphemy, because he said he was the Son of God, that is, the Son of God, by an eternal generation, or of the same essence with the Father, for so they understood him when he said God was his Father; "And Jesus answered them, many good works have I showed you from my Father, for which of those works do ye stone me? the Jews answered him, saying, for good works we stone thee not, but for blasphemy, and because thou, being a man, makest thyself God," John x. 32, 33. Now if the Lord Jesus was no more than a mere man, or not the true living and eternal God, he was a blasphemer, and they that deny his Godhead are guilty of the same blasphemy the Jews were guilty of; they do (I say) justify them in their horrid wickedness, and so render the ever blessed Jesus to be a grand impostor; and therefore are great sinners, or sinners of the first magnitude; which also farther appears.

(2.) Such who deny the Deity of Christ, provided they worship him or give the same divine honour and adoration to him which is due to the Father, or to God only, they are idolaters, because they worship a mere creature, "And give the glory of God to another," Isa. xlii. 8; nay, and if they trust in him for soul help and salvation, they are cursed. "Thus saith the Lord, cursed be the man that trusted in man, and maketh flesh his arm." Jer. xvii. 5, &c.

(3.) Moreover, according to their notion and cursed heresy, Jesus Christ cannot be our Saviour, for none is our Saviour but God alone; "I am the Lord, and there is none else; there is no God besides me," Isa. xlv. 5. "I, even I, am the Lord, and besides me there is no Saviour," Isa. xliii. 11. Let such men, who deny Christ to be the Most High God, never call Jesus Christ their Saviour any more. O what great sinners are these! let them pretend never so much to sanctity and holiness, yet they are sinners of the first rank.

4. Such men that have received much light, and have been under great convictions of sin, and of the evil which is in sin, yet live in, continue in sin, and in a hellish course of life, their sins are great sins, and they abominable sinners.

A person that has received much light, and yet lives in sin, is a great sinner.

5. Such who after most solemn vows and promises unto God, (when they have been laid in a sick bed, or have been in danger of death) how they would return to him, and leave their evil and ungodly lives, yet sin, and as bad and as vile, or viler than ever, these are great sinners.

So are such who violate all their sacred vows.

6. Such who have been often reprov'd, and yet harden their necks, are great sinners, and near to destruction, or being suddenly destroyed, and that without remedy.

Such who sin, who have been often reprov'd, are great sinners.

7. Such that plead for sin, or extenuate their sin, nay, boast and glory in sin, or in their shame, or make a mock of sin, and are ringleaders to sin, enticing others to sin against God; these are great sinners, who do only destroy their own souls, but the souls of others also.

Such that abuse the mercy, patience, and long-suffering of God, or turn the grace of God into wantonness, are great sinners.

8. Such who abuse the mercy, patience, and long-suffering of God, or turn the grace of God into wantonness, are great sinners.

9. Such who pretend to be teachers of others, reprove others, and yet are guilty of the same crimes; what a minister and a swearer, a drunkard, whore-monger! O what abominable sinners are such!

Hypocrites great sinners.

10. Hypocrites, such that appear to be godly, and yet secretly are wicked: these are also sinners of the first rank.

11. Persecutors, and such that reproach the people of God and would take away their lives: those are great sinners.

Persecutors great sinners.

12. All unbelievers, or such who refuse or reject Jesus Christ and the offers of grace, are great sinners.

Unbelievers and all presumptuous persons are great sinners.

13. All that sin presumptuously are great sinners, though they know the thing they do is abominable to God and destructive to their own souls, yet will do it.

14. Lastly, All backsliders in heart, who wickedly depart from God, are great sinners. Now, Mary Magdalene was a great sinner; some say she was guilty of seven abominable sins ; whether that was so or not, we cannot tell ; but let it be so : suppose a man was guilty of all those cursed sins I have mentioned, and Christ should pardon him, certainly you would conclude he must needs love him with a wonderful love. Our Lord saith her sins were many, and yet were forgiven ; and therefore she loved much, and more than some others.

Backsliders in heart are great sinners.

Secondly, What is it to have sin pardoned ? or what is the forgiveness of sin ?

First, negatively.

What pardon of sin is not.

1. Pardon of sin doth not free a poor sinner from the being of sin in his soul ; no, there is, after a man is forgiven, much corruption still remaining in the best of God's children, which makes them cry, as Paul did, "When I would do good, sin is present with me," Rom. vii. 21.

2. Pardon of sin frees no child of God from being corrected or chastened by the Lord, for sins that he may afterwards be overtaken with : no, "as many as I love, I rebuke and chasten," Rev. iii. 19, &c.

3. Pardon of sin doth not take away the desert of sin, it doth not argue, because sin is forgiven, that therefore, those sins do not deserve eternal punishment, but it discovers that Christ hath borne the demerit of all legal punishment of all the sins of a person that is pardoned.

4. Pardon of sin doth not denote, that every person forgiven, sees, or hath the sight and sense of pardon, or feels the comfort of it in his own conscience : no, a man may be forgiven his sins in the court of heaven, that cannot find that pardon in the court of his own conscience ; for as some truly believe, and know it not, so they may be forgiven all their sins, and know it not.

Secondly, affirmatively.

Psal. xli. 7 Pardon of sin is an act of God's great and infinite grace, whereby he, for the sake of Christ, or through the redemption of his blood, removes the guilt of all sin from the poor sinner.

1. God discharges him from the severe sentence of death denounced by the law ; the law can no more condemn a pardoned person.

2. He is discharged whom God pardons, out of the hand of divine justice, the satisfaction of Jesus Christ being applied to him.

3. A pardoned person is freed from all vindictive wrath here, and from that which is to come ; so that no guilt can come upon him to condemnation for ever.

4. Pardon of sin heals the soul, it cures every disease of the inward man ; such have all their sins blotted out ; as a debt that stands in a book is crossed, so pardon puts sin far away ; it is called a covering of our transgressions ; God will not see sin.

5. Pardon is a non-imputation of sin to the sinner, it being imputed to Christ, and by him all the whole debt is paid ; and in pardon, a discharge is given to the poor sinner.

6. Pardon is the receiving of a penitent and a believing sinner into God's special love and favour, and that for ever there is an accomplishment of the warfare between God and that person, to an endless eternity.

Secondly, Why do pardoned sinners (especially great sinners) love Jesus Christ dearly ?

The cause
why pardon-ed sinners do love Jesus
Christ.

Answ. Because, when they are pardoned, they hereby come to taste of the nature of Christ's choice love ; and it is indeed impossible for any to have a sweet and saving relish of the love of Jesus Christ, and not love Him ; "We love Him because He first loved us," 1 John iv. 19 ; Christ's love is the fountain love, our love is the stream ; His love is the inducement and the effective cause of ours to Him : He that first loves, loves freely ; the other therefore loves under obligation. Sinners are bound or obliged to love Jesus Christ, and such who have most forgiven, are obliged to love most : to forgive one pound to a poor man that had not one farthing to pay, must create love in him to his creditor ; but he to whom five hundred pounds is forgiven, and was in danger every moment to be arrested and laid in prison, must needs cause greater love in him to such a merciful creditor.

II. Because a pardoned sinner sees, or is convinced of the freeness of the love of Christ, and how undeserving he was of such love and pardon. O, saith the sinner, I was an enemy to my dear Lord Jesus, and also a vile and loathsome creature, and yet did he love me and pardon me : O matchless love and mercy ! I, but, saith a great sinner, a city sinner, I was more undeserving, I was the chiefest of sinners, a ringleader to all iniquity, here is a poor creature forgiven, but, alas I led him into many acts of wickedness, and yet my dear Lord freely pardoned me, as he hath this and that person, who never sinned as I have done.

"I was (saith Paul) a blasphemer, a persecutor and injurious, but I obtained mercy; and the grace of our Lord was exceeding great with faith and love," 1 Tim. i. 13, 14; I consented to the death of Stephen, that holy disciple of Christ. Brethren, suppose a rich traitor, one who raised up war against his gracious sovereign, and prevailed by craft and malice to draw thousands into the same rebellion, should be freely pardoned by his offended prince, would not he see cause to love his sovereign dearly, yea, more than any of the rest? O, saith he, I had no ground to expect to be forgiven of all my companions, but rather to be made an example of; but lo, I am pardoned, and also received into his love and favour.

III. Because when a sinner is pardoned, he comes to know that he was one of those objects which Christ set his heart upon, and chose from everlasting. O! I see I was beloved before time, that I am called and pardoned in time. "O what is man, that thou shouldst magnify him, that thou shouldst set thy heart upon him!" What, Christ set his heart upon such a creature! what, on me! saith a great sinner; what, the great God pardon me, because he loved me, and Jesus Christ set his heart on me, and love me, and die for me, to pay my debts, or satisfy divine justice for my sins, and espouse me! O this raiseth, nay, even ravisheth the poor believing and repenting sinner! Should a poor damsel in rags, a mere vagabond, a beggar, be told, that a king is fallen in love with her, and sends to her a most endearing letter, and rich token of his love worth millions: Oh, she stands astonished! Nay, says the messenger, it is so, and lo, here is also a rich wedding robe sent you, and all princesses' ornaments, jewels, and pearls, to adorn you. Now, she cannot but believe it, and she breaks out into tears for joy, and readily yields; but cannot forbear, when she comes into his presence, to get behind him, and washes his feet with tears, (as poor Mary did to her dear Prince, Sovereign, and Saviour). I was that vagabond, that vile beggar, saith she, and I see Christ loves me, and hath given to me a rich token of his love, viz., the pardon of all my sins; and he hath put upon me the glorious robe of his own righteousness, and adorned me with the graces of his Spirit. Now, how can such a Mary, such a sinner, forbear, but must love Jesus Christ dearly! A free pardon is worth millions of millions of gold, nay, more than ten thousand worlds; and what is the robe of Christ's righteousness then worth, and the ornaments of his own precious graces?

For Christ to set his heart upon a sinner, denotes an act of his love and affection, also a high value and esteem he hath for such persons.

IV. Because pardon of sin the soul sees cost Christ dear, even his own heart's blood. O his love, Mary now could say, is wonderful, I cannot comprehend it, I see love in his purposes, love in his leaving his throne above, and coming into this world, love in his assuming our nature, love in his covenant, and in his promises, love in his dying groans and bleeding wounds, love in his face and countenance, and in his invitations and kind embraces. O my heart is sick of love; I was the person he loved. He loved me and died for me; loved me, and has washed me from my sins in his own blood, Rev. i. 5.

V. The glory of Christ appears to all them that he pardons, but especially to great sinners, the glory of his person, and the glory of his love: and this melts the soul down and makes it little, nay, nothing in its own eyes. O wretched me! how have I carried it to this God, to this Christ! am I beloved thus by Him! and do I love him no more: love him no better! who have pierced him, wounded him, grieved him! I loathe myself; nay, "abhor myself, and repent in dust and ashes," Job xliii. 6. Woe is me, (saith the prophet Isaiah) "I have seen the King, the Lord of Hosts," his glory who hath set his love upon me! what an admirable beauty and glory is in this Prince! in this Person! and doth he vouchsafe his favours to me, pardon me, love me, so loathsome a creature?

What strange effects had the knowledge of David's love on Abigail's heart when she heard of his intention to take her to wife.

"Let me be a servant to wash the feet of the servants of my Lord," 1 Sam, xxv. 41.

The knowledge of Christ's love in pardon, &c., kindles a vehement love in the souls of such unto him; it is discovered too, especially if great sinners. "Love begetteth love," when it is known and manifested to the person it is set upon. O what strange passions of love have been kindled in some virgins, when they have heard of the love of such or such renowned person to them, from whom they deserved no such favour. Sirs, the love of Christ is of an attractive nature in its manifestations.

VI. Divine love is shed abroad in the heart (of a sinner) by the Holy Ghost, Rom. v. 5. Divine love is a grace of the Spirit; it is not the bare effects of natural affections but of the Holy Spirit, and of Christ's affections expressed to a poor undone sinner; they are constrained by his love, whose love being deep and unsearchable, the more we know of it, the more and more we love him. "The love of Christ passeth knowledge," Eph. iii. 19. The deeper the mine of gold is, the deeper the miner must dig for it, and more pure gold he finds. Now, these great sinners, above others, comprehend the love of Christ, though it can never be fully comprehended by men or angels.

VII. Pardon'd sinners, especially great sinners, dearly love Jesus Christ, by reason of the effects and fruits of his love.

The effects of Christ's love 1. Pardon of sin is not only the effects and fruits of Christ's love to sinners, but of life also; Christ loves us, and therefore he hath quickened and raised us from the dead, as he raised Lazarus from the dead because he loved him.

2. Faith, repentance, and a new heart, a broken and contrite heart, are the effects of Christ's love.

3. Union with him is another effect of it also; because he loves us, he espouses us. A sinner is not only pardon'd, but espous'd; Christ marries all he forgiveth, and so they are thereby freed from all dangers of being arrested for former and after debts contracted; the Husband answers all

4. Justification, regeneration, adoption, sanctification, communion, and free access to the throne of grace, are the effects of Christ's death, of his obedience, intercession, but primarily of his endearing affection to poor sinners.

5. Peace of conscience and joy in the Holy Ghost, are the effects of Christ's love, and of pardon of sin.

6. Lastly, Final perseverance, everlasting life, a crown of glory, the full fruition of God, and of being for ever with Christ, where he is, are effects of his love. Now these things being so, it must needs follow, that such who are pardon'd must needs love Jesus Christ; yet such that were great sinners love him most! their love exceeds the love of all others, considering how black and miserable they were once above others, and now are made happy for ever.

Thirdly, From what hath been said, it appears that pardon of sin is a great blessing; yet, to open this a little farther, together with the nature and way of forgiveness.

Pardon of sin is a wonderful blessing. Jeremiah Burroughs. I. Consider, that such who are forgiven, or whose sins are pardon'd, are pronounc'd bless'd: "Bless'd is he whose transgression is forgiven, and whose sin is cover'd," Psal. xxxii. 1; nay, no man is bless'd indeed, whose sins are not pardon'd. Luther saith free justification and remission of sin makes a divine, and another of great worth also saith, it is this that makes a man a Christian; and such that understand not this doctrine, all other knowledge is to little purpose.

II. Consider the original spring of it, and that is God's wonderful love, (which I have open'd) it is the fruits of infinite love, and product of the excellent and inconceivable mercy and divine goodness of God; "To the Lord our God, belongs mercies and forgiveness," Dan. ix. 9, wherein doth the riches of mercy, the abounding of mercy, the multitude of mercies, more appear than in pardon of sin, and in the way of it, in the sea, the ocean of mercy, all the sins of the elect are swallow'd up: the mercy of God (as one notes) makes no difference between little and great sins. O consider the original and efficient cause of forgiveness! i. e., the love and rich mercy of God.

The meritorious cause of pardon in Christ's death. III. Consider also the meritorious cause of pardon of sin, or that which procur'd it, or open'd the door and flood-gate of mercy and free forgiveness unto us; for although it would be free to us, yet it cost Jesus Christ dear; it is not had but through the mediation of the Lord Jesus. Many think not of the way of pardon; Christ must stand up and plead for pardon, and do also whatsoever he oblig'd himself to perform in that covenant that was between him and the Father, if ever we are forgiven our transgressions.

Our sins, you have heard, were a debt, a great debt, they oblig'd us, bound us over to eternal wrath, and this debt must be paid; God is just, and we had nothing to pay. Now, the Lord Jesus took this debt upon himself, he became our Surety, he enter'd into bonds to pay every penny which sinners ow'd, "he made him sin for us that knew no sin," 2 Cor. v. 21; our sins were transfer'd on Christ, they were charg'd upon him, and he must not only plead for our pardon, but must bleed also; he must suffer and die for us, he bore that wrath and punishment that was due to us for our sins, that we, through his blood, might receive free remission. O what a blessing must pardon be that is thus procur'd; we have no remission but through the blood of Jesus Christ.

The final cause of pardon, is the glory of God. IV. Consider the final cause of forgiveness of sin, which is the glory of God; not only the glory of his grace, love, and mercy, but the glory of his justice, holiness, truth, power, and faithfulness. Sirs, justice, mercy, &c., equally shine forth in glory in our pardon, through the satisfaction made for our sins by the Lord Jesus. God appears not only gracious, but just and holy also. Sin is punished, the sanction of the law is vindicated, and justice is satisfied in Christ, or in the way of remission of our sins, "being justified freely by his grace, through the redemption that is in Jesus Christ. Whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation, through faith in his blood, to declare his righteousness for the remission of sins," &c. That God might be just, and the justifier of him that believeth in Jesus," Rom. iii, 24. We have not pardon of sin in a way of mercy only, but in a way of justice, and righteousness also.

Now, what a blessing is that which tends to advance and to magnify the glory of God in all his glorious attributes! God is glorified as well as we are pardoned through Jesus Christ

V. Every person that is forgiven their sins, are also justified, and stand righteous before God. Thus do not guilty criminals among men, though forgiven, yet they are not pronounced clear, or justified and acquitted of the guilt of their horrid crimes and treasons that were charged on them. No, they are looked upon as vile and wicked wretches still; but a believer pardoned, is also "justified from all things," Acts xiii. 39, and stands without spot in God's sight, in the righteousness of His Son Jesus Christ: "Thou art all fair, my love, and there is no spot in thee," Cant. iv. 7. Pardon of sin is never without justification; the one is in a way of mercy, or as an act of mercy, and the other an act of justice. Some would have justification only to consist in pardon of sin, but that certainly is a great mistake and error; though we grant, that actual pardon and actual justification of a person always go together, and therefore forgiveness, I say, is a great blessing.

All pardon-ed persons are justified.

VI. Consider, that when God forgives a sinner, He forgives not only one or two sins, but all sins; and not only all sins past and present, but all the sins that ever he shall commit afterwards, in respect to vindictive justice; therefore well might the prophet say, "Who is a God like unto Thee, that pardoneth iniquity, and passeth by the transgressions of the remnant of his heritage,"

When God
forgives sin,
He forgives past, present, and to come,
all sins.

Mic. vii. 11. I know some deny that sin is forgiven before a person repents, &c., but sin, as it lays the soul obnoxious to divine wrath, may be forgiven so; and yet not forgiven in some other sense. A father may correct his child, and so doth God his Children, as a tender Father; but as God is considered an offended Judge or Governor, all their sins are forgiven at once, as soon as they are united to Christ, and have his righteousness imputed to them; for else they do not stand always justified, or are not in a justified state, and so not free from condemnation. "But there is now no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus," Rom. viii. 1. Besides do we not sin daily? "There would be (as one observes,) no instant of time, wherein a believer would not be in a state of condemnation," were not all sins to come, of justified persons, forgiven, as well as those past; therefore there is no necessity of a renewed act of faith, when we sin, in order to our justification, nor pardon of sin, or as to vindicate justice, (for he that is once justified so, and pardoned, is for ever justified and pardoned, and cannot be brought into a state of wrath and condemnation,) though there be need of a renewed act of faith, as to our own consciences and peace, when he have sinned; for a believer may by sudden death, be taken away before he has put forth an act of faith, for the pardon of his last sin; but though he be, he is happy for ever, being ever in a state of life and peace. But if a saint should die before he hath repented, and put forth such an act of faith, which some speak of, he must perish for ever, but this cannot be; the union he hath with Christ cannot be dissolved. "And whom God justifies, them he also glorifies," Rom. viii. 29, 30. Therefore pardon of sin is a great blessing.

Jer. Bor-rough's Remission p. 21.

VII. Pardon of sin is a great blessing, because such have peace with God. "Go in peace, thy sins are forgiven thee." Though a weak believer, because he sees not his pardon may want peace, yet he is in a state of peace, and the ground of all fears and doubts are gone for ever. "We have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear, but the Spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba, Father," Rom. viii. 15. There remains no more fury in God to believers, or to pardoned persons. No sin can break the covenant of peace, or make God to become our enemy, and cast us off. Our consciences may be troubled when God is pleased, and sin be pardoned in the court of heaven, though a poor believer cannot see the pardon in the court of his own conscience. Therefore pardon of sin is a great Gospel blessing.

VIII. Pardon of sin makes all mercies sweet, and to be mercies indeed. What mercy can be sweet to him who lies under God's wrath, and is not forgiven his sins? What comfort can such take in riches, honours, lands, wife, children, or friends, when such guilt lies upon him, and he stands charged at God's bar, and condemned by God's law?

IX. Pardon of sin heals all the wounds of the soul, and gives ease to a poor believer. "Heal my soul, for I have sinned against thee," Psal. xli. 4; that is, give me the sight and sense of free forgiveness, let me know I am pardoned. Remission of sin takes away the sting of death.

X. Forgiveness of sin also makes all our afflictions easy to be borne. With what comfort may such, in times of greatest trials and dangers, lift up their heads? So that those afflictions that sink others down, and are hard to be borne, a believer can triumph over, and is more than a conqueror. "Her warfare is accomplished, that her iniquity is pardoned," Isa. xl. 2. If the sweet of pardon makes the bitterest affliction easy, it is a great blessing; but this is so; therefore it is a great and inconceivable blessing.

XI. Pardon of sin takes away the fear of death; such need not be afraid to die, nor to come to stand before the judgment-seat of Christ. It is only the guilt of sin that in both those respects terrifies the sinner.

XII. Such that are forgiven their sins, are "delivered from the wrath to come," and shall have eternal life; therefore pardon of sin is a great blessing.

XIII. When sin is forgiven, it is forgiven for ever, and shall be remembered no more.

Heb. viii. 12.

Mic. vii. 10.

Isa. xlii. 25.

All our sins are "cast into the bottom of the sea," they are "blotted out," they are "cast behind God's back," they are "put as far away as the east is from the west, the north is from the south," Psal. ciii. 12. O, what expressions are these! and all to let us know that sin is forgiven for ever. Pardoning mercy is the sure mercy of David; pardoning mercy is an irrevocable blessing. God will never revoke His act of free forgiveness.

XIV. Pardoning mercy is only given to a few. "He hath mercy on whom he will have mercy." It is denied to the fallen angels, and only given to them for whom Christ died, with an intention and purpose to save; and it being a special and peculiar blessing, it is a rich and a great blessing. What, are there but a few in all the world who have their sins pardoned? and am I one of them, and I one of the worst of all men! O, what peculiar love, distinguishing grace and favour is this.

Infer.

1. What blessed news is here for great sinners, the worst of sinners, even for city sinners? Is there a Mary Magdalene here? I mean, any as vile as she was. O, let such cast an eye upon Jesus Christ, to look to him, throw their souls down at his feet with self-abhorrence, believingly, and they need not fear but Christ will pardon them.

Exhort.

2. O, admire pardoning grace! how free, and how full it is! Sirs, you that are once pardoned, are for ever pardoned, as to vindictive wrath and justice; your iniquities God will remember no more; they are thrown into the depths of the sea, and shall never rise again to your condemnation in this, or the world to come.

Examin.

3. Try yourselves, you that are professors; do you love Christ? have you been great sinners? Certainly you are not pardoned if you do not love the Lord Jesus with most endeared love and affection.

It will be a hard thing for such to satisfy themselves that much is forgiven them if they do not find their hearts burn in love to God and Jesus Christ.

Christ hath the chiefest room in the hearts of pardoned sinners, "He that dwells in love, dwells in God," 1 John iv. 16; their hearts, thoughts, and desires are set upon, and remain with, and run out after Jesus Christ; if you love him, he is continually in your minds, more than husband, wife, children, silver, gold, or anything in this world. "Whom have I in heaven but thee? neither is there any on earth that I desire besides thee," Ps. lxxiii. 25. Such will often visit him, and labour to be like unto him, and do or suffer anything called to, that they may honour, and show forth the praises and glory of Jesus Christ; be sure Mary did what she could. And sin, every sin and lust is hateful to them, because it is so to him; they also love all that Christ loves, or are born of God.

Lastly, let Christ's love to you satisfy you always, comfort and console your souls, "For who shall separate us from the love of Christ?"

THE
OF THE STRONG MAN ARMED.

SERMON IV.

Else how can one enter into a strong man's house, and spoil his goods, except he first bind the strong man? and then he will spoil his house.—Matt. xii. 29.

Thus Matthew : Mark also hath the same parable.

No man can enter into a strong man's house, and spoil his goods, except he will first bind the strong man, and then he will spoil his house.—Mark iii. 57. See Luke also. When a strong man armed keepeth his palace, his goods are in peace; but when a stronger than he shall come upon him, and overcome him, he taketh from him all his armour wherein he trusted, and divideth his spoils.—Luke xi. 21, 22.

THE Evangelist Luke seems to speak more fully and distinctly to this parable, than either Matthew or Mark, though all agree in substance, and speak the same things; and so also as to the occasion or reason of it.

Which we shall first briefly open; and in order to this, consider, that the Pharisees charged our blessed Lord with casting out devils by the prince of devils, after he had dispossessed one with a devil who was "both blind and dumb, who immediately both saw and spake," Matt. xii. 22. The occasion and main scope of this parable.

"But when the Pharisees heard it, they said, this fellow doth not cast out devils but by Beelzebub, the prince of devils," ver. 24.

"And Jesus knew their thoughts, and said unto them, every kingdom divided against itself, is brought to desolation, and every city or house divided against itself, cannot stand," ver. 5.

"And if Satan cast out Satan, how then shall his kingdom stand," ver. 26.

"But if I cast out devils by the Spirit of God, then the kingdom of God is come unto you," ver. 28.

And then he adds, "or else how can one," &c.

So that, (1.) The occasion of these words, or the scope of the parable, was to convince them that he by the power of God did cast out devils, or by the power of his glorious Deity. 2. To discover and detest their most horrid blasphemy in saying he cast out devils by Beelzebub, &c., which he first doth by the parable of "a kingdom divided against itself," which I purpose to speak to afterwards. The devils are not divided, they agree and unite in upholding their kingdom, and did they oppose one another, or not agree among themselves, their kingdom, (our Lord shows) would fall or come to desolation; like as a kingdom, city, or house, if it is divided, would do; but farther to convince them that what he did in casting out devils, was done by the Spirit of God, &c., he brings in this parable also, and that thereby he might manifest their detestable evil, and make it appear that he was the true Messiah, and God over all, blessed for evermore, for who but the mighty God hath power over the "Prince of the power of the air," Eph. ii. 2, or the God of this world; he therefore that can subdue Satan, bind Satan, and throw him out of his palace, must be one stronger than he, which none is, but God only, for the devil will never yield up his strong hold as long as he is able to hold it; there is no way to dispossess him but by force or power; will any man consent, or willingly yield up to his enemy his palace, his goods, his power, kingdom, and all he hath? No certainly, if he could prevent it, he would do it, and so would Satan also; and this is the chief thing our Saviour discovers and makes appear by both these parables.

Secondly, we will consider the parts hereof.

The parts of the parable opened.

Else "how can one enter into a strong man's house?" Luke calls it a palace; by the house or palace here is meant a poor sinner, not his soul only, but his body also; but chiefly his soul. A "strong man's house," &c. Satan is this strong man, and sometimes he possesseth both the body and soul of a sinner; though the body is not under his power, but by the special permission of God, nor doth he so universally possess the bodies of sinners as he doth their souls, by his power, craft-devices, temptations, suggestions, and diabolical influences; who "ruleth, or worketh in the children of disobedience," Eph. ii. 2, that is, in them all universally.

"One enter," that is, any one that is opposite to him, one that is his enemy, with a design and purpose to dispossess him, bind him, and throw him out of his strong-hold, and take possession of his palace or habitation. The meaning of our Saviour is, how can I enter by my spirit and power into the house or palace of the devil, viz., into the heart of a sinner, if I do not first destroy, or spoil Satan of all that power he hath in such a poor creature, or bind and throw him out? or I must subdue Satan, if I either dispossess him of the body or soul of a sinner.

"When a strong man armed keepeth his palace," Satan is armed, and he must be disarmed before he can be overcome.

"Wherein he trusteth;" the devil trusteth in his armour, but when Christ, who is a stronger than he, comes, he takes from him all his armour, and makes him know his armour is not sufficient to defend him from the almighty power of the Son of God. From whence we may note one or two propositions.

1. That the heart of a sinner is the house or palace of the devil.

The doctrine raised.

2. That the devil is a strong and formidable enemy, dreadful and terrible, and yet,

3. Must be subdued, and his power destroyed in a sinner that is converted, which none can do, but the Lord Jesus Christ only, who is stronger than he.

I shall speak briefly to both of these.

(1.) The body sometimes, and the soul always, of an unconverted sinner, is the palace and habitation of Satan; but before I proceed, let me lay down one or two explanatory propositions, by way of premise.

(1.) The devil hath no just or lawful right to this house, viz., neither to dwell in the body, nor the soul of any sinner, no, but it is wholly by fraud and usurpation he got in and rules there.

2. The devil could not by force take possession of the sinner's heart, but he gets in by craft and subtlety; this way our first parents gave him originally the possession of the hearts of all men.

Secondly, to prove that the heart of a sinner is the house or palace of Satan.

The heart of a sinner is Satan's palace.

How he got possession of the sinner's heart.

(1.) Our Lord calls it the strong man's house; true, God only hath the just right to every man and woman in the world, "all souls are mine saith the Lord." But God left man at first to keep this house, I mean his soul, for him, that is, for his own praise and glory, and gave such strength to man that he might have kept possession, his faculties being true, strong, and uncorrupted at first; they were like so many valiant soldiers that Satan could not by open force conquer; the will being able to resist the whole infernal lake of hellish fiends; but by subtlety the enemy prevailed, and the will consented; as Paul shows, "the serpent beguiled Eve through subtlety," 2 Cor. xi. 3. And the will complying, all the faculties or powers of the soul were overcome, and so the devil entered, and made it his palace or chief dwelling-place.

How Satan's palace is fortified.

2. A palace of a prince is commonly well fortified, when it is in the midst of enemies; so Satan hath fortified his palace with a high wall on one side, called presumption, which seems to be as high as heaven, and on the other side with a deep ditch, called despair, lest grace should assault him; and by this means he secures his palace, and dwells there for a long time in peace; and though the word of God seems to batter the high wall, yet, it is common operations can make no great breach in it on that side, nor fill up the ditch on the other; and let me tell you, the devil hath not stronger fortifications than these two.

3. A palace is the place of a prince's chief residence, and where he keeps his court, and hath his attendance; so Satan's chief residence is in the heart of an unregenerate sinner, and there he keeps his court, and hath all the depraved faculties of the soul, and "lusts of the eyes, and lusts of the flesh, and pride of life," to attend upon him, and who readily submit to his commands, or cursed suggestions; he "goeth to and fro in the earth, and walketh up and down in it," and is the "prince of the power of the air;" but there he finds no rest, no, the heart of an ungodly sinner is his dwelling-place, that is, his palace, where he lodgeth and delights to be.

What are Satan's attendances.

He goes from one place to another, not as an idle Peripatetic, or one that has nothing to do, no, but as a spy to see what house is empty, that so he may get in and dwell there; for the devil has many palaces, yea, thousands of thousands, so that he is no small or petty king; in his walks also he curiously observes, and pries into every person's temper, and into all families, nations, and churches, to see what advantages he can get over them, and set them together by the ears, for he strives to do all the mischief he can to kingdoms, churches, families, and particular persons.

4. A prince can go in and out of his palace at his pleasure, so Satan sometimes, as an unclean and filthy devil, a black and debauched devil, goes out of his house or palace, or out of a man, as our Lord shows, and lets it be swept and garnished, but if it be empty, i. e., if Christ dwells not there, he says, "I will return to my house from whence I came;" nay, and brings other spirits with him also, though not debauched devils, yet worse evil spirits, and there afresh he takes up his habitation and dwells, though the man perhaps thinks he has a better prince dwelling with him.

5. A palace of a prince commonly is painted, adorned, and made a place of delight suiting his spirit; so the heart of every sinner, the devil makes fit and pleasant to him, suiting to his odious and unclean spirit, nature, and temper; nay, and some sinners' hearts are garnished, and richly painted with moral virtue and seeming holiness, which pleaseth Satan very well, as a white devil, when he can cause them to rest in, or trust to mere acts of morality and external holiness; he can transform himself from a swearing devil, a blaspheming devil, into a religious devil, a praying devil; for such a painted palace were the hearts of the Scribes and Pharisees, which were swept and garnished (as in the next place in speaking to another parable) I shall show.

How Satan's palace is adorned.

6. In a house or palace of a prince are many lodging rooms both for repose and security, so in the sinner's heart the devil hath several rooms to repose himself in, and are also as places of security to him against danger; which are the "corrupt faculties of the soul," as the "rebellious and obstinate will, depraved judgment, the misled conscience, a deceitful and traitorous memory, and the carnal and earthly affections;" for by this means he takes as it were his quiet repose, and remains safe.

What are Satan's lodging-rooms in the sinner's heart.

7. A house or palace hath many doors, by which the prince that dwells therein can enter; so the devil he hath many doors by which he enters into the heart of a sinner, which are the five senses; at the eyes he gets into the heart of unchaste persons, and also into the hearts of the covetous. "Achan saw a goodly Babylonish garment, and a wedge of gold," Josh. vii. 1; he saw it with his eyes, and then Satan entered his heart, he coveted them, and at this door also he entered into the heart of Judas. He gets in also at the ears of others, they are charmed with bewitching music, perhaps at a play-house, or a whore-house, and there the devil enters; the adulteress was taught by Satan to "perfume her bed with myrrh, aloes, and cinnamon," Prov. vii. 17; the devil knows how to get in at their nostrils by bewitching smells, as well as at the ears by flesh-pleasing melodies, moreover he enters into thousands at the door of tasting and feeling; how are sinners ensnared by delicious wines, meats, and other liquors, and abominable delights and pleasures of the flesh, every one, like pampered horses, neighing after their neighbours' wives.

Thirdly, I shall show you what kind of house or palace this strong man's is.

1. It is a most odious and filthy house, prepared and made fit for unclean and filthy spirits to delight in; the heart of a wicked man is alike abominable with the devil in the sight of God, being full of snakes, vipers, filthy vermin, mire, and dirt, for unto such thing the filth of sin, and unclean spirits are compared. Our Saviour likeneth the hearts of the "Pharisees to filthy sepulchres, painted without, but within full of dead men's bones, and all uncleanness," Matt. xxiii. 27.

What kind of palace Satan's palace is.

2. It is a house prepared and furnished by the devil, fitted for him to dwell and delight in, and it is also fortified against God and Jesus Christ, with all the hellish art, subtilty, and strength the devil hath, that all attacks of the word of God, ministers, godly persons, and motions of the good Spirit might be ineffectual; the devil helps all the powers of the soul (they being under his influences) to resist all good counsel, reproofs, and persuasions, of yielding up their palace to the the Lord Jesus Christ; moreover, wicked men are true drudges to their hellish master, and are always in arms, and fight against God, and blaspheming his name, and all that dwell in heaven.

3. It is a house built upon the brink of hell, and stands in the regions of darkness, and the devil that dwells therein, who pleases those wretched and misled mortals for a time, according to the varieties of their carnal appetites, designs to murder and destroy them every one, and make them as miserable as himself, and will in a short time if they meet not with the mighty Jesus, to enter in, and destroy the strong man armed, their house will be set on fire, and burn to the lowest hell, for the materials with which it is built are fit matter for eternal flames.

APPLICATION.

1. We infer from hence that sinners are wofully blind, and misled, and that their state is most deplorable.

2ndly. Also we from hence infer, that it is no wonder that the word of God hath no more effect upon the hearts of sinners, as they are under the power of the prince of darkness; the strong man armed keeps the house, he hath power over, and reigns in the hearts of the children of disobedience; their hearts are fortified against the Lord Jesus Christ, and Almighty power must be exerted to subdue Satan, if ever the gospel becomes efficacious to one sinner. But to proceed,

2. Doct. The devil is a strong and formidable enemy, dreadful and terrible, and yet must be subdued, and his power be destroyed in a sinner that is converted, which none can do but Jesus Christ only, who is stronger than he.

I shall in speaking to this,

1. Show what renders the devil so formidable an enemy.
2. Show why he must be subdued in a sinner that is converted.
3. Show why none but Jesus Christ can subdue Satan.

The devil is a formidable enemy.

I. Satan is a dreadful enemy in respect had to his great strength, called the strong man, and upon the same account he is called a lion, a strong and fierce creature; should all the men in the whole world combine together to fall upon one single devil, they would be but as so many little babes in the hands of a mighty giant, I mean in respect of their own strength.

Satan at one stroke overthrew the whole world.

II. He is a formidable enemy, considering how at one blow he overcame man before he was depraved, or lost that power with which he was created, and also when Satan was but a few days old; and in subduing innocent Adam, a man clothed with mighty strength, he by that one stroke conquered all the world, all the whole race of mankind fell down dead at his feet, O what an enemy is this? If man, when he was so strong and well armed, was subdued by him; what can sinners do now, who are become weak and feeble, and also naked, to withstand his force and mighty power?

Satan hath a mighty host of infernal spirits with him.

III. The devil is a dreadful adversary, considering what a multitude of evil angels he hath in his army, they are a mighty host, and all clothed with great power, though perhaps some of them have greater strength than others, yet all are strong and powerful; they are all angels, though fallen angels, and though they have lost their purity, yet they have not lost their strength: "Bless the Lord, ye his angels that excel in strength," Psal. ciii. 20.

Two things discover their strength, (1.) Their superiority, (2.) Their spirituality.

1. Angels are the top of the creation; man was made a little lower than the angels. Now in the works of creation, the superior (as one notes) hath a power over the inferior, the beast over the grass and herbs, and man over the beasts, and angels over man.

Satan being a spirit hath the advantage of us.

2. The spirituality of their nature, adds to their power. Man hath a glorious soul, but he is flesh as well as spirit, and his soul is darkened, weakened, and weighed down by a lump of flesh. It is forced to row with a strength suitable to its weak partner, and sometimes to war against himself. I mean his flesh; also his fleshly part clouds his understanding, but now angels are all spirit, and have no such mixture of matter to encumber them.

The devils agree and are united.

IV. Their unity renders the devils dreadful enemies; our Saviour shows us here that they cement together, and are not divided; order and oneness makes their number formidable, though we cannot say there is love amongst the devils, yet there is unity; they all agree together in carrying on their design against God, Christ, and the souls of men. Whoever heard of any discord, jarings, or wranglings amongst the devils? This may shame the saints. Shall devils agree to ruin us, and shall not we agree to oppose and counter-work them?

V. The falls of so many brave champions by Satan's assaults, render him a dreadful enemy; what mighty men of God hath he worsted, who were strong in grace, or well armed. Remember righteous Noah, just Lot, meek Moses, and David a man after God's own heart, and wise Solomon, and patient Job, and valiant Peter. What can naked and unskilful sinners do, if such expert warriors were worsted and fell by him?

The devil hath worsted valiant captains of Christ's army.

VI. His courage or fierceness, and undauntedness, renders him a formidable enemy; what saint of God was Satan ever afraid to assault? Nay, oftentimes whole churches, and spoiled them too, tearing them to pieces, nay, his courage and undauntedness appears in his attacking and assaulting the Son of God himself, as also his power in "taking up, and setting him upon a pinnacle of the temple," Matt. iv. 5; what a bold devil is this, and what a sight was there? to see the Son of God, carried in the arms of the devil, whom he knew was a Son of God; nay, and though he was worsted, yet came again upon our Lord. "The prince of this world cometh," &c.

The devil is bold and courageous.

VII. His implacable malice, hatred, and envy to God and sinners, renders Satan a very formidable adversary, he is filled full of enmity, and is unreconcilable, he will never yield nor submit himself to his enemies; some men who have received a little of his spirit and nature, have been very malicious, and hardly reconcilable, but the devil is all malice, even made up of hatred and envy, who can stand before envy saith Solomon? if not before an envious man, who can stand before an envious and a malicious devil, who is wholly set upon doing of mischief?

Satan an implacable enemy.

VIII. Bloodiness and horrid cruelty, shows that Satan is a dreadful enemy; many tyrants have been very cruel, but how bloody minded and cruel then is the devil? all the cruelty that any tyrant and bloody persecutor ever exercised he was stirred up to do it by the devil, whose servants they were, and still be, who act in malice and cruelty. 2. What cruelty hath he exercised towards mankind? what ruin hath he brought upon the world, and on the souls of men? (3.) How many millions hath he sent by his cursed temptations to hell? how many hundred thousands of godly Christians hath he murdered, and caused to be tormented with unhuman cruelty? (4.) But what was all this to his attempting to murder the Son of God himself, or the Lord of life and glory?

Satan a bloody enemy.

IX. The subtily of the devil renders him a terrible enemy; where strength cannot prevail oftentimes, policy does, and many by craft have done more than could have ever been done by power. Now the devil's subtily is exceeding great, we (saith Paul) are not ignorant of his devices. But too many there are that perceive them not, we should labour to "stand against the wiles of the devil," Eph. vi. 11. It was by his craft he overcome our first parents; the serpent by his subtily beguiled Eve, yea, and Adam too; he hath his wiles to keep sinners from closing with Christ, and ruin the ungodly; and he hath his devices also to ensnare, deceive, and ruin, if possible, believers; observe some of his devices also.

Satan a subtil adversary.

1. He chooseth the most advantageous seasons to tempt and allure sinners.

2. He manageth his temptations in such ways and methods that shows his great subtily.

See Mr. Brook's remedies against Satan's devices.

3. In his making use of fit instruments to carry on his designs, in respect of the one and the other, he knows how to assault young converts, by filling them up with pride and vain-glory; he waylays such that fall into great afflictions, causing them to despair; and to think God does not love them, because he afflicts them; he will be sure if possible, to defame, or render odious, such as do him the most mischief, as the faithful ministers of the gospel; and spoil the peace of the churches. He observes the weakest place of that fort he designs to attack, and there make his assaults, also comes upon poor saints, when they are asleep, or off of their watch, or in a secure state; he acts sometimes like a black, and yet can appear also as a white devil, "or transform himself into an angel of light;" 2 Cor. xi. 14. He observes every man's natural temper, and suits his temptations accordingly; he sometimes appears as a friend, when his design is to murder and destroy, like a treacheous enemy; he strives to get ill persons into the church, to hinder the peace and increase thereof, and to expose the whole to reproach. He knows how to retreat and leave his house as a debauched black devil, and swept and garnished with the paint of seeming holiness, and outward zeal and piety; if it be but empty of true faith and saving grace, it matters not how zealous man are for outward sanctity, if they are in a false way; he will rather promote their external holiness, than go about to hinder it; he is not more for discord in the true church, than he is for unity in the false: in a word, there is not such a politician in the world like to the devil ; he knows he cannot force, and therefore he will entice.

X. The devil is a formidable enemy, because he is unwearry ; he will not be discouraged if he miss ten times in carrying his designs and purpose : nay, to thousand defeats he will attempt again, hoping to prevail at last ; hence the apostle gives the saints a needful caution to be vigilant, because of the unweariness and great diligence of their adversary the devil, who walks about seeking whom he may devour ; it is not whom he would, but whom he may, or such God permitted him to devour ; though Satan hath worked hard to destroy the souls of sinners near six thousand years, yet he is no more weary than he was when he first began, and therefore a dreadful enemy.

XI. The devil is a formidable adversary, in these last days more than ever, because he is come down in great wrath, knowing his time is but short," Rev. xii. 12. Therefore woe to the inhabitants of the earth and of the sea ; my brethren, though the beginning of this his coming down was many years ago, when he was thrown out of the church as a persecuting devil, in the time of Constantine the Great, yet he knowing his time is very short indeed, he is in more rage than ever, and from hence it is that he strives to foment wars and slaughters in kingdoms and nations ; and to disturb the churches of Christ with horrid errors and heresies, and to drown the world that way if he can, and fill Sion also with strife, discord, and contentions, which certainly abound now more than ever ; and all this is but the effect of Satan's rage, malice, and fury ; nay, and we may expect it will be every day worse and worse, as he grows nearer and nearer the end of his reign and tyranny ; therefore most dismal times must be looked for ; yea, such temptations and tribulations over the whole world that never was since the beginning thereof, or since man dwelt upon the earth ; and it will continue until Jesus Christ sets up his visible kingdom, who will take hold of him, and bind this dragon for a thousand years.

XII. And lastly, Satan is a dreadful and terrible enemy, because he is armed ; our Saviour calls him a strong man armed.

1. His armour may be his great power ; he is clothed as you heard with power and might, which is such armour that no mere man is able to encounter with him.

2. He is filled also with malice and revenge ; which is as armour to him ; moreover, his pride is as a coat of mail, his power creates in him great confidence, and this fills him with pride, as it is said of the " Leviathan, his scales are his pride, they are joined one to another, they stick together that they cannot be sundered," Job xl. 19, 17. Strength, confidence, and pride, is the devil's shield, or armour, by which means he is very fierce and undaunted, so that the darts of a sinner unarmed, are not regarded by him ; but like the " leviathan, darts are counted as stubble ; he laugheth at the shaking of the spear," chap. lxi. 29. All the weapons of mere creatures unarmed, he esteemeth as straw.

3. The wonderful success he hath had, and victories obtained, is as armour to him, he having conquered millions, and subdued the whole world ; all nations are become as stubble to his bow, and as a prey to his teeth.

4. Moreover, utter despair of ever obtaining favour with God, arms him against poor mortals ; he knows that he shall have no quarter given to him, no terms of peace offered him for ever, and therefore will give no quarter to any he can subdue and overcome ; nothing renders an enemy more fierce and cruel than the thoughts of this ; what mischief will not that giant, that tyrant do, that knows he shall have no pity showed him, no pardon, no mercy given to him. And this hardens Satan's heart against God, and his hard heart and final despair is as armour of proof that cannot be pierced.

There are no repentings, no relentings, no sorrow in devils, after all the wrongs and mischiefs done to mortals, no, no ; therefore his hardness and despair is as armour, that none can touch, but one that is more mighty and more strong than he.

5. Sin also is as armour to him where sin reigns ; the devil is armed ; a sinful, depraved, hard, rebellious, and an unbelieving heart arms the devil, and makes him irresistible by such mortals in whom sin predominates ; and the changing of the heart, of that enmity that is in the carnal mind, tends to disarm the devil, and over such souls he hath but little power.

6. God's law being broken and violated, is as a sword in Satan's hand, by which he kills and wounds unto death, great multitudes ; the devil knows how to use a believer's sword to wound them, and oftentimes doth so ; but as the law being broke is called the strength of sin, so it is the armour and strength of Satan also, by which means

The devil is now in greater wrath and rage than ever.

What is Satan's armour.

The devil is armed with utter despair which makes him desperate.

Sin arms the devil to the ruin of sinners.

Satan armed by God's broken law.

no man in an unrenewed state can get out of the devil's hands : do you not see, saith he, how your God in his law curses you, and for your sins hates you, and how this broken law you slain and dead at my foot ; nay, that God that made you, hath left you, and given you up into my hands, and I have power over you, and will dwell, nay, reign in and over you, do what you can, you cannot, shall not get out of my hand ; therefore let your hearts take pleasure in sin and all unrighteousness, and deny yourselves of nothing that is either sweet, pleasant, or profitable to the flesh, so much to the first thing.

Secondly, I shall shew you why Satan must be subdued in a sinner that is converted, and his power destroyed in his soul.

1. Because he will not be intreated, there is no, persuading the devil to yield up his palace, no, no, he cannot be prevailed with by flattery, as some cruel tyrants have been : if Satan be not destroyed and overcome by force, he will hold his own for ever, there are no devices against him, or subtle stratagems that any poor sinner can invent, to supplant or countermine him. Many a strong and cruel enemy whom men could not spoil nor destroy by force and power, have been utterly overcome, defeated, and spoiled by policy ; but Satan is too great a politician this way, to loose his strong hold.

Satan will not be intreated to let go his captives.

2. The devil must be subdued in the sinner's heart that is converted, because he hath them all in his chains, and they are his mere slaves, and captives, nay he "takes them captive by him at his will," 2 Tim. ii. 26. There is not one man nor woman in the world, but naturally are the captives of this cruel and merciless devil, he rules in the hearts of all the children of disobedience.

Satan has all men naturally in chains.

3. Because grace cannot enter into that heart where the devil reigns, nor will, nor indeed can Jesus Christ dwell therein, for wherever Christ dwells he reigns, sirs, it is impossible for two princes that are directly opposite in their nature ends, and designs, to reign over one and the same subject ; now thus sin is contrary to grace, so is grace absolutely contrary unto sin, and as the devil is an unreconcilable enemy of Jesus Christ, or an implacable adversary in his very nature to him, so the pure and holy Jesus hates and abhors Satan ; and as the devil seeks to be revenged on Christ, so the Lord Jesus in his whole design, seeks to destroy and overcome the devil ; therefore if grace and Jesus Christ enters into the heart of a sinner, the power and dominion of Satan must be destroyed in him.

The power of sin and grace cannot rule in one and the same heart.

Also Christ and Satan cannot rule in one and the same heart absolutely.

Thirdly, I shall show you why none but Christ can subdue the devil. When I say none but Christ can, I mean no man in earth is, nor ever was able by any power of his own, or by any power short of, or besides the almighty and irresistible strength of Jesus Christ, could or can do it.

None but clothed with almighty power can destroy Satan.

1. Because Satan is set forth in the scripture to be much stronger than man, and more cunning ; and being an angel, he exceeds man in wisdom also. But what I have said, in showing what a prince Satan is, fully demonstrates this to be as I say.

The devil stronger than man.

2. Because God hath laid our help upon Christ only, as being one able and mighty to save sinners ; and to this end Christ also came into the world, "for this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil," 1 John iii. 8,

God laid help on Christ.

What need was there for Christ to come into the world to this end and purpose, if man had been able to have destroyed this strong enemy, Satan.

The mighty one to destroy the devil.

3. None but Christ can subdue Satan in the sinner's heart, because he that doth this, must first bind this strong man armed, and take away also all his armour, and what man on earth can do this ? But these things our Lord in this parable positively affirms.

He that subdues the devil must first bind him and disarm him, which none could do but Christ only.

4. Because it is Jesus Christ alone that hath subdue him, and broke his head, as it was promised to our first parents he should do ; moreover, that broken remaining power that Satan has left, none but God can destroy. "God shall bruise Satan under your feet shortly." He that hath overcome and conquered the devil he only can subdue and destroy him, and that is the Lord Jesus Christ.

Christ alone hath subdued Satan.

5. None but Christ can subdue Satan, because none but he can make an end of sin and destroy death, if the works of the devil are not destroyed, the devil is not subdued : sin is the grand work of Satan, and death is the wages and punishment thereof ; now sin and death, none hath nor could destroy but Jesus Christ, and this he hath done, and took our nature upon him to this end, "That through death he might destroy him that had the power of death,

He that cannot destroy sin and death, cannot destroy the devil.

and deliver them, who through the fear of death, were all their lifetime subject to bondage," Heb. ii. 14, 15. Where sin remains in its full power, there the devil lives and reigns, and death also triumphs over all such sinners, they are dead in sin, and liable to eternal death : and since none can destroy sin and death but Jesus Christ, none but he alone can destroy the devil.

He that destroys the devil, destroys his image in the sinner's heart, and stamps the image of God therein.

6. None can destroy Satan, but he that destroys and utterly spoils his image, and stamps the image of God in the same soul : but this is done by Christ none : can any man utterly deface and spoil the image of Satan in his own soul, and form the image of God in himself ? What mortal will affirm that ? besides man lies spiritually dead in sin, naturally even slain at Satan's feet, and what can such dead and lifeless creatures do against the strong man armed, can they subdue this terrible enemy ?

APPLICATION.

1. From hence we may infer that there is cause enough why we should fear the power and malice of Satan, so as not to think he is a small or weak enemy or fear him so as never to make head against him, by any power of our own.

2. We from hence also may infer that it is no wonder the world is so spoiled, overcome, and blinded by the devil, you hear what a strong and subtil enemy he is.

3. Moreover we infer from hence, that this world is an evil world, a dangerous and perilous world, because it hath such a multitude of strange and malicious devils in it, who go up and down and defile all places. O ! who would desire to live in this world ! We live here not only among men, like the devil, but also among devils, amongst multitudes of devils.

O ! admire and praise the holy and ever blessed God for sending a Saviour, such a Saviour, such a mighty Saviour as Jesus Christ is, into this world, none but a Saviour clothed with almighty power, could save us from this strong man armed, or subdue and vanquish the devil : and indeed from hence it appers, that Jesus Christ is God because none but the most High God could destroy Satan, the god of this world, and from hence Christ is able to save all fly unto him, " he is mighty to save, until one stronger than he binds the strong man," is a mere man, stronger than Satan ? or is any besides the Most High God able to bind Satan, and throw him out of his palace ?

Christ in his life, and by his death destroyed the devil.

Quest. How hath Christ destroyed, or conquered the devil.

Ans. By death, he by death destroyed death and devils also. Christ subdued Satau in his life, this enemy set upon our Lord ; but was utterly put to flight in the combats he had with him, nay, by his spotless life and painful death, our Lord destroyed sin, the work of the devil, and answered all the demands of the law ; also by his death and resurrection, " he spoiled principalities and powers, and made a shew of them openly," Col. ii. 15.

How Christ hath disarmed the strong man.

2. By taking from him all his armour. (1.) He has spoiled and divested him of all his power, bruising and breaking his head : sirs, the strong man is wounded, he is a maimed devil now. (2.) Jesus Christ hath out-done the devil in wisdom, all Satan's policy in one day was defeated, and turned into foolishness, that way he thought to have destroyed our Captain, and for ever have prevented our recovery, he himself, sin, and death, and all enemies were subdued, no doubt when Satan had brought Christ under death (to which end he entered into Judas) he thought he had done our Lord's buisness, and ours also, but thereby he was disarmed of that part of his armour. (3.) By destroying of sin, in the guilt power and punishment thereof, our Lord took away the chiefest of all his armour, (4.) By his perfect obedience to the law, and by bearing the penalty thereof, (which we lay obnoxious unto) he disarmed him of another piece of his armour. (5.) Our Lord disarmeth this strong man, by making all Satan's wrath and fury to turn to the good and advantage of his saints, his church and people. (6.) By sending the gospel or gracious revelation thereof, our Saviour hath scattered and expelled that darkness which the devil brought upon the world, and thereby discovereth those errors, heresies, idolatries and superstitions, that every where abounded therein, " he hath brought light, and immorality to the light, through the Gospel," 2 Tim. iii. 10 ; so that Satan's craft and cunning is all laid open, and himself utterly vanquished, and brought to shame, and his kingdom overthrown for ever.

Quest. How doth Christ bind this strong man, &c., and so spoil his house.

Ans. The Lord Christ doth this by entering into the sinner's heart by his Spirit he binds him, so that he can make no resistance.

2. Also by restraining Satan, or putting him into chains, that he can go no further than our Lord permits him; also what hurt soever he is suffered to do to his saints, his church, and people, our Lord makes it turn to their good, and for their profit and advantage, whether it be done more immediately by himself in those suggestions and temptations, whereby he fixeth and troubles the saints, or what he doth by his servants and diabolical emissaries. Moreover, he spoils Satan's house, by pulling of it quite down, and new building it, so that it may become a fit habitation for himself to dwell and reign in through the Spirit: by this means also sin (which is the chief goods) is destroyed, the power thereof being broken, and the poor believer delivered from the guilt and punishment thereof; also hardness of heart, ignorance, and unbelief are spoiled, which were Satan's goods, so that he hath in that soul no goods to boast of, nor a house to dwell in.

How Jesus Christ binds the strong man.

O! what consolation and comfort is here.

Comfort.

1. For, poor sinners, your strong and cruel enemy Satan is overcome. Almighty Jesus hath conquered and slain him; the strong man armed is subdued, your adversary the devil is brought down, and lies mangled in his blood (as I may so say) at the foot of your blessed Saviour. What though he hath as yet possession of your hearts, cry out to the Lord Jesus Christ to give you faith, and pray him to come in to your assistance; if you get the shield of faith, and manfully in the name and strength of Jesus Christ resist him, he will fly from you; be not afraid of his power nor policy, but tell him he is a beaten and conquered enemy, that Christ the seed of the woman hath broken his head. But,

2. The chiefest comfort is yours that are believers.

1. Satan is cast out of your house; a stronger than he hath appeared for you actual relief. (2.) Your house is now new made, and, "Christ dwells in your hearts by faith," Eph. iii. 17; and by the Spirit, whose habitation you are now become. (3.) Satan can never return again to get power over you, nor rule in you; "because greater is he that is in you than he that is in the world," 1 John iv. 4. You have through Christ overcome the wicked one. (4.) Christ is your Captain; he hath espoused your cause, nay, it is his own cause; and whenever Satan assaults you, Christ will come into your assistance, but be sure sleep not; be always on your watch, and never engage this enemy in your own strength. Remember Paul, when he was buffeted, "he sought the Lord thrice," 2 Cor. xii. 8. O! be much in prayer. (5.) Know though your own inherent grace may not be enough, yet the grace that is in Christ is; "My grace is sufficient for thee."—Let our condition be what it will, his grace is sufficient, and his love an everlasting: "We are more than conquerors through him that hath loved us."

THE

OF THE

UNCLEAN SPIRIT, GONE OUT OF A MAN.

SERMON V.

When the unclean spirit is gone out of a man, he walketh through dry places, seeking rest, and finding none. Then he saith, I will return into my house from whence I came out; and when he is come he findeth it empty, swept, and garnished: then goeth he and taketh with him seven other spirits more wicked than himself, and they enter in and dwell there; and the last state of that man is worse than the first.—Matt. xii. 43—45.

THIS place of holy Scripture is generally acknowledged to be hard to be understood; most expositors and annotators (I have met with,) say but little to it.

Preached
August 10, 1696.

Some call it a parable, and others a parabolical speech or a similitude.

The scope and design of this parable.

By the scope and coherence of the place, it is evident our Saviour setteth forth by it the direful state and condition of the Scribes and Pharisees, and other people of the Jews, who boasted of their external holiness, or seeming sanctity, they being not profane or notorious sinners; or as they themselves foolishly said, "Not extortioners, unjust, or adulterers, like as the publicans were," Luke xviii. 11. Yet the Lord Jesus showeth by this parable how they were deceived; for though they were delivered from that profane and debauched unclean spirit, yet was their state worse than the state of gross and wicked sinners, which is signified by the entering into them seven other unclean spirits, worse or more wicked than the first that were gone out of them.

That the words may be applied to them and other people of that generation, is evident from the sequel of ver. 45, "Even so shall it be with the people of this forward generation." Yet no doubt our blessed Saviour in this place may have reference to a man in the like state; or as Beza, Cæterum quum spiritus impurus exierit a quopiam, &c., as well as unto that people who were carried away with cursed hypocrisy.

"When the unclean spirit," &c.

By the unclean spirit, τὸ ἀκαθάρτον πνεῦμα, is certainly meant the devil, called "an unclean spirit," Mark v. 8.

The parts opened, why Satan is called an unclean spirit.

1. Because he hath lost his own original purity, or clean and holy nature, he being at first created an angel of light, having like holiness before he fell, which the blessed and elect angels of heaven have.

2. Because he is so universally filthy and abominably vile in himself, and so remains, and will abide for ever, there being no possibility for him to become better, he being left and forsaken of God, without any means afforded of being purged from his unclean and filthy nature.

3. Because he is not only unclean in himself, but also defileth the hearts and spirit of all such persons who receive and entertain him, nay, all the pollution of our nature; yea, the whole nature of the human race was originally from that compliance and yielding to him by our first parents. It is this unclean spirit that hath poisoned and notoriously defiled the whole man, both body and soul in all its powers and faculties; and not the whole man only, but the whole world also. And as this is naturally the filthy and miserable condition of all creatures, so those who yield to his temptations, come to have further pollution and defilement cleave to their hearts and lives. Sin is an unclean thing, and it makes all such loathsome and abominable in the sight of God, who are overcome by it. Though all naturally are vile and filthy, yet there are degrees of uncleanness; some are worse than others, more wicked, and so more like to the devil, in whom his very image or likeness clearly may be seen.

4. He may also be called an unclean spirit, because he continually enticeth, and strives to draw men to filthiness, and to all manner of uncleanness, being an utter enemy to all purity and true holiness, envying all those who love it, and strive to promote it.

"Is gone out of a man." Not that the man was actually possessed with the devil, (as some may think,) though it is very like the Lord Jesus may borrow this parabolical speech from a person actually possessed; but he showeth hereby that all wicked men are in a mystical and spiritual sense possessed with the devil; all graceless sinners have an unclean spirit in them. Where sin predominates and rules in the heart, there the devil has possession; that heart is Satan's throne where he reigns and sways the sceptre. Satan was said to enter into Judas, and to fill the heart of How Satan may be said to go out of a man.

Ananias. Both these had this unclean spirit in them; the one was plagued or possessed with a treacherous devil, and the other with a lying devil. Hence it is also said, that Satan, who is the prince of the power of the air, both "worketh and ruleth in the children of disobedience," Eph. ii. 2, 3.

Luke xxii. 3. Acts v. 3.

"Gone out." Either by the power and force of the grace of God in its common operations he was thrown out; or else, through policy, he voluntarily leaves his house for a time, with an intention to return again with a stronger force. Some adhere to the first sense, and others to the last.

"Gone out," i. e., as a carnal, profane, or black devil, for so he may be said to be in all debauched persons; and in this respect he may be said to be gone out or thrown out of the Pharisees, and other false and counterfeit professors; he may not be able to keep them any longer under the power of open and gross profaneness. And from hence the Pharisee proudly breaks forth, "God, I thank thee, I am not as other men are, extortioners, unjust, adulterers, or even as this publican," Luke xviii. 11. Why may not Satan be expelled or forced out of his house in some degree, by the common influences of the Spirit? All generally grant that legal convictions, and the operation of common grace through the workings of natural conscience, have some considerable power in them to reform the life of a wicked person. Nor can I think Satan would yield to any soul voluntarily, so far as to let him become so much as civilized if he could help it; therefore I rather think he was forced to give place, as not being able to hold his own (in some respect,) as formerly, although whilst the creature abides in his natural state, not having a changed heart, Satan hath possession of that soul still in a great measure; and therefore he leaves, no doubt, a strong guard behind him, when he is said to go out, though they may be said to hide themselves, or retire into some lurking-holes and corners of the house, or rather of the heart. Satan cannot, doubtless, keep possession always, so far as to hold men under the power of gross and scandalous sins, or cause them to continue openly profane; such power and virtue is there in the common operation of the Spirit, or in legal convictions and workings of natural conscience, together with the help of the external ministration of God's word, and by the means of afflictions, and those severe providences and dispensations, under which wicked men may be exercised, that it may tend to make them become other men; though it cannot change their hearts, yet it may make a great change in their lives, by which means they may look like saints, and talk like saints and sanctified persons, and be taken for such too by the truly godly; nay, and that which is worse, may conclude within themselves they are converted, since their former enemy, that debauched, gross, and unclean spirit is gone out of them. I am so far of the mind of James Arminius, that man may by the means of that common help and power God affords to all in general, may leave the gross acts of wickedness, let Satan do what he can; which has been often evinced by that terror severe human laws have had on the consciences of wicked and ungodly persons. I am persuaded were there a law that he that swore an oath, or was drunk, or committed adultery, should have his right-hand cut off, or be made a slave all the days of his life, we should see men would get power over those temptations of Satan, and neither be drunk nor commit adultery.

"He walketh through dry places."

1. Satan is said in that of Job i. 7, "to go to and fro in the earth, and to walk up and down in it." Satan here speaks, saith Mr. Caryl, like a prince; therefore saith he, "Some conceive this was the prince of devils that is mentioned in this text, or Beelzebub the chief of devils." He walketh about to view his provinces and territories, from one place to another, but he doth not walk to and fro as an idle peripaterick, but to enquire, to observe, and consider, as a spy, to search all things and persons as he passeth along. Therefore,

What is meant by Satan's walking through dry places.

2. This noteth that Satan is a diligent enemy; if he hath lost a little ground, or is worsted in one soul, he will try what power and success he can find in another.

3. It shows that he is an inquiet and restless spirit, being cast out of heaven, he can rest nowhere; and if he be forced out of some men at one time, he will tempt others, nay, if the servant hath a little worsted him, he to revenge himself, will fall perhaps in the next place upon the Son; if he lose some place in his own house, he will see if he cannot get into the temple of the Holy Ghost; or, if he is forced to leave wet and filthy places, in which he delights, he will walk through dry places, and see what he can meet with there.

4. Satan's great work which he employs himself in and about, is, no doubt, to get into the heart of men to dwell, nay, rule there, and so subject them to himself, and defile and pollute them one way or other.

"Dry places, seeking rest, and finding none," i. e., where there is no water or moisture, or not enough to refresh him; he has a cruel thirst upon him, and unless he meet with that he seeketh, which is to make a prey of the souls of men, he is in a restless state, like a thirsty person who walking through dry places, can find no water. There are some sorts of men that afford Satan no content nor satisfaction; he seeketh for that oftentimes which he finds not; he is not pleased to be as a traveller, to pass through a place and stay, (as it were but for a night) but would fain find rest, i. e., have a place or heart to dwell in, and take sole possession of. I find one of the ancients, who, writing on this dark expression, speaketh thus: "So long as he dwelleth not in me, he is said to seek rest, he is grieved and vexed," &c.

What is meant by Satan's seeking rest.

1. Dry places, are commonly clean places, or places where there is no dirt or mire; and Satan, that unclean spirit, is like a swine, i. e., he delights in filthy and miry places; dry places signify his assailing the saints, or seeking to get into sanctified hearts, or hearts renewed by the special grace of God, and thoroughly purged by the blood of Christ, in whom that filthy sink of sin and pollution, is not only dried up, but the heart is changed and made new, and so no more a house or habitation for this unclean spirit, but is become the temple of the Holy Ghost, or a habitation for God through the Spirit. And these men's hearts are unto Satan, like dry places to a thirsty and restless person. For as the Holy Spirit cannot rest, nor take up his abode in filthy and polluted hearts; so the devil, that wicked spirit, can find no rest nor place of abode in renewed and sanctified hearts. And as it is no suitable house or habitation for him; so likewise believers have one dwelling in them, strong enough to keep Satan out. "For stronger (saith the apostle) is he that is in us, than he which is in the world," and again he saith, "Ye are strong, and the word of God abideth in you, and ye have overcome the wicked one," 1 John v. 18. "He that is begotten of God, keepeth himself, and the wicked one toucheth him not," 1 John ii. 14. Shall not so touch him as to enter into his heart and take up his dwelling, or get possession of him any more, and therefore these men's hearts, i. e., the hearts of true sanctified Christians, I conclude are meant here by our Saviour, which are to Satan as dry places, where there is no dwelling or abiding for him.

What is meant by dry places.

2. As dry places are clean places; so likewise they are commonly barren places, places where little or nothing will grow; Satan is for such hearts that will receive his evil seed, i. e., suited and fit to close in with his cursed temptations, which are like to moist or miry place, such as all corrupt and unregenerate hearts are, in others that bitter and evil seed which this unclean spirit sows, will not take root. Or if it should so fall out, that through the carelessness and negligence of believers, and strength of temptations, Satan should drop some of his cursed seed in them, and it should meet with a little of the old corrupt nature (there being in the best of men an unregenerate part) yet it would soon wither and come to nothing, for their hearts are, (as I said before) no proper soil for the seed of the wicked one; therefore if he gets in a little, he is soon turned out again; so that in a word, according to the import of this saying of Christ, (as I conceive) these men's hearts are to the devil, like dry places, where he can find no rest.

3. Dry places are for the most part places least inhabited for want of water, the hearts of saints are like uninhabitable places to Satan; in them he cannot find those proper accommodations which he needs and must have where he dwells. But since he can find no dwelling here, no diabolical comfort nor refreshment, i. e., no abode in godly hearts; he saith, "I will return into my house from whence I came out," ver. 44.

What is meant by Satan's returning.
 "I will return." Not that he was quite routed and vanquished before; it is called still his house, he lays claim and pleads propriety in him and interest still. Therefore this man's heart was not become the temple of the holy Spirit, he was gone out, or forced out before, as a swearing, cursing, whoring, or drunken devil, &c., and this might enrage him, and move him to attempt some greater enterprise which we have already spoken to. Satan doth not love to lose or let go any strong hold he hath of carnal and profane persons; but seeing he had received some small defeat, he sets upon the truly godly Christian; like as when he was cast out of heaven unto the earth, he presently persecuted the woman which brought forth a man child, Rev. xii. 13. When he saw he could not uphold his kingdom by Paganism, nor farther execute his malice by Pagan emperors, but was routed and overcome as to that power he had, (as our late annotators observe) to let us know that he retains his malice, though he hath lost his former strength, he goes on in pursuing the church of God. Even so, I say, he having been forced to give way before as I hinted, he walks about to seek revenge upon the saints, but they being to him like dry places to a thirsty man, or as an inn to a traveller, viz., no resting place, he resolves to return to his own house, that is, the hearts of hypocritical professors, such as the Pharisees were. And this returning of his into his old house, imports (as I conceive) his coming again in another form or shape, and with a resolution to get better and more firmer and surer possession than he had before.

Now he appears as an angel of light. Nor can we suppose he had no party left in the said house when he went out. Parables must not be strained too far; we ought not to screw or make to severe a scrutiny upon every phrase; therefore we cannot think when he is said to return to his former house, or attempt afresh the false and counterfeit Christian, that he hath quite given over his designs in assaulting sanctified persons; but he cannot endure to be an underling, he is for kinging it in the souls of men, would fain reign and sway the sceptre there, and where he cannot rule and domineer, he hath no rest, nor can be satisfied. And therefore he may be said to return as an exiled prince, and lest he should be discovered, he puts on a new garb, and is now contented his captive should become religious, that so the deluded sinner might not discern him, but take him for his lawful sovereign; as if he should say, I will yield to you now; if you will be a professor and become religious, ye shall, but I will dwell with you notwithstanding; here is room enough for me as a white devil, though not as a black one.

“And when he is come, he findeth it empty, swept and garnished.”

Empty, that is the Spirit of God was not there, true grace was not there, Christ dwelleth not there, that house may be said to be empty, where God and Jesus Christ are not; nor is it a hard and difficult thing for the unclean spirit to enter into such a soul, since there was no enemy strong enough to keep him out; but contrariwise, the place seems to be rather prepared and made fit for him, to take up his abode in this new religious and spiritual appearance, nay, here is not only room for himself, but the house is so empty, that many other unclean spirits more wicked than himself, may have their abode and dwelling there also. Satan saith, I will return to my house, &c. He speaks as if he was sure enough that this sinner was his own, and therefore should without any difficulty enter in, in that new disguise in which he now appears; and accordingly it is said, he findeth it empty, and also swept; but doubtless some dirt and filth was yet in some hole or corner. For like as a lazy and slothful housewife uses to sweep a little of the loose dust and filth in the open and middle of the room, and lets many secret corners lie foul as before, and may be leaves the dirt behind the door out of the public view of people: so the false and counterfeit Christian reforms his life in the sight of men; or like the Pharisees, makes clean the outside of the cup and platter, but their hearts are still polluted, and as vile as ever.

Swept, but not with a proper and fit broom; it is said to be swept, but alas it was only with the besom of legal reformation; and how far that will cleanse the unclean and wicked person, is known to understanding men; it only takes away the filth of gross and scandalous sins, therefore said by St. Peter, “To escape the corruption that is in the world,” 2 Pet. ii. 4; that is, the profane world, i. e., vile and notorious sins and pollutions.

And garnished, or painted, which may signify that seeming sanctity, moral virtue, and the common graces of the Spirit. Our Saviour elsewhere compares pharisaical holiness, to painting or garnishing of a sepulchre; “Woe unto you Scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites, for ye are like unto whited sepulchres, which indeed appear beautiful outward, but within are full of dead men’s bones, and all uncleanness. Ye build (saith he) the tombs of the prophets, and garnish the sepulchres of the righteous,” Matt. xxiii. 27, 29. And thus pharisaical and hypocritical professors may be said to be garnished, i. e., they seem glorious to men, who only judge by the outward appearance, and know not the heart; there may be a great change of life, a beautiful outside, and yet the evil and vicious habits and pollutions of the heart may still the same, and not changed. And remarkable is the phrase of our Saviour “garnished,” which we know is commonly a curious piece of art, men by their ingenuity strive to imitate nature; they will draw the face of a man, &c., with curious painting, very exact, so that it much resembles the person’s natural face, yet it is not the same, it is but a piece of paint, an artificial invention. Even so in like manner by the improvement of man’s natural parts, common grace, light and knowledge, he may appear in the view and sight of men, as a true child of God, and may talk and discourse like a saint, read and hear God’s word, nay, and pray also with much seeming devotion and piety, and may likewise bridle many unruly lusts, and gross enormities of life, and give alms to the poor, insomuch that he may very exactly resemble a true and sincere Christian, and be taken by all godly people to be indeed such an one; but notwithstanding all, it is but an artificial piece, it is but like a curious paint, or vain-glorious garnish; it is not the image of God, it is not the new creature; though it looks like it, much resembles it, yet is not the same; for the man is a mere hypocrite, a counterfeit Christian, the work upon him being only the product of natural improvements, and not the effects of the saving operations of the Holy Spirit. Nay, and Satan, though an unclean spirit, likes to dwell in such a house, I mean such a heart, thus swept and garnished, as well as in the heart of a vile and debauched person, and evident it is, that this sweeping or external cleansing with the broom of outward reformation, or the garnish of moral righteousness, common gifts and graces of the Spirit, prayer, hearing the word, partaking of the sacraments, and doing many good works, cannot secure his soul against Satan’s attempts, in order to his taking up his habitation in such person’s hearts.

After I had preached these two sermons, a godly friend who heard them, told me he had met with a treatise of a worthy author, who gives the same sense on this mysterious place of scripture, he helped me to the book which I was ignorant of, and I shall give you some brief hints of what he hath said.

What is intended by the house being empty, swept, and garnished.

Mr. Rich. Allen’s Vindiciæ pietatis.

“When the unclean spirit goeth out of a man,” &c. That sinners are vile and abominable, (saith he) it is from that wicked spirit Satan, that dwells in them, every sinner is a person possessed of a devil; when a little reformed, they seem for a time to be dispossessed, &c., he walketh through dry places; what these dry places may be, is not easy to determine, some by these loca arida, understand loca vacua, void, empty places, the deserts and wastes of the the earth, where he finds nobody to tempt or molest.

But could Satan, saith he, think to find rest there where was no house for him to lay his head in? would the tempter waste his time in seeking whom to devour in those waste places, where he knew well enough there were none to be found? He knows too well where sinners dwell, than to go to seek them where they are not; more like to find the devil at a market, than in a wilderness. This therefore seems not to be the sense—

Why may not, saith he, these dry places be the saints on earth, the fountain of whose blood is dried up? in whom the suu bath dried up their dirt and mire, in which this swine loves to wallow, &c., [he seeketh rest] this notes two things.

1. When the devil is gone out of any person, he is never at rest till he is gotten in again, from whence he went out, or into some other habitation where he may do more mischief, like children, like father, is said of some, so it is much more true of him, “He rests not but in doing mischief.”

2. The devil loves to dwell where he may be at rest; that is, not from work (his rest is his work) but from resistance or opposition, i. e., in carnal and unclean hearts, &c.

What is meant by Satan's finding no rest. “Seeking rest and finding none,” he goes, saith he, through these dry places, from saint to saint, from heart to heart, in hope to find entertainment, but is still disappointed; here is little rest for me, saith he, to be had, these dry places I see are no places for me, here is watching and wrestling and warring against me; so much praying, complaining against me, that there is no stay for me here—I will go back to my old habitation, and when he comes, he finds it empty, swept, and garnished, a little cleansed, a little cleaner and handsomer than when he left it. The devil can allow sinners a little reformation; but though it be a little cleansed and garnished, yet it lies empty still, there is no tenant hath taken it up, though the devil went out, Christ was not let in, but there it lies void for the next that comes.

Then he goeth and taketh seven other spirits more wicked than himself, and they enter in, and dwell there; and the last state of that man is worse than the first. Beware of a returning devil; the devil at his return often makes sevenfold worse work than before he did. Allen's godly fear, p. 213, 214, 215, 216.

He modestly offers this as his thoughts on the place, and I find others confirming by some brief hints the same things. I thought it not amiss to recite this passage of his, as a farther confirmation of the exposition I have briefly given you of this dark place of scripture, not doubting but it is the sense and meaning of our Saviour.

Doct. I. Take two or three points of doctrine. Observe,

1. Satan is an unclean spirit. As God is the Author and Original of all true holiness, so is Satan of all sin and wickedness. And as God's nature is pure, so the devil in his nature is impure; all purity proceeds from God, and all sin proceeds from Satan; God strives to promote the one, and the devil labours to promote the other, as God's kingdom is set up in the world, and maintained by holiness and spiritual sanctity; so the devil's kingdom is set up and upheld by sin and filthiness. As God by his Spirit dwells in sanctified hearts, so the devil dwells in polluted and sinful hearts: and as Christ makes that man or woman holy and clean where he makes his abode; so Satan makes those souls where he take up his dwelling, unclean and abominably wicked. Moreover, as he who is truly sanctified and made holy, is said to be of God; so they that are wicked and ungodly, are said to be of the devil. All those who are spiritually and truly gracious are like to God, or bear some resemblance of him; and all unclean and wicked persons are like to the devil. These things considered, no marvel Satan is called an unclean spirit.

Doct. II. 2. All profane, notorious, and ungodly sinners are in a woful state, the unclean spirit is in them, their hearts are Satan's habitation.

See the foregoing parable. The heart of man was not originally Satan's house, nor hath he any just right or property to it; it is his by usurpation and conquest, as men yield up themselves to him, and entertain his temptations. Man, both body and soul, is the Lord's, he is his creature; nor ought he to suffer any to dwell in him, much less to rule and sway the sceptre over him, but the holy God. But as all men as they come into the world, have wretched and cursed natures, through original depravity; so ungodly men actually have cast off God their lawful and only sovereign, and have embraced the wicked one, they have received, and do subject themselves to Satan, that unclean and filthy spirit, he is king and lord over them. The devil hath got possession by craft, he enticed our first parents to open the door to him, they gave him the first entertainment, it was then he took possession, and thereby at once corrupted all that are in the house; I mean, all the faculties of the soul to such a degree, that they all naturally side with Satan, and Rom. viii. 7. are for him, and are filled with enmity against God, and oppose and resist his Spirit, and rebel against the light. Wicked men had rather be under the tyrannical government of the devil, than to be ruled and governed by Jesus Christ, and from hence it is no wonder they rather choose to have wicked earthly rulers and tyrannical kings to be over them, than to be subject to a prince who is an enemy to wickedness, tyranny and oppression. This shows the blindness and miserable state and condition of all wicked and ungodly men. We may further note also,

Doct. III.

2. That Satan may lose some ground in sinner's hearts, he may seem to be gone out of them, and they may become sober and civilized, and yet may be in the gall of bitterness, and their hearts notwithstanding may be still Satan's habitation.

Let these men change their lives, and become other men in the view of the world; alter their course of life, yet they are miserable; Satan has spiritual power and dominion over them, he has a strong party in their hearts, when he seems to be gone out, and knows they are his still, and owns them as his dwelling-place. When he cannot meet with entertainment in other places, when saints afford him no encouragement, but displease and defy him, and their hearts are as dry places, he can nevertheless return at pleasure to his old habitation, and there he enters and dwells. Let them change their religion, yet they are Satan's slaves still, he matters not if they leave popery and cleave to prelacy, and so become protestants in general; nay, embrace a more refined sort of people, and take upon them a more strict profession of religion, yet still they belong to him, if they are not truly regenerated and renewed in their souls; let them be Presbyterians, Independents, or Baptists, it signifies nothing, they are still the same, and under Satan's power and dominion. O how miserably are some men deceived, thinking if they are reformed and become zealous for external ordinances, and have taken up this or that form of religion, and are taken for saints by men, that all is well, and they shall be saved! How did the Pharisees glory in their seeming zeal and piety, and flatter themselves, and yet wofully blinded, and in a damnable state and condition? Note also, that,

Doct. IV.

4. Morality, external gifts, and common grace, are but like a vain paint, a mere empty and artificial garnish.

They make a fair show in the flesh, they pride it in themselves, and men praise and admire them, but what doth all this signify? they are still under a diabolical power and influence, and two-fold more the children of the devil than they were before. Nay, as I shall hereafter show, rather seven times worse than when they were openly wicked and profane.

APPLICATION.

1. A terror to sinners. Tremble you that live wicked lives, remember the unclean spirit dwells in you, and has power over you, your hearts are his habitation, he rules in you, and takes you captive at his will. If in this state you die, you are undone for ever.

2. See to it, you that are professors, lest you are also deceived. What is a reformed life without a changed heart? To cast off the gross acts of sin, will not avail you anything, without the evil habits are broke, and you renewed in the spirit of your mind. Though you seem to be godly to men, yet God knows your hearts, and how they stand affected to him, and to true real godliness. A form of religion will never save you; and though you may have got some ground against Satan, and he seems to have left you, or is gone out, yet take heed he does not return again with greater strength, and get you into stronger bonds now, than he had before. But because this will be more fully opened in the next place, I shall at present say no more to it now.

3. This also affords much comfort to God's people. Satan sets upon you, and fain he would subject your souls to himself, and take possession of your hearts, but he cannot prevail, you have got one in you who is stronger than Satan, who will preserve you to his heavenly kingdom. But no more at this time. I shall leave what I have said to the blessing of God.

SERMON VI.

When the unclean spirit is gone out of a man, &c.—Matt. xii. 43—45.

Morning exercise Horsely-down, August 17, 1690. THE last day I opened the several parts of this place of holy Scripture, in the usual method I have all along taken in my exposition of other parables, which I have already spoken to, according to that small measure of light and knowledge the Lord hath been pleased to bestow upon me. There remains one thing further to be done, and that is indeed the chief and most material of all, which is to show you the sad state of the false and counterfeit professor, out of whom the unclean spirit is said to be gone, but yet is returned again with seven other spirits more wicked than himself. Our Blessed Lord saith, “The last state of that man is worse than the first,” Matt. xii. 45. Now in what respect a painted hypocrite, or one garnished only with common gifts and graces of the Spirit, may be said to be in a worse state than the open profane, I shall endeavour, God assisting, to demonstrate.

What is meant by seven other worse spirits. It is said, “Satan returned with seven other spirits,” &c. Seven is a number of perfection. I judge our Saviour designed hereby to show that the devil hath now got stronger hold and possession of such a person by many degrees; many unclean spirits, or worse and more dangerous sins cleave to him than before, so that he is like to be perfectly miserable. But to proceed;

First, That which renders false professors, or counterfeit Christians, to be in such a deplorable condition, (which also evidently appeared in the Pharisees, and other people in that generation, to whom primarily our Saviour refers, as the close of the 45 ver. shows) is, that great ignorance that cleaves to them, notwithstanding their common illuminations; which usually does consist in these respects following,

The first an ignorant spirit under clearer light.

Hypocrites know not their woful state.

1. “They know not their own miserable state, looking upon themselves to be rich and increased with goods, and to have need of nothing,” Rev. iii. 17. As appears by that charge of the Lord Christ against the church of Laodicea, who were fallen into the like condition; they think none knows more than themselves, insomuch that they secretly condemn him who tells them how it is with them; and this rises from the consideration of that great knowledge they conceit they have above others; “But now ye say, Ye see, therefore your sin remains,” John ix. xl. If your ignorance were simple, (as if Christ should say) and not affected, or were you sensible of your blindness, then your disease would not be so incurable. But now you say you see, and you doubt not but you are in a state of happiness, and are the only people of God, and yet presumptuously refuse the way of your relief and salvation, and do not conclude you are under guilt and wrath, as indeed you are.

2. Their blindness and ignorance consisteth, in that they cannot discern nor distinguish between a changed heart, and a changed life, or between legal reformation and true regeneration. They think, because their state seems so much better than it was before, in their own apprehension, and in the apprehension of others also, their condition is good enough; they comparing themselves with themselves, beholding what a vast difference there is, or seems to be in respect of what they once were, when swearers, drunkards, whoremongers, &c., cannot but commend themselves to themselves. Once they saw themselves sinners, and called themselves so, and were ashamed of their own sinful and wicked lives; but now they are righteous in their own conceit, and so have no need of any farther work, being arrived to that state of holiness, (as they think) or that degree of piety, to that change, to that conversion, that they conclude they need not seek for any other, and yet are deceived, and in the gall of bitterness. And hereby they seem to put themselves out of the call of Jesus Christ, “who came to seek and to save that which was lost. Not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance, Matt. xviii. 11. Let men think what they please, certainly there is no devil like this devil. If he can persuade a man that he is whole, and not sick at all, and so needs no physician; and that when the gospel is preached to sinners, and the danger of unbelief is opened, yet it doth not affect him, nor concern him, he being become a righteous person; what hopes can there be of such a one? Alas, the ministers of Christ have received no commission to offer Christ to any but to sinners. Now these are not the persons a precious Saviour is tendered unto, they see no want nor need of him, and therefore these are passed by, as such who need no repentance.

Men may have a changed life and no change of heart.

3. Their blindness consisteth in their ignorance of God's righteousness, not knowing what righteousness it is that will render them accepted and justified in the sight of God; and so, like the poor Jews, go "about to establish their own righteousness," Rom. x. 3, their own personal righteousness, a home-spun righteousness; they see no need to go to another, to be beheld to another.

Secondly, Their danger appears also from a proud devil that is now entered into them. Pride commonly accompanies ignorance, and this abounds in the heart of man by nature, and there it will predominate, till the soul passes through an effectual change, but it appears in none so fully, or to such a degree, as in a Pharisaical person; he cannot endure to think he is so poor as profane and notorious sinners are; what, go to his neighbour's door for every morsel of bread he eats, and for every draught of drink! no, it is below him to beg, he thinks it is enough for publicans and sinners to do so. And indeed what need he go to be fed and clothed by another, that is full, and sees his goods increased, and hath need of nothing? Faith empties the soul, makes it poor, before it fills and enriches it. But this man knows not what faith is, nor the life of it. Pride springs from an inordinate self-love, and self-flattery, are the glasses in which a self-deceived hypocrite looks, in which he appears indeed that which daily he is not. Self-love is a multiplying, yea, a magnifying glass. These never had a true sight of themselves, never saw their own poverty, and horrid pollution of their nature; it is with them, as it was with the apostle, before the commandment came, they are alive and beautiful in their own eyes.

Lucifer, as some pretend, is one of the chief of devils, who is called also the king of pride. If so, certainly he is one of those wicked spirits that entered into this person. Now what but infinite power can throw out this devil, this pride, and bring this soul to the foot of the cross, and make it strike its swelling sails to Jesus Christ, and become nothing in himself, and to hate and loathe his own righteousness, by reason of that impurity and pollution that cleaves to every best duty they do or can perform? Thus this unclean spirit raises up strong fortifications against the way of salvation, the way of faith, or going to Jesus Christ, for all, as poor and undone sinners. These enemies, in hypocritical and self-righteous persons, stand armed in the breaches of nature, (as one observes) to beat off all assaults of the gospel, and therefore the latter state of these persons is worse than the first.

Thirdly, Self-confidence may be another evil spirit that is entered into these persons, and which renders their state so bad. It is impossible to persuade them that their condition is nought and damnable: you may (as hinted before) quickly bring a vile and debauched person to acknowledge his state is dangerous, though there is no turning him from his evil course; yet he stands not upon self-justification, but rather readily yields to you; if you deal with him at seasonable time with wisdom, and tell him he is a very wretched creature; I know I am, so saith he, the Lord have mercy upon me. But the man out of whom the debauched devil is gone, is in his own eyes become another person, a seeming saint, one that hears sermons, prays, and gives alms, and yet not renewed, nor his evil habits changed. O it is no easy thing to bring him once to doubt or question the goodness of his condition, he blesses God for that help he has had to change his former course of life; "God, I thank thee, I am not as other men, nor as this Publican;" I was as bad as others, but I am become religious; I am no swearer, whore-monger, drunkard, extortioner, &c. To this purpose you have the Pharisee boasting and praising God; this renders his state lamentable with a witness. What made the foolish virgins so bold as to go forth to meet the bridegroom? Was it not that confidence they had that their condition was good? "A wise man," saith Solomon, feareth and departeth from iniquity; but a fool rageth, and is confident," Prov. xiv. 16.

Fourthly; vain-glory also certainly may be another sin this person is become guilty of. The design of God in the gospel, is to discover how vile, helpless, and wretched all men naturally are in themselves, and so to show us that we have nothing to glory in, "but that he that glorieth might glory in the Lord," 1 Cor. i. 31. But these persons glory in their seeming gifts, parts, learning, knowledge, and external privileges: they are like those of old who cried out, the temple of the Lord, or the church of God are we. Poor sinners have nothing to glory in unless it be their shame. The publican cries out, "Lord be merciful to me a sinner." But the false and self-righteous professor, like as a rich man glories in his riches, and a strong man glories in his strength, so he

A proud devil enters.

3. A self-confident spirit.

4. A vain-glorious spirit.

glories in his own righteousness, in his spiritual attainments and seeming sanctity.

This vain-glorious person little considereth what horrid pollution abides still in his heart, for which he is accursed by the law of God, and so remains till he hath real union with Christ, and is brought under a divine change. What though he has escaped some abominable evils and corruptions of his life, since his vicious habits, and filthy nature is not changed, nor he sees not the purity of the law of God? alas, he beholds it, as only forbidding all outward acts of sin, but the spirituality of it was never opened to him, for if it had, he would see no cause of glorying in himself, but contrariwise would soon be convinced of his error and sad mistake, and behold himself an undone man, and cry out of the deceitful nature, turnings and windings of his own base heart, thoughts and affections, and that great disproportion or disagreement to the perfect rule, or how far he is from that holiness and rectitude described in the book of God. It amazed Paul, when he once came fully to understand the law, when he looked on all the parts of it, not only on the grosser sins forbidden by it, but on the rectitude, the holiness, which is required therein: when he saw the law discovered lust to be sin, and that the least lust of the heart is as palpable a breach of it, as murder, theft, or the outward act of adultery, and exposed equally to the curse of it, and so to the wrath of God: then (saith he) "sin revived, and I died," Rom. vii. 9. that is, as to any hopes of life and salvation; by that righteousness which before he gloried in, and made his boast of.

5. A spirit of formality. Fifthly; moreover, formality, it may appear to all, from hence is another evil that does attend this sort of men, or is another wicked spirit that hath possession oft heir souls. What a stir did the Pharisees make about ceremonies? how zealous were they, like some now-a-days for outward rituals and traditions of their own devising, or which are merely human? as if the chief part of religion, and the sacred worship of God, consisted in external forms, rites, and ceremonies; "And art confident (saith the apostle) that thou thyself art a guide of the blind, a light to them who are in darkness, an instructor of the foolish, a teacher of babes, which hast a form of knowledge, and of the truth in the Annotations. law," Rom. ii. 19, 20. A scheme or system of notions, a compendious model method which is artificially composed, such as tutors and professors of arts and sciences do read over again and again to their pupils and auditors: these men are commonly the chief enemies to the power of religion and godliness, and like their brethren of old, great persecutors of God's faithful and sincere children, whilst they cry up their external forms, considering not what our Saviour saith, that "God is a Spirit," John iv. 24, and seeks spiritual worshippers of him, not formal, not external, or carnal modes, bodily gestures, consecrated places, attended with glorious ceremonies, saying over a few prayers, in which are many vain repetitions, not minding whether their matter of worship be of divine institution or not, nor whether they perform their devotion in the Spirit of Jesus Christ, flowing from a rectified nature, and from sacred principles in the life and power that attends all sanctified Christian worshippers. Others of the same sort may be right in the matter of worship, seeming to hate idolatry and all superstition, yet wholly resting on the external part of religion and godliness, whose state may be as dangerous as those before named; though in this they seem to excel them, i. e., the first miss it both in the matter of divine worship, as well as in the manner of it; they are zealous for the traditions and commandments of men; as they are formal in their worship, so their form is not that form of doctrine once delivered to the saints; it is not the true form of godliness, having "a form of godliness," 2 Tim. iii. 5, not the form; it is like a mask or vizard, or appearance, an accidental form (as one observes on that place) it is a devised, or an human, nay, may be an antichristian form, thinking themselves to be Christians, and the only worshippers of pretended Christ, and cry up themselves to be the church, and yet under this vizard and piety are very vicious, empty and vain; denying the power of godliness.

6. A legal spirit. Sixthly, The wicked spirit, or abominable sin that some of these men's souls are also possessed with, is legality. And though this clearly appears by what I have already said, yet I shall speak a little more fully and distinctly unto it. All that these persons do and perform, is in a legal spirit; and that I may show you what I mean by legality, in short it is this, i. e., that act and do for life, look upon themselves to be under a conditional covenant; and whilst they live up to that law or rule which they judge they are bound to observe and keep, in order to justification, they have peace, rendering the gospel and covenant of grace (by their false apprehensions of it) no better than a legal ministration or conditional covenant, as was hinted before in respect of another sort of men: for like as the Jews of old acted in a legal spirit, and sought to be justified by the works of the law, so these perform all their services and duties in the same spirit, viz., not from life, or a divine principle of saving faith, but for life. To keep the commandments of God, and live religiously, is absolutely necessary. But then this must be done from a renewed nature, and flow from faith, it being the proper effect or fruit thereof; but to strive to live a sober and holy life, and obey God's precepts, and rest upon their so doing, and look to be accepted with God, and justified thereby, is that which too many of this sort of people do, and this is to act in a legal spirit. Possibly a man may say, I know I cannot presently keep the law, but I will do (by the help of God) what I can; and wherein I through weakness do transgress, the Lord is merciful, and I trust will forgive me. But let them remember what God saith, viz., "that he will in no wise clear the guilty. Moreover, what the law saith, it saith to them that are under the law, that all mouths may be stopped, and the whole world become guilty before God," Rom. iii. 19. It is evident, as God will not forgive an impenitent person, so he will not forgive the penitent, except they believe in Jesus Christ.

Seventhly, Amongst the wicked spirits that are entered into this man, ^{7. An unbelieving spirit reigns.} namely, into this counterfeit Christian, that horrid and wicked spirit of unbelief must not be left out, for though this sin of sins is in all unconverted persons, yet it reigns and triumphs more in this sort of people than in others. Profane persons are kept up by a false faith, depending, as they will tell you, on the death and merits of Christ, though it is only cursed presumption in them; for that cannot be a true faith, which changes not the heart and life of the creature. But they believe not, by reason of love to their sins, which they not as yet willing to forego. But these believe not on Christ, because of that love which they have to their own seeming righteousness, which in point of trust, hope, and dependance, they as not willing to forego. These men place that hope on their own works and righteousness, which true Christians place on Christ, and so unbelief in them throws Christ quite away, they having no need of him.

1. What is unbelief, but an actual or virtual denial of the truth of the gospel, when men do not assent to the doctrine of it, by an act of the understanding?

2. It is a refusal to accept heartily of Christ upon the terms of the gospel, ^{Charnock.} which is opposite to justifying faith, when there is not a fiducial motion to Christ as the centre. When Christ the only foundation and chief corner-stone, is laid aside, and the need and worth of him not believed. This sin binds all the guilt of all their old and new sins upon their souls, it is a sin against the highest goodness of God, and casts contempt upon it; for never did God manifest such sovereign goodness unto his creatures, as in Jesus Christ. God hath said, there is no life, no salvation any other way, but ^{Acts iv. 12.} by the Lord Jesus. But these men do not assent to this truth, do not believe the report God hath given concerning the want of perfect righteousness and regeneration, and self-debasement, &c. Nay, they seem to contradict the will of God, by their going about to establish ^{Rom. x. iii.} their own righteousness, and so not submitting to the righteousness of God. In a word, it is a denying of Christ, and a disesteeming the price of his blood, as it also reflects on the wisdom of God, in fixing on this way to save sinners. It is an invaluable the excellency of Christ's person, blood, and merits. As faith counts all things dung in comparison of Christ; so unbelief accounts the person, offices, and doctrine of Christ, but as dung in comparison of the excellency of self-righteousness, self-wisdom, self-^{Phil. iii. 8,} sufficiency, &c. These men are the worst neglectors of the great salvation, ^{6, 10.} they do not only neglect it, but slight and contemn it, there being in their thoughts not any need to look for salvation this way. They that sin against the law fly to the gospel, but these sin against the cure held forth and extended in the gospel. Whither must these fly, since there remains no more sacrifice for sin? If this be slighted, no other way or means is ordained for salvation. Such who refuse the covenant of grace, and depend on the covenant of works, how woful is their condition? And what hope a law often transgressed can give a malefactor, is (saith a worthy person) easy to imagine. Millions have perished by it, none can be secured by it, as none ever by it were or could be saved. At first these persons transgressed against the rule, but now they transgress against the rule and remedy too. None but unbelievers are despised by God, none but these shall taste of his wrath and divine vengeance; this is the condemning sin, this is Satan's strongest hold, hither he retreats after all, and here he keeps, as in chains, his miserable captive. "He that believes not, shall be damned," Mark xvi. 16. And what is faith but a going out of a man's self to Christ for life and righteousness, as a poor wretched and miserable sinner? But these men now see not themselves to be in such a state, these are hypocrites.

Hypocrisy is opposed to that inward simplicity of the heart, and all counterfeit professors are guilty of it, though all do not act the part of an hypocrite with an intention, i. e., are not convinced they are hypocrites. Some deceive their own hearts, they are the grosser sort, then their hearts deceive them, therefore most to be pitied; a man may doubtless be an hypocrite, and he may not know it, he may go on in a way of duty, and do all things, as he thinks, exactly according to the letter of the word, and in uprightness, Matt. 23. as he may judge, and yet be unsound; certainly thus it was with the foolish virgins.

Characters of an hypocrite.

Hypocrites may be nevertheless discerned, our Saviour hath given the character of them.

1. They are commonly most zealous from the lesser things of religion, i. e., for "paying tithes of mint, anise, and cummin, but neglect the weightier things of the law, judgment, mercy, faith, and the love of God," Matt. xxiii. 23, 24. "They strain at a gnat, and swallow a camel," Luke xi. 42. They make a stir about external rights, observation of days and meats, but to the power of religion and godliness are strangers, and experience nothing of a divine change on their souls.

2. As they lay the greatest stress upon the least things, so they are commonly partial in their pretended obedience; they lay hard things, "Or heavy burdens upon others, but they themselves will not touch them with one of their fingers," Matt. xxiii. 4. What they preach and press on others, they do not themselves, they will not obey Christ, nor follow him in the hardest things, nor do they obey in love.

3. They are commonly finding faults in other men, "Can spy the mote in their brother's eye, but cannot see the beam that is in their own," Matt. vii. 3. As it is a sign of notorious hypocrisy, and impudence, to censure and judge others for those sins which men live in themselves, so it is a sign of the like hypocrisy, to spy faults in others, and reproach them for those faults, and yet the person is guilty of worse himself. What they preach and press on others, they do not themselves, they will not follow Christ in the most hard and difficult things of religion, but pick and choose; will do some things that they like of, and not only neglect others, but quarrel with them who contend for it, and faithfully subject to Christ in it. And as they are not universal in their obedience, so they do not obey in love, nor do they obey always as sincere Christians do, as David intimateth.

4. They are generally very confident touching the goodness of their own condition, not questioning their salvation, thus were the Pharisees; they judged others were in a damnable state, but as touching themselves, did not doubt but they were the only people, and blessed God they were not as other men; whereas a true Christian is full of fears and doubts about the truth of grace received, and goodness of his condition.

5. They are vain-glorious, do what they do to be seen of men; like the Pharisees, "They love the praise of men, more than the praise of God," John xii. 43. Their hopes are kept up by the good opinion others have of them; they, like their predecessors, "love greetings in the markets, and uppermost rooms in feasts, and to be called of men Rabbi," Matt. xxiii. 6, 7. They also are subject to envy, or have their hearts rise against such, who they hear outdo them, and would be looked upon as the chiefest of men; in learning, and wisdom.

6. They are commonly very zealous to make men proselytes to their own notions of Matt. xxiii. religion, though may be, false and corrupt notions. But if they can but bring a person to receive their principles, and external ordinances, then they glory, though hereby he is made twofold (perhaps sevenfold) more the child of hell than before; the poor deceived wretch thinking this change of religion is a true conversion, and so never looks out for any other, but speaking peace to his own soul, judging all is well within. They doubt not but they have religion enough when it doth commend them to men, and are taken for saints by saints; their greatest labour is to keep up their name and credit in religion; so that they may pass unsuspected amongst their fellow-creatures, or have the approbation of men, and if none can charge them justly with any immoral actions, they rest satisfied, whereas the greatest care of a true child of God is so to walk and labour, that he may be accepted of God, and have his approbation.

7. Self is commonly in the bottom. In all they do, they aim not at the glory of God, but have a carnal design, self-advantage, or self-applause, &c. This moves and quickens them, and animates them in all they perform in religious services; and if they miss of their end, be it what it will, they soon are weary, and grow cold and flat in their spirits, and become quarrelsome, and seek offences, and disturb the peace of the church to whom they belong.

8. Moreover, they are not the same at home, which they are abroad; not in private what they seem to be in public; may be seldom pray, either in their family or closet; or if they do, it is with little zeal, enlargedness, or affection to God.

APPLICATION.

This may inform us of the cause and reason there is so great reproach brought upon religion, and on the ways of God, and on the people of God, by some who profess the gospel. Alas, many of them who are called saints, who Informat. 1. we may fear are but counterfeit Christians, such who never experienced a true work of grace; they may have knowing heads, but unsanctified hearts. And from hence it is there are so many proud persons in many congregations, who with brazen foreheads will brave it out, with impudent faces, in the presence of Christ's faithful ministers; and though reprov'd, and told of their cursed pride and abominable dresses, high and shameful towers, hateful to God and good men, yet reform not, will not deny themselves of their filthy lusts, though the name of God and religion is exposed to great reproach and contempt thereby, and the hearts of sincere Christians wounded, and mourn for it bitterly before the Lord. If they had but a spark of true grace, could they ever stand it out thus against the gunshot of heaven? How fearless do they seem under the rattling peals of thunder of heaven? They regard not the whetted sword of the Almighty, nor the bending of his dreadful bow; nor mind the arrows that are just upon the string, God being ready to send forth his anger with fury, and his rebukes in flames of fire.

Moreover, from hence it is also there are so many covetous, earthly and Informat. 2. hard hearted professors and members in churches. Alas, you may tell them of this abominable sin a thousand times over, and all to no purpose; their hearts (it is to be feared) are set upon their covetousness, they love the world more than the word, nay, more than God or Jesus Christ; and yet, under a cloak of religion, shelter themselves as if all was well, and they good Christians. And because they covet no man's goods but their own, and so are not guilty of theft, they conclude they are not chargeable with this sin of Matt. xxv. covetousness; though Christ's poor members are not regarded, the naked are 42, 44. not clothed, nor the hungry fed, nor the sick visited. They will give something it is true, but not according to the need and necessity of the poor, nor according to their ability; nor is it out of love to Christ, nor to his poor saints neither, they give what they do give, but may be to free themselves from reproach, or to quiet their own consciences. And hence it is likewise there are so many whisperers, tattlers, and backbiters in congregations, and so consequently so much trouble and disorder in our churches. Though godly Christians may be guilty of great disorders and many infirmities; yet I am persuaded, were there not many false and deceitful, carnal, and hypocritical professors, it would never be as it is. What makes the best design that ever was among us for the promoting the interest of Christ, and good of the churches, so neglected, and like to sink in the bud, but the great discouragement these sort of people lay it under? They have no mind to such a good and great work, they are for enriching themselves, and to lay into their own coffers and treasures, but not to cast into Christ's treasury. And this evil example of theirs, lays a temptation on sincere and upright men and women. What do such and such do? they are far richer than I, and they will do nothing. To these let me speak one word: why, will you do no more for God, because some who love him not will do nothing? Alas, you had need do the more. I am persuaded you would not willingly be found foolish virgins in the day of Christ. How do you know but these very men shall be found to be such, who value the gratifying of a base lust, above the discharging a holy and acceptable duty to Christ? who give more to deck and adorn their houses, and please the lust of their children, than they will give to promote the gospel, and recover the languishing interest of Jesus Christ that is in our hands. And may not this be the reason our assemblies are so thin on lecture-days? is it not because the hearts of the people are not right with God? Can godly Christians be always under the same temptation? Can sin predominate in them, and they act thus habitually to the scandal of their sacred religion? Can sin be in the affections of saints, because there are some infirmities in their conversations? Is not a true child of God quickly convinced of his fault? and doth he not straitway reform? But this is a constant course of evil, and wilfully persisting in it; nay, and ye shall incur their displeasure perhaps, if you deal plainly with them. Sure Christ is at the door. Now the kingdom of heaven may certainly be compared to ten virgins, five wise, and as many foolish. Read the latter end of Matt. xxiv., and the beginning of the 25th chapter. Multitudes of foolish virgins, it is to be feared, are now got into the church, as Christ signifies it would be a little before his coming, whose latter end will be worse than the first.

This also reproveth those who foment such notions, and strive to distil them Reproof 1. into the minds of people, that are absurd, and tend to blind and ruin men's souls, telling them they are in the covenant of grace, and church-members by their parents' faith, and have the seal of the covenant; yet I could never learn what it doth seal or make firm to them; for a seal, all know, usually makes sure all that is contained in the said covenant. Shall they miss of the blessings of the covenant of grace, who have it sealed to them? Alas, hereby it is to be feared, many think they are in a good condition, though never united by saving faith to Jesus Christ. Can it seal, and not seal covenant-mercies to them? Or can they perish after they are in the covenant, and have the seal of it? Circumcision was a seal it is true, "of that faith Abraham had, being yet uncircumcised," Rom. iv. 11, 12. It was not a seal of that faith which he had not, but of the faith which he had; and therefore it could not be a seal to his male-infants of the righteousness of their faith which they had, being yet uncircumcised, because they had no such faith before circumcision, as to believe in God, and to have it imputed to them for righteousness, as had Abraham their father, to whom circumcision was only called a seal of the righteousness of the faith, "which he had, yet being uncircumcised, and that he might be the father of all them that believe," ver. 1. It was a seal to him of the latter blessing as well as the former; for the promise that he should be the heir of the world, the apostle shows was not through the law, nor in or through circumcision, nor had any that dignity conferred upon them but Abraham only, which clearly shows circumcision did not appertain to the covenant of faith.

Reproof 2. Likewise it may reprehend another sort, who tell the people they were made "the children of God, members of Christ, and inheritors of the kingdom of heaven," in their baptism, or rather rantism. O the danger of this pernicious doctrine! How many flatter themselves with the hopes of heaven from this false foundation, thinking they sucked in the true faith, and true religion, with their mother's milk, and were made Christians by a priest's scattering a little water on their faces when babes, though they live in all manner of horrid sins, and are enemies to the life and power of godliness? This is a way of making Christians which Christ and his apostles never taught; and it is a healing of the hurt of the people slightly, taking them off from seeking after grace and true regeneration; for if they were made true Christians then, regenerated then, doubtless their state is good; and so it is to be feared, thousands of them conclude, and never doubt of their salvation.

Reproof 3. Moreover, it reproves all who rest on morality; who, because they live a sober life, and pay every man his own, doing justly, &c., conclude all is well, yet look after no other religion. And it also as much reprehends those who boast of their knowledge and spiritual attainments, they conclude their state is good, because they are members of a true church, and have been baptized indeed, and break bread, read and pray in their families, and discharge all other external duties of religion, but rest wholly upon these things, and never were brought to be poor in spirit, nor obtain real union with Christ, but are ignorant of the faith, of the operation of God. What means the pride of some? their earthliness, contention, whispering, backbiting, want of love, divisions, &c., shutting their eyes at further light, and discovery of truth? O look about you for the Lord's sake, lest after all your high profession and hopes of heaven, you do not at last drop down to hell.

Lastly. It reproves all such nice and scrupulous persons, who seem to make it their chief business to render all odious who are not of their own fantastical humour; women must not wear a bit of lace, &c., nor a gold ring, nor men wear a periwig, though never so short and modest, (and advised to do it by able physicians, for their health's sake) because the apostle saith, "It is a shame for a man to wear long hair;" therefore they run into extremes, and cut their hair close to their ears, and so disguise themselves, and censure others as guilty of great abomination, (who will not imitate them) as if the main points of religion lay in these foolish formalities and niceties, and as if none were to be taken for godly Christians, but such who are just of their height, and length, and breadth, and conform to them in these smaller things (that may be lawful notwithstanding what such say;) and render those odious, who are better than themselves, even as such who hate instruction, and cast God's word behind them, &c. These men seem to bear the exact image of the Pharisees of old! and though they thus strain at a gnat, yet at the same time seem to swallow a camel. For one of this sort will be found, it is to be feared, guilty of horrid lies and slanders, backbiting and reproaching his neighbours, securing to be filled with malice and envy, rendering a great body or multitude of godly Christians odious, whom Christ loves, I am persuaded it would be better with the churches, if many were severed from them. But O how seldom have any been dealt with, either for pride or covetousness! as if it were not possible to find out such offenders as well as others.

Reproof 4. Doth God allow of nothing for ornament.

We say all immodest and fantastical garbs and dresses are loathsome, and to be abominated.

Moreover, it sharply reproveth those preachers whose great business it is to Reproof. 6. bring men into a visible profession, and make them members of churches, whose preaching tends more to bring persons to baptism, and to subject to external ordinances, than to show them the necessity of regeneration, faith, or a changed heart. For the Lord's sake take heed what you do, if you would be pure from the blood of all men. We too often see when people are got into churches, they conclude all is well; and when conversion is preached, they do not think it concerns them, but others who are openly profane; and thus they come to be blinded, may be to their own destruction; and if their blood do not lie at some of your doors, it will be well. I am afraid some now-a-days like the Pharisees, may be said to compass sea and land to make proselytes, but when made, they are twofold more the children of hell than before, as our Saviour intimates.

It may also put us all upon a strict examination of our own hearts, lest we Examinat. should be found some of these false and counterfeit Christians. And that we may clear ourselves in this matter, consider.

1. Were you ever thoroughly convinced of your sinful and lost condition Sincerity by nature, and of that horrid evil there is in sin? Did you ever see sin as the described. greatest evil most hateful to God, not only of the evil effects of sin, but also of the evil nature of sin; not only as it has made a breach between God and man, but has it also defaced the image of God in man, and made us like the devil, filling our minds with enmity against God, godliness, and good men.

2. Is there no secret sin lived in and favoured, the evil habit never being broke? Is not the world more in your affections, desires, and thoughts, than Jesus Christ?

3. Are you willing to suffer and part with all that you have, rather than sin against God? Do you see more evil in the least sin, than in the greatest suffering?

4. Do you as much desire to have your sins mortified as pardoned, if so, it appears you are sincere, and no hypocrite; and thus I close with this parable.

He spake also this parable, a certain man had a fig-tree planted in his vineyard, and he came and sought fruit thereon, and found none.

Then said he unto the dresser of the vineyard, behold, these three years I come seeking fruit on this fig-tree, and find none, cut it down, why cumbereth it the ground?

And he answered, and said unto him, Lord, let it alone this year also, till I shall dig about it and dung it,

And if it bear fruit, well, and if not, thou shalt cut it down.—Luke xiii. 6—9.

In speaking unto this parable I shall in my usual method,

1. Open the scope of it.

2. Explain the terms.

3. Observe several points of doctrine, and prosecute them distinctly, as the Lord may assist me.

4. Apply the whole.

1. In the first verse of this chapter, our Saviour takes notice of Herod's cruelty.

2. He also mentioneth that fearful judgment which befel eighteen men, on whom the tower in Siloam fell and slew them.

The scope of the parable opened.

3. And from hence he exhorteth them all to repentance, showing that they might not be greater sinners than others who suffered such things; and though perhaps it might be their sins that brought those judgments upon them; yet if those to whom he preached did not believe in him and repent, he shows that they must expect far worse punishment, even eternal wrath and vengeance to be poured forth upon them; think you (as if our Lord should say) that your state is good, because ye are "Abraham's seed," and enjoy many external church privileges, and are spared, and God doth not execute present judgments upon you, no, no, this will do you no good, since you are a company of barren, and unprofitable persons; though you are planted in the Jewish church (which was then the vineyard of God) and trust that that you are righteous, and the only happy people, yet are you likely to perish eternally for all this; and now to convince them of their great danger in this respect, he brings in this parable.

"A certain man had a fig-tree planted in his vineyard," &c.

1. From the scope of the parable thus opened, we may note,

Doct. 1. That temporal judgments inflicted on some persons, should excite others to fear God's divine wrath and vengeance. Alas, some are ready to cry out, O what wrath, what judgments are fallen upon such and such persons! and thus bewail their condition, when perhaps, though they suffered on earth, yet might be happy for ever; and, at the same time these very persons (who seem affected with the state of those who suffered temporal judgments) are in a far worse condition as to their eternal state; for evident it is, that many gracious persons have been born and endured most severe punishment on earth, as the blessed martyrs who are now glorified in heaven. And many others also have borne bitter things here, though not by martyrdom, as holy Job, &c.

Some that suffer great punishment here, may be eternally happy.

As a trial of their faith, and other graces; and some for their sins, &c.

Doct. 2. No persons ought to be rash to censure others on whom temporal judgments befall. There is no knowing either love or hatred by anything that is under the sun.

Dost thou hear of any judgment fallen on such or such a man. Tremble, for thou knowest not but in a short time, as bad, or worse may befall thee; every judgment which falls upon any person, calleth aloud upon all sinners to repent, lest they also perish; and that not only on earth, but also in hell for ever; thou art a sinner, and perhaps a greater than such who were taken away by sudden death, or in an unusual manner with a fearful stroke; and God is angry with thee as well as with them, and may make thee an example of his wrath and judgment, as he hath others; if not, yet be not rash to judge them, nor be thou an idle, or careless spectator of the theatre of God's judgments. So much as to the scope of this parable.

Secondly, We shall proceed to explain and open the parts and terms contained in it.

1. "A certain man;" by this certain man is meant, or intended the great God; God is sometimes called a certain king, also sometimes a man, yea, an husbandman; "my Father is an husbandman," Matt. xxii. 2, John xv. 1. Though God be a Spirit, immense, infinite, of and from himself, and incomprehensible, yet he is sometimes compared to a man that hath a vineyard, "that had a fig-tree planted in his vineyard."

"A vineyard;" by vineyard is here meant the church of God; and wherefore the church is compared to a vineyard, we have in opening other parables showed; but yet take a few things upon this account here.

1. A vineyard is a select, or choice piece of ground taken out of other common ground, designed by the owner for some special use.

Even so God hath taken his church out of the field of this world, or from the rest of mankind, who lie barren, like the waste wilderness, for some special and peculiar use and design.

2. A vineyard is walled, or fenced in, so is God's vineyard, "he made a wall about it," Isa. v. 1, 2. The church of God is "a garden enclosed," Cant. iv. 12, and not only the church in general, but every member thereof particularly is walled in. "Hast thou not made an hedge about him, and about all that he hath on every side," Job i. 10. The church (and every particular believer) hath many enemies, and are in the midst of dangers, why else need there be a hedge or wall about them; alas, none in the world are more envied and spited, and exposed to danger than God's people are by Satan, and wicked men, therefore God walls or hedges them in on every side. And,

1. God himself more immediately protecteth them, or is a guard to them by his special providence, by his power, wisdom, love, care, and faithfulness.

2. He employs his holy angels to protect and preserve his church, and all that dwell therein; "the angels of the Lord encamp round about them that fear him," Psal. xxxvi. 7. What a glorious guard had the prophet Elias round about him, when in great danger. Angels are compared to fire, and they are as a wall of fire round God's people.

3. By a wall, the church like a vineyard is severed or separated from the world; the constitution and discipline of the church, makes it distinct from the rest of mankind; many confound the church with the world; but what saith our Saviour, "ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world," John xv. 19; they are commanded to separate themselves, in respect of church-state worship and discipline from the world, "come out from amongst them, and be separated saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing, and I will receive you," &c., 2 Cor. vi. 17, 18; again he saith, "be not conformable to this world," Rom. xii. 2; that is, in point of worship, and in human traditions, or in fantastical fashions, and evil customs.

4. A man greatly delighteth in his vineyard which he hath walled in, manured, and sowed with precious seeds, and planted with precious plants, as vines, fig-trees, &c. So the Lord greatly delighteth in his church, which he hath made a peculiar people to himself, and sown with holy right seed, and planted with trees of righteousness. "Thou shalt be called Hephzibah, and thy land Beulah, for the Lord delighteth in thee," Isa. lxii. 4. The church he calls his portion, "Israel is the lot of his inheritance," therefore cannot but take great delight in them; and from hence he is said to dwell in them, and walk in them," 2 Cor. vi. 16, as a man walks up and down in his vineyard, being pleased therewith.

A vineyard of a noble person he esteems as his choicest possession. Kings have had their vineyards, we read of Solomon's vineyard (and how Ahab was in love with Naboth's vineyard) and so hath the King of Heaven and earth; and it is his own, he bought it with a great price, and therefore highly values it.

5. A man bestows great pains upon his vineyard, he plants it, dungs it, waters it, and weeds it, and thinks nothing too much to lay out upon it to make it fruitful. Now the holy God in respect of cost and pain that he has laid out, and been at with his vineyard, far exceeds all that ever had a vineyard; no vineyard was ever purchased so dear, nor planted with choice and precious plants; it was brought with blood, the blood of his own Son, Acts xx. 28; his only-begotten Son, and sown with the graces of his own Holy Spirit; so that God may well say, "what could I do more for my vineyard which I have not done," Isa. v. 1, 2, 3. —

6. He that hath an excellent vineyard, appoints one to be his vine-dresser to prune it and purge it, and to cut off superfluous branches.

Now God hath chose and appointed the Lord Jesus Christ to be his vine-dresser as chief, and under him faithful ministers whom he employs to labour in his vineyard.

Had a fig-tree planted in his vineyard, not only one, but many; yet one, and many of that sort; it may be feared that are barren or fruitless. by this fig-tree is meant all barren and fruitless persons, (who sit under the means of the gospel, especially such who are members of the visible church; this fig-tree I say signifies all barren and mere formal professors of religion.

A fig-tree planted, &c. Quest. But why doth Jesus Christ compare professors of religion to fig-trees.

Ans. 1. He may allude to the practice of such who had vineyards in the land of Canaan, in which they frequently planted, not only vines, but fig-trees also.

Why professors are compared to fig-trees.

II. It may be because a fig-tree that brings forth ripe and good figs, requires much heat of the sun, or must grow in a hot climate.

So professors of Christianity cannot thrive as to bring forth ripe and good fruit, but under the divine and warm influences of the Sun of righteousness, and the blessed gospel of God's grace; as in our cold climate, no fig-tree bears ripe figs, so in those regions where the gospel is not preached, and the Sun of righteousness shines not, but being only under the influences of natural light, bring forth no spiritual and saving fruit, no gospel fruit, nothing but the fruit of morality.

III. Because no tree (as naturalists observe) is commonly more fruitful than the fig-tree.

For the first year they are planted (as my author notes) they commonly bear fruit; they bring forth fruit sooner than other tree.

2. But if they bring not forth fruit, the first, second, nor the third year, it is observed there is but little hope or ground to expect they will ever be fruitful trees.

Even so if men are not changed, converted, or renewed, in the beginning of the preaching of the gospel, or when it is first preached to them, it is rare if they ever be converted, or if not in the beginning of their days (provided they are under the means of grace) there is but little hope or ground to believe they ever will be converted; very few who have long sat under the powerful preaching of the gospel, if not converted, ever afterwards are converted, or if not in their youth; it is rare if they are when they are old, though perhaps some may, but it is not usual, or a common, or ordinary thing: for them which God calls at the third hour, he doubtless seldom calls at the eleventh hour.

IV. A fig-tree is a tree full of sap, and draws much moisture from the root, and from the fatness of the earth.

So true Christians are full of divine sap, or have much grace in them, and also daily draw fresh virtue from Christ, and from his word, and holy ordinances; hence it is said, "that the trees of the Lord are full of sap, they flourish like trees planted by the water-side," Psal. civ. 16, Psal. i. 3.

V. A fig-tree bears choice fruit, figs are of a pleasant and feeding nature and also have most sovereign qualities in them to assuage and break a hard and dangerous swelling; it is said they are excellent good to break and heal a plague sore, and indeed this is confirmed by the word of God, for when Hezekiah was sick (as it is thought) of the pestilence, he was healed of his sore by figs: "For Isaiah had said, let them take a lump of figs and lay it for a plaster upon the boil, and he shall recover," Isa. xxxviii. 21. True, some would have this to be only a sign, of his recovery, and not as if figs had such a powerful virtue in them. But others upon good ground conclude, figs have an excellent virtue in them for breaking a hard swelling, though a greater blessing might then attend that plaster than usual.

Ask physicians, and they will tell you of the quality of one sort of figs.

Brethren, the fruit which believers bring forth, is most choice and precious fruit in the sight of God. For,

Spiritual fruit, choice fruit. 1. Faith, O! what an excellent grace or fruit of the Spirit is that, it is called "precious faith, to them that have obtained like precious faith with us," &c., 2 Pet. i. 1, more precious than gold, it is sweet to the taste, nay, it makes such things that are very bitter in themselves, to be very sweet and pleasant to the soul; as bitter afflictions, trials, and temptations.

2. This fruit revives and comforts the fainting spirits of a poor Christian. "I had fainted, unless I had believed," &c., Psal. xxvii. 13.

3. Without faith we cannot taste any sweetness in God, we cannot taste how good the Lord is, nor how precious Jesus Christ is, for he is only precious to them that believe; to you that believe he is precious, not to others.

4. No man can have any true peace in his own soul, without he hath saving faith in Christ; we must first have grace, and then peace.

5. No changed heart, no true brokenness of heart, no cure for the plague of a hard heart, no cleansing the leprous soul, without faith, "they shall look unto him whom they pierced, and shall weep and mourn," Acts xv. 9; Zech. xii. 10; they shall look, &c.; that is, they shall believe in Christ, and then mourn and grieve for sin; all godly sorrow for sin proceeds from faith in Christ.

6. No communion with Christ without faith, there is not any fitness in unbelievers for that divine fellowship; the heart of man naturally is full "of enmity against God," Rom. viii. 7, and can see no cause of joy or rejoicing in him; such cannot savour the things of the Spirit, who believe not.

7. Faith is an earnest of glory, and therefore it is a most excellent fruit.

8. Such who bear this fruit may know that God loved them from everlasting; it is one of Christ's love-tokens, all that have saving faith, have Jesus Christ, or an interest in him, and shall certainly be saved.

2ndly. What excellent fruit is love, love to God, love to Christ, and love to his people, as also humility, patience, temperance, this fruit pleaseth Christ; grace breaks the hard heart, and a heart puffed up, and swelled with pride and vain glory; grace cures the plague of sin, the plague of unbelief, and earthly-mindedness.

Fig-trees bear fruit all the year. V. Fig-trees bear fruit all the year, when some figs are ripe, other are green, it is seldom but fruit may be found on some fig-trees; so the saints and people of God bear fruit continually in the summer of prosperity, and in the winter of adversity, they cease not bearing fruit: "Blessed is the man that trusteth in the Lord, and whose hope the Lord is: For he is like a tree planted by the waters, and that spreadeth out her roots by the river, and shall not see when heat cometh, but her leaf shall be green, and shall not be careful in tears of drought, neither shall cease from yielding fruit," Jer. xvii. 7, 8.

Again it is said, "the righteous shall flourish like the palm-tree, he shall grow like a cedar in Lebanon, those that are planted in the house of the Lord shall flourish in the courts of the house of our God, they shall still bring forth fruit in old age, they shall be fat and flourishing." Ps. xc. 12, 13, 14.

VI. There are some fig-trees barren, they are not of the right kind, but are a bastard sort of plants, which only have the name of fig-trees; not the nature of fruitful fig-trees.

So there are some professors, though they are planted in Christ's vineyard, yet they are barren or fruitless persons, they are not indeed true Christians, true believers, but mere counterfeits, professors, that have the name of spiritual fig-trees, but not the nature, never were made good trees, and therefore never produce or bear good fruit, but are like some branches in a vine, that bear no fruit, for though these are grafted into Christ's mystical, i. e., into his visible church, and so are said to be in Christ, that is by a visible profession, yet never had any internal union with Christ, nor ever received the Spirit, the bond of that union, from whence faith proceeds, for faith properly is the fruit of the Holy Ghost, the Spirit is infused, and faith is produced, or springs up as the flowers from the seed which is first sown.

"Planted in his vineyard," it is not said who planted this fig-tree in God's vineyard. The Lord Christ planted it not, because it was utterly void of fruit; "Trees of the Lord are full of sap, and they do and shall flourish in his vineyard, to show that the Lord is upright, he is our rock, and there is no unrighteousness in him," Ps. xc. 15.

Note, ministers may plant trees in Christ's vineyard, that God never planted there: they through ignorance of men's hearts and states, or through carelessness, may take into the Church such persons that never were truly converted, but these will not stand long there, "Every plant my heavenly Father hath not planted shall be plucked up," Matt. xv. 13.

2. Yet this word planted, denotes that this person was got into the church and looked like a true spiritual fig-tree, i. e., a true believer, or like a godly Christian, or was in show and appearance a saint; ministers and churches may be deceived, and baptize and receive hypocrites into the church, cursed Judas was once planted in God's vineyard, and a Simon Magus was baptized by Philip, Acts iii.

Some profess themselves to be what they are not, but deceive themselves and others. Satan is subtle, and he craftily teaches some persons to counterfeit the true Christian.

"And came and sought fruit thereon."

1. God takes notice of every particular person that is planted in his vineyard, there is not one member of the church but his all-seeing eye is continually upon.

God takes notice of the fruitfulness of every saint.

2. God expecteth fruit in such that are planted in his church. He looked that it should bring forth grapes, not wild grapes, not the fruit of the flesh, but the fruits of the Spirit; not to see them lay the reins loose on the neck of their lusts, and inordinate affection, not pride, ambition, gluttony, backbiting, whispering, &c.. not feeding themselves without fear, not the daubing themselves (as one observes) with the lust, provoking fashions of the times, to walk with stretched-out necks, naked breasts, frizzled foretops, wanton gestures, gorgeous apparel, mixed with gold and pearl, or decked with costly array; not earthly mindedness, covetousness, strife and envy; but love, faith, meekness, humility, temperance, liberality, brotherly kindness, charity, and abhorring all iniquity, even avoiding all the appearances of evil, and discharging all pious and holy duties.

Jude 12.
Bunyan.

3. If there be but one soul, one member in the church that is fruitless, God will soon find that person out; "he saw there a man that had not on a wedding garment," Matt. xxii. 11.

He came to see the guests, he looks this way and that way; "all the ways of men are before the eyes of the Lord, and he pondereth all their goings," Prov. v. 21; no person can hide themselves from his sight.

Thou fruitless fig-tree, thou barren professor, dost thou hear this and not tremble? God is come seeking fruit; will thy bare profession, thy knowledge of the principles of religion, satisfy the great God? will the notions of truth in thy head, thy talking and disputing serve thy turn? thy hearing the word, or this and that minister preach, sit as a judge to censure them, and catch at any mistake; or to commend their sermons when they please thee; I say, is this all the fruit (think you) God looks for? God will have fruit, precious fruit from thee; it is this he comes to seek and find on thy branches.

But found none, sad case! Hearken, O thou barren soul, God says he found none; what none at all? I must tell thee, if thy fruit be not right fruit, God looks upon it to be no fruit; if it be not such fruit that spiritual fig-trees should bear, it is no fruit in his account.

It is not the fruit of good words only, but the fruit of good works; not the fruit of discoursing well, talking well, but the fruit of walking well, having a holy and pious conversation.

2. May be some hasty fruit thou didst bring forth, thou mightest have a fair and promising beginning, didst show much zeal, and much love and affection for, and to Jesus Christ for a short time, but thy goodness was "as the early cloud, and as the morning dew, it passed away," Hos. vi. 4, &c., xiii. 3, at first thou seemest hot, but are soon cold.

3. There is a fruit, saith honest Bunyan, among professors that withers, and so never comes to be ripe, a fruit that is smitten in the growth, and comes not to maturity; and this is reckoned no fruit, &c., some make a show of a promising crop, they blossom well, but the blossoms drop off, or it is blasted with the east wind; I mean by Satan's temptations they decay, or a worm breeds in their blossom that eats out the heart of the flower and blossom of profession, i. e., some cursed sin or another gets into their hearts, and they presently wither, and die away.

4. There is the fruit of common grace and spiritual gifts, the gift of knowledge, the gift of prayer, perhaps the gift of prophesying, or preaching; this fruit they may bring forth, but God accounts these no fruit.

5. Or perhaps there is in these the fruit of morality, but not the fruit of regeneration; something which looks like grace, saving grace, but it is no such thing; for this fruit is often found on wild fig-trees, such that grow in the common field of this world, many heathens have brought forth such as this, and many persons who never were planted in God's vineyard, do bring forth the fruit of good manners, i. e., they may be just and faithful in their dealing or tradings in the world, and not guilty of any gross acts of immorality, but this God accounts as no fruit; this is nothing but what the ground may bring forth naturally, I mean no other fruit but what a mere natural man by the help of the light of nature, and by the power of natural knowledge, and natural conscience may produce, who never received a principle of saving grace.

6. Or they may bring forth untimely fruit, fruit that falls off before the proper season, "as a fig-tree casteth her untimely figs," Rev. vi. 13, so these are like the stony ground, they "hear the word with joy," Matt. xiii. 20, 21. And anon, or before they are well rooted, their fruit falls off as soon as the sun rises and shines hot, or as soon as tribulation, and reproaches, and persecution arises because of the word, they are offended, moreover, perhaps other of this sort may delay bringing forth fruit until the season of grace is over; some sow the seed so late, that it never comes to perfection; so some repent too late, defer believing, and closing with Christ, till the summer is ended; and so their fruit is untimely fruit; the foolish virgins went to buy oil when it was too late; Matt. xxv. 9, before they were ready the Bridegroom came, and they and their fruit were rejected.

"Then he said to the dresser of the vineyard, these three years I come seeking fruit, but find none."

What may be meant by the three years of God's seeking fruit.

Some by these three years, understand the beginning of the promise made to Adam, and the preaching under the law, and the giving out of that ministration.

2. The second year, the preaching of the prophets.

3. The third year, the preaching of Christ and his apostles; but I think this is far fetched, and not meant by these three years.

Others by these three years, understand the whole time of our blessed Saviour's preaching and confirming his doctrine by miracles, which was about the space of three years; but this also I shall pass by.

By three years I understand is meant that time God is pleased to afford to a people, or to a single person; a certain time being here mentioned, to denote an uncertain.

1. The first year may denote the beginning of the means of grace which God affords to men and women.

2. Year the proper time that fig-trees bear fruit, if not the first year then it is expected that it brings forth fruit the second year.

3. Or it may imply, that God expecteth sinners should bring forth quickly after they sit under the means of grace.

4. Moreover it may denote that the means of grace may not be of long continuance.

5. Also it may signify God's patience, he waits one year, two years; nay three years, and yet finds no fruit; some divines note that usually three years after any person are under the means of grace, they bring forth fruit, or else there is but little hopes of them.

“Cut it down, why cumbereth it the ground.”

God will not always bear with fruitless professors, this cutting down may refer to several severe acts of God’s justice.

1. God may direct his speech to his Church, and to the subordinate vine-dressers.

Whom God commands to cut down, and what is meant by cutting down.

Cut it down, by excommunication pass the righteous censure of the church against this barren, carnal, and unprofitable professor; deliver him up to Satan for the destruction of the flesh, that his spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus.

2. Or God may speak unto Jesus Christ, the grand vine-dresser smite his root, let him wither, and his seeming fruit die away, even as our Lord smote the barren fig-tree, and said, never fruit be on thee any more for ever.

3. Give him up unto his own heart’s lust, leave him to himself, withdraw all motions of the Spirit, and convictions of conscience, and let him perish for ever.

4. Leave him to delusions, God sends some strong delusions, that they may be damned, because they received not the truth in the love of it, that they might be saved.

This is a fearful way of cutting down, O how many have in this nation of loose and barren professors been thus cut down, they having had no more than a bare profession of religion, the mere shell; have been left to cast contempt upon the blessed ordinances of Jesus Christ, calling them low and carnal ordinances, carnal forms, and empty shadows.

5. Or Christ may cut them down by death, or cut them off in the midst of their days. I should now proceed to the reason why the Lord commands this unfruitful tree to be cut down, why “cumbereth it the ground; this is the cause, it is a ground cumberer, but shall now close with a word of use.

1. Let such who are planted in God’s vineyard, tremble who are not fruitful in grace and holiness, the church will be no sanctuary to such persons.

2. We may infer from hence, that some persons who are in Christ’s vineyard, were never planted therein by the hand of God, for such whom he planteth are fruitful trees, trees full of fruit.

3. Men may have leaves upon their branches, nay, some seeming fruit, and they may seem to grow and flourish for a time, and yet nevertheless may not bring forth the true and saving fruits of the Spirit.

4. We may also infer from hence that though men may take some professors to be sincere, whose hearts are not right with God; yet long it will not be before God discovers them, and his wrath manifested against them. The barren soul shall not stand long in God’s vineyard.

SERMON VIII.

He spake also a Parable, a certain man had a fig-tree planted in his vineyard, &c.— Luke xiii. 6—9.

I CLOSED the last day with these words, “cut it down.” I shall now proceed to the reason which seems to be given why this barren fig-tree is cut down, viz., “Why cumbereth it the ground.”

1 Doct. God is greatly offended or displeased with barren professors, nay, with all unprofitable persons, who under the means of grace, cumber the ground.

2 Doct. That the evil and danger of barrenness is very great.

A little to the first of these, God is displeased because it is a fig-tree, it is not a bramble bush, but a fig-tree, though not of the right kind, i. e., a professor, but no true believer; it is not a thorn nor a thistle, from such God looks for no such fruit, he expected no spiritual fruit from profane persons; do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles. What fruit can God look for from swearers, drunkards, whoremongers, carnal worldlings, or the like, nothing can be expected from these and such as these are, but the grapes of Sodom, or cursed and abominable fruit.

From whence it is, or why God is displeased with barren professors. Isa. v. 2—5.

3. God may be displeased because it is a fig-tree planted in his vineyard, possibly a fig-tree may be found in a hedge, or to grow wild in a common field, (as our Saviour saw a fig-tree by the way he went) but this was planted in his vineyard: there may be many professing persons amongst the ungodly; in the field of this world, I mean in the false church, that may not be as yet transplanted into God's vineyard, and perhaps such that may not be so barren of good fruit, as some members of a true church of Christ, where no barren tree, or fruitless professors ought to be; now God finding such a one in his vineyard, he is greatly displeas'd.

3. Because they seem to frustrate his expectation (to speak after the manner of men) "I looked that it should bring forth grapes," Isa. v. 3—5. Doth a husbandman look that such plants, such trees which are planted in his vineyard should be fruitful, on whom he bestowed much pains; and is it not a great disappointment to him to see any barren or fruitless there?

4. God may be displeas'd because such barren persons are a disparagement to his vineyard. What, such a fig-tree in the king's vineyard, he doth not use to plant the worst sort of plants in his vineyard, but most choice and precious plants; such that are of the right kind, and of great worth and value. That one tree may not disparage another, nor the whole vineyard, it being a vineyard well manured, weeded, watered, and pruned; where also a multitude of choice trees are, that bring forth fruit plentifully.

5. Because it abuseth his patience also, this may be another reason why God is offended, "These three years I come seeking fruit on this fig-tree, but find none." I have long waited to see whether it would bring forth fruit or not, and I am now quite wearied out, I have exercised much patience and long suffering, towards this man, and this woman, but all is in vain.

6. To come to the reason which seems here laid down, why cumbereth it the ground, this denotes,

I. It is good for nothing, it yields no profit; so this barren professor brings no honour to God, no credit to religion, nor to the church; but is a shame and reproach to God, his ministers, and vineyard.

II. But this is not all meant hereby, it cumbereth the ground, i. e., another good tree, a good plant might grow where this tree stands.

Unfruitful trees, or unfruitful professors, such which are scandalous in their lives, may hinder some hopeful plants from coming into the church or vineyard of God; their barren and scandalous lives may prevent them.

O saith one (that may be is well inclined) what a proud man, and proud woman is that? See after what manner they go, what a dress the woman wears, and how conceited the man is; are these saints? are these members of such a church? I see no difference between them and others.

Again, what a vain and frothy sort of persons are others that are amongst them; seldom any pious, or gracious words proceed out of their mouths, but they seem as loose and wanton as any people; do you not hear how full they are of idle jestings and frivolous talk, God deliver me from such professors as these, I will not come amongst them.

And, saith another, see how they indulge their children in pride, idleness, and vanity, and connive at their sin, and they regard not their parents, but are disobedient; and yet are horn with others (that they look upon to be of the world), who have their children in more subjection, and educate them better than these do.

And saith another, there is such and such men that are members of such a church, and behold how earthly, how covetous, and worldly they are. They pursue the world like other men, as if their very hearts were in it; away with them, for there is no difference, I will not come among them, they are cruel to their poor servants, and make more slaves of them, and let them not have what is necessary and convenient for them, have no mercy nor bowels; also see what a father that man is to his poor son, he would have him work, but hardly will allow him either meat to eat, or clothes to wear.

And then there be others among them who are deceitful and false in their dealings, there is no trusting them, for they will gripe and pinch you in their trading, if you are not aware of them, they will break their words and promises at every turn.

And there are others also that are idle, and negligent in their callings, and so bring themselves and their families to want and poverty, that they become a charge to the people, and because the church will not uphold him in idleness, they vilify the congregation.

Saith, another and I know some others of them that pray not in their families, and perhaps not in private either, their religion is all abroad in the church, there is none at Barren professors abuse God's patience.

What is meant by cumbering ground.

The hurt scandalous and barren professors do, is unto God's vineyard.

home; shall I come into such a church, into such a vineyard: thus they cumbered the ground; but God forbid there should be such among you, my brethren, I hope better things of you, though I thus speak; yet it is well if there are none such in this and other churches; for no doubt where no barren trees are in God's vineyard, but it is thus, and this is the sad effect of their evil lives.

And as they cumber the ground in general, so they cumber some part of it in particular.

I. They cumber poor ministers by their cross and peevish spirits, alas, they cannot tell how to carry it towards them, this too often they find as the sad effect of their spirits and behaviours.

Barren professors cumber ministers.

II. They also cumber and grieve the spirits of their pious parents; how do they mourn to see their children that profess religion, walk unsuitable, and not as becomes the gospel; what is a greater joy to godly parents than to see their children walking in the fear of God, as John speaks of his spiritual children, "I have no greater joy than to hear that my children walk in the truth," 3 John 4. But on the contrary, what a perplexity is it to them when they walk loosely and are vain, and carnal; what grief was it to Isaac and Rebecca his wife, to see their son Esau to act like a profane person, and taking to wife one of the profane Heathens, and "Esau was forty years old when he took to wife Judith the daughter of Boeri the Hittite, and Bashemath the daughter of Elon the Hittite, which were a grief of mind to Isaac and Rebecca," Gen. xxvi. 34, 35; they were grieved at his marriage, foreseeing the sad effects of it; besides knew it was a breach of God's law, and for which he punished the old world; but afterwards we may see it was a sore encumbrance to these godly persons, "and Rebecca said to Isaac, I am weary of my life, because of the daughters of Heth, if Jacob take a wife of the daughters of Heth, such as these, &c., what good shall my life do to me," Gen. xxvii. 46; also what a cumber was it to the mind of Eli to see his sons who were priests, to act and do so wickedly in Israel, and how did God trouble him, because he did not restrain his sons from those abominable deeds of darkness. See 1 Sam. ii. 30.

And also godly parents.

III. These barren fig-trees also are grievous, and do cumber the minds of all pious and serious Christians, members of the same church; they are even ashamed to hear of their pride, passion, earthliness, idleness, and of their woful omission of religious duties, and frequently neglecting God's public worship, and of their undue hearts, fallings out, and abasing their fellow members, or of their whisperings and backbiting of one another, and thus some part of the vineyard is most lamentably encumbered with these persons.

Barren professors cumber pious members of the church.

IV. But this is not all, these barren fig-trees are a sad encumbrance to the whole congregation, or the whole vineyard, what troubles do they bring upon the church in their discipline; were it not for this sort (I mean barren professors) what sweet peace and concord would there be in all the churches of the saints.

Barren members cumber the whole vineyard or congregation.

V. Moreover, and besides all this, they are cumbersome unto God himself; what saith the Lord, "they are a trouble to me, I am weary to bear them,"

They are cumbersome to God himself.

Isa. i. 14. I am able to bear, suffer, or endure them no longer; God speaks after the manner of men, they are a burden or cumbersome to him. "I will ease me of my adversaries," I will cut them down, they afflict and encumber my mind, they have worn out my patience, my goodness, my long-suffering, "behold I am pressed under you, as a cart is pressed that is full of sheaves," Amos ii. 13.

VI. They are troublesome to the Lord Jesus Christ, they grieve and afflict his Spirit, "O faithless generation, how long shall I be with you, how long shall I suffer you," it is said he "looked upon them, being grieved at the hardness of their hearts," Mark ix. 19; doth it not (think you) trouble a vine-dresser to see such plants, such trees that he hath dug about, dunged and pruned, still to remain barren and fruitless; why so it troubles the Lord Jesus, the spiritual vine-dresser to look upon thee, O thou barren fig-tree, O think of it.

They are also troublesome to Jesus Christ.

VII. They are also barren to the Holy Ghost, they also cumber or grieve the Holy Spirit, they quench the Spirit, nay, vex the Spirit of God; "In their afflictions, he was afflicted, and the angel of his presence saved them, and carried them all the days of old; but they rebelled, and vexed his Holy Spirit, therefore he was turned to be their enemy, and fought against them," Isa. lxiii. 9, 10. The Holy Ghost strives with them, but they resist his motions, and rebel against the light, and instead of bringing forth the fruits of the Spirit, they bring forth the fruits of the flesh.

Barren professors, a burden to the Holy Ghost.

Barren persons cumber godly families.

Lastly, (as to this) I might add, they cumber the family, if it be a godly and pious family where they live; if the wife be a fruitless tree, or barren of that which is spiritually good, being froward, peevish and passionate, how is the mind of the godly husband cumbered, and prayer neglected, and hindered by the means of those incumbering thoughts that afflict him upon this account, so it is if the husband acts unbecoming a man professing godliness, the godly mind, and spirit of the wise is sadly encumbered.

If it be a servant that professes religion that is unfaithful, how doth he encumber the spirit of his master or mistress, or if the master or mistress who are professors, and yet walk in an evil way, (which perhaps is only known to their servant, who is a godly and gracious person) what a trouble is it to such a servant, putting him or her upon a temptation to conceal his master's or mistresses wickedness for his peace sake, though may be thereby he comes to loose his peace, by conniving at sin, which he ought not to do.

Barren fig-trees keep off the influences of the sun from other trees.

And as the barren fig-tree thus encumbeth the whole vineyard, and each part thereof, so also it cumbeth the ground, in that it keeps off the influences of the sun from other trees which grow next unto it.

Even so the barren and unprofitable professor hinders or keeps off the sweet influences of joy, and comfort of communion from gracious persons, they being grieved and disquieted at their carnal, scandalous, and unfruitful lives; for as nothing tends more to greaten and sweeten the communion of godly persons, than the satisfaction they have in each others true piety, so nothing tends more to embitter and spoil their comfortable communion, than the thoughts (and just cause of fear) that some amongst them are unsound, barren, and unprofitable persons, having no sincere love to Christ, nor to his dear children.

Barren fig-trees or barren professors draw that moisture away that might feed and nourish good Christians.

VIII. Moreover, the barren fig-tree cumbereth the ground in that it sucks, and draws much of the moisture of the earth which might tend to feed and nourish some fruitful trees.

So some barren professors who are poor, and cannot live without the charity of the church, do rob or draw away part of that supply from the godly poor, who (though they are industrious according to their ability) yet by reason of age, sickness, or some other distressing providence, cannot subsist without the charity of the church, (I charge no person, neither let any think in my public speaking after this manner, in this, or any other like case I direct my words particularly to them.) for if I knew any guilty, I should take another way, even lay their evil directly before them: but as there were some in the primitive churches that worked not, but were idle drones, that lived upon the honey which the painful bees gathered, taking up a profession for bread, or following of Christ for loaves, so it may be feared, that there are too many such who get into churches in these days.

“And he said, Lord, let it alone this year also.”

Barren professors spared through Christ's intercession.

1. Note that barren souls are spared through the prayer and intercession of Jesus Christ, “he made intercession for transgressors,” Isa. liii. 12. How did he pray for those that put him to death: you barren souls hear, and take good notice of these words, see by what means you are spared, and who it is that keeps off the fatal blow, when the axe of divine justice is ready to cut you down. O hold, justice hold, stay thy hand, Lord let yet this sinner alone, and that sinner alone, one year longer, saith the Lord Jesus Christ.

2. Note that God is slow to anger, or slow to wrath, not willing presently to cut down barren and unfruitful persons; how long did he wait on Israel of old, even forty years (saith he) “was I grieved with that generation,” &c., and it was some hundred of years before he cut them down, and cast them utterly off.

3. Observe that Jesus Christ intercedes for a little longer time before God cuts down barren persons, one year more after three years were gone and no change, no fruit found, but as loose and as carnal, and unprofitable as ever.

4. We may also infer that there is cause to fear that some who have been unfruitful for several years under gracious means, or under the labours of a painful ministry, will never become fruitful fig-trees; you heard, that bare not the second, nor the third year, seldom ever are fruitful, yet upon the use of other means, such that Christ can, and sometimes doth use, it may be made fruitful.

5. Moreover, it appears from hence that Christ spares no cost, nor pains, in an ordinary way, to make barren persons fruitful; “what could have been done more to my vineyard that I have not done in it,” Isa. v. 4. He speaks of digging about it, and dunging it: he will use the most likely means in order to make it fruitful; he will open the root touch the sinner's conscience, he will see to remove the earth or worldly spirit which lies too close to the heart or root of this tree, and perhaps thereby also discover the worm that is at the root, or some beloved lust that spoils its growth, and makes it barren.

6. But if after all means that Christ useth, fruitless persons remain still barren, are still unbelieving, still impenitent, still unholy; justice will at last in wrath cut them down; vengeance will at last overtake all unprofitable and fruitless professors.

7. Moreover, we may infer that God will leave all persons who sit under the means of grace, under the sweet shinings and waterings of heaven, especially such who are planted in his vineyard, without excuse; they of all men shall justify God when he executes his judgments upon them; what will such have to say, when God deals with them here whilst in this world, in his displeasure, or in the great day when he brings them to the tribunal of Jesus Christ?

“Lord, let it alone this year, this one year also.”

O what a kind, patient, and compassionate an intercessor is the Lord Jesus Christ, and what love and affections hath he to such sinners whom he sees are in a perishing condition; where the axe of God's wrath is up, Christ steps in to hold God's sin-revenging hand. O my father, let this and that man live one year longer, O turn away from this thy anger, I will yet see what may be done. My brethren, Moses in his praying for barren Israel, was a type of Jesus Christ. “And the Lord saith unto Moses, I have seen this people, and behold it is a stiff-necked people. Now therefore let me alone that my wrath may wax hot against them, and that I may consume them, and I will make of thee a great people,” Exod. xxxii. 9, 10. But how did Moses plead with God to turn his anger away. “And Moses besought the Lord his God, and said, Lord, why doth thy wrath wax hot against thy people;” nay, he cries, “If thou wilt forgive their sins; if not, blot me I pray thee out of thy book which thou hast written,” ver. 32.

Certainly our blessed Mediator far exceeds in compassion the typical mediator, whose love to God's glory, and the honour of his name, and the good of his people, was very great; O my Father, let this sinner be spared a little time, if it be but one year, and I will try what fresh corrections may do; may be, the rod may work more upon them than my word hath hitherto done, and tend to make their barren hearts to become fruitful. I will also stir up my servants to awaken them by a more sharp and searching manner; but if after what I purpose to do, by the strivings and operations of my word, Spirit, and rod, they are made fruitful, well, but if not, thou shalt cut them down.

“And if it bear fruit, well, and if not, then after that thou shalt cut it down,” verse 9.

I will when all I purpose to do, is done, intercede for those unfruitful persons no more, and then be sure, my brethren, such persons are undone for ever: if Christ once will stand up to plead with God no more for them, and exercise no more patience towards them, nor use no more means to do them good, but leave them to divine justice to cut them down, they must perish for ever.

Thus I have briefly opened the parts of this parable.

Secondly, I shall observe one or two propositions, from one or two of the principal parts thereof.

“Behold, these three years I come seeking fruit on this fig-tree, and find none,” &c.

Behold! This is a word of admiration, as well as a word that calls for attention and observation: and also a word of lamentation, and of commiseration.

Behold! wonder! I, even I, the mighty God have taken pains with this and that person; I have found means to humble them to discover their sins, evils, and barrenness to them, and then come year after year, to see what fruit they bring forth, and behold, this I have done and yet I find no fruit. From hence note,

1. Doct. That it is matter of wonder, and cause of grief and lamentation, to see men planted in God's vineyard, or sit under the blessings of his house and ordinances, and yet be barren or unfruitful, and not cut down. In speaking to this I shall,

1. To prove the truth of the doctrine.

2. I shall show whereiu this wonder lies, or in what it consists, and why it ought to be observed with lamentation.

1. As to the proof of this truth, see what God saith on the like occasion by the prophet. “Hear, O heaven, and give ear, O earth, for the Lord hath spoken, I have nourished and brought up children, and they have rebelled against me,” Isa. i. 2, 3. God would have the heavens and the earth wonder and be astonished at the sins and barrenness of the Jews, or church of Israel, and to weep, lament, and mourn over them, “Why should ye be stricken any more? why should I use any more means with them to make them fruitful, who after all I have done, bring forth nothing but wild grapes," ver. 5.

Moreover, it is said that our blessed Saviour marvelled at the unbelief and hardness of the hearts of the Jews, to whom he preached, and among whom he wrought such mighty miracles. "And he marvelled because of their unbelief," Mark vi. 6; his divine doctrine being delivered with such power and authority, and his miracles and works so amazingly glorious and wonderful. And in another place it is said, "he looked about with anger, being grieved for the hardness of their hearts," Mark iii. 5. Here both the admiration and sorrow of our Lord himself is expressed, because of the sins, unbelief, and barrenness of these persons.

Many such like texts I might mention, but what I shall speak under the next general head will further prove this.

Secondly, I shall show you wherein this wonder doth lie, and the cause of observation and lamentation doth consist, viz., that such God takes so much pains with, and waits so long upon, that they may become fruitful, and yet after all are barren.

From whence that barren professors may be beheld with wonderment.

1. Is it not strange it should be thus, considering the barren earth which is dugged up, and dunged, and watered with rain from heaven, becomes fruitful, and answereth the pains and cost of the husbandman. Moreover, trees which are planted in a fruitful soil, being well pruned and purged, commonly become fruitful. But many professors and members of the visible church, though they like ground dug, and dunged by Jesus Christ and the blessed God, remain barren; and though they are planted in the vineyard, on a very fruitful hill, and abundance of gracious means used, and much patience exercised, in order to make them fruitful, yet after all, are like a barren fig-tree, or a vine that brings forth wild grapes. Sirs, is it not strange that God should plant "a noble vine, wholly a right seed, and yet any should be turned into a degenerate plant of a strange vine," Jer. ii. 21. The Jewish church was of God's own constitution, and the first plants choice plants, as Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, &c. But what strange plants were found in it in after times, how barren and unlike those first planted? the like might be said of the gospel church, and gospel plants. The many showers that fall from heaven, makes the hard and barren earth fruitful and tender, but all the divine showers of the world, and heavenly doctrine, makes not the hearts of many professors fruitful or tender, but they abide as hard and as barren as ever. Again the inanimate creatures answer the pains used, so do irrational creatures also they readily obey and yield to the wills of their owners, they in their kind do what can be expected of them; but mankind rebels against, and refuseth to comply with the will of God, and answereth not his cost, pains, and expectation. "The ox knows his owner, and the ass his master's crib, but Israel doth not know, my people doth not consider."

2. Is it not a strange thing, and to be wondered at, to see men value a name to live above life itself, or to esteem a cabinet of very small worth above a jewel that is of an inestimable value? or to see men professing themselves to be wiser than others, or excelling in wisdom, to value or prefer the shell above the kernel, or it is not strange for men to hear that sentence of death is passed upon them, and know not but it may be executed in less than four-and-twenty hours, yet fear nothing, and though they have a pardon offered them, yet slight it, will not take hold of it.

3. Is it not strange that men should sow tares, and yet believe they shall reap wheat? the barren professor sows to the flesh, and yet thinks to reap to the Spirit; notwithstanding, what Paul positively affirms to the contrary; or is it not strange to see men rather believe the devil and their own deceitful hearts, than to give credit to what the holy God and Jesus Christ, say and testify.

Wonder, O ye heavens! to behold the creature to abuse the Creator, abuse his infinite wisdom, grace, love, patience, and long suffering, yea, and contemn the sweet enjoyment of his love and favour, and a crown of glory that fadeth not away, for the sake of an empty world, or mere vanity.

5. Behold, the king courting a beggar, and is denied! Behold a physician, who shed his own blood to cure the wounds of his enemies, waits at the door, and yet the miserable wretch there lets him stand all night, and refuses to apply that blood, the virtue of that blood to heal his wounds; but chooses death rather than life.

These things are to be considered with great wonder, and all the folly and evil hinted, meet in such persons mentioned; whom the holy and jealous God useth most gracious means to make fruitful, waiting upon them year after year, but still observing they bring forth no right fruit; he at last cries, cut them down, and yet they fear him not, but go on in the evils of their hearts and ways, until they are indeed cut down and sent to hell.

But to proceed to another proposition.

2. Doct. That the reason why some barren professors are no sooner cut down, is by virtue of Christ's intercession; but yet at last when no means will do, but the signs and plagues of barrenness remain upon them, they are cut down with dreadful vengeance.

1. In speaking to this, I shall show that barren persons in the church of God, with other sinners that are borne with so long, is through the intercession of Jesus Christ.

2. Show why Jesus Christ intercedes for barren and unfruitful persons.

3. Show who they be that are in danger to be cut down with dreadful vengeance.

4. Apply the whole.

Some say it is Christ that only is the chief vine-dresser, that says, stay yet this one year also; but others think it refers to his faithful ministers, who are employed under him to be his vine-dressers.

But certainly the Lord Jesus is chiefly meant hereby, though it may comprehend his ministers also, who with Moses of old, entreat God to exercise patience towards unfruitful professors and impenitent sinners.

That our blessed Lord doth intercede for sinners (as well as for believers) this parable fully doth evince; besides it is said, he prayed for such (or leastwise for some of them) that put him to death, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do," Luke xxiii. 34.

Moreover, it is said, "he bare the sins of many, and made intercession for transgressors," Isa. liii. 12.

Secondly, why doth Christ intercede for sinners.

1. Because he died for them; he that laid down his life for them, be sure will not refuse to pray for them; he that bled for them, will no doubt plead for them.

2. Because he ever lives to make intercession with the Father, and it is by virtue of his intercession that the merits of his blood are applied, and become effectual to poor sinners; he intercedes, that faith may be given to such that believe not, as well as that it may be increased, strengthened, and not fail in such in whom it is already wrought. "Them I must bring," &c., John x. 16, that is, all that are given to him, and one way (I have elsewhere showed) he useth in seeking his lost sheep, is by his intercession.

Aaron, when he went into the holiest of all, bore the names of all the children of Israel upon the breast-plate of judgment, and intercedeth also for the people, when guilty of great offences; and this signified the intercession of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath before him, and in his memory all the names of God's elect, whether called or uncalled.

3. Because Christ knows that if he intercedes not for sinners, or pleads not for them, one sinner could not live a moment longer; indeed, the lives of all men are continued as the fruit or effects of his interposition and gracious mediation, and when he ceaseth interceding for any people or particular person, vengeance falls upon such a people and person immediately, and no doubt but many temporal judgments are kept off, and prevented by Christ's gracious intercession.

4. Because without Christ's intercession, the gospel is neither given to a people, or nation, nor continued to them; nor is, or can the gospel (or means of grace) become effectual to any person or people, without Christ intercedes in the case: for as all grace, my brethren, was purchased by Christ, so it is given forth by virtue of his intercession to the Father. The Lord Jesus doth not only say, Lord, let this and that sinner alone this year. (but if they belong to him) he also prays and intercedes for grace, or a blessing upon the word and ordinances, that so they may believe and be renewed, and eternally saved.

5. Because some barren persons the Lord Christ knows are in the election of grace, indeed who of them were not vile and barren before quickened, called, and made fruitful; and hereby also he leaves all men without excuse. My brethren, the sins, unbelief, and barrenness of wicked men, is the material cause of their damnation.

Thirdly, I shall show you who they are, that are in danger to be cut down with dreadful vengeance.

1. Such barren persons are in danger who have had great favours showed them; yea, more cost spent on them, and labour taken with them, than many others ever had; and yet after all remain barren, carnal, and unbelieving. What wonderful favours did God show the Jews above all people in the world?

He gave unto them his covenant, the law, ordinances, and promises; nay, I may say all he had to give, or bestow under the dispensation to such who were a people constituted Ministers as well as Christ himself, pray that barren persons may be spared a little longer.

Why Christ intercedes for barren sinners.

What professors are in danger of being cut down.

a national, and typical church. Pray read the 105th Psalm. The apostle shows also, that unto them were committed the oracles of God, &c., Rom. iii. 2; and, saith the Psalmist, "He showed his word unto Jacob, his statutes and his judgments unto Israel, he hath not dealt so with any nation, and as to his judgments they have not known them," Psal. cxlvii. 19, 20.

And hence the Lord said, "What could I have done more to my vineyard, that I have not done to it? and yet after all God did to them, and for them, they were barren, and brought forth wild grapes, and therefore at last were cut down with vengeance.

Moreover, what cost and pains was Christ at with them, to whom he preached, and among whom he wrought such wonderful miracles; these were said to be exalted up to heaven, but they remaining barren, see what our Lord says; "And thou Capernaum which art exalted unto heaven, shalt be brought down to hell," Matt. xi. 23. Compare this with what the apostle saith, for the "Earth which drinketh in the rain that cometh oft upon it, and bringeth forth herbs meet for them by whom it is dressed, receiveth blessing from God; but that which beareth thorns and briars is rejected, and is nigh unto cursings, whose end is to be burned," Heb. vi. 7, 8.

2. Such are in danger who wear out the patience and forbearance of God, when the Lord having waited long, as he did on the old world (a hundred and twenty years) and yet they are barren, abominable, or unbelieving, these are near cutting down. God waits not only one year after three were gone, but many years, and all is in vain, well "now (saith he) I will arise, I will devour at once, I will exercise patience no longer, I have used great means, and have borne so long that my patience is now worn out, "cut them down, why cumber they the ground."

3. When God withdraws all means of grace from a people or person, when his Spirit being grieved, nay vexed, will strive no longer with them, but they "are given up to their own heart's lust." He sometimes says, as he said to Ephraim of old, "Ephraim is joined to idols, let him alone," Hos. iv. 17.

You, my ministers, let those sinners alone, your words shall have no effect upon their hearts, and my Spirit let them alone, do not reprove them, nor move them to repentance, nor to seek after Christianity more, and God may say to conscience also, let the reins lie loose upon the neck of their lusts, and rebuke them not when they sin; certainly when God deals thus with any sinners, they are near cutting down with vengeance. God threatened his people of old, that "He would not punish their daughters when they committed whoredom," &c., Hos. iv. 14. What can be a worse sign of God's wrath, than quietly to let men alone in a sinful and Christless state? For,

That which follows or attends this judgment is, "hardness of heart, blindness of mind, and a seared conscience," 1 Tim. iv. 3; the Holy Spirit being utterly withdrawn, they Heb. vi. 5, 6, fall under the plague of hardness of heart, and it is then impossible that they should be renewed again to repentance, being left to judicial hardness, these fall upon this into a deep sleep, yea, sleep the sleep of death; and it is much, if this sort do not become enemies to the people of God, and mock at religion, being filled with malice and spite against Jesus Christ, and tread under foot the blood of the Son of God.

APPLICATION.

You that are barren professors, tremble. O how dismal and dangerous a thing it is to be a sinner in Sion, or to be in a dying and withering condition; you know not where your partial apostacy may end.

Be exhorted to try yourselves, and prove your own work, O know if possible how things are between God and you; it may be God's axe is up, and Christ yet cries, Lord, let it alone this year also; you may have but one year left to get an interest in Christ, to get faith and a changed heart; nay, may be much of that year is also gone; what will you do when God begins not only to shake the tree, by stretching out his hand by sickness, but proceeds to give the fatal blow, and cuts you off by death, "or take thee away with his stroke, then a great ransom cannot deliver thee," Job. xxvi. 18. Fruitless vines and fig-trees are fuel for eternal burning, they shall be thrown into the fire.

3. Comfort, to you (though you are decayed,) who are true believers; there is notwithstanding all that hath been said, a word of comfort to you, God will revive you, and restore your souls, and heal your backslidings, and love you freely. You shall take root downwards, and bring forth fruit upwards; you shall be purged, to be made more fruitful; you are not of that sort "that draw back to perdition, you are ordained to go, and bring forth fruit, and that your fruit should remain," Heb. x. 39; if therefore any that hear me this day are not under barrenness or decay, but to revive, they have cause to praise and magnify God for ever.

THE

OF THE

TWO SONS BID TO GO INTO THE VINEYARD.

SERMON IX.

But what think you, a certain man had two sons, and he came to the first, and said son, go work to-day in my vineyard. He answered and said, I will not, but afterward he repented and went. And he came to the second and said likewise, and he said, I go sir, and went not, whether of them twain did the will of his father, they say unto him the first. Jesus said unto them, verily I say unto you that the publicans and harlots go into the kingdom of heaven before you.—Matt. xxi. 28—31.

To open the scope of the parable.

1. I shall explain all the parts of it.

2. Note one or two things from thence. 3. Apply it.

1. The scope of this parable, it is evident it is to show what deceit and hypocrisy was in the Pharisees, and that some great sinners were in a better state and condition than they, see ver. 31. “Publicans and harlots go into the kingdom of heaven before you.”

2. To discover that self-righteousness in persons seem to promise fair, and to be ready to do the will of God, who only do but pretend to do it; and such who are great sinners, who by their profane lives declare an averseness to God and religion, and so seem to say they will not go into Christ's vineyard, yet God's grace soon changeth their thoughts and purposes, and they repent, and go.

Or it may refer to the Jews and Gentiles; the first sought after righteousness and found it not, the other sought not after it, yet found it.

1. By the certain man is meant the Lord Jesus Christ.

Parts explained.

2. By the vineyard is meant the church. Why the church is compared to a vineyard is explained in other parables.

3. By the first son is intended the publicans, or such who are great sinners, gross and scandalous sinners, or according to some, our Lord means the Gentiles.

4. By the second son is meant the pharisees, or moralized and self-righteous persons, or the Jews.

5. By coming to the first and second son is meant God's gracious approaching unto them in the dispensation of the gospel, and offers of pardon and free justification by faith, or the tender of Christ.

6. By bidding them to go and work in the vineyard, is meant their doing the work, and will of God, or accepting of Christ, and entering themselves into a church.

7. To-day, refers to the present time, not to delay the doing of it.

8. The first that answered I will not, but afterward repented, &c., refers to the publicans and harlots, or profane persons, or of those of the Gentile nations, who by their evil lives, and horrid wickedness, say they will not enter into covenant with Christ, or obey his voice, nor go into his vineyard, or believe and do his will, and work; for though none perhaps, will say thus with their mouths, yet all ungodly persons speak thus by their work, and in their hearts; but afterwards being convinced of their great wickedness, they repent of their folly, and do believe in Jesus Christ.

9. The second son said, I go, sir, namely the pharisees, and other hypocrites, and formal professors, by their outward profession, and fair pretences to religion; these seem to say, we go sir; they promise fair, but their hearts and lives being unsanctified, they do not what the Lord doth require, and look for at their hands.

10. By the kingdom of heaven here may refer both to the gospel church, and to the kingdom of glory; some conclude the last only. "Verily I say unto you, that the Publicans and the harlots go into the kingdom of heaven before you.

Our Saviour doth not hereby intimate that the Pharisees, and such like persons, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven afterwards, or as if great sinners go to heaven first, and that they shall follow after, but by these words he means,

1. That some publicans and profane sinners should go to heaven, and not many of these Pharisees, and self-righteous persons.

2. It doth imply that great and notorious sinners are more likely to be prevailed with to receive Jesus Christ, or are sooner wrought upon than self-righteous ones are.

Question, why are they called sons, both sorts being in their natural state?

Ans. Metaphors and parables, I have told you often, do not run on all four: yet all men by creation are the sons of God, and upon that account, they may be so called.

Thus having briefly opened the several parts of this parable, I shall take notice of one or two points of doctrine.

1. Doct. That Pharisaiical and all self-righteous persons are in some sense in a worse condition than the open profane, the latter being sooner brought to believe in Christ than the former.

Two things I purpose to do in speaking to this proposition.

1. Show the character of a Pharisaiical person.

2. Give you the reason, why open and profane sinners are sooner brought to believe in Christ, than self-righteous ones, who have a sober, and moral honest life and conversation.

The marks of a Pharisaiical person.

See the parable of the Pharisee and Publican opened, where their character is more largely opened.

1. They are such that think better of themselves than they think of others. "And he spake a parable unto certain which trusted in themselves that they were righteous, and despised others.

They are such who have a marvellous opinion of the goodness of their own hearts and state, they trust in themselves (or have much confidence in respect to the safety and happiness of their condition) though never changed, or renewed by the Spirit and grace of God; and hence the Pharisee broke forth and said, "God, I thank thee I am not as other men are, extortioners, unjust, adulterers, or even as this Publican," Luke xviii. 11; and therefore,

2. The Pharisees were the most precise and devout sect that was among the Jews, and were esteemed by all men generally godly and holy persons; brethren, to be a Pharisee was not then a name of reproach, but rather an honourable thing, as appears by Paul's words, when he was charged before the council; "after the most strictest sect of our religion I lived a Pharisee," Acts. xxvi. 5. Also at another time he cried out in the council, "I am a Pharisee, and the son of a Pharisee," Acts xxiii. 6. Had it been a name of reproach, he would not have pleaded thus for himself; even so all pharisaiical persons may be generally looked upon to be very good and godly men and women, and be much esteemed of by the people; they may not only commend themselves, praise themselves, but others may commend, and praise them also; it is not enough that a man may pass among others for a devout and good Christian, who only judge by appearance. O say some people, if this man be not a godly man, and doth not go to heaven, "Lord have mercy upon us." What, not this man, that prays morning and evening; that hears and reads sermons, and is very charitable, and is guilty of no horrid crimes, as others are. And shall open profane persons, or publicans and harlots, go into the kingdom of heaven before such?

3. The Pharisees, notwithstanding all their seeming religion and godliness, were corrupt in the matter of God's worship, and had also corrupted the commandments of God by their traditions, Matt. xv. 3, 6. They had a great veneration for their own rituals and traditions of their fathers, yet rejected the law and precepts of the law, and the doctrine of the gospel also; they were like some now-a-days among us, who cry up such service that is of human composition, (as more divine and secret that any part of God's holy worship) of such things that God hath directly commanded. It is noted that some of the Jewish robbers said, that he sinneth as much who eateth with unwashen hands, as he that lieth with an harlot.

4. They were very proud, hypocritical and self-confident, "God, I thank thee I am not as other men," &c., Luke xviii. 1. But yet in seeming they would be thought to ascribe all their pretended attainments to God, though they held the power of man's will, yet would not own it, or appear to assume the glory of their holiness unto themselves; as the Arminians at this day seem to ascribe all to God, when their doctrine leads them directly to glory in themselves; they made their boast of God, as such that knew his will. See Rom. ii. 18. "Behold thou art called a Jew, and retest in the law, and makest thy boast of God. "And knowest his will, and approves the things that are excellent, being instructed out of the law."

"And are confident that thou thyself art a guide of the blind, a light of them that are in darkness," ver. 19.

"An instructor of the foolish, and teacher of babes," &c.

They would be thought to be the only true minister of God's word (like some in our days) who account all other foolish teachers, yet are very ill men, and a covetous generation, as the Pharisees were.

"Woe unto you, Scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites, for you devour widow's houses, and for a pretence make long prayers, therefore ye shall receive the greater damnation," Matt. xxiii. 14.

Secondly, I shall show you why self-righteous persons are not so soon brought to believe in Christ, as those who are openly profane or scandalous sinners.

But let me promise one or two things before I proceed.

1. Let it be considered that in respect of God nothing is hard, he can as soon, and as easily convert a Pharisee as a Publican, or an honest, civil and sober woman, as a common harlot: it is all one to God with whom all things are possible, to change the heart of a rich man as a poor man; yet our blessed Lord saith, that a rich man shall hardly enter into the kingdom of heaven. Mark x. 23.

In what respect Publicans and harlots go into the kingdom of heaven sooner than Pharisees.

2. Therefore let it also be considered that our Saviour speaketh after the manner of men, in respect had to the subject to be wrought upon, who are so wofully blinded through self-love, pride, and conceitedness; that there is more probability of the conversion of a great scandalous sinner, than of a sober, moral, and self-righteous person.

3. It is also so in respect of the revelation of God's word, Christ saith, "Publicans and harlots go into the kingdom of heaven before such," or rather than such, because God leaves such proud, and self-righteous ones, as a just judgment, to themselves; great sinners are converted when the other sort are left to themselves, and fall into hell, and so perish for ever.

4. Moreover this appears to be so by our own experience, we see now (as it was in the gospel days) that many great sinners are converted and do believe in Jesus Christ, whereas multitudes of sober and self-conceited persons are never moved to seek after Christ and salvation by him.

Quest. Well, but what is the cause of this, and why is it thus?

Ans. It may be occasioned from that great blindness and ignorance of these Pharisaical persons, it is hard to persuade them that their state is nought, or that they are in no better a condition than the vilest sinner in the world; what pray often, read, hear sermons, give to the poor, pay all men what is their due, are no swearers, liars, adulterers nor extortioners and yet say that their condition is nought, nay worse than the condition of publicans and harlots, how can this be?

Self-righteous person's state worse than the open profane.

1. I answer, are they guilty of no sin, have they not broken the holy law of God, or violated the precepts thereof? is there no lusts in their hearts, no covetous desire, no wrath, anger, or malice against their neighbours; it is plain that the Pharisee principally refers to the duties of the second table, when he boasted of his own righteousness; can that law justify that person whom it accuseth and condemns, and lays under its fearful curses?

Besides have not these very persons violated the precepts of the first table also, and that in a lamentable manner.

Have they no other God but the Lord? do they worship him only? viz., believe in him, trust in him alone; do they love him with all their hearts, with all their souls, and with all their strength? do they love him above father and mother, son or daughter, gold or silver? alas, if they do not thus, they are transgressors of the law, and are found guilty by it before God, and will God, do they think, destroy the sanction of his holy law, and make himself a liar to acquit such guilty ones? hath he not said "he is cursed that continueth not in all things that are written in the law to do them," and that he will by no means clear the guilty?

2. Can man's own moral, legal, or inherent righteousness justify him at God's bar, or is there any one who can be justified in the sight of God by the righteousness of the law?

O how blind are these poor wretches, that they see not the necessity of one to fulfil the righteousness of the law for them?

2. This brings me to the second reason why these people are so hardly brought to believe and be converted.

The cause why pharisaical persons are so rarely converted.

It is because they see not that absolute necessity of Christ to save them. Can you persuade a man that feels no sickness, no disease, to go to a physician presently least he dies? for what saith he, I am not sick, I feel no pain, no illness, I ail nothing.

Can you persuade a rich man who hath his bags full of silver and gold, to go a begging to his neighbour's door? no, no says he, let the poor go a begging, such who haveing not to supply their wants and necessities; as for me I am rich, and increased with goods, and Rev. iii. 17. have need of nothing; I know not that I am poor; miserable, wretched, and naked, neither will I be persuaded to believe such is my condition, I am not like this publican.

3. It is because Satan, the god of this world hath blinded their eyes, so that the gospel is hid from them. The devil, my brethren, hath more power over these to blind their eyes and to deceive their souls with vain hopes of heaven, than he hath over such who are notorious sinners; O how easy is it for him to sway and turn them the way the bent and bias of their hearts leadeth them.

Mankind being born under a covenant of works, is persuaded naturally that it must be by his own righteousness he must be raised, since his fall was by his own unrighteousness; that which we have in ourselves an inclination to do, we need not much persuasion to perform.

4. Because self-righteous persons, whilst they so continue, are not called to believe or to come to Christ, and because such that Jesus Christ calls not, will find it hard, nay impossible to come to him. "I am not come to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance," Matt. ix. 13. No, no, they are sensible sinners which Christ is to be offered unto. "The Son of Man is come to seek and save that which was lost," Luke xix. 10. And who are they? even publicans and harlots, or such who are convinced of their woful condition, or such who find the weight and burden of their sins, and are undone in themselves; this was spoken concerning the conversion of "Zaccheus, the chief of the publicans," Matt. xi. 28. It was the lost sheep, the lost groat, and the lost son that was sought after, they are the sick who need a physician, the hungry soul that needs food, and the thirsty soul that needs drink, and the naked soul that wants clothes, and the polluted and filthy person that needs the fountain to wash in; so it is the poor, lost, sin-sick sinner, who sees his filthiness, that wants a Saviour, and to such only ought Jesus Christ to be tendered to; and indeed none else will receive him.

Not that I suppose any can come to a thorough sight of their sin and misery until they are convinced by the Holy Spirit.

So much shall serve to show why self-righteous persons are so hardly brought to Why loose and scandalous persons are sooner converted than self-righteous ones. Premise.

believe in Christ.

Secondly, I shall in a word or two show how it comes to pass that open, loose, and scandalous sinners are sooner wrought upon, than the proud Pharisee.

But by the way, let none of these think themselves to be at present in a better condition than the sober or civilized person; I mean, whilst they remain wicked, or continue in their sin, for damned they will be, unless they are born again, or are regenerated, see 1 Cor. vi. 9. Luke xiii. 3. Nay, the wrath of God is revealed from heaven against all such. O what is more abominable than open wickedness; moreover such wretches oftentimes pull down national judgments, are the same of any people who profess Christianity, and ought to be punished by the judges. God encourage our reformers, and perfect the reformation that is happily begun. But why do these then go into the kingdom of heaven before the other sort?

1. I Answer, because these have no such seeming grounds to deceive them, or false foundations to build upon, they cannot (I mean, pretend to any righteousness of their own, seeing their consciences condemn them (as guilty of horrible crimes) before God; the law cannot (they must needs think) relieve them who break it every day, therefore it is easy for these to be convinced that they are lost and undone sinners; hence Satan hath other baits for these.

I. He persuades them that God is merciful, and will, if they acknowledge their sins, forgive them, though they daily live in those sins which they do confess, and seem to bewail.

2. He tells them also that Jesus Christ died for sinners, and they need not doubt but they shall be saved, though they find not, experience not, the fruits and effects of his death in their own souls; thus are great sinners deceived by these, and such like suggestions?

3. But if neither of these baits will catch them, then he persuades them that they may find mercy at the last moment, and from thence they defer (many times) the work of faith and repentance till sickness and death comes; and though these baits are not so powerful and prevalent as those are (I before mentioned), yet were it not for these cutting snares and devices of Satan, we might hope to see more of this sort to embrace Jesus Christ, than indeed we do. But how to counterwork Satan as to those baits and devices of his, I purpose to show in the application; but to proceed, great and scandalous sinners are sooner wrought upon than self-righteous persons.

II. Because it is the design of God, and apparently his absolute purpose, to magnify his own sovereign grace in calling, pardoning, and saving of great sinners. Christ commonly acquainted or made known himself to this sort, hence the Pharisees reproached our blessed Saviour for keeping company with publicans and sinners. "This is a true saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Jesus Christ came into the world to save sinners," 1 Tim. i. 15; that is, great sinners, the chiefest of sinners. David doubtless well understood the design and purpose of God in forgiving great sinners, which made him cry, "Lord, forgive mine iniquities, for they are great," Psal. xxv. 11.

III. Because deep convictions of sin are more likely to seize upon these notorious sinners than others, when made sensible of their abominable evils, and how they have violated and transgressed the law of God, and then also considering how Jesus Christ is offered to sinners as sinners, and that God's arms stand wide open to embrace such "that have done as evil things against him as they could," Jer. iii. 5; this must needs tend to melt them into tears of godly sorrow and grief for their iniquities. Brethren, conscience cannot be so soon blinded in these, as it is in sober and moral persons; when a pardon is freely offered to a self-condemned and abominable traitor, and stout-hearted rebel, that hath conspired the death of his gracious Sovereign, this tends to break him into pieces. Conscience being made use of by the Lord in conviction, will flatter no man so far as it is enlightened by the word and Spirit of God.

IV. Because God will magnify his grace in the free pardon of sinners in their own sense and feeling, shame and self-abhorrence; this is one reason doubtless why the Lord is pleased to work upon great sinners; they shall see their filthiness, and loathe themselves in their own sight, when God receives them into his arms of mercy, that they may admire his infinite grace and goodness to them, and know it is not for any goodness or worthiness that is in them, that he doth vouchsafe pardon upon them. "And they shall loathe themselves for the evils which they have committed in all their abominations," Ezek. vi. 9. And again, saith the Lord by the same prophet, "then shall ye remember your own evil ways, and your doings that were not good, and shall loathe yourselves in your own sight for your iniquities, and for your abominations," Ezek. xxxvi. 31. "Not for your sakes do I this, saith the Lord God, be it known unto you, be ashamed and confounded for your own ways, O house of Israel," ver. 32. People that are proud and exalt themselves, or have high thoughts of their own worthiness, are left of God; but great sinners are brought quickly to shame, confusion, and self-abhorrence, and deep humiliation. But so much at this time.

God seeks to magnify his pardoning grace in the sight and sense of sinner forgiven to his own glory.

SERMON X.

But what think you, a certain man had two sons, and he came unto the first, and said, Son, go work to day in my vineyard. He answered and said, I will not, but afterward he repented and went. And he came to the second, and said likewise, and he said, I go, sir, and went not.—Matt. xxi. 28—31.

I shall now proceed to a second point.

2. Doct. "And he said, I go, sir," &c., note from hence, that some persons seem, pretend, or in appearance do obey God's call, and close with Christ, but really and truly do it not. In speaking to this truth.

1. I shall show you who these are, or how they may be known. 2. Apply it.

Who they are that say they go, and yet go not.

1. They are such that pretend to religion, and that make a profession of it, like as the pharisees did; these seem to say, we go, sir, but it is but in show or appearance only; they are not truly religious, they do not those things which God requires of them; it is not every religious duty which a man may be found in, that demonstrates him to be a true Christian; no, not the discharge of every external duty commanded of God. Religion lies not simply in an outward profession, but in faith and the love of God; it doth consist in a holy trust and dependance upon Jesus Christ, and in having the heart brought into a blessed conformity to the power of true godliness; having the image of God stamped upon the soul; therefore all that say they go, and yet do no more but make an outward profession of godliness, or subject to some external precepts, do but pretend they go to work in Christ's vineyard, for really they do it not.

2. Such that come under some convictions of sin, and upon it reform their lives, do many things; thus it is said of Herod. "For Herod feared John, knowing that he was a just man and holy, and he observed him, and when he heard him, he did many things, and heard him gladly," Mark vi. 20. They may reform their lives as to some gross acts of sin, and have a reverent esteem of Christ's true ministers, and hear the word with some seeming joy, but still harbour in their hearts some principal lusts which they will not part withal; they like Herod keep their Herodias, are never brought to loathe, and leave their darling sins; but so far as they act in a reformation of life, they seem thereby to say, Sir, I go, but they in truth go not.

3. Such go not that only act, and do many duties under legal terror, or fear of present or of future wrath; who, when the storm is over that was raised in their souls, their seeming zeal and affections presently cool in them, and in a little time become as bad, or worse than they were before, as we find in the same Herod, who did not only cut off John Baptist's head, but did deride our blessed Saviour when he was brought before Pilate.

The Pharisees said we go, but went not.

4. Such that act in religious duties for life, or according to the tenure of the covenant of works, thinking by their own performances and obedience to obtain the favour of God, not being ever convinced of the necessity of the righteousness of Christ; trust not, depend not, or believe not in the Lord Jesus Christ, that they might be justified by faith only; but from a principle of self-love, cleave unto their own righteousness, or trust in themselves that they are righteous. The people who act thus, do but say, we go, sir, but go not. The Pharisees were those who said, I go sir; these, no doubt, our Saviour means by this son.

Some say they go sir, but it is but a little way, so far as suits with their interest, &c.

Moreover, all such say, we go, sir, but it is no farther than will suit or stand consistent with their own carnal hearts, ease, and self-interest. They may be convinced of the doctrine of free-grace, and that it is by Christ alone that they must be justified, that is, by his obedience, (as it is apprehended by faith alone,) yet never received Christ by an act of saving faith; they are willing to receive him as a priest to atone and make their peace with God; but are not for receiving him as a king, so as to subject in heart and life to his authority, and yield universal obedience to his holy precepts. These seem to present Christ with a paper wherein their own terms are contained, viz., how far they will go, or how far they will follow him; this sort cannot so deny themselves as to receive Christ as a prophet, to hear him "in whatsoever he says unto them," Acts iii. 22, 23. They cannot deny themselves, and "take up their cross and follow him," Matt. xvi. 24, 25, fully, and suffer reproach or outward loss for his sake; for alas, the world still is the great idol which is in their hearts, which they fall down before, and are therefore great idolaters; for to love ourselves, our own honour, gold and silver, or anything above Jesus Christ is idolatry.

Some say they go, but their time is not come, it is too soon for them to close with Christ.

6. Such that take up a resolution to follow Christ at another time, it is not to-day when Christ calls, but they say we go, i. e., we will believe, we will repent and follow Christ, and become religious when we have a more fit and convenient season, or have got rid of some worldly business and incumbrances; there is something of greater moment in their eye at present, than to close with Christ; they are like unto the man that our Saviour bid to follow him. "But he said, Lord, suffer me first to go and bury my father," Luke ix. 59. Let me live at home and please my father, (as if he should say,) and stay until he is dead, that I may not be dispossessed of my inheritance; but after my father is buried, and I am possessed of my estate, I will follow thee.

7. One said unto our Saviour, "Lord, I will follow thee whithersoever thou goest," Luke ix. 57. This man was a Scribe, see Matt. viii. 19. "And Jesus said unto him, foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests, but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head."

Here is a person that seems to offer his service to Christ; he says I will go, I will follow thee, but it was no doubt before he had well weighed the matter, and considered, or counted the cost; this man takes up a sudden resolution unadvisedly; may be, he met with some heat in his affections, or transport of joy by hearing of Christ's gracious words, and beholding the wonderful miracles he did. Doubtless, by our Saviour's answer, his heart was not right, his resolution was either bottomed upon some sudden flashes, or from his curiosity, or hopes of meeting with some outward advantage, but saw not the difficulties he might expect to meet with, if he did indeed follow Jesus Christ.

See the parable opened of a man building a tower.

Thus some say we go, i. e., as soon as their affections are warmed under an awakening sermon, they with much seeming zeal may become members of a church, but after a while finding what they are likely to meet withal, they faint, and are sorry they make such a rash profession, or perhaps they have stately houses, and are honoured among men; but when they find Christ hath no house, no land, no outward preferment for them, but contrariwise do see they are like to lose the love of their friends, and have all that is dear unto them in this world exposed to loss, they repent, and though they said, we go sir, go not; they hold not out the whole journey, but look back.

APPLICATION.

1. How do many persons deceive themselves, thinking they do that which they do not, and are that which they are not, and say they go when they go not; believe, or think they are Christians, when indeed they are no better than mere carnal worldlings, and utterly without one saving dram of grace in their hearts.

2. Let such that are sober, and that in all moral virtues seem to excel others, look to it, since so many of this sort, do but thereby deceive themselves, saying, we go sir, but go not; they, it may be feared, do not know what it is to go into Christ's vineyard, like some servants, who, when commanded to do such or such a thing, say, I will do it sir, but through ignorance do something else of a quite contrary nature to what was commanded. Christ bids them believe, that they may be justified and saved; but they either rest upon a false faith, or upon a sober and moral life, not knowing what true faith is, nor the righteousness of God is.

3. We also infer from hence what a woful condition they are in, who deceive their own souls by present promises of what they will do, and what they will become hereafter, whereas, alas! they know not what a day may bring forth.

4. Let ministers and churches learn wisdom from hence, and take care who they receive into communion, lest they take some in who are only under some sudden convictions, and raised and warm affection, and so unadvisedly offer themselves for communion; who never received Jesus Christ into their understanding, nor came to be of a sound judgment; for this is but like a sudden land flood that soon glides away; they, in heat of affections, say I go sir, I will follow thee whithersoever thou goest, but do not first sit down to count the cost; are quickly cooled in their love, and return again to folly.

But to proceed to another point of doctrine, from the answer of the second son, who said "I go sir, but went not." I observe from hence.

3. Doct. That present promises touching future faith and holiness, seldom end in real performance.

Three things I purpose to do here.

1. Show you from whence it is that some persons do make present promises, touching future faith and holiness.

2. Show you why, or from what cause it is that these present promises seldom end in real performances.

3. Apply it.

1. They may make these present promises from those common convictions and illuminations of the word and Spirit of God; the light of convictions may be so great in their hearts, in respect of sin, as to the guilt thereof, and their present danger thereby, that they can do no less than purpose and promise what they will do hereafter. We read of some that "were once enlightened, and had tasted of the good word of God," &c., Heb. vi. 4, 5; who never were savingly enlightened nor renewed by the grace of God

Why some make present promises touching future holiness.

1. These may be convinced by the law of God that sin is a great evil, and that they are great sinners; certainly Judas saw this, the guilt of sin may lie heavy upon their consciences.

2. They may see that if they die in this condition, they are likely to be undone for ever, and therefore from hence they may come under great terror

Fears of hell stir up some to say, we go for fear of wrath and eternal punishment, and they may have some abhorrence of sin in respect of the guilt thereof, but not abhor the act, nor the filth of sin.

Now from hence secretly they resolve, purpose, and promise to close with Christ, and become new creatures before they die, therefore an accusing conscience may stir up men to say, we go sir.

3. They may make these promises from the nature of an accusing conscience, for when a man's conscience is awakened, it will terrify him fearfully, yea, it will never let him rest, but lay on such lashes, and gripe him so sorely, that unless he doth something to appease and still his offended conscience, he cannot well bear it. Conscience, brethren, will spare no man when it is awakened, according to its light, though it is true, it is very subject to be misled for want of a right guide, or true light in the understanding, and from hence may perhaps be pacified, and become more still and quiet by those promises a poor sinner may make conversion unto God hereafter; it is therefore to still and quiet conscience, more than to please God. It is not because sin is against God, contrary to his holy nature, and a breach of his holy law; but because it is against them, disquiets and torments them, they find it is against their present ease and future happiness, exposing them to eternal wrath and vengeance. And from hence they promise they will leave and forsake it, and become new creatures.

4. It may be the effect of some sore affliction or judgment that these persons may be under. God may lay them on a sick-bed, and seem to shake them over hell, and then they like some seamen when in a storm, may promise what they will do, and how well they will live for the time to come if God will spare them at this season; but when they are raised up and delivered from their present fears or dangers, they forget all their promises which they before, when distressed, made to God; so much as to the first thing.

Secondly, Why do these promises seldom end in real performances? What should be the reasons of it?

1. I answer, it is from the grand agent that stirs them up to make these promises, which is the devil no doubt. Satan fearing he is in some danger of losing them, by finding what fear and trouble doth attend them, that he might blind their eyes, and deceive their souls, puts them upon the making of these promises of amendment of life hereafter.

Brethren, the devil cares not what promises sinners make to become good and virtuous hereafter, if he can hinder them from closing in with Christ at present.

Beloved, pray remember that to-morrow is the devil's time, I mean it is the time he chooses for sinners, but God's time is to-day. "Go work to-day in my vineyard," to-day if you will hear my voice harden not your hearts," Heb. iii. 7, 8.

"While it is called to-day," ver. 13. "Boast not thyself of to-morrow," Prov. xxvii. 1. "Behold, this is the accepted time, this is the day of salvation," 2 Cor. vi. 2. But this time Satan likes not of, he is for another time, it is too soon, saith Satan; indeed he is for no time, he would have the sinner in hell before he sets about this work, and therefore strives to deceive the soul, by putting it upon resting on promises to close with Christ hereafter; certainly such promises will come to nothing that the devil stirs up men and women to make.

Secondly, Present promises, resolutions, and purposes, touching future faith and regeneration, seldom end in real performance.

Because the end and design of such persons that make them is abominable.

1. For evident it is, their design and purpose is to be wicked and ungodly at the present, for what can be the purport of these promises else? certainly they who do not resolve to turn to God till to-morrow, purpose to abide enemies to God to-day; now if this be so, it appears that these people sin at present with full purpose and resolution of soul. Brethren, that rebel that tells his sovereign he will lay down his arms hereafter, doth thereby positively declare that he will at present remain in his rebellion.

This being so, can any think that God should ever bless or succeed such promises, since the design and purpose of the man that makes them is so vile, abominable, and hateful to him? what can be a greater aggravation of sin, than to sin with full purpose and resolution?

2. Because it argues that these persons have but a partial work upon their hearts, their hearts are divided; for though their judgments and understandings may be somewhat enlightened, yet their wills are not bowed nor subjected to the obedience of Christ, nor Men may say, I go Sir, under some sudden afflictions.

Satan may stir up sinners, when they are awakened, to make promises touching future faith and repentance.

are their affections changed. Balaam no doubt had much light in his understanding, (though not savingly enlightened) "He hath said which heard the words of God, which saw the vision of the Almighty, falling into a trance, but having his eyes open."

"How goodly are thy tents, O Jacob, and thy tabernacles, O Israel," Num. xxiv. 4.

Hence he desired to die the death of the righteous, but it is evident he was a wicked man, his affections being never changed; the apostle saith, "He loved the wages of unrighteousness." Brethren, this discovers these men to be hypocrites, and these promises and purposes arise from their base and filthy hypocrisy. Conversion is never fully wrought until the whole soul in all its faculties is brought under the power of Divine Grace; but alas, how often is it that the conscience of men may be convinced, and much culightedened, when their wills and affections remain under the influences of sin and Satan.

3. These promises seldom end in real performances, because they are made directly in opposition to the divine precept, and holy will and command of God, who says, "To-day if you will hear my voice, harden not your hearts; go to-day and work in my vineyard," Heb. iii. 15.

"Boast not thyself of to-morrow, for thou knowest not what a day will bring forth," Prov. xxvii. 1.

Certainly God will never assist a man to perform such promises that are made in contempt of his authority, and in opposition to his express command. Shall men presume to contradict the Almighty God; besides he hath positively declared, that such whom he called, and they refused, and would have none of his counsel, that when they call upon him, he will not hear? Prov. i. 24, 25.

4. Because such promises and purposes are made only in the strength of the creature, for surely they must needs suppose they have power to do those things at any time, that trust in their own purposes, promises, and resolutions what they will do hereafter; and do not presently, or in God's time go, whose assistance they may expect if they come in his time; but that help and aid which he hath promised them to-morrow, or for the time to come; and what is any creature able to do of himself? True, the Arminians by their doctrine intimate men are endowed with power to repent, without any special or supernatural grace; which notion may put people upon undoing temptations, even to delay, or defer the great work of regeneration until sickness, or death comes, or until they are grown old; for if they have such ability or power as they say, men are subject to conclude, that they may have the same power to-morrow, which they have this day. But O take heed, it is not in man that walketh, to direct his steps; "without me you can do nothing," John xv. 5. Faith is not of ourselves, "it is the gift of God; it is if God, peradventure will give them repentance, to the acknowledging of the truth," 2 Tim. ii. 25. But God hath said, he will not give them that grace, who did refuse to hearken to him when he called, nay, and God doth often withdraw the influences of his Spirit from such that reject his offers in his own time; and evident it is, that they resist and grieve the Holy Spirit in its motions, strivings, and operations to-day, and put him off with vain purposes and promises: we may do well to observe what the Lord saith, "My Spirit shall not always strive with men." And what can a man do when the Spirit of God hath done striving with him?

Present promises made in a man's own strength are never performed.

5. Because the life of man is so uncertain, and the most of these persons are cut off in wrath before that time is come, when they purposed to make good their promises of faith and repentance. O how many are lost, and are now in hell, who made such promises as these are? It is just with God to cut them off, they wilfully rejected his great and gracious tenders of grace in the proper season thereof.

APPLICATION.

1. From hence we may perceive what the reason is, that so many people are left of God, who content themselves with present purposes and promises touching future holiness. I am persuaded the devil this way, I mean by this subtle device, destroys more souls than by any other whatsoever. Therefore for the Lord's sake, and for the sake of your precious and immortal souls, beware of him; O take heed that you rest not satisfied with such promises; say, sinner, in thy heart when such thoughts rise in thy mind, this is Satan, it is he that puts me upon making these promises, thereby to deceive my soul.

2. This may serve also to reprehend, and sharply to rebuke, all such persons who flatter themselves with such purposes, who say, "I go sir," when they go not, or who think they do the thing which Christ commands them, when it is far from it; he commands them to believe for righteousness, and they rest upon doing, or upon a sober moral life. Christ says, "he that believeth not, shall be damned," Mark vi. 16, but though they believe not, do not go out to him, and rest upon him, yet by their works and inherent holiness, they doubt not but they shall be saved, and that they fully thereby answer his requirement.

Exhort. 3. Let me exhort you all that are yet in your sins, to close with Christ this day, and not to delay it until another time; and that I may the better prevail with you, take a few motives.

MOTIVES.

Powerful motives to sinners not to delay closing with Christ.

1. Consider the shortness and uncertainty of your lives; you are not lords and keepers of your times; no, no, your times are in the Lord's hands; many a candle hath been put out before half burned, many a fair flower cut off before its withering time was come; what a multitude of short and small graves may you see.

2. Now you have an opportunity in your hands, "Why is there a prize in the hand of a fool to get wisdom, seeing he hath no heart to it," Prov. xvii. 16. If you had an opportunity to-day to get one or more, thousand pounds, and you are told this is the time, it is to-day, would you defer the looking after it till to-morrow? or would a condemned criminal that hath a promise of a pardon, if he looks after it to-day, delay it to another time? O that sinners from hence would see their folly.

3. It is great folly, and very dangerous, to defer the matters of our eternal happiness. Because if you neglect the present time, you may lose the day of your visitation; the day of grace may be shorter than your lives, as appeareth concerning Jerusalem. "O that thou hadst known, at least in this thy day, the things which belong unto thy peace, but now they are hid from thy eyes," Luke xix. 42. Sirs, your days in this world may be lengthened out, and yet the day of grace may be past with you.

4. Because moral indisposition to close with Christ, may be more increased to-morrow than it is to-day; sin is of a hardening nature; if a man as soon as taken sick, looks out for, or sends for a physician, there may be more hopes he may be cured, than if he should neglect any means until this distemper hath got greater power, and his natural strength is wasted. It is easier to break a colt and bring him to the saddle, than it is an old horse that runs wild in the wilderness; a young plant is sooner plucked up than an old tree. To speak after the manner of men, all know that these things are so, though it is true God can as soon subject the rebellious will of an old sinner as one that is young; yet since this is the Lord's time, viz., even to-day, from what I have said, you may learn wisdom.

5. Delay not the time, in regard of Satan; for if you put Christ off with flattering and deceitful promises to-day by the devil's instigations, he knows what great advantages he may thereby gain; that devil that binds you to-day with withs, may bind you to-morrow with cords and fetters of iron: the old man increases in his strength in sinners, as well as the new man doth so in believers.

6. In regard of spiritual judgments, which may make the new birth not only difficult, but impossible, open sins God usually punisheth with visible judgments, but wilful neglects of the day of grace he commonly punisheth by spiritual judgments. "Make the heart of this people fat, and make their ears heavy, and shut their eyes; lest they see with their eyes, and understand with their hearts, and convert and be healed," Isa. vi. 19. Which terrible passage (as one observes) is no less than six times repeated in the New Testament. See that fearful text, "In thy filthiness is lewdness, because I have purged thee, and thou wast not purged from thy filthiness any more, till I have caused my fury to rest upon thee," Ezek. xxiv. 13. Because I have purged thee, that is, I have made use of means to purge thee, or I have purged thee from some gross acts of wickedness; but still thy heart abides vile and filthy; all future means to cleanse thee shall be taken away, no sermon, no conviction, no affliction shall ever have any effect to humble thee. "I the Lord have spoken it, and it shall come to pass, and I will do it," ver. 14, as you have it expressed in the very next verse.

Quest. What shall we do to prevent this great danger, of delaying or resting on present promises, touching future faith and repentance?

1. Answ. I answer, be persuaded and made sensible that it is the devil which stirs you up to make these promises, and so to put Christ off, and grieve the Spirit; know assuredly it is Satan out of a design to ruin your souls, by cheating you of the day of your visitation.

2. Consider that he that puts you upon making these promises to-day, to repent and turn to the Lord hereafter, will put you upon making the same promises, and resting on like purposes to-morrow, and so till death overtakes you, and your souls are lost for ever, for be sure the devil to-morrow will never come, it will be still to-morrow.

3. Consider that thus to delay this work, is rebellion against the Lord, nay, and that you do secretly resolve and purpose in your hearts to continue in your rebellion, and that these promises (as you have heard) do imply no less; therefore you sin with a resolution and purpose of heart.

4. Consider that it is not in your own power to believe and turn to the Lord; it must be done by the Spirit of God, by his help and by his assistance; and therefore it must be done in his time, and before his Spirit hath done striving with you. Call to mind that text, "My Spirit shall not always strive with men," Gen. vi. 3,

5. Pray earnestly. "A man cannot receive anything unless it be given him from above," John iii. 27. Look up to heaven, remember God's absolute promises, "I will take away the heart of stone out of your flesh, and give you a heart of flesh," Ezek. xi. 19. This is a promise made to such that are, and have been great sinners: it is not made upon any conditions to be performed by them; therefore how do you know but God may do this thing for you, therefore plead this promise with God.

6. Labour to be sensible of the corruptions of your nature and polluted hearts. "The heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked, who can know it?" Jer. xvii. 9. It is perverse, and it will supplant you if you take not heed. There is nothing so false and so deceitful as the heart of man, and in many ways doth deceive: and this way also, even by your making of these false and deceitful promises.

7. Endeavour to observe the motions of the Holy Spirit; "The wind bloweth where it listeth." Mariners observe the wind, and when it serves, they hoist up their sails. Do not quench nor grieve the Spirit, because he is the only Agent in your conversion; all that are born again, "they are born of the Spirit." A man may reform his life by the power of natural light; but no man can thereby change his own heart, nor form Christ in his soul; regeneration is a new creation, not the work of the creature, but of the Creator. "Not born of the flesh, nor of blood, nor of the will of man, but of God."

8. Attend diligently upon the word of God, and upon all the means of grace; it is good so be there where God usually worketh upon men's hearts; faith comes by hearing, and hath not God that way wrought upon many sinners that were as bad as thou art?

Consolation. This may tend much to the comfort of such that would not rest contented in making promises to work in God's vineyard, but as soon as called, immediately they obeyed that call.

They did not delay, but made haste to keep God's holy commands. It is a sign they were beloved before time, because drawn by love to Christ in time; the gospel came not to them "in word only, but also in power," Thess. i. 4, 5; which shows that they were elected to salvation. So much to this parable.

THE

OF THE

MAN CASTING SEED INTO THE GROUND.

SERMON XI.

And he said, So is the kingdom of heaven, as if a man should cast seed into the ground. And should sleep, and rise night and day, and the seed should spring up he knows not how. For the earth bringeth forth fruit of itself, first the blade, then the ear, after that the full corn in the ear. But when the fruit is brought forth, immediately he putteth in the sickle, because the harvest is come.—Mark iv. 26—29.

THE Evangelist Mark only hath recorded this parable, and if in opening it, we have respect to what goes before, it may hold forth,

1. That such persons who would not be deceived, ought to take care what doctrine they hear. "Take heed what you hear," ver. 24. Or what seed it is that is sowed in your hearts, and also they ought to take heed into what ground the seed falls, for according to the nature or quality of the seed will the product be; if the seed be not good, or of the right kind, the fruit will not be good.

2. Moreover, take heed what you hear, as to the measure or quantity of your hearing; for if God sows plentifully, or measure forth abundantly unto you, he expects increase accordingly; and likewise to the frequency of your hearing. "With what measure you mete, it shall be measured to you, and you that hear shall have more." O see that you are much in hearing; if we measure unto God much of our time, in hearing with all care and diligence, (provided it be his own word) and receive it into our understanding, wills, and affections; God will measure forth full mercies and divine blessings unto us, for it is doubtless the improvement of our time, and the means of grace our Lord doth here refer unto, "For he that hath, to him shall be given," &c.,

The scope of this parable. 2. Therefore one design of our Lord in this parable considering what precedes, is to show the great blessing that attends a faithful and diligent attendance upon the preaching the gospel.

3. To show how insensibly the seed of the word takes root, and springs up in the hearts of such that receive it, and also to discover unto ministers that they should not be over concerned if they see not the fruit of their labours presently, the whole success of it being from God, and to assure them, and those that hear the word in a right manner, a blessing shall attend them in the end.

4. Moreover, to show his disciples that the gospel should have success, and prosper in the world, and prepare all where it came for the great harvest-day.

"So is the kingdom of heaven."

The parts explained. By the kingdom of heaven is meant God's providential dispensation, or ministration of the gospel.

"If a man should cast seed on the earth."

Who the man is that casts in the seed, and also what is the ground. A man, the man may primarily refer to the Son of Man, for it is Christ "who sows the good seed," Matt. xiii. 8. But since the Lord Jesus sleeps not, I conclude our Saviour refers here to his ministers; for the man that casts seed into the ground, is said to sleep night and day, and rise. Besides, the Lord Jesus knows how it grows and springs up, though ministers do not.

"Into the ground."

By the ground is meant the hearts of men, as is showed in the parable of the sower, which I have opened.

"And should sleep and rise night and day, and the seed should spring and grow up," &c.

What is intended sleep night and day. By sleeping and rising, I understand is meant ministers taking their natural rest, waking and rising, night and day; like as a husbandman, when he hath sown his seed, he is not over concerned about its rooting and springing up, but leaves the success of his cost and labour unto God.

"A husbandman knows not how the seed he hath cast into the ground springs up, it is a mystery in nature; as no man knows how the bones grow in the womb of her that is with child, so ministers know not how, or after what manner the word of God takes rooting, and springs up in the hearts of sinners. The secret and hidden operations of the Spirit are known by us, but are mysteries of grace, and known only unto God.

"For the earth bringeth forth of itself."

In what sense the seed may be said to grow of itself. That is, without the help of the husbandman, or any human power, yet not without the influences of heaven; both in respect of the shining of the sun, and the falling of the dew and rain from above. Man adds nothing to its growing up, nor should be solicitous about it. So Christ's ministers having done their part, they may (with other men) sleep or take their quiet rest, though not without looking up to God for a blessing upon their ministry, nor without an expectation of increase.

"First the blade, then the ear, after that the full corn."

The blade first appears, but it takes root before that, for where the seed takes no manner of root, no blade ever appears to spring up; by this we may perceive how gradually the work of God's grace goes on upon a sinner's heart, that receives the seed thereof. A minister cannot quickly discern it, no, nor the person himself; he fears the work may not be begun in his soul, there is so much corruption and filth in his heart, and such great darkness in his understanding, but yet he bears up in a visible profession, and in that the blade doth consist, for what is the blade of the seed, but a profession of religion?

"Then the ear, and after that the full corn."

In the ear is the substance of the corn, though at first it is tender, yet there is the fruit, though not yet come to maturity; so grace is wrought in a believer's heart, in whom the seed is sowed, though yet it is but weak, and wants time, or the heat of the Sun of righteousness, to strengthen the habits and exercise of that grace, that so it may come to a farther maturity, or by degrees perfected like corn in the ear.

What meant by the ear and full corn in the ear.

“But when the fruit is brought forth, immediately he puts in the sickle because the harvest is come.”

When the fruit is brought forth, that is, when it is fully ripe, then the husbandman, viz., the blessed God, by death gathers his saints unto himself; for by putting in the sickle, I understand death is meant; and as the harvest in another place is called the end of the world, so the end of the world may be said to come on them that God takes away by death; God will not cut down any of his people until they are fully ripe, and fit to die. Thus having briefly opened the several parts of this parable, I shall observe one proposition from the whole, viz.,

What is meant by putting in the sickle.

Doct. That the seed of the word sown in the heart of a hearer, insensibly takes root, and springs up, and gradually grows to full maturity.

In speaking unto this,

1. I shall lay down one or two explanatory propositions by the way of promise.
2. Show how or after what manner the seed springs up, and grows in a sinner's heart.
3. Show why, or by what means it is in its springing up not quickly discerned.
4. Apply it.

First take two previous propositions.

I. First, that the seed of the word doth not take root in the hearts of all persons that hear it; the seed that fell on the high-way side took no root, and our Lord told the Jews, “And ye have not my word abiding in you,” John v. 38; and again he saith, “My word hath no place in you,” John viii. 37, or no rooting in your hearts.

The seed roots not in all hearers.

The reasons why the word takes no root in some may be,

1. Because they watch not against Satan, who is said to catch it out of some men's hearts, “Then cometh the wicked one and catcheth away that which was sown in his heart,” Matt. xiii. 19. The devil hath many ways to catch the seed out of the hearts of men that hear the word (as I have showed in explaining the parable of the sower.)

Why the seed roots not in the hearts of some hearers.

1. He sometimes puts the word out of their hearts, by filling them with earthly thoughts; many perhaps whilst they hear the word, have their minds and thoughts running upon the worldly concerns, and they give way to Satan in those suggestions, to such a degree that they can give no account of what was delivered by the minister.

2. Satan may also catch it away by keeping them ignorant of the word; they understand not what they hear, neither do they know the necessity of endeavouring to understand it; and that they are this sort that Satan steals the word from, is evident by what our Saviour saith, “When any one heareth the word of the kingdom, and understandeth it not, then comes that wicked one and catcheth it away,” Matt. xiii. 19. He understandeth not the doctrine of the gospel; he knows not the end and purpose of the ministration thereof, nor the necessity there is of receiving Jesus Christ, nay, knows not it is the word of God, but looks upon it to be no more than the word of a poor man by whom it is delivered.

3. By persuading them that they have received the word already, and that it is rooted in them, that the person need not trouble himself any farther, but only to hear the word preached in order to edification or farther growth, and not in order to the implantation of grace in his heart; now from all these certainly Satan catcheth the word away, so that it never takes root in them.

4. The devil doth thus chiefly keep such that hear the word from believing in Christ, who is the sole object and chief treasure of the world; Satan cares not how often men hear the word preached, if he can keep them from believing or flying to, or depending upon the Lord Jesus, by an act of true and saving faith: he will never hinder a man from hearing; let him go and hear a sermon every day, if he finds the person propounds no more to himself than only to hear and to rest upon that, and sees not, knows not the necessity of faith, to receive or embrace the Lord Jesus in the promises.

II. Prop. That some persons in whom the word hath taken some rooting, and the blade also appears, yet in a little time it dwindlcth away and comes to nothing; and the reason of this our Saviour shows is because the ground was not good, but either stony or thorny, (as you have formerly heard). My brethren, a heart not thoroughly broken or ploughed up by the conviction of the Spirit; or where the weeds are not rooted up, nor the evil worms destroyed; the seed brings forth no fruit unto perfection, for in them the love of riches and cares of this life, choke the word.

Secondly, I shall show you how, or after what manner or by what means the seed springs up. So insensibly it springs up and grows, that not only ministers may not know the seed hath rooted in this or that person's heart; but (as I hinted,) it may not be quickly discerned by themselves, yet their seed appears to have taken rooting.

How it appears that the seed springs up in such in whom it is rooted.

Good inclinations and desires created in those in whom the seed is rooted.

1. As to the means by which it is known, most evident it is, that the word preached, in the first place, lets the light into their dark hearts about the spiritual state of their souls, and the way by which they came to be lost, and how recovered out of that woful condition; so that the things of another world take up their thoughts, which before they regarded not. "The entrance of thy words giveth light, understanding to the simple," Psal. cxix. 130.

2. Though the rooting is insensibly done, and not known to them, and yet the springing up appears, by the Spirit's creating in their hearts good desires and inclinations, even such that they never found or experienced before in such a nature, nor in such a degree; they now love the word, love to hear it; before a short sermon seemed long to them, they had no love to it, nor a desire after it; but now it is otherwise, they have spiritual inclinations, thoughts, purposes, and desires in their souls, and talk of heavenly things, yea, love to discourse about Christ and the things of Christ, their minds beginning to be spiritual. "They that are after the Spirit, mind the things of the Spirit," Rom. viii. 6. They also grow weary of their old company, and choose to converse and keep company with holy and pious persons, or such who fear God; and by this it appears the seed of the word springs up in their hearts.

3. It gradually grows up, and further appears by the sense they have of the great evil of sin, and corruptions of their hearts, the longing after a thorough change both of heart and life. Certainly, where this is found and experienced, the seed hath taken root and springs up, (whether it be discerned by them or others, or not,) as the effects of their receiving the seed, and of the rooting of it.

The word springs up in them that panteth for it, and love & esteem it above gold.

4. It is, or may be farther known by that vehement thirst that comes upon them after the word. "I opened my mouth, and panted for thy word." The word is certainly received, if the person prizes it, thirsteth after it, and longs for it, and rejoiceth when he meets with it, "I rejoice at thy word, as one that hath found great spoil," Psal. cxix. 162. It is beyond mountains of prey to them, and well may such rejoice that find the pearl of great price, or find life, find a discharge from death. "I have esteemed the words of thy mouth more than my necessary food," Job. xxiii. 12. Or that food that sustains my natural life, (which is more valued than food that tends to make life comfortable to us,) therefore I love this commandment above gold, yea above much fine gold, and not only so, but the word is sweeter than honey, or the honey-comb," Psal. cxix. 162; Psal. xix. 10.

5. Nay, when the word is rooted and springs up in the heart, that soul cries out for Christ, being fallen in love with Jesus Christ. My brethren, there are two things that clearly show the word is rooted in the soul of a sinner, and begins to spring up.

Where the word is rooted and springs up that soul falls out of love with sin, and in love with Jesus Christ.

1. When the person is fallen out of love with sin, with all sin, and as it is the plague of his heart, and the greatest evil, and will never be reconciled to it any more, but can say, I hate vain thoughts; and with Paul, "The evil that I hate, that do I. O wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me from this body of death?" Rom. vii. 14.

2. When he is fallen in love with Jesus Christ, and cries out, I must have Christ or die; what is my life to me if I have not Christ? the rooting of the word, is the rooting of the sinner in love to Christ. "If ye see my Beloved, tell him I am sick of love," Cant. v. 8. If you know Jesus Christ, or meet with him, or pray to him, pray for me; pray tell Christ, one that you know longs for him, pants after him, will die or swoon away if she have him not to be her Christ. "With my soul have I desired thee in the night," &c., Isa. xxvi. 9.

6. When the soul embraces Christ in the arms of faith, even by that faith which works by love, and resteth wholly upon him and hath no confidence in the flesh, but throws itself as an undone and heavy-laden sinner upon Christ, and finds inward peace, or rest and satisfiacion.

7. And also upon this he takes Christ's yoke upon him, as he is directed to do, "Come unto me all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest," Matt. xi. 28, 29; well, and what more? "take my yoke upon you and learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart," ver. 29. That is the yoke of obedience. Some pretend they obey Christ's invitations, they come to him, rest upon him, they receive Christ as a priest, who hath atoned for their sins, and paid their debts, but they do not obey his precepts, or will not take his yoke upon them. In these the word may have no rooting; but if the person readily yields universal obedience unto Christ, or takes him not only as his Saviour, but as his Sovereign; and because he loves the Lord Christ, will keep all his commandments; deny himself, and taking up his cross, and follows him whithersoever he goes; no doubt but the seed of the word is rooted, and springs up in that person's heart.

Thirdly, I shall show you why the seed of the word sown in the sinner's heart, may not be presently discerned by a minister of Christ, that it is rooted in his heart. He may not know it, but may be ready to say, I have laboured in vain, &c.

1. It may live (as other seed oftentimes doth) under the clods the soul hath received it, but the world is as a great clod of earth, and it hinders the man from discovering what Christ hath done for his soul; or perhaps some corruptions bubble up, which makes him think there is no saving work begun yet upon his soul; but he is ready to say (with Rebecca in another case) "If it be so, why am I thus? O I am a vile creature, what a polluted heart have I! what base thoughts, nay, blasphemous thoughts have I! there is certainly none so bad as I, and thus corruption (or the sense of it) keeps the seed of the word or faith from being discerned by the person himself, who also keeps all to himself, and will not discover what strugglings he has within, for some time.

From whence it is the seed sown doth not sometimes presently appear to have sprung up.

2. The seed of the word may be rooted, but the person's soul may fall under some sore temptation of Satan, which fills him with fears and doubts; for commonly when first a sinner receives the word, Satan sets upon him; it is one of the principal times or seasons that he waits for. How many young converts hath he assaulted and furiously set upon. As he was at Joshua's right hand to resist him (when he was engaging in a great work for God) so he opposeth and resisteth all that first set their faces Sion-ward.

3. Perhaps a cold pinching storm may come upon the seed soon after it is sown, and make the very blade to wither (as oftentimes is observed); so a storm of opposition may be raised against a person in whom the spiritual seed is sown; the poor sinner is awakened, and begins to make a visible profession of Jesus Christ; but lo, on sudden a wife raises a storm of opposition against the husband, to hinder him from proceeding any farther, or parents upon an awakened child, son or daughter; or an opposition may be made by some evil and unbelieving neighbour, who may not only reproach him, but dissuade him as much as possible, and may lay such stumbling blocks in his way that may stop him for a short time from declaring what God hath done for his soul.

A cold
pinching storm may cause the blade to wither.

4. Besides the operations of the Spirit are compared to those of the wind, which are sometimes very undiscernable. "The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but knowest not from whence it cometh nor whither it goeth; so is every one that is born of the spirit," John iii. 8. Sometimes the wind blows very strong, and hath strange effects, most visible effects; but at another time it blows so insensibly, that you can hardly discern it at all: so how strongly did the Spirit operate on those Peter preached his first sermon unto, upon the coming down of the Spirit, when three thousand were converted, and presently cried out, What shall we do? But at other times the Spirit blows like a small breath of wind, and its operations are not soon discerned.

5. May be the blade of profession may not appear quickly, or be presently discerned, by reason the person's faith is small and weak, like a grain of mustard-seed, and the soul from hence wants courage to tell others what God hath done for it. "Come to me all ye that fear God, and I will tell you what he hath done for my soul," Psal. lxxvi. 16. But God hath in a wonderful manner appeared to him and wrought in him, he had a strong faith; but saith a weak believer, I would gladly tell the minister, (under whose ministry God hath wrought upon me,) my experiences, but I am ashamed; I fear I shall be able to say nothing, my faith is so weak, and my fears and doubts so great and stroug in me.

6. A minister may not be able to discern that the seed is rooted, and that the blade that springs up, is the product of the seed sown in good ground, or in an honest heart, because the blade sprang up in the stony and thorny ground, and showed at first to be the right blade, (or that which springs out of the good ground). Well, says he, I know not what to think nor what to say, I hope the work is a saving work that is begun on this and that person, but I must wait and see whether it will abide the sun's scorching beams, and cold storms of winter; for hypocrites may say as much as they have said, I must see what the walks, and the humility, and constancy of these persons will be, and how they carry it under those changes they may meet with, or pass under, in the course of their lives. I have known, saith he, some when apprentices, very zealous, who have come to nothing; when they came to set up their trades and were married, they soon withered, and lost all that religion they made a show of.

APPLICATION.

This parable may be of use. 1. To ministers. 2. To sinners. 3. To believers.

1. We may infer from hence, that the faithful ministers of the gospel are Christ's seedsmen, they cast the seed into the ground, and must not regard either wind nor weather, but preach the word in season and out of season. Moreover, according as they sow, they may expect to reap; if they sow plentifully, are very laborious and constant in their work, they may see increase through the blessing of God accordingly.

2. They also may learn from hence to be satisfied in a faithful discharge of their ministry, let the effect thereof be what it will; they may sleep and rise night and day as other men, and not be over solicitous about the success of their labours, the issue of all lying in the special blessing of God, and God accepteth of them. "For we are unto God a sweet savour of Christ in them that are saved, and in them that perish." God will be glorified in such who hear and believe, in respect of his free grace; so that unto them they are a savour of life unto life: And to each that believe not God will be glorified in his justice, to whom they are a savour of death unto death, for thereby he will leave them without excuse in the great day; and to themselves they may say (with their great Master) "Though Israel be not gathered, I shall be glorious;" God will glorify them, they shall shine as the stars for ever.

Ministers are acceptable to God.

3. They may also expect success, though it does not appear presently, and therefore in the morning sow the seed, and in the evening not to withhold their hand, because they know not which may prosper. However, it shall not be in vain, "for as the rain cometh down, and the snow from heaven, and returneth not hither, but watereth the earth, and maketh it to bring forth and bud, &c.; so shall my words be that goeth forth out of my mouth: It shall not return to me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the things whereto I send it."

Secondly, to sinners,

1. Let them see what sort of ground they are, and cry to God to make their hearts tender, and fit soil to receive the seed.

2. Also consider what it is they propound to themselves in hearing the word, and also what the cause may be why the seed takes no root in their hearts.

3. They may likewise learn from hence to be much in hearing, and also to look up to God, or cry to him to open and prepare their hearts to hear and receive the word.

Thirdly, to believers.

1. They ought to bless God that hath given them an hearing ear, and seeing eye, and an understanding heart, when others in hearing, hear not, and seeing see not, neither do they understand, "it being given to them to understand the mysteries of kingdom of heaven, but unto others it is not given," Matt. xiii. 11.

2. Also you ought to try and examine yourselves, and see whether the seed revives and grows, yea or no in your hearts, if not, to enquire what the reason of it may be; it may be feared that some grow more in the head than in the heart; more in pride than in humility.

3. Also let us all remember the harvest day will come, and since God affords us ripening weather, the warm shavings of the sun, and showers of heaven; what cause have we to praise and magnify the riches of his grace, for many nations have not the word at all; the seed is denied them, and others have not fruitful seasons: the sun shines not on them, nor have they such fruitful showers as we in this city and nation have. But woe to them, whether professors or others, who oft received this rain, &c., and yet bring forth nothing but briars and thorns.

THE
OF
EVERY PLANT GOD HATH NOT PLANTED.

SERMON XII.

But he answered and said, every plant my heavenly Father hath not planted shall be rooted up.—Matt. xv. 13.

THE occasion of this simile rose from what precedes in ver. 12.

“Then came his disciples and said, Knowest thou not that the pharisees were offended after they heard that saying,”

So the design of our Saviour herein is,

The scope of the simile.

1. To show the sad state of the pharisees, who, though they were so nice and strict as not to eat with unwashed hands, yet had unwashed or filthy hearts and lives.

2. That what plant the blessed God hath not planted, though they may remain for a time, yet they shall be rooted up in the end. In speaking to this,

1. I shall open what our Lord may mean by plants.

2. Raise some points of doctrine from hence.

1. Every plan. By every plant may be meant.

1. Every doctrine. 2. Every practice. 3. Every person.

1. Every doctrine, that is not of God or a truth of God, though asserted and maintained with great confidence by men of corrupt principles, though it hath stood a long time, and thought to be an undoubted truth, yet at last it shall be rooted up, and be manifested to be an error, and so be cast off and disowned for ever. The Pharisees held many pernicious doctrines, “Teaching for doctrines the commandments of men,” Mark viii. 7. But all their evil notions and traditions were in a few years rooted up; and so in the end shall all the evil plants of false doctrines, and errors of these perilous times; the glorious light of the gospel (which will shine forth in the latter days) will root out all the Popish, Socinian, and Arminian errors, with Quakerism, and all other evil plants of false doctrine whatsoever.

False doctrine evil plants.

2. Every practice, i. e., whatsoever is practised as a truth of God, or as an ordinance of Christ, or whatsoever he appointed not, as are ceremonies introduced into the worship of God; that are none of his institution but is merely human, shall be rooted up. Together with all acts of voluntary humility, such as Paul speaks of, “which things have a show of wisdom and humility, and neglecting the body, not in honour to the satisfying the flesh,” Col. ii. 23. Many of which acts of pretended humility, are in several orders of men in the Popish Church, and have appeared in others also in this nation; Roger Crabe is not forgot. Not long since this Crabe strove to delude divers poor people, taught them to abstain from eating of flesh, and to feed his herbs and roots.)

Evil practices and traditions of men, bad plants.

3. And every person, that is, every one who seem saints, or profess themselves to be Christians, or plants in God's vineyard, that are not sincere or true believers, or plants of God's planting, shall be rooted up; though they may have stood and gone for good Christians a great while, yet they shall be cut down, and cast into the fire at last. From hence

He lived first at Chesham in Buckinghamshire.

Hypocrite plants, not of God's planting.

note.
1. Doct. That there are some plants that God never planted, which shall be rooted up.

2. Doct. That those plants that God hath planted, shall never be rooted up.

In speaking to the first of these.

1. I shall show what is meant by planting, and also show who planted them, and where those plants may be planted.

2. Run the parallel between natural and mystical plants.

3. Show why those plants which God hath not planted shall be rooted up.

What planting doth denote. 1. Planting is setting or putting things into the ground, whether they are trees, herbs, or flowers. So mystical planting denotes the transplanting (in a spiritual way) this or that person.

1. From a course of open profaneness into a visible profession; they leave their old course of life, their old company or companions, and also they leave the people and their worship among whom they before walked.

And they may be planted in a visible church of Christ, or be set in God's vineyard, and be called his plants. "The vineyard of the Lord of hosts is the house of Israel, and the men of Judah his pleasant plants," Isa. v. 7. True, these were plants of the national church of the Jews, they grew up by generation as they sprung from the loins of Abraham by Isaac, lineally, and were none of them transplanted to a better soil, during the time of the standing of that church-state; but some of them were removed when the gospel congregational church took place, and was constituted by our Lord and his apostles in the primitive time.

Quest. Who is it that plants people in the gospel church?

Who plants persons in the gospel church. 1. Answ. If they are gracious men and women, God planted them there. Our Saviour shows some are planted by his heavenly Father, who is called a husbandman, &c. John xv. 1. "And the Lord added to the church daily such that should be saved." Acts ii. 47.

Ministers are planters. 2. Gospel ministers may be said to plant them also, "I have planted, and Apollos watered," 1 Cor. iii. 6. God honoured Paul to be a great planter in his gospel church; ministers are said to plant by preaching, when God gives the increase, or blesseth their ministry to the conversion of sinners. But,

II. I shall run a parallel between an external planter, planting; and a spiritual planter, and spiritual planting.

Why ministers are compared to planters. 1. A planter, is one instructed into the mystery of that art, he has wisdom and skill in planting which others have not; so a minister of Christ is one God hath taught the mysteries of the gospel unto, and hath endowed with wisdom, spiritual and ministerial gifts, and graces which others have not. Paul shows when Christ "ascended on high he gave gifts to men," Eph. iv. 8, that is, to fit and qualify them to be spiritual planters, or preachers of the Gospel. Human learning and knowledge of the tongues cannot make men ministers of Christ, but they may be ministers of man's making only, or be national ministers, but not be Christ's ministers. Though the knowledge of the tongues are very useful to ministers, and such learning is not to be condemned, provided no stress is laid upon such learning, rendering it absolutely necessary, or that it is sufficient to make men ministers of Christ. It is a good handmaid, but a bad mistress.

Spiritual preachers must have a regular call. 2. A planter must have a call by the owner of the vineyard, or be in an orderly way empowered by the chief and great Planter, before he is allowed to plant in his vineyard; so every minister must be called and regularly empowered, or ordained a pastor or a planter by the rules of the gospel, before he is, or ought to be allowed to preach and plant persons in God's vineyard. "How shall they preach except they are sent," Rom. x. 15; that is, unless they receive a regular call and authority from Christ so to do.

With what instrument gospel planters do their work. 2. A planter must have fit and proper instruments to do this work; so ministers have the gospel, which is an instrument of God's power in the hand of the Spirit, by which they work and plaut sinners into Christ, and in his church. "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God to salvation unto all that believe," &c., Rom. i. 16. The gospel is also called "the ingrafted word, which is able to save the soul," James i. 21. Sinners by it through the Spirit are grafted into Christ, or obtain union with him; it is done instrumentally by the word preached, but efficaciously by the Spirit.

Ministers do not know what kind of plants they planted in God's vineyard. 4. A planter doth not know infallibly the difference there is in plants, he may think a plant is of the right kind, but may be mistaken; so a minister knowing not the hearts of men, may think this and that person is a true person, is a true plant, a sincere convert; but may be deceived as Philip was in Simon the sorcerer, who (it is said) "Believed, and was baptized," Acts viii. 13.

5. A skilful planter knows that a wild, ungrafted tree never bears good fruit; no, it must be removed and grafted with a better kind, so ministers know that an unregenerated man, who only grows out of the wild olive tree, I mean the first Adam, cannot bring forth good fruit; every sinner must therefore be transplanted, by being renewed, and must by the Spirit be grafted into Jesus Christ; and as every twig a planter designs to graft, must be cut off with a sharp knife, and presently grafted in the new stock, so must sinners by the word and Spirit (which is sharp as a two-edged sword) be cut off from sin, the love of this world, &c., and immediately be grafted into Jesus Christ. "They were pricked in their heart," Acts ii. 37; this is the work of the Spirit in conviction.

Every grafted plant bears no good fruit

6. A planter observes the proper season for planting, as when the ground is prepared and made soft by the showers of heaven; so do ministers observe the season of planting and sowing the seed of the word, even when God hath prepared the hearts of sinners, and made their spirits tender by the divine rain.

A planter observes the proper season of planting.

VII. A planter doth not only plant, but also water. So ministers do not only preach for conviction and conversion, but also for consolation, and building up, that believers may grow in grace, and in the knowledge of Jesus Christ.

Plants must be watered.

2 Pet. iii. 18.

VIII. A planter greatly rejoices to see his plants grow, thrive, and bear much fruit, but he knows this is from God alone. So a minister rejoiceth greatly to see the saints (that he hath instrumentally planted in God's vineyard) to grow in faith, love, in humility, in knowledge, and in all the fruits of righteousness; but all the increase of his labour he says, with Paul, is of God, "but God gave the increase," 1 Cor. iii. 6.

Planters rejoice to see their plants fruitful.

So much as to planters; I shall speak a little farther as touching plants.

Plants must be well rooted.

1. Plants must be well rooted that bring forth fruit; so must Christians be well rooted, "Ye being rooted in love," Eph. iii. 17, there must be a rooting in Christ, rooting in faith, rooting in love, rooting in humility, rooting in the doctrine of the gospel, or else they will be soon plucked up, or blown down by every wind of doctrine.

2. Plants must be pruned and purged also, though this is chiefly God's own and more immediate work. "Every branch that beareth fruit, he purgeth that it may bring forth, more fruit," John xv. 2. By mortification and sanctification God purges his saints, he purgeth their conscience from dead works. "He purgeth the filth of the daughters of Sion." By his word he purges them, and by his Spirit he purges all; by the rod, or by trials, losses, and crosses, and persecution, he purgeth them also.

3. Some plants who promised well, prove barren and good for nothing: so some spiritual plants prove naught and barren like the fruitless fig-tree, they seemed to have much zeal, love, and faith for a little time, but lo, by-and-by they are offended, and "whither away," Matt. xiii. 21, and come to nothing.

4. Plants that wither, proving utterly barren after waiting three or four years, are rooted up or cut down; so such church members or professors, who prove loose, carnal and utterly barren, after long patience, God roots up or cuts down. "These three years I come seeking fruit on this fig-tree, and found none, cut it down, why cumbereth it the ground? Again, it is said, "Every branch in me that beareth not fruit he taketh away;" John xiii 2. And then they being withered, are cast into the fire and burned.

Barren persons after long waiting are rooted up or cut down.

Secondly. Why shall every plant God hath not planted be rooted up?

1. Because they are wild plants, plants never transplanted out of the evil and corrupt root, I mean the first Adam, but remain dead in sin and trespasses; being of the works of the law, and so remain under the curse, and being not made good trees, cannot bring forth good fruit.

Why every plant God hath not planted shall be rooted up.

2. Because all plants that God hath not planted, have no right to be planted in his vineyard; the gospel church consisting (or ought to consist) only of renewed or regenerate persons, they are only such God adds to, or planteth in the gospel church. True, in the legal and typical church of Israel the carnal seed of Abraham were planted, and had a right of church membership, and privileges as such; but that church-state is dissolved, old things being gone, and all things now are become new. The gospel being congregational, ought wholly to consist of such who are made new creatures.

3. Because they do but cumber the ground, (as is showed in the parable of the barren fig-tree) they are prejudicial or injurious to God's vineyard, and a great reproach and scandal to religion, exposing the name of God to contempt, with his ways and ordinances; is it not an unbecoming sight to see a crab-tree grow in a king's vineyard, or briars and thorns planted there? would he endure to behold them set and grow up amongst his rich and costly plants and excellent flowers, that are of great worth both for pleasure and profit? why these are like "crab-trees, briars and thorns," Heb. vi. 6, 8; and therefore it is a shame they should besuffered to grow in the vineyard of the King of heaven and earth.

4. Because they are good for nothing but for the fire, or to be burned, being rotten-hearted hypocrites. "The ways of the Lord are right, and the just shall walk in them, but transgressors shall fall therein," Hos. xiv. 9.

USE.

This may inform us what just rebuke such will one day meet with from God, who bring in or plant the carnal seed of believers in their pretended gospel churches; be sure such plants, of which the New Testament congregations do not, nor ought not to consist, are plants that God never planted, but the carnal seed of believers, as such, I mean little babes, according to the constitution of the gospel church ought not to be admitted as members thereof; though some of the children of believers are in the election of grace, and of such belongs the kingdom of heaven; yet it is not known which of the children of believers are elected to salvation; besides baptism and the Lord's Supper are ordinances of mere positive right, and none but such who do believe, and make a profession of their faith, being regenerated persons, ought to be received or admitted to either of those ordinances, or be members of the church of Christ. Faith and repentance being required of all that ought to be baptized and planted in the gospel congregations, by virtue of Christ's great commission, and the practice of the apostolical churches.

Matt. xxviii.

bol now is

Book 1.

Rom. vi. 3, 4.

They must be such that are dead to sin, and raised by the operation of God, to walk in newness of life; all that are to be baptized ought to have the inward spiritual grace, who have the outward sign or symbol of it given unto them.

2. Let hypocrites (or such persons who are not sincere) who are planted in gospel churches, tremble; for since God planted them not there, they must and shall in a short time be rooted up.

3. This may also show what care ministers and churches should take about planting people in their congregations, lest they receive such persons who are none of the plants of the Lord, nor such that bring glory to him: but contrariwise, greatly dishonour him, and are a reproach to his churches, and to his ways and ordinances.

But to proceed to another proposition.

2. Doct. All the plants which God himself hath planted, shall stand and never be rooted up. This truth, my brethren, is clearly implied in this simile.

In speaking to this, I shall briefly do to two things.

1. Show what kind of plants they are that God hath planted.

2. Show why they shall never be rooted up.

First show what plants they be.

What kind of persons they be that are God's plants.

I. The plants God hath planted are truly grafted into Jesus Christ, they are united by the Spirit unto Christ, who is a living stock; it is one thing, my brethren, to be planted into Christ's vineyard, and another thing to be planted or grafted into Christ, who is the true olive-tree.

See the parable John
xv. 1, 2,
opened.

II. The plants of God's planting have the Spirit of God in them, the Spirit is indeed the bonds of our union with Christ, "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his," Rom. viii. 9; from hence also they are quickened, they have life in them, as well as they are united to a living stock, and not only life in them, but are spiritual and lively also (all other plants I showed you are dead).

III. The plants God hath planted, have holy habits planted in them, and thus they become good trees, good plants, their vicious habits are rooted out, they have changed hearts or are regenerated persons, or such that are born again; they are "new creatures," John iii. 3, 5: have new qualities, new desires, new affections, and so are holy and heavenly plants. Every grace of the Holy Spirit is planted in them, as "Faith, love, hope, humility, patience, temperance, sobriety, meekness, and brotherly kindness," 2 Cor. v. 17. And these things render them to be lovely plants, and plants that God's own right hand hath planted, which shall never be barren nor unfruitful, 2 Pet. i. 8.

IV. And from hence it appears, they have the root of the matter in them, from whence all their fruit springs up, and grows in them, even all the fruits of obedience and good works. "Why persecute we him, seeing the root of the matter is found in him," Job. xix

28. Our Lord shows that the stony ground hearers, "had not root in them," Matt. xiii. 21. But believers have Christ in them, who is the root of the matter, the root of faith, love, &c., they are rooted in Christ: but note from that passage in Job, to censure a godly man, is a kind of persecution. "Why do you persecute me as God, and are not satisfied with my flesh?" Job xix. 22. God hath power to judge and censure us, he knows our hearts; but man doth not and therefore ought not to pass any rash judgment, or not judge any good man's state, as to censure him as an hypocrite, though many great afflictions and unusual trials, and manifold infirmities may attend him, yet they may be good plants, holy persons in God's sight.

Question, What is meant by the root of the matter?

Answer, Christ primarily, as I hinted, is the root of the matter, Christ, as God is the original root and Mediator, the root in whom we are planted by the Spirit; yet, as Mr. Caryl notes, habitual grace may be said also to be the root of the matter, or that first grace that is infused into the soul; or, as others, sincerity the root may be uprightness of the heart; be sure such have the root of the matter in them.

Question, why is it called a root, or the root of the matter?

Answer, because a root is a hidden thing, it lies deep in the earth, and out of sight; so the Spirit and the habits of grace are hidden things, and lie out of the sight of men; we read of the hidden man of the heart, our life is a hidden life.

2. A fruitful root tends to make a fruitful plant, and greatly feeds and strengthens it: so we being rooted in Christ, borne by this root, springing up out of this root, we are made fruitful Christians, and obtain strength: it is for want of being rooted in Christ, or want of the habits of grace, that other plants are soon rooted up, wither, and come to nothing.

3. It is hard to root up a tree that hath a deep root, but yet that may be done; but a believer being rooted in Christ, he is such a deep and hidden root; none, neither sin, the world, nor devil can root up this root, nor hinder the sap from feeding those plants that grow out of this root.

V. The plants of God's planting are full of heavenly juice; "the trees of the Lord are full of sap, the Cedars of Lebanon which he hath planted; they are full of the Spirit of wisdom and knowledge, of faith, zeal, &c., they are fruitful plants. "He that abideth in me, and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit," John xv. 5. They are holy men and women, they are called trees of righteousness; not carnal, proud, covetous, contentious, or quarrelsome persons; no, such show they are not plants of God's planting. Gracious persons are known by their holy lives, as trees are known by the fruit they bear, "That they may be called trees of righteousness, the planting of the Lord, that he may be glorified," Isa. lxi. 3.

VI. They are plants that never cease bearing of fruit, their fruit fails not, their faith, their love, their zeal, their good works, their obedience, their piety, shall continue, and also they shall bring forth fruit in due season, "And he shall be like a tree planted by the rivers of water, that bringeth forth his fruit in his season; his leaf shall not wither &c., Psal. i. 3. Some bring forth fruit for a short time, but their fruit fails, and their very leaf withers, i. e., they fault in their outward profession, and cannot keep up in outward duties of religion; but the plants of God's planting, "They shall not see when heat cometh, but her leaf shall be green, and shall not be careful in years of drought, neither cease from yielding fruit," Jer. xvii. 8.

Secondly, why shall not the plants of God be rooted up?

1. Because they are ordained to bring forth fruit; what man will root up a very fruitful tree that always is fruitful. Now, as you hear, such plants are the plants of God's planting; neither indeed can it be otherwise, by virtue of Christ's ordination, "Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you and ordained you that you should go and bring forth fruit, and that your fruit should remain," John xv. 16. How should such plants be ever rooted up that are ordained to eternal life, and also are ordained to bear fruit, and that their fruit shall remain.

2. Because they are (as you heard) planted in Christ, united by the Holy Spirit to the Lord Jesus, and so grow out of the root and offspring of David, "Because I live, ye shall live also," John xiv. 19. Only Christ ever lives, their root lives, their head lives, and therefore the trees, the plants, that grow out of this root shall ever live also; and the members of such a head must live; for shall the head live for ever, and the members die; abhor the notion that some men assert; Christ lived on earth that we might live; he died also that we might live, and rose from the dead that we might live, and now lives, in heaven, to intercede for us that we may live; and therefore none of these plants can be rooted up, but must live for ever.

This is spoken to the exposition of the parable of the sower. What the root of the matter is.

Why it is called a root

Why God's plants shall never be rooted up.

3. Because the love of God is everlasting and unchangeable to all these plants, nothing "can separate us from the love of Christ, nor from the love of God, which is in Jesus Christ our Lord," Jer. xxxi. 3. Besides, (as I hinted) they are members of Christ's mystical body. Can he lose a limb of his body, a member of his body; no, certainly, he shall have a perfect body, and therefore they cannot be rooted up, Rom. viii. 35, 39.

4. Because none can pluck them up, no enemy can root them up, as God will not, so sin, the flesh, the world, and the devil cannot, "I give them eternal life, and they shall never perish, neither can any pluck them out of my hand. My Father that gave them me, is greater than all and none is able to pluck them out of my Father's hand. I and my father are one," John x. 28, 29, 30. Doth the Father love them with an eternal love, and hath Christ bought them, redeemed them with his own blood, and hath the Spirit renewed and sanctified them, and shall they after all this be rooted up? will God suffer sin to do it, or Satan to do it; no, sure, if they sin, "they have an Advocate with the Father;" their sins are satisfied for, and are forgiven for ever.

5. The prayer and intercession of Christ prevents their being utterly rooted up. "I have prayed for thee that thy faith fail not." Our Lord hath prayed that all that the Father gave him, may be where he is, &c., and he hath undertaken also to bring them all to heaven, and must lose not one; therefore they cannot be rooted up, and finally perish.

See the parable of the sower opened in the 1st. Book.

APPLICATION.

I. I infer that no doctrine is more comfortable than the doctrine of final perseverance. See you that are believers, that you are not drawn away from the belief thereof by men of dark minds, who understand little of the nature of the covenant, of the love of God, nor of the suretyship of Jesus Christ.

Exhort. But, O, see you show forth the praises of this God, who with his own hand hath planted you in a fruitful hill.

Trial. Examine yourselves lest you should not be plants that our heavenly Father hath planted.

That you may not be deceived, have you received the Holy Spirit?

1. It is a soul-illuminating spirit, what light have you?
2. It is a soul-humbling spirit.
3. It is a grace-implanting spirit.
4. It is a soul-assimulating spirit, it forms the image of God in the soul.
5. It is a soul-sanctifying, and sin-mortifying spirit.
6. It is a soul-rooting, and a soul-establishing spirit.

Comfort to believers, or to these blessed plants. My brethren, the corruptions of our own hearts cannot, shall not root us up; Satan by his temptations cannot root us up; poverty,

Rom. viii. 38, 39. necessity, reproaches, nor persecution cannot root us up; deceivers nor delusions cannot root us up; "This our Lord shows is impossible, for if it was, they would deceive even the very elect," Matt. xxiv. 24. The habit of grace can never be lost; though you fall, yet you shall rise again; notwithstanding your fears, your doubts and deceitful hearts, and the snares of the world, you shall stand. I will conclude with the words of the Psalmist, "the righteous shall flourish like the palm tree; he shall grow like the cedar in Lebanon, those that are planted in the house of the Lord, shall flourish in the courts of our God; they shall still bring forth fruit in old age, they shall be fat and flourishing, to show that the Lord is upright, he is our Rock, and there is no unrighteousness in him," Psal. xcii. 12, 15.

THE
OF THE UNJUST STEWARD OPENED.

SERMON XIII.

And he said unto his disciples, there was a certain rich man which had a steward, and the same was accused unto him that he had wasted his goods.

And he said unto him, how is it that I hear this of thee? give an account of thy stewardship, for thou mayest be no longer steward.—Luke xvi. 1—3.

THE main scope of this parable only is to be attended to, or what our Saviour chiefly designed hereby. Many ungodly and atheistical persons have vilified our Saviour, and contemned the holy Gospel, from what is said by our Lord, in commending the unjust steward, through their ignorance, not considering for what he commended him. Our annotators say that Hierom thought this a very obscure parable, and that Julien, the apostate, and some of the Heathen philosophers, from hence cast reproach upon our blessed Lord and his holy doctrine, as if he commends an unjust action of a wicked man.

Parables, my brethren (I have often told you) have their disparities; our Lord doth not commend the unjust steward for his injustice (whom he brands with the odious character of an unjust steward, in which no doubt he refers to his last acts of injustice, as well as to any of his former acts) but for his care, or great wisdom in providing for himself for the future time, when put out of his stewardship.

In speaking to this parable I shall,

1. Show the chief design of it, and wherein it is full of instruction unto us.

2. Show the divers disparities that are therein.

3. Open the parts thereof, and also what follows about what our Lord speaks, concerning the mammon of unrighteousness.

1. One chief thing (as I hinted) I conceived is to show, that it is part of great wisdom in men to provide for the time to come, or for an endless eternity, by the example of the unjust steward, who took care to provide for his future subsistence (when turned out of his stewardship) whilst he was in this world.

The design or scope of the parable.

2. To show that his disciples and all men are but stewards of all the good things they have, whether they are spirituals or temporals.

3. And to let us also know that we must all be called to give an account of our stewardship, and if we are unfaithful, we shall have a sad account to give one day.

4. Moreover, from what follows in this chapter, our Lord shows what a great duty it is to improve worldly riches to our own profit, or to the advantage of our souls, and that such who are unfaithful in and about a wise improvement of such things (which are the less) should God give them true riches, they would be unfaithful in and about the things which are the greater.

Secondly, I shall show you, that there are several great disparities, so that this parable much differs from several others.

1. There is a great disparity in that the Lord and his steward, had distinct, particular or separate interests to carry on; the Lord's interest was one, and his steward's another; and whilst the steward sought to advance his own interest, he injured his master, or prejudiced his; for whilst he made use of his master's goods for his own profit, he could not in so doing add to his master's advantage, but the contrary.

Disparities in this parable.

But the Lord Jesus, and all his servants have but one spiritual interest, to manage or carry on in the world: and whatsoever we do, or can do truly tending to enrich our souls, doth also tend to advance Christ's interest and his glory; and that which tends to Christ's honour, or to the advancement of his interest, cannot tend to enrich us, but rather to undo and ruin our souls.

2. The men of this world many times get riches and grow great in an unjust and unrighteous way (which our Lord here condemns); but no person can get true spiritual riches in an unjust way, or by using any unlawful courses. Some are overmuch righteous, denying themselves of the use of God's good creatures, and neglecting the body, under a pretence of righteousness and religion, and this is to seek to be spiritually rich in an undue or unlawful way, as the Papists vow a single life, and their Friars beg and go barefoot, &c. Moreover, in our time there arose a sect that lived upon herbs and roots, and would wear no woollen garments, nor hats, unless made of straw, and all under the show of righteousness, religion, and self-denial. But these things being but a-piece of voluntary humility, and not commanded of God, is the ready way to become miserable for ever, rather than to be truly spiritually rich, and can no ways tend to make men truly happy.

4. The friends that the unjust steward made for himself, was by his own craftiness, and in an unrighteous way meriting their friendship; but no man can any way, no, not by the highest acts of justice or mercy, merit any thing of God, or deserve his love and favour, or procure his friendship, for all we are and have is the Lord's.

5. Nor can any friend which a wicked man can obtain, or make for himself, receive him (when he fails or dies) into everlasting habitation. But he that obtains God to be his Friend, and Christ to be his Friend, when he fails, they will receive them into an everlasting habitation, or dwelling-place in heaven; so that in these respects consisteth vast disparities.

Thirdly, I shall open some of the chief parts of this parable that seem most obscure.

"And the Lord commended the unjust steward, because he had done wisely."

Some think these words refer to the Lord of the unjust steward, who when he heard how craftily his servant had acted for himself, commended him; but certainly the words refer to our blessed Lord, he spake these words and commended him; not for his injustice, or for defrauding his master, no (as was hinted), for that act he utterly condemned him, by calling him an unjust steward; but for his taking care in providing for a time to come, when turned out of his stewardship, or when he failed and foresaw a time of need would come, and he being not brought up to hard labour, "could not dig," and "to beg was ashamed;" but would notwithstanding provide for a future time of wants and straits, and to provide for such a time he commended him; but the way he took to do it, he condemned, saying, "the children of this world," &c., that is, earthly men, who regard not eternity, or wicked men, such as this unjust steward was, who make no provision for their souls, "are wiser in their generation, than the children of light;" that is, than the children of God, who are called "the children of the day," or of the light, being born from above, and called "out of darkness into marvellous light."

How wiser? our Lord shows, i. e., "in their generation," that is, in their business or about earthly things, they are more wise (as if our Lord should say) in providing for the body, or how to live in this world, than the children of light are to project ways, and so endeavour to promote the glory of God, and the profit and comfort of their own souls.

"And I say unto you, make to yourselves friends of the mammon of unrighteousness."

1. By mammon of unrighteousness, (I conceive) is meant worldly riches, called unrighteous mammon, because of those manifold evils, snares, and temptations they expose men unto that have them.

"Make to yourselves friends of," &c.

The friends who we are bid to make unto ourselves, are such (it appears) that are able when we fail, to receive us into everlasting habitation; and evident it is, that none can do that, but the "Glorious Three in One," the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, or ever adorable Trinity.

"When ye fail," &c., that is, when ye die; for it is then that all God's faithful servants are received into that eternal dwelling-place above.

But the difficulty seems to lie in these words, i. e., "make unto yourselves friends." Can any make God and Jesus Christ their friends? no, not that any can merit his friendship, or by doing any thing to deserve such friendship, that is impossible, because "when we have done all we can do, we are unprofitable servants." Besides, by bestowing our earthly goods or treasure on the poor, we do but give that which is our Lord's own, we are but stewards of all things we have, and therefore cannot oblige God, or make him our friend thereby, "And of thine own have we given thee," 1 Chron. xxix. 14. But nevertheless in distributing of earthly riches to the poor saints, or to further and promote the interest of Christ our great Master, God declares how well he accepts it at our hands, and it is so well pleasing to the blessed Jesus, and to the Holy Spirit, that they will show themselves our friends in the time of our necessity, even as our Lord shows that such who lose all for his sake, or part with all they have in love to him, that such that have "an hundred fold in this world, and in the world to come everlasting life." Though not in specie, yet in worth or value; that which is an hundred-fold better than that we part with; and this as an act of friendship, or an act of love and infinite kindness, though not of merit: God hath promised to reward all the services of his people, though they are not rewards of debt, but of grace.

Christ calls them that do the will of his Father, his brother, his sister and mother, not that we can make him to esteem us as his friends and dear relations, by procuring such favours as one man may procure or purchase kindness of another, but only to show it is as acceptable to him as if we could deserve at his hand: so that one great design of our Saviour in this parable, is to press his disciples to charity, by showing that nothing they lay out, or part with of their substance, will redound to such advantage and profit to them, as what they part with for Christ's sake, either to the poor, or for the promoting of his interest in this world.

"He that is faithful in that which is least is faithful in much," &c., ver. 10.

The riches of this world are the least of our Master's goods, and such that are not faithful in distributing them as God requires, our Lord shows will not be faithful in improving of spiritual gifts and endowments; such that neglect his poor, or will not improve their external talent of worldly riches, to the glory of God, and good of his church and people, will not improve their time, and the opportunities the Lord gives them in his service and holy worship, in order to his honour, the credit of religion, and their own spiritual profit, peace, and comfort, or that he who loves not his brother whom he sees daily, loves not God whom he sees not.

The riches of this world the least of our master's goods.

"And he that is unjust in the least is unjust in much."

Though among men it be not universally so, yet commonly it is so, and all men conclude that he that is unjust in small matters will be so in greater things were they intrusted in his hand; and who will trust him with great things that proves unfaithful in small things; therefore he that is unfaithful to men, or to his poor brother, will not be faithful to God in discharge of his duty in the great things of his worship, name, and glory, by improving those gifts or spiritual talents received.

"If therefore ye have not been faithful in the unrighteous mammon, who will commit to your trust the true riches?"

What meant by true riches.

1. Unrighteous mammon is here opposed to the true riches. Some think by true riches is meant the gospel and the ministration of it, which Christ will not commit to men, who are not faithful in distributing of their earthly riches to those great ends God hath commanded, or that will be only for themselves or love themselves, or not regard the church of God, nor to feed the bellies of the poor. Will Christ commit the treasure of the gospel and care of the souls of his people unto such? No sure, for if they improve not worldly riches that way he has appointed, who can think they will be faithful and full of thought about the improvement of the true riches, and in taking care of the souls of his people.

But others rather think by the true riches, our Saviour means special and effectual grace, which, say they, is of all the true riches; and if taken so, then it teacheth this truth, that God is justified in the denying of his special grace to those who do not make use, or duly improve those common gifts and graces they are entrusted with, and so the damnation of men will be just, because they do not make use of that light, gifts, knowledge, and abilities they have received of God. Our annotators seem to take it thus, but not as if God will try all men about the improvement of common grace, before he will give special, as some corrupt persons have imagined; and hath obliged himself to give special grace to all them that faithfully improve common gifts, grace, and abilities, and that the only cause why some have not the one, is because they improve not the other; as if grace were procured by natural improvements, or grace depended upon nature or God's will, upon the will and the faithfulness of the will of the creature. This error I have in opening other parables sufficiently detected.

How many great sinners hath God suddenly, as an act of sovereign grace, effectually called, who never improved any of those common favours and abilities God entrusted them with. Nothing that sinners can do can oblige God, or be a motive to him to give his special grace to them; no, he only acts from his own love and sovereign pleasure, in giving himself and his Son unto poor sinners. I shall leave my reader to take which sense of these he best approves; perhaps there may be another sense given, that differs from both these.

“If therefore ye have not been faithful in that which is another man’s, who shall give you that which is your own,” ver. 12. Some read, “If you have not been faithful in things that are without you, which are little, compared with things that are within you.”

But I conceive our Lord in these words,

The riches of this world are not a godly person’s own, but another man’s.

1. Shows that the riches of this world are not ours, or not his disciples; they are more properly another man’s, that is, the earthly man’s; they are his riches, his portion. The riches of this world were not purchased for the saints, nor promised to them as part of their inheritance; no, but the true riches, spiritual riches and righteousness: and if God gives us some of the earthly man’s portion, which is not our own proper riches, and we are unfaithful in improving that, what ground have we to expect God will give us more and more of our own riches, i. e., more faith, knowledge, peace, and joy in believing, though purchased for us. It is no doubt mentioned here, as a powerful argument or motive to distribute freely, or plentifully part with our worldly riches to the uses God calls for.

“That which is another man’s.”

2. It may refer to the poor, for wealth put into the hands of rich saints is the poor’s. (1.) They are Christ’s stewards, into whose hands he hath put all the relief he designs for his poor members, as the proverb is, “The poor man’s belly is the rich man’s barn.” Rich men must not say their gold and silver is their own, no, it is Christ’s poor; they by his ordination have right to it.

2. Riches for the sake of the poor are given to them that have them; our Lord foreseeing many of his people would be poor, and not have to supply their own necessities, puts a supply for them of what they need into this brother or that sister’s hand, that so they may have what they need. (3.) Our Lord commands the rich to hand out of what he hath entrusted them with unto the poor, and tells them also they are but his stewards, and that he will call them ere long to give up their accounts; and thus worldly riches in the hands of Christ’s stewards, may be said to be other men’s, and not that which is their own.

Now having according to the small light received, opened what seems difficult in this parable, I shall proceed to take notice of one or two propositions from the scope or chief design of our Lord herein.

1. Doct. That the servants of Christ are but stewards of all the good things that are in their hands, whether they be temporals or spirituals, which they ought to improve; and shall be called to give an account of their stewardship.

I shall very briefly in speaking to this truth.

1. Show what things they are intrusted with that are not their own.

2. Show why they ought with care to improve whatsoever they are intrusted with.

All earthly good things to be improved.

1. All earthly good things as riches, health, time, parts, opportunities, or any outward accommodation, saints are stewards of; and must improve to the glory of God, their own good, and the profit of others. “Both riches and honours come of thee,” 1 Chron. xxix. 12. These are our Lord’s goods, of which you are stewards, and of which must give account.

2. All spiritual goods, viz., the gospel and ministration thereof, spiritual knowledge, gifts, grace, the worship of God, and his ordinances, promises, providences, and care of God’s holy temple or vineyard; all these things we are intrusted with, and must be accountable to Christ for, as his stewards.

Why we must improve all things.

2ndly. Why must we carefully improve all things that are in his hands. And first of earthly things.

1. Because whatsoever we have put into our hand, (1.) Of temporal good things, it is to advance the honour of our great Lord and Master, Jesus Christ, and to refresh, comfort, and support the whole household where we are placed; like as Pharaoh made Joseph the steward of his house to feed them all with bread, or to hand it unto them.

2. Because we have (as I said before) nothing that is their own, but it is our Lord’s goods. “The gold and silver are mine (saith the Lord;) therefore I will return and take away my corn in the time thereof, and will recover my wool and my flax,” Hos. ii. 9.

See here how the Lord lays claim to all outward good things, and threatens his people to take what he had put into their hands of these things, because they kept back from his use, through covetousness, what they ought to have given, may be they let his poor, or ministers want what was necessary for them.

3. Because (as you have heard) if we are not faithful in the least, it may stop the hand of Christ from giving the greater things to us.

4. It will be otherwise a wrong and great injustice to the poor, or to such for the sake of whom they that are rich are entrusted with earthly wealth, or outward good things, in withholding that which is their's by Christ's appointment, from them; and so a clear demonstration of unfaithfulness both to God and man; and it may provoke God to take away from them what they have, or to blast them in their trades and callings, or outward substance.

5. Because we must in a short time be called to give an account of our stewardship about this matter, we must expect to hear Christ say what have you done with my gold and silver, my corn, my wool, and my flax? How is it that my poor have wanted bread and clothes, and my ministers have been neglected and put to many great straits, and forced to run into debt to buy them necessaries to support their families? and my church has been in debt, and my interest hath been not regarded, but sinks in your hands, for want of such supplies of money that was necessary; whereas I put enough into your hands to make the lives of my ministers, and my poor, comfortable to them, and that also whereby young men I gifted to preach, might have been encouraged and improved to the advancement of my glory, and spreading of my gospel in dark parts of the nation where you lived? How is it that you have converted my goods to your own proper use, and only taken care of your own house and your children, and feed and clothe them richly, and left the rest of your substance to your babes, and regarded not those great ends for which I put so much riches or earthly things in your hands? May we not expect Christ will charge some of his stewards after this manner, and convict them of unfaithfulness, when he calls them away by death to give an account of their stewardship?

Because if these good things be not rightly and faithfully improved as Christ commandeth, his poor, and his ministers also, may be exposed to great temptations, and their souls borne down and sorely discouraged, and Satan may get advantages against them, for many snares and dangers attend poverty or outward want; moreover, the name of God and religion may also thereby be exposed to the contempt of the world; who can believe we are the people of God, when they cannot see that love to one another among them, which always is the character of such that are true Christians? or how should they think that we believe the way we are in, is the true way and worship of God; whereas the very Heathen and papists show more zeal in supporting their idolatry, superstitions, and false churches, than we show to support the gospel, the truths of God, and the true church? Besides if the poor be not fed by us, they may be starved and perish, who should provide for them but we? shall we send the children of Sion to others to be fed, or matter not what becomes of them? if so, what a sad account shall we have to give at the last day.

Secondly, we must also improve all spiritual things which we have received, or Christ hath put into our hands.

1. The gospel and the ministration thereof, because it is given to the end that we may profit thereby. (2.) And it is Christ's chiefest treasure, and that which he entrusted very few with. (3.) And if not improved, he may take it away from us, as he hath formerly from others. (4.) When that goes, God goes, Christ goes, and all good goes, and all evil will come in.

2. Spiritual gifts, knowledge, and ministerial gifts, because given for the use and profit of the church, and they that have them, are but stewards of them, which they are commanded to improve. "As every man hath received the gift, even so let them minister one to another, as good stewards of the manifold graces of God," 1 Pet. iv. 10. (3.) All the graces of the Spirit," Rom. xii. 6, 7, 8, are also to be improved and daily increased by exercise. And (1.) Because Christ expects his own with increase. And also (2.) because thereby we do bring glory to him. (3.) And shall receive eternal advantage to our own souls thereby also.

An account must be given to Christ what care we have taken of his church, of his gospel, his poor, and his ministers.

All spiritual things must be improved also and wherefore.

U S E.

O get your accounts ready, you know but this night Christ may say, "Give an account of thy stewardship, thou mayest not be any longer steward."

SERMON XIV.

And the Lord commended the unjust steward because he had done wisely, for the children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light.—Luke xvi. 8.

You have heard that our blessed Saviour did not commend him for his doing unjustly, but for his thoughtfulness about his future state, or in providing for himself for the time to come; though not the manner he took in doing of it. He was told of his being put out of his stewardship; and foreseeing a time of great straits and want might soon overtake him, he therefore thought timely how to prevent perishing at such a time, and it was for this our Lord commended him, saying, “The children of this world are wiser in their generation than the children of light.” From hence note.

1. Doct. Some wicked men are more wise how to provide for themselves, or in contriving how to live in this world, than the saints and people of God are to contrive and seek ways how to advance the glory of God, and their own spiritual interest and comfort here, and happiness in the world to come.

Wherein the children of this world are said to be wise. O how subtil and crafty are the children of this world, what ways will they contrive to enrich themselves? or to prevent want, poverty, and extremity, they will not leave one stone unturned; if one way fails them, they study another; and think no time, no pains, nor any danger or difficulties too great to enrich themselves, or to prevent perishing for want of bread, and other earthly things, they see an absolute necessity of while they are here, (for the things of eternity, or of another world, they mind not) but earthly things they will have, though it be by cheating or base and horrid injustice. But (saith our annotators) that which was knavery in this unjust steward, is honest enough in those who are stewards of our heavenly Lord's goods, for no man can improve his parts, his riches, his honour, his health, his time, or his abilities, or his whole life to his own true spiritual advantage; but in so doing, he advanceth the real interest and glory of the Lord Jesus Christ, their interest being not divided, or two, but only one and the same (as I showed you.)

Were we, my brethren, as wise for our souls and internal profit, as the men of this world are for their bodies and external profit, what rare Christians should we be? Had we but as many lawful projects, and spent as many serious thoughts, or took as much time, and spent as great pains to increase our true substance, and to grow and increase in grace, and in providing for a time of need, as they have projects and thoughts how to get the world, and spend their time and strength in providing for themselves here; religion would flourish at another manner than now it doth in our hands, but they are wiser in their way and generation than we are in ours. How few devise ways, study and spend their time and strength to grow spiritually rich; and for our failing herein, we arrive to no greater strength in faith, love, joy, peace, and comfort, and likeness unto Christ; “Whose meat and drink and whole business was to do the will of his Father, and to finish his work,” John iv. 34.

But to proceed to another proposition.

2. Doct. That it is part of true wisdom, and highly commendable, for a man with the greatest care and thoughtfulness to provide for hereafter, or for the future time, when he fails or must die, and for an endless eternity. This is the main thing I humbly conceive that our blessed Lord would instruct us in by this parable. And in speaking to this point of doctrine, I shall,

1. Show how this appears to be such great wisdom, and is so commendable a thing.

2. Show what future times it is such wisdom to provide for.

3. Show wherein this wise and prudent care and endeavour in providing for the future time doth consist.

Now to demonstrate it is part of great wisdom to provide for the future time, appears (1.) by the care and practice of all wise, rational men. (2.) By the care and labour of irrational or mere animal creatures.

1. All rational men look upon it a great point or part of wisdom to provide for themselves against a time of need, or for the future time, and condemn such for fools who do not thus do; nay, and this is also the counsel that all wise parents give to their children, viz., "O, think of the time to come (say they), how to live in the world hereafter, or another day; be content with mean things now, or to endure a hard apprenticeship, or venture to go into another land; though you are exposed to many dangers, if you have a fair prospect that it will raise your estate in the world, and be for your future well being so long as you live on the earth; nay, how oft do parents send this or that son to India, with hopes of getting riches, and to provide and lay up wealth against the future time; so that it appears from the general and universal practice of all men to be a great part of wisdom to provide for a time to come, and that it is very commendable; and such who take no care in this respect but only for the present time, are laughed to scorn, as being meer fools, or such as want common reason.

All men provided for the time to come.

Now if it be such wisdom to provide for the body for the time to come, how much more wisdom is it to provide for the future well-being of the immortal soul? Or, if it be great wisdom to provide for our future days on earth, that are so few and uncertain, how much greater wisdom is it to provide for an endless eternity?

2. Every man thinks that it is his main business in health to provide for sickness; and in summer to provide and lay up for winter, and in youth to provide and lay up against old age; and to do these things is really wisdom, and very commendable; and if it be so, what wisdom is it to provide while health and strength lasteth for a sick bed, nay, a death bed; and, whilst the summer or day of grace lasts, to provide for such a winter that may come, when all hopes of gathering will fail; and in youth to remember no time is so proper, nor more acceptable to God, as to fall in love with Christ, espouse him, for so they will be provided for ever.

II. Nay, poor irrationals, or meer animal creatures, by an instinct of nature provide for the winter, or future time.

1. The bees, though a small creature, yet how wise are they; how do they labour to store the hive with honey in the spring and summer season, how will they venture out amongst their enemies, nay, and go a great way from home, and in gathering wax and honey, how will they lead themselves, and how industrious and wise are they in working to make their curious combs to lay up their food against the time they can gather no more? and it is also observed that such that will not work, but are drones, the painful bees will turn out of the hive; nay, fall upon them that are idle (and live on their labour) and kill them: and now, my brethren, shall these little creatures be more wise than mankind, whom God hath endowed with such an excellent rational soul, and who believes also such a future state, and yet take no pains nor care to provide for it.

The bees may teach man wisdom.

Also the ant or pismire, a very small and contemptible creature to look upon, yet how wise are they in this respect, even to such a degree, that Solomon (by the Spirit) sends slothful persons to learn wisdom of them; "Go to the ant thou sluggard, consider her ways, and be wise, which, having no guide, overseer, nor ruler, provideth her meat in the summer, and gathereth her food in the harvest," Prov. vi. 6, 8.

The ant teacheth man wisdom.

Having no guide, no overseer, intimating that as man is a rational creature, and so endowed with much wisdom, which the ant hath not, so also he hath a guide, viz., the word of God, and also God affords him his ministers to be his overseers, to excite, stir up, and warn to holy diligence for to provide for the future time: and yet, for all this, the poor ant acts more wisely than multitudes of men and women, for they neither regard the reproofs from this silly animal, nor the warnings and checks of their own consciences, nor the daily warnings given by God in the ministration of his word, and the loud alarms of his rod and impending judgments, but go on, and think not, or, at least, provide not, for the time to come.

III. This appears to be a piece or point of great wisdom, because God himself even bewails the folly of his people of old upon this respect, and wisheth they had more wisdom. "O that they were wise, that they understood this, that they would consider their latter end," Deut. xxxii. 29. How doth the holy God by these expressions commend the wisdom I am speaking of; it appears that men do not understand what wisdom consisteth in this matter; if they did they would consider it; lay it to heart or ponder it more seriously in their hearts, and take more care than they do: I know some think the Lord wisheth that they would consider the state that his people Israel would be in through their sin, in the latter end of the world: suppose he doth partly refer to that, yet much more, because they provided not for the eternal happiness of their precious and never-dying souls, or what was like to befall them to eternity.

IV. It must needs be great wisdom to provide for the future well-being of our souls, because all that were ever esteemed to be wise persons, before, or above all other thing preferred this matter; all holy patriarchs and godly men of old confessed themselves pilgrims on earth, they were dead to this world, they sought another country, that is an heavenly, they knew this was not their rest; and hence Moses contemned all the glory of Egypt, and of Pharaoh's court, choosing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God than to enjoy the pleasure of sin for a season; esteeming the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures of Egypt, for he had respect to the recompense of reward;" Heb. xi. 25. It was not his present state in this world, but his future state and happiness that was in the eye; and to this purpose our apostle speaks also, "While we look not on things that are seen, but on things that are not seen, for the things that are seen are temporal, but the things that are not seen, eternal," 2 Cor. iv. 18. We regard not (as if he should say) present things, earthly things, our eyes, or our hearts are set upon future things, things to come, those things that are above, or on eternal things: why, now if these were the wisest men that ever lived, and their chiefest wisdom lay in this, in that they set their hearts upon God, and on eternal enjoyment of him in heaven, and parted with all things here, to have that future portion; then this is one great, nay, the chiefest point of true spiritual wisdom; therefore nothing is more evident than this, or to provide for an endless eternity is our greatest wisdom.

V. Because there is no avoiding our entering into an endless state of joy or sorrow; the unavoidableness of all men's failing; I mean dying and passing into a future state, shows that this is a point of the chiefest wisdom.

When you fail they may receive you, &c., after a short time you must fail, shall die, it is impossible to prevent it; and therefore it was their wisdom to provide against that time. Should a rich man be told of a certain truth that in a very short time he should fail in the world (or as it is called, break,) and be turned out of all he hath, sure he would be full of thoughts how he should live in after times; it would put him upon thoughtfulness for the time to come. Why, sirs, I am come this day to tell you every one, young and old, rich and poor, that after a very short time you will all fail, there is no avoiding it; you that are rich, your riches will fail; and you that are strong and in health, your strength and health will fail; and you that think you are wise, your wisdom will fail; and you that are beautiful, your beauty will fail; and you that have the means of grace, the means of grace will fail; and you that have nothing but false hopes of heaven, your hopes will fail, and be like the spider's web; and you that live now, and are brisk and lively, your life will fail. And is it not then your chiefest wisdom to labour for such friends that will not fail, or get an interest in Christ, and have your accounts to give up with joy, that you may be happy at death, and for ever.

VI. Because if the worth of the soul far exceeds in worth the body and all things in this world, then it must be our greatest wisdom to provide for our souls before all things: what hath God the Father done, and Christ done for our souls? and shall we take no care of them, but live as if we had no immortal souls, but were only animal creatures.

VII. Because God from all eternity studied the future good, sought the future good, and provided for the future good of our souls and bodies for ever, the early care God hath taken, and the wonderful love he hath showed, that we might be happy for ever; together with what Christ had done and suffered to save us from future wrath, and to prepare a place of future glory for us, should be a mighty argument or motive to stir us up wisely to provide for ourselves to all eternity, in improving the means God directs us to to so great an end: God from all eternity thought of the future state of poor mankind, whom he foresaw would fall, and how did his wisdom work or contrive to make us again and for ever happy in the other world.

VIII. Consider how soon either you or I, or any in this congregation may fail, how soon may the youngest here like a flower fade away; it may be this year, this month, this week, nay, this night; as God spake to the rich man in the gospel, "Thou fool this night shall thy soul be required of thee, and then whose shall those things be that thou hast provided," Luke xii. 20.

IX. If you are not provided for your future state, consider how dismal at death your state will be; is it not the highest wisdom to prevent or seek to escape the greatest evil? what is worse than God's future wrath, or that wrath to come? or what is better than the glory that shall when Christ comes be revealed?

All wise men ever provide for the future time.

God from eternity sought the future good of his elect.

Their state at death dismal, who are not provided for eternity.

X. Consider that God hath found out a way to make us happy for ever, and observe what promises he hath made to such who before all things seek the kingdom of heaven and his righteousness; if there was no hope, no way to escape eternal vengeance, this would make a man desparate, or else fall under utter despair, and say with them of old, "But there is hope in Israel concerning this thing."

XII. Lastly, how have many thousands bewailed their great folly in not providing for the time to come, until it was too late; how have some cried out, when death approached for one year longer, nay, for one month; but when that would not be granted, for one week, nay, day, O think of this, now, whilst it is called to-day.

Secondly, What future time is it such wisdom to provide for?

What future times we should provide for.

1. Against that time, when the means of grace may fail, or all provision for the future time may utterly cease, or be cut off, or our understanding fail; God hath deprived many of their reason; indeed some sin it away, and act more like brutes than rational creatures; also it is to provide before the time comes that the Spirit of God will strive with you no more, or God gives you up to the hardness of heart, to blindness of mind, and to a seared conscience, or before the evil days come, and sorrow and anguish come upon you.

2. The hour of death, this is the future time, no doubt, our Lord refers to in those words, when you fail, &c., no escaping death, there is no discharge in that war. And death (may as you have heard) be near, and woe to him it comes upon before he is provided for it, not having God a sure and certain interest in Jesus Christ.

3. The dreadful day of judgment, "We must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ, to receive the things done in this body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad," 2 Cor. v. 10.

They that are prepared to die are fitted for the dreadful day of judgment; but they that die in their sins, or are miserable at death, will be more miserable at that day; for then body and soul both shall be cast into hell.

Thirdly, the last thing that was proposed was to show you wherein a wise and prudent care to provide for the future time doth consist.

1. We ought to think of our future state, into which we shall and must pass when the soul shall be separated from the body; it seems it is great wisdom to consider, to think upon, or to ponder this matter; let us think of death and eternity every day. (1.) Think of the certainty of a future state of joy or sorrow. (2.) The nearness of it, or how soon we may be in eternity; we know not what a day may bring forth; many of you that hear me this day may soon see what it is to be or not to be provided for death.

2ndly. If you would be provided, or would know wherein this wisdom doth consist; consider the necessity of your knowing Christ, or of being united to him by faith, for without you truly believe in Jesus Christ, you cannot be prepared for the time to come. "He that believeth not, shall be damned," Mark xvi. 16.

Nay, "He that believeth not in Christ, is condemned already," John iii. 18. You must get the Son. "He that hath the Son, hath life, and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life," 1 John v. 12.

3rdly. This wisdom consisteth in a careful and due making use of the proper means that God affords, and hath ordained, in order to faith, or a sinner's believing in Jesus Christ.

1. Prayer, O be much in that duty, cry to God for faith and for a changed heart, cry for understanding to see and know Jesus Christ.

2. Hear the word preached, "So then faith comes by hearing, and hearing by the word of God," Rom. x. 17. That is by the word of God preached. "Hear, and thy soul shall live," Isa. lv. 3.

1. But know it is not a bare hearing that is sufficient; no, you must hear it for the future time. "Who among you will hear this, who will hearken for the time to come," Isa. xlii. 23,

Answer. 1. To hear for the time to come is to lay up the word in our hearts. (2.) To believe or receive Christ in the promises. (3.) It is to find the transforming power of the word. (5.) To obey the word, or to be doers of it, and not hearers only.

4thly. This wisdom in providing for hereafter is therefore to close with Christ, to be united to Christ, and feel the work of regeneration wrought in us, and to contemn this world; or to be dead to it, and to be always ready and prepared to die. And to live every day as if it was our last, or as if we were this night to be called to give an account of our stewardship.

USE.

1. This reproves such who pursue the world as if they came into it for no other end, but to eat and drink, and heap a little white and yellow earth, for what is silver and gold else; it is but to load ourselves with thick clay.

2. It reproves such who prefer the world above the word, and the body above the soul.

3. Such that put the evil day afar off, as if we spoke of things that will be long before they come.

Exhort. O improve your present time, and have continual thoughts of death, judgment and eternity.

Lastly, it commends them who are heavenly, it shows the saints only are truly wise, O let us try to equal, nay, to out-do the men of this world, viz., be more zealous for the honour of God, and to promote his interest, and the interest of our souls, or wiser for another world, than they are to gain the things of this present evil world; why should they in their generation be wiser than the children of light? And thus I end with this parable.

THE

OF THE

RICH MAN AND LAZARUS.

SERMON XV.

There was a certain rich man, which was clothed with purple and fine linen, and fared sumptuously every day, &c.—Luke xvi. 19.

OUR annotations (and some other writers) seem to question whether this be a parable, or a narrative of matter of fact. Some lay down arguments, to prove that it is not a parable, but that there was such a rich man of the Jewish nation, and a poor man whose name was Lazarus.

And since the learned cannot agree in this case, I shall leave it to every man's own conceptions; yet I am most inclined to believe it is a parable, though my reasons I shall not here give.

But let it be matter of fact or a parable, be sure it is full of instruction, or may be of manifold use to the godly and ungodly, to the rich and to the poor.

First, I shall observe the main scope and design of it.

The scope and design of this parable opened 1. Considering what goes before where our Saviour exhorts his hearers to make themselves friends of the mammon of unrighteousness we may gather abundance of those worldly things which they possess; they may live in great and plenty, that his design in this parable, is to show the danger that attends rich men, who have their hearts set so upon their riches, that they have no pity on the poor, though help persons; or to convince all men of the great evil covetousness, or of an inordinate love of earthly vanities.

2. To show that men may be very rich, great and honourable in the eye of the world, and yet be in a miserable condition; and that the happiness of man consisteth not in the plenty and splendour a little while and in a moment go down into hell; moreover, there is no judging of the love, or hatred of God, by any outward occurrences, or what befalls one man or another in this life; a man may be very rich and prosperous in the world and yet be hated of God, or in a wretched state; and, on the other hand, a man may be very poor, and seemingly miserable here, and yet be beloved of God or in a blessed condition as to his soul.

3. To show that the soul of man is immortal, and that when a wicked man dies, his soul goes to hell, or into torments; and that the soul of a godly man at death goes to heaven, or into joy, and that as the pain and anguish of the one will be ceaseless, intollerable, and endless ; and so the joys and comfort of the other, will be sweet and inconceivable, as well as eternal.

4. To show, that God's word or the writings of the sacred scripture (in the ministration thereof) are the more effectual means to bring men to believe, repent, or receive Jesus Christ, "than if one should rise from the dead," and discover how it goes with good and bad men in the other world.

11. As to the parts hereof, it contains the character of two men.

The parts
opened.

1. A rich man, who is described three ways.

1. By his clothing, or what he wore.

2. By his diet, or what he did eat ; viz. (1.) He was clothed in purple and fine linen, (2.) That he fared sumptuously every day.

3. By his spirit he regarded not a poor man at his gate, nor showed him any pity though a godly person. It is proveable our Lord refers to a nobleman, saying, he was clothed in purple, &c., not that rich clothing, or rich array in noble persons is hereby condemned ; but men's living in splendour, outward grandeur, in pride and haughtiness, forgetting God and their own souls, and without compassion and bowels to the poor. This he condemns, and herein lies their sin and danger, the simple wearing of gold and silver, and rich ornament, in people of high rank and quality, is not sinful in itself, provided it be not immodest array, exposing themselves to shame, or others to temptations, yet no people should exceed their state and ability, in respect of their garbes, dresses, or attires.

Richeloving or dresses, not evil in itself in noble persons.

Doct. Pride and luxury prevails upon rich men, by what they enjoy, and that they are in danger thereby of eternal misery.

Riches in themselves are blessings, but being abused to gratify men's lusts they become a snare, and curse to such ; men may be clothed in rich robes, and eat the fat, and drink the sweet of the creature ; provided they do it with due moderation, and not "To make provision for the flesh to fulfil the lusts thereof," Rom. xiii. 14 ; nor forget according to their abundance to do good, nor to be "rich in good works," 1 Tim. vi. 18, and charitable to the poor.

1. I shall show you how it cometh to pass that rich men are so subject to abuse what they enjoy.

2. Show how it appears that pride and luxury prevails upon them, and they are in danger hereby.

1. It cometh to pass through the corruption of a man's own heart ; the heart is naturally, earthly, and carnal, and minds only such things that suit or agree with it, and as the heart exceeds all due bounds naturally, in desiring riches and outward grandeur, so when those things are obtained the same evil heart leads them forth to abuse them to the gratifying their inordinate lusts, there are "Seven abominations in his heart," Prov. xxvi. 25. Enough to make men fully miserable, "The heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked," Jer. xvii. 9.

From whence it is that rich men are apt to abuse the earthly good things they enjoy.

2. It proceeded from the deceitfulness of riches, by means of reason of the corruption of men's hearts, they being both present and pleasant things to the flesh ; the deceitfulness of riches do not only choke the word (as I have elsewhere showed) but they do also strangely ensnare, and bewitch all unconverted persons ; riches tend to exciting to pride and luxury ; they put a knife (as it were) into such a man's hand, to murder his own soul, or cause him to forget God ; and from hence God gave such a charge to the people of Israel, when they came to abound in riches, peace, and plenty in Canaan, that they did not forget him ; and from hence it is also so hard for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of heaven.

Deut. x. 11.

3. How are the poor ready to bow before the rich and honour them that are high and great in the world, and this feeds, and strangely takes with a carnal heart.

4. It is no doubt, also, partly from Satan, the God of this world ; he that was so bold to attempt (this way) to ensnare the Son of God, be sure will not fail after the same manner to assault silly mortals (who being not aware of his bloody design) are caught presently with his golden bait, "All things will I give unto thee if thou wilt fall down and worship me," Matt. iv. 9. Satan knows there is nothing like the glory and grandeur of this world to catch and overcome mankind.

5. Moreover, men are naturally so blind, that they see not, know not, that there is any higher good, than what is in the riches, honours, and pleasure of this world ; besides they have no power (until they obtain the Spirit and grace of God) to put bounds to their unruly lusts and carnal appetites.

How it appears pride and luxury prevails against wicked that are rich.

2. How it appears that pride and luxury prevails upon them that are rich.
1. In that they eat drink to a base, evil and shameful end, even to gratify the flesh, and make themselves like "pampered horses, every one neighing after his neighbour's wife," Jer. v. 8.

2. In that they care not what they spend or consume on their lusts, whilst their bowels are so shut up to the poor that they will hardly give them the crumbs that fall from their table; this shows how they give way to a luxury of life.

3. In that they vaunt and boast of their high station; and in their obtaining the desires of their hearts, they admire their happiness, "The wicked boasteth of his hearts desire," &c., Psal. x. 3. They glory in their greatness like Nebuchadnezzar, "Is not this great Babylon, that I have built for the house of the kingdom, by the might of my power and the honour of my majesty," Dan. iv. 30.

4. It appears in that they forget God, "God is not in all his thoughts," Psal. x. 4, or in none of his thoughts; there is in these men's heart's no room for one serious thought of God, nor of Jesus Christ; they being overcharged with gluttony and drunkenness, and love to their vile abominations. "The heart of the fool is in the house of mirth," Eccl. vii. 6; though God calls to mourning they are feasting.

5. In that by this means they say to God, "Depart from us;" nay, they condemn God, as if he could do them no good at all. "They take the timbrel and harp, and rejoice at the sound of the organ, they spend their days in wealth, and in a moment go down to the grave; therefore they say to God, depart from us for we desire not the knowledge of thy ways," Job. xxi. 13, 14. May be some are so bold and impudent to say thus with their mouths, but all profane worldlings say it in their hearts; they that love not God would be rid of God; riches and worldly pleasures and prosperity are an occasion to wicked men to cast off God, and to have slight and contemptuous thoughts of Him; through their pride they cannot endure the presence of God, when he draws near to them by the lashes and accusations of their own consciences; and this shows the danger of riches to an un sanctified heart, "What can the Almighty do for us;" yet he fills their houses with good things. Some read it, "What can the Almighty do against us?" Job xxii. 17. They neither value the good God can do for them, neither fear what hurt he can do to them, and this is the effect of their riches, and earthly delights, and pleasures.

6. It appears also in that they neglect, nay, oppress the poor, yea, persecute the saints, and are without any compassion or sympathy, they being so glutted with their earthly fulness; revenge is sweet to them, and they vent it on those who fear God, and reprove their leul and luxurious lives.

7. It appears, in that through this means they also forget their souls, death, and judgment; they live as if they were mere brutes, and had no immortal souls, nor should ever be called to God's bar; they do not believe God sees them, and observes all their doings, and thoughts of their hearts, or will ever bring them to an account for them.

8. In that they thrust out the word and cast it behind them, pronounceth curses, wrath, and hell against them. Nay, their pleasure and outward grandeur makes them to contemn the word, and cast reproach upon Christ's faithful ministers, and to seek their ruin if they come once to touch their Herodians, or as Herod serve "John the Baptist," Matt. xiv. 3, 4, 5.

Lastly, In that it causes them not to regard the works of God, nor to tremble at the near approaches of dismal calamities; "The harp, the viol, and flute, and wine are in their feasts, but they regard not the works of the Lord, nor consider the operations of his hands." Isa. v. 12.

APPLICATION.

1. We may from hence infer the wicked have but little cause to glory in their portion, "They have their consolation," Luke vi. 24, 26. Their heaven here, and must have hell hereafter.

2. And we may also infer that riches to a carnal man are very pernicious and hurtful to his soul, and makes his salvation hard and difficult; he is in more danger than the poor of perishing eternally.

Exhort. 1. And therefore let such that are rich carefully watch their own hearts, and see that they are neither carried away by covetousness on the one hand, nor by pride on the other hand.

2. You that delight to go in brave and rich array, see that you exceed not, nor waste that on your lusts, that you shall allow to Christ and his poor saints; be moderate in your clothing, in your eating and drinking, and in your lawful pleasures: remember Lazarus, who lies at your gate, rather take care to feed your souls than your bodies, that must in a short time be feasts for worms.

3. You that are poor, be content with your present state and desire not riches, since they expose men to such great temptations.

“And there was a certain beggar named Lazarus, who was laid at his gate, full of sores,” ver. 20.

“And desiring to be fed with the crumbs, which fell from the rich man’s table; moreover, the dogs came and licked his sores,” ver. 21.

We have an account here of another man, who seemed as miserable, as the former appeared happy.

2. His impotency; he was laid, not able to come of himself thither, being either sick and lame.

3. We have an account of the place, where he was laid, i. e., at the rich man’s gate; perhaps he had some friends that brought him thither, though they could not relieve him, yet they brought him to an house where one dwelt that could do it.

4. His condition: he was a beggar, one very poor, also full of sores may be such that were not only painful, but incurable.

5. His desire: which shown wherefore he was brought thither, he wanted food, and desired not the best and rich man had, “but only the crumbs that fell from his table,” he would put him to no charge. Yet we find not that he had so small a favour showed him; wicked rich men will sooner feed their dogs than the poor saints; some men are without any bowels of pity.

6. It is said “The dogs came and licked his sores:” these churlish animals showed more kindness to poor Lazarus than the rich man; men without compassion are worse than dogs, and a poor child of God meets with more favour from one of the worst of brutes than from a gracious rich man; moreover, let us note that God can cause these creatures, that are fierce and cruel in their nature, to show kindness to such that he loves, A child of God may be very poor, and in a distressed condition.

Doct. A man may be very poor, and in a distressed condition as to the outward man, and yet be in the love and favour of God.

But pray note, it doth not follow that every one that is poor, and outwardly distressed is by the Lord beloved; no, no, there are very few beggars that are believers, most of this sort are, it is thought, the worst of men and woman: for where they truly godly in such a land and city as this; certainly God’s people would revive them, before they should beg from door to door. I have often thought, that these beggars are more earnest with people, for the relief of their bodies, than many good people are with God, for succour and comfort for their precious souls. (2.) Moreover, it is rare that any true believer is exposed to such want and necessity, as poor Lazarus was (or such, who are signified by him) but such an hour possibly hath been, and may be of common calamity, that a child of God may in such a state and needy condition.

Obj. David saith, he never saw the righteous forsaken, nor his seed begging bread.

Ans. 1. It might be so under that dispensation, for the promises of the old covenant were earthly, but those of the new are better promised, besides there was not to be a beggar in Israel. However this parable shows that a believer may be poor, and in great necessity as to beg. And now to proceed,

1. I shall show how, or by what means, a child of God may be in such a low and poor condition.

2. Show why God doth suffer some of his children to be poor, and afflicted in this world.

3. Show how the poor may be supported under the poverty and distresses.

1. In the negative, it is not through idleness after the man is converted, nor by extravagant or riotous living; or a slothful, an idle, or a riotous course of life certainly is inconsistent with true grace: the ungodly became poor, many times by gluttony, drunkenness, uncleanness, wasting what they have on harlots, and in wicked company, mis-spending their time, and by injustice, which provokes God to blast them in all they have or do.

How some of God’s children come to be poor in this world.

As to the first, this must be granted, that divine providence disposeth of all things and persons in this neather world, it is God that maketh rich, and that maketh poor; all is done either by his permission or commission.

(1.) In the affirmative, perhaps some believers had parents who were very and not poor, being able to put them to trades, nor give them learning, and not be fit or capable for hard labour, they might and so by this providence be very poor. (2.) Moreover some may become poor for want of worldly wisdom or skill to manage their callings, for the children of this world, in this respect, are oftentimes wiser than the children of light. (3.) Some godly Christians become poor by losses and badness of trade or by fire. (4.) By thieves. (5.) Some by wicked men through fraud and injustice. God in his wise providence permits such things as these to befall his own children as well as the wicked, but always it is designed for their good. We know not by what means the person here represented became so poor as to beg. (6.) God's people are sometimes brought to poverty by persecution, all they have had being taken from them, as it fairs with many Protestants now in France, &c., and with many but a few years ago among us in England.

Secondly, Why doth God suffer some of his children to be poor, and distressed in this world?

Why God suffers some of his children to be poor in this life.

Ans. 1. It may be the Lord sees that riches would be hurtful to them, riches might choke them, or carry away their hearts from God. Agar desired not riches from thence.

2. It may be to show to all that the happiness consisteth not in the abundance of what he possesses of earthly things.

3. The Lord may suffer it to convince the ungodly world what little good is in earthly riches, and how little the value of gold, silver, or worldly grandeur; even no more than we do a bone we cast to dogs he gives these things to his enemies; the great Turk has these things; crowns and kingdoms may be given to the vilest of men.

4. God may do it to show, that as he himself is the portion of his own children, and their reward is above, so that his people can live upon him, and be content, though they are outwardly poor, and distressed whilst in this life.

5. Moreover, it may be to discover the sincerity of true Christians, and to convince the devil and wicked men they follow not Christ for loaves or earthly riches. "Doth Job fear God for nought?" Job i. 9. No, as if Satan should say, it is because thou hast given to him much substance, and made "A hedge about him, and about all he hath; put forth thy hand and take all away from him, and he will curse thee to thy face." God did thus, and Job became as poor and distressed as Lazarus, and yet he held fast his integrity; he is the same Job when poor and full of sores as when he was rich and honourable.

God brings wants and afflictions on his saints to try their graces.

6. Likewise, it may be to discover to themselves and others the excellency of grace; i. e., faith, love, patience, &c.; how do these graces shine forth in a poor, distressed, and afflicted child of God; this was one reason why Job was brought to poverty and misery in this world. How is faith in these believers magnified? They rest upon God, live upon Christ, and upon the promises with greatest satisfaction, being content with their condition; "Though the fig-tree shall not blossom, neither fruit be in the vine," &c., Hab. iii. 17. "Yet they can joy in the Lord, and rejoice in the God of their salvation," ver. 18. Moreover, a poor Lazarus can love God as well as a rich Abraham. Also, how doth patience shine forth hereby, when a saint under the greatest poverty, pains, and afflictions, bear up with a composed and quiet mind, rejoicing in and magnifying God in the want of all things, that is, of all earthly things and comforts whatsoever.

Some saints are poor to try the charity of the rich.

Children, but for the sake of God's poor, and to support his interest in the world, they are but Christ's stewards, and if they hand not out, as it is commanded, they will have a bad reckoning to make up at the last day.

7. It may be to try the rich, "The poor you have always with you;" why, because Christ will try and prove the rich, and see whether they will supply the wants of the poor out of love to him, and to their brethren; riches are not given to God's people only for themselves and for the sake of their children, Thirdly, How may Christ's poor be supported under their poverty and distresses?

How poor saints may be supported.

1. By considering, that they are made poor by the Lord's hand; it is their Father's good pleasure it should be thus with them; they may and ought to say with our Blessed Lord, "The cup my Father gives me to drink, shall I not drink it? I am not brought into want and poverty by idleness, nor by extravagant living, but by the providence of God my heavenly Father.

2. By considering, it hath been the condition of many choice and dear children of God, Job, Peter, John, and many others, though the first had been very rich, yet how poor was he made; and the other said, "Silver and gold have I none," Acts iii. 6; nay, our Saviour himself was very poor, had nothing to eat, but what was given to him; hence the "Good women ministered to him; the foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests (saith he) but the Son of Man hath no where to lay his head," Matt. viii. 20. Also when they sent to demand tribute of him it appears he had no money, but sent Peter to take a piece of money out of the mouth of a certain fish to pay the tribute, Matt. xvii.; "Though he was rich, yet for our sakes he became poor," 2 Cor. viii. 9. My brethren, Is it not an honour to be brought in this respect, into the like condition with our blessed Lord and Master? Therefore, let not ministers that are poor be troubled, since the Lord Jesus himself was maintained by the people; and also seeing God hath chosen the poor of this world to be his ambassadors, and "Hath ordained that they that preach the gospel shall live of the gospel," 1 Cor. ix. 14.

3. Because hereby God delivers his poor saints from the snares which attend them that are rich; though it cannot be denied but many cares and temptations attend poverty; but doubtless not so many as attend riches; for our Lord never said "Woe to you that are poor," Luke vi. 24, but he hath pronounced a woe to them that are rich. Neither hath he said, It is as hard for a poor man to enter into the kingdom of heaven, as it is "For a camel to go through the eye of a needle," Matt. xix. 24; as he hath said of one that hath great riches; nor doth he say the rich receive the gospel; no, but they were the poor. Again it is said, "That they that will be rich fall into temptations, and a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts, which drown men in perdition and destruction," 1 Tim. vi. 9.

snares attend riches than poverty.

4. By considering that the poor saints, though they "Have nothing, yet possess all things," 2 Cor. vi. 10.

Quest. How can they be said to possess all things?

Ans. 1. Because they have all things which God gives them without a curse, "The curse of God is in the house of the rich;" if they are ungodly they possess a curse with their riches.

How believers possess all things.

2. Because poor believers have all things they have sanctified to them it is not only without a curse, but it is with a blessing, it is sanctified; "A little that a righteous man hath is better than the revenues of many wicked," Prov. xv. 16. And again (saith Solomon) "Better is a little with the fear of the Lord, than great treasure and trouble with it. Better is a little with righteousness, than great revenues without right," Prov. xvi.

3. Poor saints have all in quality, though not in quantity.

3. They have all things in promise, they possess all things by faith, "Godliness is profitable unto all things, having the promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come," 1 Tim. iv. 8.

4. They have all things that have any substance in it, all the vast riches of this world are but a shadow, and pray what hath he that hath a shadow? See what Christ saith, "That I may cause those that love me to inherit substance, and I will fill their treasures," Prov. viii. 21. They possess all things that are truly good, and hath substance in them, and therefore possess all things.

5. Because they have Christ, and he that hath Christ hath all things, "All are yours, ye are Christ's, and Christ is God's," 1 Cor. iii. 22, 23. They have all things that are best, or what God esteems good things, riches that God so calls, and honours which are honours in his esteem; if a man have much gold, silver, pearls, and precious stones, must he have also abundance of dngg, or else hath he not all things? no, he values not that worth anything; so a believer having Christ, and gold tried in the fire, precious stones, and pearls, he values not those cart-loads of dirt which wicked men boast of.

He that possesseth Christ possesseth all things.

6. Because they want no good thing, neither shall they, but they must leave God to judge in the case, for they may want many good things in their own judgment, which God sees would be hurtful to them. "The Lord will give grace and glory, and no good thing will he withhold from them that walk uprightly," Psal. lxxxiv. 11.

7. They are heirs of all things; "Heirs of God and joint-heirs with Christ," Rom. viii. 17. "He that overcometh shall inherit all things," Rev. xxi. 7. Nay, he now possesseth all things in his head. We possess all things, even the glory of heaven in Jesus Christ, he hath possession of all things for us, and we possess them in him; and at death we shall actually be possessed of all things ourselves. Moreover, poor believers shall be rich when the wicked shall be poor; we shall have all things at death if we die in Christ; when the wicked will not have one penny, for they all die beggars, they carry nothing out of the world with them, but wrath and a guilty conscience.

SERMON XVI.

And it came to pass that the beggar died, and was carried by the angels into Abraham's bosom; and the rich man also died,"—Luke xvi. 22.

1. NOTE, Lazarus died. And,

2. He was carried into Abraham's bosom, i. e., into heaven; even into the bosom of Jesus Christ; "He was," &c., that his soul.

3. We have an account of them who carried him, and they were angels; not one angel, but angels; as multitude of angels encamp about the saints, and minister to them while they live (Heb. i. 14.) so an host of angels carry the soul of a believer when he dies in triumph through the air (the region of devils) into heaven, which no doubt is no small cause of rage in those evil spirits, but they cannot prevent it. "Into Abraham's bosom," Abraham was a type of Christ, but it may be not only called Abraham's bosom simply from thence but because the covenant of grace was renewed with him, and he believed in God; and Christ, therefore, would have all know that his soul was in heaven, whither likewise all the souls of his true spiritual seed (who depart this life) go at death, and perhaps to show also that there was another covenant made with Abraham's natural seed as such; and that some of that sort (or who were in that covenant) may go to hell. For this rich man represents one of Abraham's seed according to the flesh (or one of the Jewish church and nation).

"The beggar died and was carried," &c.

Note, The soul here bears the name of the man, so Paul saith, "I desire to depart, and be with Christ;" and again (saith he) "While we are at home in the body we are absent from the Lord." Phil. i. 23. That is, while our souls are in our bodies and when we die [we] viz., Our souls, "Are present with the Lord," 2 Cor. 5. So our Saviour said to the penitent thief, "This day thou (that is, thy soul) shall be with me," (that is, with my human soul) in paradise. The soul is the inhabitant, the body the house in which it dwells.

"For we know, if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we (that is, our souls) have a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens," 2 Cor. v. 1. The body is the cabinet, the soul is the jewel; and it being the chiefest and most noble part of man it bears the name of the whole person, or of the man.

There are four prepositions, I purpose briefly to touch upon.

Doct. 1. That both rich and poor must die.

Doct. 2. That death is a great blessing to every godly man, or that a believer is happy at death.

Doct. 3. That there is a vast difference between the state of the godly and ungodly at death.

Doct. 4. That the souls of all men are immortal, and at death go either to heaven or to hell.

To the first.

1. All men must die: death is a debt all must pay, the rich as well as the poor; though men live long, yet they die; the noble as well as the ignoble. Mathenselah "Lived nine hundred sixty and nine years, and he died," Gen. v. 27; the oldest must die, and the strongest also; Sampson was a mighty man for strength, but he died: the wise also die. "Wise men die, likewise the fool." "What man is he that liveth, and shall not see death, can he deliver his soul from the hand of the grave," Psal. lxxxix. 48. Kings die as well as peasants; Cæsar rides in triumph one day, and the next day stabbed to death. Alexander that conquered the world was conquered by death. Nay, grace itself exempts no man from death; the righteous die as well as the wicked, "The righteous perish, and no man layeth it to heart," Isa. lvii. 1. "The fathers, where are they? and the prophets do they live for ever?"

Quest. Why must all die?

Why all men must die, or be changed. Answ. Because all have sinned, death entered into the world by sin, though it is no curse to believers, but by sin all became subject to death, that which is mortal must die or be changed.

2. Because "It is appointed for men once to die;" the decree is past upon all, "Dust thou art, and unto dust thou shalt return," Heb. ix. 27.

3. A godly man dies as a demonstration of God's great love to him, because this life exposeth the saints to many sorrows. Poor Lazarus here had his evil things, and this way, i. e., by death they are freed of all misery; also a godly man dies, that God may raise his body to glory; "It is sown in dishonour, but shall be raised to glory, and shall be made like to Christ's glorious body," Phil. iii. 31. The wicked likewise die, but it is as an act of God's wrath; he cuts them off sometimes that they may be no more a plague to his chosen, and dishonour to his majesty, nor a curse to the creation.

Doct. 2. Death is a blessing to believers, or a godly man is happy at death

This appears,

1. Because death puts an end to all their miseries, sorrows, and trouble; Lazarus was poor and distressed, but death puts an end to all his misery. All the godly Death is a blessing to the godly are afflicted many ways.

(1.) The world afflicts them, they are reproached, hated, and persecuted in this world. (2.) Sinners grieve and vex their souls, the sins of the wicked are the sorrow of the righteous, such that truly love God cannot but be grieved to see how God is dishonoured. (3.) The evil and scandalous lives of professors is no small affliction to them. "Many walk of whom I have told you often, and now tell you weeping, they are enemies to the cross of Christ," Phil. iii. 18. (4.) Their own sins, and the corruptions of their own hearts, make them mourn, groan, and to cry out. "O wretched man that I am," &c. (5.) Satan also greatly distresses them by his continual temptations. (6.) Moreover their own children (many times) add great sorrow to them. (7.) Besides, worldly care and losses, and bodily distempers greatly afflict them. (8.) Likewise God oftentimes hides his face from them, but of all those evils and sorrows they are freed at death.

2. They are not only happy at death, in respect of negative good, or in respect of the evils freed from, but they partake then of positive good also; their souls (as you heard) go to Christ. O what a place is Paradise? and what joys are at God's right hand? What is it to see and behold, and be with Christ?

Moreover, their bodies have sweet and quiet rest, they fall asleep in Jesus, "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord, yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labour," Rev. xiv. 13.

The rich man also died and was buried.

We read not of Lazarus's burial, he was buried too, but with no pomp; he was thrown into some hole or another. But observe what is said in the next place of the rich man.

"And in hell he lift up his eyes, being in torment." And this brings me to the next proposition.

Doct. There is a great difference between the death state of the godly, and of the wicked at death. A little to open this,

1. Consider a godly man dies in Christ, the ungodly in the wicked one; the one dies in a state of grace, the other dies in his sins.

2. The wicked are forced from hence, against their will; "The wicked are driven away (saith Solomon) in his wickedness," Prov. xiv. 32; but the godly willingly yield themselves up to death; "I would not live always," saith holy Job.

3. The wicked are driven away from their friends, from their houses, from their riches, from their vain comforts, and that day they die their hope perishes. Their souls are forced or torn out of their bodies, and cast into hell, but the soul of a godly man goes to Christ, "Having (saith Paul) a desire to depart, and be with Christ," the soul of a believer is not driven away; no, he desires to be gone.

3. My brethren, as death puts an end to all a godly man's sorrows (he being freed from all evil) so death puts an end to all a wicked man's seeming joys and delights, and then begins also his sorrows; so that as the one possesseth nothing but good, so the other partakes of nothing but evil; and as the happiness of the one is inexpressible, so the misery of the other is inexpressible; and as the joys of the one at death shall never end, they being eternal, so the sorrows of the other at death will never end, they being also eternal.

5. The one is blessed in death, and the other cursed; the one falls into a sweet and quiet sleep, the other into a troublesome one; for though his spirit hath none, but is in eternal flames. This brings me to the last proposition.

Doct. 4. That the soul of man is immortal, and at death goes either to heaven or hell.

1. This I shall prove. 2. And then apply.

1. I shall prove the soul is immortal, by plain texts of scripture.

2. By several arguments.

1. The first proof is in my text, Lazarus's soul went to heaven when he died, and the soul of the rich man went to hell, therefore the souls of all men at death go either to heaven or hell.

Object. But this is a parable, and what can you prove from hence?

Ans. To deny that the soul of Lazarus went to heaven when he died, or that the soul of the rich man went to hell, is in effect to say this parable is a fable, and so cast contempt upon our Lord Jesus Christ. For though parables are not so argumentative as other scriptures, and matters of controversy cannot so clearly be decided from them, yet may we not infer, from the parable of the pearl of great price, that Christ and the grace of Christ is exceeding precious, or of great worth: and from the grain of mustard seed, that the gospel-church was small at first, &c.

My brethren, that which is one main design of our Saviour in speaking of a parable, we may strongly argue from, and draw as concluding and as strong inferences, or arguments from, as from other scripture. Now (as I have showed) one main design of our Lord in speaking this parable was, to show the happy state of believers (though poor and distressed in this world) at death in regard their souls go immediately to heaven; and also to discover the fearful state of all wicked rich men at death, because then their souls go to hell, or to a place of torment; and this being so, it proves this truth as fully as if it had been a history, or matter of fact in respect of two particular persons.

Object. We will grant, it shows the state of good and bad men at the day of the resurrection.

Ans. Our Saviour speaks only of the state of both these persons spoken of at death, and not one word of the resurrection.

2. Besides, according to the purpose and design of our Lord herein, it evident that he shows when the rich man's soul was in hell he had five brethren living upon the earth, who had also the means of grace afforded unto them, "They have Moses and the prophets let them hear them." Certainly all believe that after the general resurrection, there will be no more any means of grace afforded to any wicked men, but that all will be swallowed up either in an eternity of joy, or of sorrow.

A citation of several texts of scripture, that prove the soul is immortal.

Another text which proves this great truth is that of Solomon.

"Then shall dust return to dust, and the Spirit unto God that gave it,"

Eccl. xii. 7.

It appears from hence, at death the soul is actually separated from the body, and goes to God to be disposed of, as he sees good; either to be sent to joy or sorrow. Again, he says, "The Spirit of a beast goes downward to the earth, but the spirit of a man goes upward." Also, take that concerning the soul of the child. "And he cried to the Lord, and said, O Lord God, I pray thee let this child's soul come into him again. And the soul of the child came into him again, and he revived," 1 Kings xvii. 21, 22. Another text is that of our Saviour, "Fear not them which kill the body, but cannot kill the soul," Matt. x. 28. If the soul was mortal, man might kill it; but man cannot kill the soul, therefore it is not mortal, but immortal. Moreover, that which Paul saith in 2 Cor. v. 1, 6, 8, "For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved we have (that is, our souls have) an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens."

Object. The apostle here refers to the resurrection of the body at the last day.

Ans. He speaks here of the state of the soul when the body is dissolved, and lies in its dusty crumbs, not when it shall be raised again. And from hence he adds, "Therefore we are always confident, knowing that whilst we are at home in the body, we (that is, our souls) are absent from the Lord," 2 Cor. v. 6. For further proof read, "For me to live is Christ, and to die is gain," Phil. i. 21. He doth not say to me to rise again is gain, but to die, or when I die death will be gain to me. And from hence he adds, "Having a desire to depart, and to be with Christ," ver. 23. Compare this with that of the promise of our Saviour to the penitent thief, "I say unto thee, this day thou shalt be with me in paradise," Luke xxiii. 43. And to these scriptures I might add, 2 Cor. xii. 1; 1 Pet. iii. 19, 20; Heb. xii. 23.

Secondly, I shall proceed to lay down several arguments, further to confirm this comfortable truth. But let this be considered before I proceed; viz. That by immortal, I do not mean simply and absolutely the soul in its own nature is immortal; or had a being from everlasting. No, for in this sense, God alone is immortal, or "hath immortality," 1 Tim. vi. 16. But, by being immortal, I mean, it was created so; God hath bestowed immortality upon the souls of all men, that they die not, they cease not to live, nor shall be reduced to nothing (or annihilated); the soul being a pure, simple, immaterial thing, or an unmixed being, where there is no composition or mixture found (saith one), no death or dissolution can follow. The very being of the soul is life, and it is also the vital principle of the body.

Argu. 1. If the soul of man be a simple, spiritual, immaterial and an unmixed being, not compounded of matter, as all mortal creatures are, the soul is immortal; but such is the being of the soul. Ergo, all mixed bodies, or creatures that come under the power of dissolution are mortal; matter and mixtures (say learned men) are the doors at which death enters naturally upon all such creatures; all matter hath its limits, bounds, and just measure beyond which it cannot be extended (saith reverend Flavel) but the soul is boundless, and its appetitions infinite; it rests not, but in the spiritual and infinite being, God alone being its adequate object, and able to satisfy its desires, which plainly proves it to be spiritual, immaterial, and a simple being. (1.) It is void of any principle of corruption in itself. (2.) It is not liable to any stroke of death, by any adverse power without itself. 1. It cannot be liable to death from any seeds or principles of corruption within itself. The spirituality and simplicity of the soul admits of no corruption. Nor is it liable to death by any adverse power without itself; no sword can touch it, no instrument of death can reach it, therefore it is immortal.

Mr. Flavel.
Arguments proving the soul of man is immortal.

On the soul p. 96.

The soul at death goes upward to God that gave it.

Argu. 2. If the soul at death be actually separated from the body, and in that separated state goes upwards to God that gave it, it is immortal; (but this the text before cited plainly proves, Eccl. xii. 7) Therefore, the soul is immortal; the body goes one way, the soul another; the body returns to the dust, the soul goes to God; the body being made of the earth returns to earth, but the soul proceeding from God, who is called the Father of spirits, it being created of God, and infused into the body, that goes to God that gave it, or upward; whereas the spirits of beasts go downward, and though the souls of the wicked go to God, or go upwards, yet not into the third heavens; (for no unclean thing can enter into that place) but go into some inferior part of heaven, where God may pass sentence against them, and send them to prison. God (saith one) is not so in the third heavens, that he hath not a glorious presence in the lower heavens; if this be not so, how could Satan appear before God, as is mentioned when he accused Job. If, therefore, the soul died or slept with the body it could neither be said to be separated from the body, nor to go another way, and not whether the body returns.

Wadsworth p. 59.

Argu. 3. If godly men at death commended their souls or spirits unto God, praying the Lord to receive them, then they are immortal; but godly men have done, and always do this. Ergo, the soul or spirit is immortal. "And Stephen calling upon God, and saying, Lord Jesus receive my Spirit," Acts vii. 59. Moreover, the very same thing our Lord Jesus Christ did himself, "And when Jesus had cried with a loud voice he said; Father into thy hands I commend my spirit," Luke xxiii. 46; that was his human soul, "For he was made like unto us in all things, sin only excepted."

Godly men commend their spirits to God at death.

Argu. 4. If the souls of men, in their separated state from their bodies, are either in joy or misery they are immortal; but the souls of men in their separated state from their body are either in joy or misery. Ergo, the souls of men are immortal. That the soul is separated from the body at death I have proved; and that the souls of the just are in a state of joy at death is evident. "I say to thee, this day thou shalt be with me in Paradise." Our Lord in these words answers this poor sinner's desire, "Lord remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom," Luke xxiii. 42, 43. Here he discovered his faith, he believed Christ was the Son of God, and that he would in an hour or two be in his kingdom, i. e., in heaven; and also showed he believed he was the true Saviour, and one able to save him; and now our Lord assured him that, that very day [He] (that is the soul of this believing criminal) should be with him in paradise, a place of delight and pleasure, viz., the third heaven; not that only he should be with him in his kingdom, when he comes again the second time, but that very day his soul should be with the soul of our Lord in heaven; I know some (who abuse this text) say, Christ said to him that day, or made a promise to him that day, that he should some time or another be with him in paradise. What will not men do to prop up an erroneous opinion, mind the comma, "I say to thee, this day thou shalt be with me," &c. And from hence I infer, if the soul of one believing and godly person goes to Christ at death, then the souls of all godly persons go to Christ at death. For as the soul of the penitent thief went to heaven at death so also did the soul of Lazarus, and so the souls of all believers. And as the soul of the wicked rich man at death went to hell, or to a place of torments, so do the souls of all wicked men at death go to hell also.

All men's souls at death happy or miserable.

Argu. 5. If men cannot kill the soul of man it is immortal; but men cannot kill the soul. Ergo, the soul of man is immortal. See what our Lord saith, "Fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul," Matt. x. 28. Were the soul mortal, he that killeth the body kills the soul also, even the whole man; but men are not able to kill the soul. Besides this, our Lord spake to encourage us not to fear bloody persecutors; because though they may put an end to our natural lives, yet our souls being immortal (they being not able to kill them) they live; and the very moment we lose our lives our souls are with Christ in heaven.

Obj. If any should say our Lord means that men cannot kill the soul for ever.

Ans. 1. Answer, in that sense they cannot kill the body, for the body shall live again; our Lord speaks not of the future, but of the present state of the body and soul or what the state of the one and the other is at death.

Argu. 6. "If every one that believes in Jesus hath everlasting life in him, and shall not see death (I mean eternal life in the seed and principle of it), then the soul is immortal; but every one that truly believes in Jesus Christ hath everlasting life in him, the seed or principle of it, and shall not see death. Ergo, The soul is immortal. "He that believeth on the Son, hath everlasting life," John iii. 36. "And this is the record that God hath given us, even eternal life," &c. 1 John v. 11, 12. "That ye may know ye have eternal life. No murderer hath eternal life abiding in him," 1 John iii. 15. A true believer hath eternal life abiding in him, because he hath the eternal Spirit in his soul, and it abides in his soul for ever. Now, if this vital principle abides in the soul for ever, the soul lives, and abides for ever in life, only not as being immortal (for so it was before) but in a state of eternal life also, which proves the soul's immortality and final perseverance. "This is the bread that came down from heaven, that a man may eat thereof and not die," John vi. 50; "He that eateth of this bread shall live for ever," ver. 58. Our Lord must speak either of the soul or of the body; of the body he speaks not. "The body dies because of sin, but the Spirit is alive because of righteousness," Rom. viii. 10. As the soul lives a life of grace here, and hath a title to eternal life by Christ's righteousness, so, the Spirit being in the soul of a believer, his soul lives for ever in a state of eternal life, or life of joy. The Spirit being that "living water in the soul, springing up unto everlasting life," John iv. 14. The Spirit of God abiding in the soul of a believer, as a principle of eternal life, proves the soul is immortal. For if there is no separation of the Spirit from the soul, but that he makes his cohabitation there for ever, then the soul lives for ever; or it hath a being for ever, and a blessed being also; therefore it is immortal.

All true believers have the seed of eternal life in their souls now.

SERMON XVII.

And in hell he lifted up his eyes being in torment, and seeth Abraham afar off and Lazarus in his bosom," Luke xvi. 23.

I AM upon arguments to prove the soul is immortal, and have passed through six.

Argu. 7. If the soul of man in its separated state from the body be capable of the highest joy, or spiritual ravishments, it is immortal; but the soul of man in its separated state from the body is capable of the highest joy or spiritual ravishments. Therefore, it is immortal. "I knew a man in Christ fourteen years ago, whether in the body I cannot tell; or out of the body I cannot tell, God knows; such an one caught up into the third heaven: he was caught up into paradise, and heard unspeakable words," &c., 2 Cor. xii. 2, 4. If Paul knew the soul was not capable to be separated from the body (or if it was), yet, if not capable in that separated state of such sensible and soul-ravishing joys and visions, then he would have said, I know he was taken up in the body; but, since he says he knew not whether without the body or in the body, it proves that Paul knew the soul was capable of such a separation, and, in that separated state, capable also of the highest enjoyments of God.

The souls of believers absent from the Lord while in the body but are present with Christ at death.

Argu. 8. If, while we are at home in the body, we are absent from the Lord; and, when absent from the body, present with the Lord, then the soul is immortal; but both these Paul positively asserts; "Therefore we are always confident, that whilst we are at home in our body we are absent from the Lord;" 2 Cor. v. 6. "We are confident, I say, and willing rather to be absent from the body, and to be present with the Lord," ver. 8.

Ans. I answer, at the day of the resurrection we shall neither be absent from the body nor from the Lord; therefore from hence it most evidently appears that the souls of all believers at death are absent from their bodies, and present with Christ in heaven.

Argum. 9. If it be gain to a believer to die, the soul is immortal; but it is gain to a believer to die: ergo, the soul is immortal. See what holy Paul affirms, "For me to live is Christ, and to die is gain," Phil. i. 22. Now, if Paul's soul was not in a far better condition at death than when he lived in the body, having more sweet joy, comfort, and consolation, death instead of being gain to him, would have been great loss, for he might live many years, and have had sweet communion with Christ; and yet it would not be any longer before his body would be raised at the last day.

It is gain for a believer to die.

Besides, the apostle speaks not of gain when his body shall live again; but of that gain he should have at death, or when he died; not when he shall be raised at the last day, though then he knew his body and soul both shall be crowned with glory for ever.

My brethern, is not the presence of Christ, and communion with him here, while we are in the body, a great blessing; and if we may live twenty or thirty years longer here to enjoy this, would it not be gain to us? but if God should take us away presently, (and we lie in the grave asleep both body and soul) without any sensible joy or comfort at all, certainly (were it thus) death would be a great loss, and no gain at all; for we shall rise again from the dead, as soon though we should live forty years longer in the body.

Argum. 10. If the spirits of all just men separated are made perfect in heaven, then the soul of man is immortal; but the spirits of all just men departed this life are made perfect in heaven: ergo, the soul of man is immortal. "We are come to the spirits of just men made perfect," Heb. xii. 23. That is, we are come to a clear revelation of this comfortable truth, as we are come to the blood of sprinkling, and to the general assembly, &c., viz., to a clearer knowledge and discovery of those glorious truths than the saints had who lived under the law or before the gospel times.

The spirits of just men are in heaven.

Argum. 11. If the soul of our blessed Saviour went to heaven at death, the soul is immortal; but the soul of our Saviour went to heaven at death; ergo, the force of this argument lies here, viz., Christ was made like to us in all things, sin only excepted; if therefore his human soul was immortal, the souls of all men are immortal. And if his soul was not immortal, how could it die a spiritual death, "My soul is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death; and that his soul went to heaven at death, I before showed. "This day thou shalt be with me in paradise."—"Father, into thy hands I commend my Spirit.

Argum. 12. If the soul be fed with and lives upon immortal or incorruptible food, it is itself immortal; but the soul is fed with, and lives upon immortal or incorruptible food; ergo, it is immortal. That which is corporal or mortal, may be fed with corporal or earthly food; the body being mortal, corporal food feeds it; but no earthly or corruptible food can feed the soul: no, that lives upon incorruptible food, spiritual food, or on the bread of life; let such therefore that affirm the soul is mortal feed their souls with the same food they feed their bodies; and if their souls are wounded, let them apply the same balm to heal them, which they apply to bodily wounds, and see whether such things can either feed or heal them; and try also whether some rare cordials physicians can prepare will revive their souls when faint and drooping since they affirm their soul is mortal, and so corporal.

The soul living upon immortal food proves it immortal.

Argu. 13. If the souls of those wicked men who lived in the old world in the days of Noah are now in prison or in hell, then the soul of man is immortal; but the former is true, ergo, for the proof of this argument see what the apostle Peter saith, "By which also he went and preached to the spirits in prison, which sometimes were disobedient in the days of Noah," &c. The apostle shows that "Christ was put to death in the flesh, and quickened by the Spirit," or by virtue of his Deity, even by the same Spirit or Godhead; he preached to those spirits that are now in prison, who once lived in the days of Noah wicked and ungodly lives. This text doth not only prove the souls of men are immortal, but also the pre-existence of Christ, or his glorious Godhead; inasmuch as by his servant Noah, he preached to the old world, to those whose spirits are now in prison, or in chains of darkness.

But to proceed. We read of souls under the altar in heaven. And from thence I argue, Argu. 14. If the souls of those blessed saints (that were slain for Christ's sake) are now in heaven, and have white robes given to them, then the soul of man is immortal, but the former is so. Ergo,

The souls of the saints in heaven have white robes given to them.

"I saw under the altar, the souls of them that were slain for the word of God, and they cried with a loud voice, saying, How long holy and true, dost not thou avenge our blood, &c., and white robes was given unto every one of them," Rev.

vi. 9—11. The altar I conceive is Jesus Christ; they lie under the wings of Christ, or are in heaven by virtue of the blood of our altar Jesus Christ. "And white robes were given to every one of them." By white robes is meant not only the righteousness of Christ (which brought them to heaven) but the purity of that state and happiness they are possessed with, triumphing in glory. White robes (saith one) is the sign of their honour and triumph in heaven.

Some now in heaven, whom Christ reconciled unto God.

Argu. 15. If there are some now in heaven who were reconciled to God by Jesus Christ then the soul of man is immortal; but there are some now in heaven who were reconciled to God by Jesus Christ. Ergo, See what the apostle saith. "By him to reconcile all things to himself: by him I say, whether they be things in earth, or things in heaven," Col. i. 19, 20.

Object. By things in heaven, some say the apostle refers to the holy angels.

Answ. I answer that cannot be, because the holy angels need no reconciler. Hath Christ reconciled them to God? Were they and the holy God ever at variance, or was there a breach between God and them? Certainly, if there be any in heaven that were reconciled unto God, they must be the souls of just men made perfect, because no creature but the off-spring of Adam, or mankind only, were reconciled to God by the death of the Lord Jesus Christ. So much as to the arguments, to prove the souls of all men to be immortal.

To proceed, let me add here some of those gross absurdities that attend the opinion of such that affirm the soul is mortal, and dies or sleeps with the body.

Absurdity 1. If the soul of man be mortal, then the punishment which God threatened against, and also executed upon our first parents, was only temporal punishment; as sickness, &c., and death, or going to the dust.

Absurdity 2. Then also the demerit of sin is not such, as the word of God positively declares, nor is there such inconceivable evil in sin, if it be only temporal misery and death the justice of God requires and inflicts upon the sinner. Moreover then also it follows that mere animal creatures suffer as much, or as great punishment for man's sin; as man himself would ever have suffered, had not God sent his Son to raise mankind again from the dead; and how absurd that is I will leave to all men's considerations.

Absurdity 3. Likewise then it will follow that Jesus Christ is but a temporal Redeemer (for though he may purchase other blessings for us) yet he could redeem us from no other death and miseries than those that sin brought us under, or exposed us unto.

Absurdity 4. Then also the curse of the law, and the wrath of God for the breach of the first covenant, is no great matter, nor to be so much feared; nor is the redeeming love in God the Father, and in God the Son so great, as his holy word everywhere expresses it to be; for it must be then only to restore or redeem us from temporal or external wrath and punishment, and not from internal wrath which came upon all, nor to prevent that eternal wrath which certainly would have fell upon all had not the Son of God come to redeem and save us.

Absurdity 5. Moreover, then our blessed Lord was unjustly punished in his soul, for why did he suffer such dismal sorrow, and bear such wrath in his soul for us, as to sweat great drops of blood, if mere bodily suffering could have satisfied the justice of God, or have appeased divine anger? Besides, it would render our blessed Saviour more afraid of death than many thousands of his saints have been, who rather rejoiced in death, courted death and desired it, rather than showed any fear to die the most cruel deaths, that bloody tyrants could invent. And what disparagement and contempt would this cast upon the Son of God, who cried out, "Father if it be possible, let this cup pass from me;" and also it is said, that "He began to be sorely amazed, (and said) my soul is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death:" certainly this was from the weakness of his flesh or human nature, under the sense he had of that dismal wrath his soul felt (when our sins were laid upon him, and that wrath due to us let out against him, he standing in our law place) that made him cry out in that nature, even with bitter cries and tears. Ah! none know, nor conceive, what he endured in his human soul; that he might satisfy the justice of God for us, "The pangs of hell took hold on me," Psal. cxvi. 3.

Absurdity 6. Then it is weakness in the heathen, who never heard of Christ, and of the resurrection, to fear any punishment that is due to them for sin, but only that which is external; and how comes it about (or from whence doth it arise) that they fear and dread eternal wrath; and many of them so positively have asserted the immortality of their souls: the people of all nations, even Heathens as well as others, believe the soul is immortal;

All men in nations generally believe the soul of man is immortal. The Heathen affirmed and and is it not absurd to think that God would suffer the whole world to be deceived. Cicero saith "In every thing the comfort of all nations is to be accounted the law of nature." Aud (Seneca saith) "We give much to the presumption of all men." And as one notes, the ancient Chaldeans, Grecians, Pythagoræans, Stoics, Platonists, &c., asserted the immortality of the soul; and Plato hath wrote excellent arguments to prove its immortality, amongst which this is one, viz., That if the soul were not immortal wicked men would certainly have the advantage of the righteous and good men, who after they have committed all manner of evils should suffer none: also, some of the Heathen argued for the immortality of the soul, from the consideration that nothing in the world can satisfy it, or fill its desires, and so make it happy: the Turks, also, in their Alchoran, assert a state of joy or sorrow after death, into which the souls of all men enter; though they fancy a paradise of sensual pleasure; nay, the very Indians believe it, and their wives will cast themselves into flames to attend the souls of their husbands in another world.

Absurd. 7. If the soul be not immortal, then Adam had not, and so by sin lost not the spiritual life of his soul; nor was the soul a capable subject to have the image of God stampt upon it; nor can our souls be said to be quickened by Christ, and so that life and divine image restored to us again. For how can an internal life, be said to be restored to man by the second Adam; if the first in innocency never had any such life.

Absurd. 8. Moreover, if this be not so, what dignity had mankind above mere brutes, exempt his dominion; for they have all one breath, therefore to deny the immortality of the soul, is to debase man; yea, rob him of his chiefest honour, who was made but a little lower than the angels. Were it not for the excellent quality of the soul, how comes man to be so noble a creature, more in worth and far excelling all inferior creatures; for in strength, perfections of sense, agility of members, many creatures excel man. Moreover, were it not thus, from whence proceed these excellent faculties of knowledge, reason, understanding, &c., in man.

Absurd. 8. Then also it was not true, which our Lord told the penitent thief, viz., "That he should be with him that day in paradise;" and Paul also was very weak in desiring to depart and be with Christ; and was mistaken in saying death would be gain to him, and far better for him to be dissolved.

Absurd. 9. Take what a worthy writer notes, if man was only to be reduced (by the first sin) to an eternal state of dust, then really and truly God intended not to punish him at all, except it were in previous dying pains; for that was but to put him in the same condition in which he was before he was made, and that was only dust; which speaks him no more miserable, than if he had never been made; and surely none would think it had been a punishment to Adam not to be made at, &c. Besides the beasts, &c., would have suffered as much misery as sinful man.

Again (saith he), then also it will follow, that, that being in us, our soul, which understands, or knows God, Christ, the Spirit, in the unity, independency, immensity, and eternity of their nature, and that love, joys, and delights therein, above all the delicacies of food, melody of music, and all the pompous shows of this visible world, and all the hidden treasures of the earth, should be nothing but a congruity of the elements of air and fire, &c. And also that in man, which is the principal subject in regeneration. And is partaker of the divine nature, and is inhabited by the Holy Ghost, is nought else but the finest part of the decocted blood of our body, and this (according to these men) is that which the apostle says, "Is born again of the immortal seed, the word of God, and is regenerated by the Spirit, &c."

Absurd. 10. Then also it will follow, that the death of Christ would be the greatest curse and plague to the wicked that ever was, in that he, by his death and resurrection, brings them into a capacity to suffer eternal pains, who should after death, otherwise have known no sorrow nor misery: but alas! had not Christ come, the souls of all must have suffered everlasting wrath and vengeance; though it is true, their torments will be aggravated for their contempt of such great and inconceivable grace and favour, offered them through Christ in the gospel.

Absurd. 11. If the soul be not immortal, then the saints and people of God in every age of the world have been deceived in one of the great motives which encouraged them to suffer violent deaths and cruel martyrdoms for Christ's sake; viz., the hopes they had of being that very moment they died with Jesus Christ. Were they born up with self-hope and a vain and idle dream: they said (one to another) O brother be of good cheer,

its immortality.
Mr. Flavel
Seneca 17.

Man had no internal spiritual life in the first Adam if the soul be mortal, and so not the image of God in his soul.

If the soul is mortal the martyrs have been fed with fancies and idle dreams as to their going to Christ that moment they died.

Men are not fathers of spirits, but of flesh only.

for though we have a bitter dinner, yet we shall have a sweet supper this night with Jesus Christ. (Or to that purpose).

Absurd. 12. And then, also, as Christ's ministers have generally told the people a company of lies; and, also, one of the greatest encouragements believers have to be willing to die is gone for ever; which is the hopes of being that moment with Christ in heaven; for who would not rather desire to live longer in the possession of joy, comfort, and communion here with Christ, than to die and lose it, and come to heaven no sooner than if they lived forty years longer in this world.

Absurd. 13. Then also the man begets the soul, and is the father of the spirit, and God robbed of that peculiar prerogative and honour, who is called "The Father of Spirits," Heb. xiii. 9; and man only the father of the flesh.

Absurd. 14. If the soul be mortal, and dies with the body, who can prove it shall rise again? Or, where is there any scripture that asserts any such resurrection? It is only the body which the Scripture says shall rise again; and this is one article of our faith, viz., "The resurrection of the body;" but not that we believe the resurrection of the soul. Now that which the Scripture affirms not we ought not to believe. Some, indeed, talk of the soul's sleeping, but they say man is wholly mortal both his body and soul, and so both die. As to such that speak, as if the soul slept, or doth not die but sleep, is a foolish notion and needs no answer to confute it; for sleeping in the grave and lying dead there is all one.

APPLICATION.

I. We infer from hence that the soul is very precious; it is capable of divine union with God, and of Divine inspiration; "There is a spirit in man, and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth him understanding." And of divine assimilation to God, and of divine contemplation of God, and of divine communion with God. 2. Because the souls of the saints are in paradise with Christ at death, and the soul is worth more than ten thousand worlds, being bought with a great price, and feeds upon a most precious and incorruptible food.

II. We infer the loss of the soul is the greatest loss, "For what shall it profit a man if he shall gain the whole world and lose his own soul." Matt. xvi. 26.

III. That the ungodly are the greatest fools in the world, who prefer their bodies above their souls, nay, mind everything more than them; their children, their servants, nay, their beasts shall be fed and provided for, but their souls are neglected, though immortal, and neither be fed nor clothed; and, though sick and wounded, yet no seeking and looking out for a physician, to heal their precious and immortal souls. I have heard of a woman, whose house being on fire, got out all her chiefest goods, and then rejoiced, saying, she had saved her goods," but one replied to her, "Woman, where is your child? (She forgot that, which, being in the cradle, was burned to death). "O (then she cried out), my child, my child is burned." Just thus most people mind their goods, labour for the world, but forget their souls until in hell, and then cry out, "My soul, my soul is lost and tormented in these flames."

IV. It may be for reprehension.

(1.) Such who expose their souls to eternal flames, for love to their base lusts, and the vanities of this world, and may be for the unjust gain of one penny.

(2.) It may reprehend all such that draw others into sin, who are not satisfied to destroy their own souls, but seek ways to destroy the souls of others also. See to it, you that entice others to drunkenness, to uncleanness, &c. Is it not enough to have an account to give for the loss of your own souls, but for the loss of many souls of poor creatures also that you have enticed and drawn into abominable wickedness, even to the damning of their precious souls for ever?

(3.) Such also are to be reprov'd who promote damnable errors and heresies, to the destruction of multitudes of souls and glory in it. To see how they have corrupted them, they, being deceived themselves and given up to believe lies, deceive others also.

V. Exhortation.

(1.) O, bless God, sinners, for sending his Son, his Gospel, his Word, and the means of grace, to save your precious and immortal souls; and admire his infinite grace and pity in extending such boundless mercy unto us, to prevent the eternal ruin and damnation of your souls.

Impostors in a damnable condition for deceiving the souls of men.

(2.) Strive to believe in Christ, to receive Christ, and to be converted, "For if you believe not that I am he you shall die in your sins," John viii. 24. Again, our Lord says, "Except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish," Luke xiii. 5. "Marvel not, I say unto you, Ye must be born again," John iii. 7. Before he spoke these words, he said, ver. 3, "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." What, then, can you expect that are swearers, drunkards, whoremongers, or proud and covetous persons, but that you must perish and lose your souls if you die before you are regenerated, or become new creatures.

(3.) It speaks much comfort to believers. O, how happy are you that are true Christians! Your souls are safe, and when the wicked are miserable you will be happy; death will open the mouth of hell to them, but it opens the gates of heaven to you; be content with your portion though you are like poor Lazarus here, yet your condition is far better than the rich (who are ungodly) and this will be manifested at death, labour to prepare for it; life is uncertain, and death makes a mighty change, it will be a happy change to you, but a dismal change to the wicked.

SERMON XVIII.

And in hell he lifted up his eyes, being in torments.—Luke xvi. 23.

THE point of doctrine I shall take notice of from hence is this, viz.:

Doct. That the pangs of hell are dreadful and tormenting.

In opening of this proposition,

I. I shall prove that the pangs of hell are dreadful, &c.

II. Show who they are that when they die go to hell.

III. Apply it.

I. That punishment, that fire which is prepared for the devil and his angels, must needs be very dreadful and tormenting. What pain and misery shall devils one day feel and endure, who are such implacable enemies to the Holy God, and have showed such hatred and malice against him, his Son and his interest, and precious children; why, the same all hypocrites and unbelievers must endure, "Go ye cursed into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels," Matt. xxv. 41.

The torments of the wicked, the same the devils shall endure.

II. The extremity of their torments will further appear if we consider that it is inconceivable, or beyond all men's understanding, "Who knows the power of thy anger," Psal. xc. 11; who can comprehend, or can be rightly and duly affected therewith: we can conceive of bodily pains or of external torments, but we cannot comprehend nor conceive the nature of infinite wrath, no more than we can comprehend or conceive of infinite love, grace, divine favour, and goodness; there is an height, length, depth, and breadth in it; it is amazing and unsearchable.

Hell torments are inconceivable.

III. It is intolerable wrath and vengeance.

1. Because it is according to the fear of, and, O, my brethren, what fear have some awakened sinners under despair had of the wrath of an offended God and of the torments of hell. "According to thy fear, so is thy wrath." The fear of some evils is worse than the evils feared, and many have experienced it to be so; truly, said they, I found it not as I feared, or according to that apprehension I had of it before it came; but it is not so here. Hell and the wrath of God will be according to that fear any can have of it.

2. The torments of hell are intolerable, because worse than any plague, anguish, or misery, undergone by any in this world; some feel the anguish and tormenting pains of cruel wounds, broken bones, sawing off legs and arms; and others the pain of the stone, gout, cholic; some burning in gentle fires, being consumed by degrees, and long before they could die, and some have been impaled, &c.

Now, consider these torments, nay, the worst of these many of God's dear children have suffered in this world; and therefore were no more than God's fatherly chastisements, or from the sin-correcting hand of God. But the torments and pains of hell are from the sin-revenging hand of God; the one proceeds from God's love, "As many as I love I rebuke and chasten," Rev. iii. 19; the other proceeds from his incensed wrath: but if God's correcting hand (or Fatherly chastisements) may be so sharp, and put his children to such pain and misery, how intolerable is that anguish, that pain, which is the effect of his offended justice.

3. Consider what hell is compared to. (1.) "To a furnace of fire," and to streams of brimstone and fire; and also called fiery indignation. (2.) "To a lake of fire;" indeed a hot fiery furnace is but a shadow of this lake of fire; and so far as the substance exceeds the shadow, so far doth hell exceed all torments or places of torment in this world, therefore intolerable.

4. The pains and miseries inflicted on the bodies of men here, in this world, may be abated, or mitigated, with some mixture of ease, if not in the body yet in the mind, or by the pity or sympathy of friends that seem to give little ease; but in hell both soul and body after the resurrection shall be equally tormented; and without any mixture of mercy, or mitigation of pain; neither will the damned have any to pity them. "The worm dies not, and the fire is not quenched." Not one drop of water hath any soul in hell to abate their pain; therefore the torments of hell are, and will be, intolerable. "They shall drink of the wrath of God, that is poured out without mixture into the cup of indignation, and he shall be tormented with fire and brimstone in the presence of the holy angels, and in the presence of the Lamb," Rev. xiv. 10. They shall have judgment without mercy, sorrow without joy, pain without ease, darkness without light; all relief is totally withdrawn from them for ever.

IV. Because it is to satisfy divine justice, as it proceeds from infinite wrath; yet no satisfaction can they by suffering make, for the wrong done to the holiness and justice of God, &c., but wrath feeds on them, like as a hungry man eats that which satisfieth him not.

V. We may gather what the nature, sore pangs, and torments of hell are, by considering what pains, sorrow, and anguish our blessed Saviour endured for us; when our hell-pangs were upon him, how did he cry out, and what drops of blood did he sweat, and yet had the power of the Godhead to support him; nor was he ever under the apprehension of being for ever forsaken of his father, though for a while he hid his face from him, by reason our sins were charged upon him, and he was to give satisfaction to divine justice in our behalf.

VI. To add to all I have said, the eternity of these torments show the fearful nature of them; for as they are easeless, so they will also be endless; to be tormented one hour is sad, but more to be in pain and torture twenty-four hours, but much more dreadful to be in unspeakable anguish forty or fifty years without ease or cessation of pain; but what are ten thousand years to an endless eternity? Alas! when million of millions of years (comparatively) are expired the damned in hell will be no nearer the end of their torment, than they were the first moment they were cast into hell. And is not this amazing thing to think upon.

VII. All the passions and faculties of the soul will be let out to torment the damned.

1. Conscience terrifies them, which is that worm that dies not. O, saith the sinner, what a wretch have I been! what a God have I lost, who often knocked at my door?" Rev. iii. 20; and G! what a heaven have I lost! and what a precious soul have I for ever lost; I was told by faithful ministers that what is now come upon me would be my sad portion, but I believed them not, but slighted all their reproofs, and cast God's Word behind my back. For the love I had to the base lusts of my evil heart, is all this come upon me; my pride, my uncleanness, my cursed oaths, my covetousness and love to the world, my malice, and my vilifying and reproaching the godly, hath damned my precious and immortal soul. Also I neglected prayer and hearing of God's word, I regarded not the mercies of God, nor the judgments of God, I came into the world a dead condemned creature, and refused life. The sense and punishment of loss will torment the damned, as well as their penal sorrows.

2. Shame will also greatly afflict and torment them, "The wicked shall rise to shame and everlasting contempt," Dan. xii. 2. Should a king lose his crown and kingdom for the sake of a few cockle shells? what shame would ever cover his face? the drunkard will be ashamed; O, saith he, for the sake of my cursed cups, and love to my wicked companions, am I cast into these flames. Also, shame will cover the proud; my heart was lifted up, I thought none so wise as myself, I contemned others, and made a derision of them that feared God: saith another, I would not leave off my idle and foolish fashions, though I grieved my poor parents, grieved men and women, and grieved godly ministers, "I loved the praise of men more than the praise of God." My heart (saith another) was lifted up because I was rich and had a good estate, and regarded not the poor. My gifts and parts saith another puffed me up, O, wretched creature as I am, I am undone and covered with shame and confusion of face.

3. Sorrow will likewise torment, penetrate, and seize deep upon their souls, "There

What hell is compared to.

No ease or mitigation of the torments of the damned.

The sorrows our Saviour under went sets forth the fearful pangs of hell.

Conscience will torment the damned.

Shame will torment the damned shall be weeping and wailing, as well as gnashing of teeth." But it will be fruitless sorrow; no tears, no crying, will avail them anything for ever.

4. Despair, also, seizeth upon their souls: O, saith the damned, what a great gulph is there fixed, God's eternal decree is passed, there is no mercy for ever now, no hope, no relief, no remedy. My brethren, here, in this world, when a man is in misery he hopes it may be better with him, and this abates his sorrow, and gives a little ease, but in hell all hope is perished and gone for ever.

Despair will torment the damned.

5. Fury and fearful rage afflicts, and torments the damned in hell; how will they tear, as it were roar, and howl in an hideous manner, and hate themselves, hate God, and blaspheme his holy name, and all that dwell in heaven.

Fury will torment them.

6. The company they shall have will also greatly no doubt torment them, though they thought perhaps the multitudes they should suffer with might be some ease to them; but they will find the contrary. May be such that they drew them into sin, will there curse them and torment them with taunting reflections, it was you, thou cursed wretch, that brought me to this place, you drew me to commit this and that sin. Others may say, it was you that deceived me with your cursed errors and heresies, and caused me to deny the true Christ, or to cast contempt upon his holy person, &c., devils, also, must be their companions for ever, who strove to bring them into that place, the sight of whom must needs be grievous, and hateful to them for ever.

The company the damned will have in hell, will torment them.

The sorrow and rage of the damned (saith reverend Dr. Bates) will be increased by despair, for when the wretched sinner sees the evil is peremptory and no outlet of hope, he abandons himself to the violence of sorrow, and by cruel thoughts wounds the heart more than the fiercest furies in hell can, &c., p. 535.

6. Both soul and body too shall be tormented for evermore, when the bodies of men have been tormented, their souls have been at ease, and sustained them under their outward sorrows, but in hell the soul will be tormented as well as their bodies; the soul will be tormented in one fire, while the body is tormented in another.

Body and soul both tormented in hell.

II. I shall show you, who they are that shall go to hell, or are in danger to be cast into those dismal torments at death.

1. The devils. You heard that hell is prepared for the devil and his angels.

Indeed it is difficult (as one notes) to conceive how material fire can act on a spiritual substance; but it is (saith he) unreasonable to determine that it is impossible; for, if we consider what pain is, it is as conceivable how pure spirits are capable of it as how pure spirits in conjunction with bodies. The human soul in its nature is spiritual, as an angel: yet has a painful sense of fire, and other afflicting evils incumbent on sense. The body merely feels not pain, but it passes through the body to the soul. If the soul by a strong diversion of thoughts apply itself to an object the body is insensible of pain, as is evident in some diseases; and that in the heat of battle deep wounds are not felt. And as God, by a natural constitution, has ordered that the body so touched and moved, excites a painful sense in the soul, he may have ordained that the devils shall feel the impression of material fire in the place, to which they shall be confined. (Thus Dr. Bates. p. 531.)

Who they are that are in danger of being cast into hell.

But I rather adhere to what reverend Dr. Thomas Goodwin saith, viz., that though the body shall be tormented in hell with material fire (which he saith, he will not deny), yet the soul of man and the devils shall be tormented with immortal fire. Though there may be something in what the other reverend Doctor saith, yet, my brethren, what fire can be more tormenting than the internal sense of God's incensed wrath let out upon the Spirit and conscience of a man (as it seemed to be in Spira and poor Mr. Child). Certainly, the anguish and misery which our blessed Lord felt in his soul, when he bore the wrath of God due to us, was inconceivable (as I hinted before.)

2. As the devils shall be cast into hell, so shall all profane and ungodly sinners that live and die in their sins, "Know ye not that the unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of God? be not deceived; neither fornicators, nor idolators, nor adulterers, nor effeminate, nor abusers of themselves with mankind. Nor thieves, nor covetous, nor drunkards, nor revilers, nor extortioners," 1 Cor. vi. 9, 10. &c., that is, such who so live and die; for in the next verse he saith, "And such were some of you, but you are washed," &c., ver. 11. And as here the apostle saith they shall not inherit the kingdom of heaven, so another text saith "The wicked shall be turned into hell," Psal. ix. 17. And again it is said, "But the fearful, and unbelieving, and murderers, and whoremongers, and sorcerers, and idolators, and all liars, shall have their portion in the lake that burneth with fire and brimstone, which is the second death," Rev. xxi. 8.

All profane persons living and dying in their sins shall be cast into hell.

All Atheists shall be damned.

3. All Atheists who deny the being of God, none can be greater sinners than these, let their lives be what they will, for if they that know not God (with a right spiritual knowledge) shall be damned, much more all that deny the very being of the true and only God. (2 Thess. i. 8.)

All that believe not in Christ shall be cast into hell.

4. All unbelievers : I mean such that do not truly believe in the Lord Jesus Christ. It is not enough to believe there is a God, or to believe in God the Creator; but we must believe in Christ, the Son of God, as our only Saviour and Redeemer; "Ye believe in God, believe also in me," John xiv. 1. "He that believeth and is baptized, shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned," Mark xvi. 16. Again, it is said, "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life, and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him." John iii. 36. As all men abide under wrath until they have the Son, or believe on the Son, so if they die before they so believe, and have union with the Son, they must perish in hell for ever.

All hypocrites shall perish in hell.

5. All hypocrites who die in that state, "They shall be cast into a furnace of fire, and shall have their portion with hypocrites and unbelievers," Luke xii. 46; and therefore it is said, "Fearfulness hath surprised the hypocrite, who amongst us shall dwell with everlasting burning," Isa. xxxiii. 14; so as to be tormented for ever and ever.

Persecutors shall perish.

6. All persecutors who hate, murder, and vilify the people of God, for who are worse murderers than these.

All final apostates shall go to hell.

7. All backsliders or apostates, who draw back unto perdition, or who revolt from God, from his ways and people and never return, "It had been better for them not to have known the way of righteousness, than after they have known it, to turn from the holy commandment delivered unto them," 2 Pet. ii. 21. Certainly, such sin against light and knowledge; they were once enlightened, and therefore to them. "Remains no more sacrifice for sin, but a certain fearful looking for of judgment and fiery indignation, which shall devour the adversaries," Heb. x. 26, 27.

8. All witches and sorcerers, who give themselves up to the devil, and are never helped to disclaim, and get out of that hellish contract, they expect no other thing, than being cast into hell. In a word, all whosoever they are that are not born again. "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God," John iii. 5. And if they cannot enter into heaven, they must go to hell; and, indeed, what would an unrenewed man, an unholy man, do in heaven; for, as no unholy person can enter therein, so heaven would be of no heaven to him that has not an heavenly nature, or is not able to taste of the spiritual joys of heaven.

Quest. When shall sinners go to hell?

The souls of the wicked go to hell at death.

Ans. Their souls go to hell at death, even that very moment the body dies; "The rich man died, and in hell he lifted up his eyes, being in torments," &c.

And at the resurrection, when the judgment is ended, they shall both body and soul be cast into hell; "And whosoever was not found written in the book of life, was cast into the lake of fire," Rev. xx. 15.

APPLICATION.

I. Infer. 1. That many persons are very near being cast into hell, even every ungodly and unbelieving sinner. O, how soon may some of you, if in your sins, feel how intolerable the torments of hell are? It is not afar off, no, there is only a small thread of life between sinners and eternal torments.

Infer. 2. What horrid and soul-undoing evil is in sin; how hateful must that be to God that provokes him to throw such multitudes of his creatures into hell.

Quest. But will the torments of the damned never cease?

Ans. No. They will never cease. "They shall be punished with everlasting destruction, from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power," 2 Thes. i. 9.

The reasons why the torments of the wicked will be eternal.

1. Because the judgment of the great day is called the eternal judgment; and also because the rewards of grace are eternal; the godly shall have eternal joys; therefore the punishment of the wicked eternal sorrow. The sentence; "These shall go into everlasting punishment, but the righteous into life eternal," Matt. xxv. 46. Not only eternally to excess (for the wicked shall eternally exist) but into eternal blessedness.

2. Because God is infinite in wrath and justice as well as in love and goodness. Moreover, our Lord shows they must lie there "Until thou have paid the utmost farthing;" and it can never be, because a finite being cannot satisfy infinite justice.

3. Because the soul is immortal, and the bodies of the wicked shall when they are raised be made immortal also; that is, not be subject unto death any more, nor to be annihilated; they cannot destroy their own miserable beings, and God will not.

4. Because their sinful natures and evil habits remain in them for ever; and were they capable subjects to sin (as when here on earth) they would eternally sin; nay, it is thought they will actually ever sin by blaspheming of God, &c., and therefore shall suffer those torments eternally.

Obj. But doth not the text say that the wicked shall be burned up, both root and branch, or be consumed, &c. Neither of these texts refer to the torments of hell: that in Mal. iv. 1 (as Mr. Cotton well observes) refers only to that internal and external wrath of God against the Jews, and Church of Israel, which began to burn against them in the ministry of John the Baptist; and God let it out at last to the utter burning up and consuming their Church-State, and left them not the root of Abraham's covenant, nor branches or the fruit of their own works and righteousness.

Infer. 3. From hence we may see how blind and deceived sinners are; what ignorance, folly, madness, and unbelief is in their hearts; they put the evil day far off, and neither regard nor fear the wrath of God, nor will they give credit to what he positively affirms in his holy word.

Infer. 4. We infer also from hence that ministers ought to preach on the torments of hell; they must be giving warning; "Knowing, therefore, the terrors of the Lord we persuade men," 2 Cor. v. 11, that is, we persuade them to believe in Jesus Christ, and to fly to him from the wrath to come. Why did our Lord speak this parable, and also end so many of his parables after this manner, viz., "And shall be cast into a furnace of fire, where the worm dies not, and the fire is not quenched." Ought not we to learn of him who was the great Gospel minister? Moreover, let all take heed how they reflect upon such ministers who do insist frequently upon such subjects, by calling them prodigal preachers; lest thereby they cast contempt upon our Lord himself.

Exhort. 5. Sinner, bless God you are yet out of hell. What improvement may we think the damned would make of one sermon (if it might be allowed them) in order to their taking hold of Christ, and so come out of that place; but alas! there is no grace, no mercy, nor means of grace allowed them for ever, there is no redemption out of hell.

Admirat. 6. O, let us also admire the infinite love and grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, who was pleased to bear God's severe and dismal wrath for us and in our stead, that we might never undergo it in our souls nor bodies.

Consol. 7. Moreover, what comfort and consolation may this administer to believers; the blessed Jesus hath suffered, not only to free us from the torments of hell, but also to purchase for us eternal joys in heaven, he hath delivered us from wrath to come.

Lastly, Poor sinners will you be wise, and remember your latter end. Will you think of the shortness and uncertainty of life, and labour to believe the truth of God's blessed Word about the future state of all men. You need not to have one to come from the dead to tell you what the joys of heaven are, nor how dismal the torments of hell are; for you have one represented in this parable, speaking in hell; O, hear his sighs and his groans, but if you will not believe God's word, if you will not believe Moses, nor the prophets, Christ, nor his apostles and ministers, neither would you believe, though one should rise from the dead to preach unto you. Know assuredly that nothing you can do can save you from hell. No, it is Christ alone, by what he hath done; and you must believe in Him or perish; and when you do believe truly you will soon find what a mighty change will be wrought in you. True faith is not without its powerful operations, there are sin-aborring, self-abasing, heart-purifying, and God and Christ-exalting operations, which always accompany the faith of God's elect. So much at this time.

SERMON XIX.

And he cried, father Abraham have mercy on me, and send Lazarus that he may dip the tip of his finger in water, and cool my tongue, for I am tormented in this flame." Luke xvi. 24.

THESE words show that this is a parable, for there is no converse between the saints in heaven and the damned in hell.

One design of our Saviour in these words, as I conceive, is,

1. To show, that the torments of hell are very dismal and intolerable.
2. To show that the damned have not the least ease, mitigation, or abatement of their pain and misery.
3. It may also show, that as wicked men were ignorant of the way of salvation, whilst they lived on earth; so that ignorance remains with them in hell. He cries to Abraham to have mercy on him, not to God nor to Jesus Christ. Alas! the best of the saints of God cannot help the distressed in this life. Can they show mercy to relieve sinners? They may pity them, instruct them, pray for them, but they cannot ease or relieve; none have mercy to bestow to help the miserable but God alone; indeed, if the saints could, yet they would not show mercy to such they know God will show none unto.

"To cool my tongue."

The soul hath no proper tongue, but as eyes, hands, a face, mouth, &c., are ascribed to God (who is an uncreated Spirit,) for several reasons I have formerly mentioned, so members of the body, and particularly a tongue, is ascribed here unto the soul of this condemned sinner. And it may be (as some think) because such a one as is here represented had blasphemed God, or grievously offended with his tongue; may be, by lying as well as swearing, or by reproaching, backbiting, and villifying the godly, and perhaps this poor beggar. "The tongue is a fire, a world of iniquity, and is set on fire of hell," Jam. iii. 5.

Doct. I. The damned in hell would gladly receive the very smallest degree of ease, but it is denied them; not so much as one drop of water is allowed to allay that flame.

God will measure to them as they measured to others. "They shall have judgment without mercy that showed no mercy." As this wretch would show no pity to poor Lazarus in his sorrow, so he now has no pity, no mercy showed to him; no, not anything to mitigate, or abate his pain and anguish. All cries and tears in hell, avail nothing; their desires are all fruitless, as their pains are easeless and endless. The passions of the soul will abide for ever, both desire, horror, rage, grief, shame, and despair.

"But Abraham said "Son, remember that thou in thy life-time receivest thy good things, and likewise Lazarus evil things; but now he is comforted, and thou art tormented."

I. Note! the person here represented (it appears) was one of the seed of Abraham according to the flesh; and so, in that external covenant with him whilst he lived on earth, Abraham calls him Son, therefore a person being one of Abraham's seed, and in that covenant. Sirs, being the child of believing parents will avail no man; no, unless he be a Son of Abraham according to the covenant of grace made with him; which runs only to his true spiritual seed, "If ye be Christ's then are ye Abraham's seed, and inherit according to promise," Gal. iii. 29. Therefore most evident it is, there was a twofold covenant made with Abraham, viz., The covenant of circumcision, and the free promise of God, "In thy seed (that is, Christ) shall all the families of the earth be blessed," Gen. xii. 3.

A twofold covenant made with Abraham.

The damned in hell remember what things they had when on earth, whether temporal and spiritual things.

2. Note! the good things which the damned once had will be brought to their remembrance; they shall call to mind their worldly riches, honours, and pleasures, and how their hearts were inordinately set upon those things; and also they will remember what means of grace was afforded them, which they slighted and utterly rejected. Moreover, how they slighted and neglected the poor.

Thou receivedst thy good things, that is, thou hast thy portion in the world. Many men have "Their portion in this life," Psal. xvii. 14. Woe to you that are rich, for you have received your consolation; not because they are rich doth our Lord denounce a woe to them, but because they set their hearts upon their riches, trusting in them and despising the riches of grace and the glory of heaven; nor improving their riches to the honour of God, in supporting the common wealth, nor to the profit of their neighbours, the interest of Christ and his poor saints. Thou (as if Abraham should say) didst desire no better things, and God answered thee according to the idols set up in thine own evil hearts.

And from hence note,

2. Doct. That some rich men have all their good things, or their portion only in this world.

From these men David desired to be delivered, "From men who are thy sword, O Lord, from men of the world, which have their portion in this life, and whose belly thou fillest with thy hid treasure, they are full of children, and leave the rest of their substance to their babes," Psal. xvii. 14. They leave none of it to charitable uses, or not to Christ's servants to promote the gospel, nor to the poor saints: this very thing is a character of one that has his portion here; they leave all to their children or relations, and little or nothing for the other great purposes.

Doct. 3. That according to their unsatisfied desires, God answers some men's carnal hearts, in judgment and wrath, and not in love nor mercy to them.

1. God may give some men earthly riches to discover the abominable evil that is in their hearts; he this way tries them, and, for the neglect of due improvement of what they possess, will be the aggravation of their sin and misery.

2. Hereby God seems to deal with them (as some men serve rebellious children) viz., put them off of the inheritance, by leaving them a shilling in their last will and testament. Wicked men who have abundance of the world may justly fear that God designs to cut them off the inheritance above; they are stubborn and rebellious persons, and as such God deals with them. Alas! all the riches of this world comparatively is not one shilling to that crown of glory above, or inheritance in heaven.

God deals with some rich men as a man with a rebellious child.

Again observe,

Doct. 4. The remembrance of those good things the damned had when on earth will greatly afflict them in hell and augment their sorrow.

I shall a little open, and enlarge upon this truth, by giving a few reasons why it will afflict them, &c.

1. Because they see what fools they were. Wicked men think themselves to be wise above others whilst they live, and are never convinced of their folly till they come to hell; and may they not cry out against themselves, for placing their chiefest happiness in such thing, which could not answer the wants of their souls whilst they lived. What folly is it to esteem the creature above the creator.

2. They thought the people of God, who were exposed to reproaches, persecutions, and many sorrows in the world, to be the worst of fools; but to see them afar off in glory will tend to convince them and discover their folly, and cause the remembrance of the saints (whom they abused) to be very grievous to them.

3. The remembrance of the shortness of their outward happiness will afflict them, that they for one day's delight and pleasure should lose eternal or endless glory, and incur everlasting misery.

4. They will remember their horrid infidelity, and how the devil deceived them; they believing the father of lies, and disbelieved all which the holy God said and testified, and deriding his ministers, then they will say, "How did we hate instruction, and obeyed not the voice of our teachers, nor inclined our ears to them that instructed us," Prov. v. 12, 13.

USE.

1. Let none call the rich happy unless they are gracious it may be feared: that but few rich men are good men; and though they seem happy here, yet are like to be miserable hereafter; these men bless themselves, and many foolish creatures bless them. But alas! the holy God blesseth them not, they are under his curse. "The wicked boasteth of his heart's desire, and blesseth the covetous, whom the Lord abhorreth," Psal. x. 3.

2. Consider that the remembrance of sensual delights will not allay but augment the misery of the damned; if pain here extinguish all the pleasures of the senses, and if actual enjoyments cannot afford delight to the body afflicted with tormenting diseases, what will the reflections upon past pleasures in the fancy and memory terrify the damned in extreme torment. Saith Dr. Bates, "The remembrance will infinitely increase their anguish, that for such seeming and short pleasures they brought upon themselves misery intolerable."

3. Let such who are rich, if not gracious, always remember this rich man, and behold him first in his purple robes, (and perhaps) with a chain of gold about his neck, riding in his chariot, with many servants attending on him; also his table spread with all delicious food, whilst concerts of ravishing music and sweet melody soundeth in his ears, and multitudes bowing down before him; and then presently behold him as he is in another world, deprived of all his honour, and none to attend him but devils; and, instead of music, nothing but the horror of a guilty conscience continually following him, while his soul lies burning and is tormented in dismal flames. Also, behold him in his first state possessed with all that grandeur but for one hour, and in his other (or last) state for millions of years; nay, to all eternity: and you will conclude the rich who are ungodly are miserable creatures, and such to be abominable fools that desire their portion here.

“And Lazarus his evil things, but now he is comforted,” &c.,

A godly man hath all his evil things in this world, which friendly and kind death delivers him for ever from; sweet death puts an end to all his sorrows and begins his everlasting joys, when the sorrows of the righteous end then the sorrows and miseries of the wicked being; or as death opens heaven to all believers, so it opens hell to an ungodly sinner: when death comes the souls of the righteous are comforted, and the souls of the wicked are tormented: when it is spring-time with one, it is winter with the other; “One sings for joy of heart, the other shall cry for sorrow of heart, and howl for vexation of spirit;” Isa. lxxv. 14. Whilst the one drinks and is abundantly satisfied with the rivers of God’s pleasure, the other is thirsty, and has not one drop of water, either to allay his thirst nor ease his pain; and as no comforts are like soul-comforts, so no torments are like hell torments; and as their is no place of joy and delight like the celestial Paradise, so there is no place of sorrow, like the lake that burneth with fire and brimstone. Moreover, as the pangs of hell cause the damned to forget all his former good things, joys, and delights, so as no ways to please him, so the joys of heaven cause the saved to forget his former sorrow and miseries, so as no ways to grieve him.

Doct. 5. The day of death is the day of a believer’s joy and comfort, and of the wicked’s sorrow.

The godly sowed in tears, but then reap in joy; “Light is sown for the righteous,” Psa. cxvii. 11; and death is the harvest of that light, and joy for ‘all the upright in heart; and death is the harvest of that joy. Do the wicked think they shall always rejoice, and the godly always mourn? no, no, as the joys of the one are but for a moment, so the sorrows of the other but for a moment in this world; and as the joys of the one in the other will be eternal so will the sorrow and miseries of the other in the other world never have an end, but be eternal also. How should he want comfort that enters into his master’s joy? can God comfort his people? can Christ comfort them? can the Holy Ghost comfort them? can the fruition of God comfort them? can all the joys, the unmixed joys, soul-ravishing, soul-satisfying joys comfort them? can all the joys of heaven comfort them, even joys that are unspeakable and full of glory? Then they shall be comforted, and that also when the wicked shall be tormented.

1. God is their God, who is the God of all comfort; and, when death comes, that is God’s time to let out the greatness of his comforts to his saints.

2. Comfort is promised to them that mourn, “Blessed are they that mourn, for they shall be comforted,” Matt. v. 4; such that mourn under the sense of the evil of sin, and the evil of their own hearts.

3. They must needs have comfort in respect to their state, being delivered from all discomforts and sorrows whatsoever; and are in a sweet, comfortable place, and with sweet and comfortable company. Who can want comfort that are with Christ in paradise?

4. God hath ordained or appointed everlasting comfort for all true mourners, and his decree and counsels shall be accomplished, “As one whom his mother comforteth so will I comfort you and ye shall be comforted,” &c., Isa. lxvi. 13. It will be soul-comfort, and comfort without sorrow, yea, and eternal comfort.

USE.

1. I infer, That you that are godly, though poor in this world, may lift up your heads and sing, for though you have sorrow here, sorrow now, yet you shall be comforted, being delivered from whatsoever is evil, and possess whatsoever is truly good, and when you die you shall partake thereof.

2. Who would that is godly be afraid to die, or fear death: who that is sorrowful, but would be comforted; and what you want of it now, you shall have hereafter; though your life be a life of sorrow, your death will be comfortable: O, what a vast difference is there between the state of believers at death and the state of sinners.

3. Bear up under your present troubles: God gives you, now and then, comfort in the midst of your sorrows here, and will pour joy and comfort into your souls like a river hereafter, when wrath will be poured into the souls of the wicked, how full of earthly comforts soever they seem to be now; when your comforters, remember, come, they will never abate nor end. You shall never see one dark or uncomfortable day more, but ever be with the Lord; therefore when your godly friends die, "Do not mourn as others, who have no hope, but comfort one another with these words."

4. Let the wicked howl and mourn bitterly, for they shall at death be tormented; their comforts are short-lived and the days of their sorrows will be many.

Besides all this, between us and you there is a great gulf fixed, &c. ver. 26.

This gulf that is fixed, some think, is God's eternal decree. My brethren this shows that the happiness of the saints in heaven is unalterable, and the miserable state of the damned in hell is also unalterable; the glorified in heaven are fixed there for ever, the one cannot pass to the other they can neither change their place nor their company.

The wicked can neither return again or live on earth, nor can they go to heaven; all their hopes of being saved die when they die: their expectation perishes, and Prov. xi. 7. all means of grace cease: the door of mercy is shut for ever: they are in a bottomless pit out of which they can never get; but are bound in chains of everlasting darkness. The power of God and his wrath as it is fierce, so it is irresistible, and his will is unalterable: the decrees of God are compared to mountains of brass, Zech. vi. 1.

Sinners tremble; O, what a dreadful God do you provoke! "It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God," Heb. xii. 29. If you know not what it is to sin against God now, you shall hereafter; and when you come to hell there you must abide, justice will hold you fast, "Verily I say unto thee, thou shalt by no means come out hence, until thou hast paid the utmost farthing," Matt. v. 26.

2. Will you remember what sin will bring you to; why do you put the evil day far from you; death may be nearer than you are aware of, and that is the evil day to all Christless sinners, then they go to hell; dare you defer seeking Jesus Christ, "boast not thyself of to-morrow, for thou knowest not what one day may bring forth," Prov. xxvii. 1.

3. O, dread death, how can you think of death, and are in your sins, and without God, without Christ, and without hope; that is, without any true and well-grounded hope; Eph. ii. 12; be persuaded to lay these things to heart, and labour to improve the means of grace, and prepare for death, and bless God you are yet out of hell.

SERMON XX.

Then he said, I pray thee, therefore, Father, that thou wouldest send him to my Father's house;

For I have five brethren, that he may testify unto them, lest they also come into this place.—Luke. xvi. 27, 28.

No doubt, but our Saviour represents a man in the parable whose Father's house and brethren were like himself, viz., wicked or ungodly. Here are several things to be considered.

1. The rich man's request, which was, that Abraham would send Lazarus from heaven to the earth: he would employ him in a great work, whom, when on earth, he would not allow the crumbs that fell from his table.

2. To whom he would have him be sent, viz., to his Father's house and to the five brethren.

3. The message itself, viz., to testify to them; that is, declare the great danger they were in, of going to hell when they die, and so feel that torment which he himself actually felt: let him declare what a woeful condition I am in, and what a blessed state he himself is in; let him assure my five brethren, that there is a dreadful God, and a hot hell prepared for all that provoke this God, and live wicked lives, and regard not their precious souls.

It cannot be thought that there is pity among the damned, or love to the souls of sinful men; they care not (as one observes) how many are as miserable as themselves; having a diabolical nature.

Saith another, it is most undoubted that there is no real charity among the damned to the souls of their survivors, nor any true zeal for their salvation, &c.

1. Therefore (as our annotators observe) he prayeth not for them, but for himself, that his torments might not be increased, or aggravated by his brethren's continuing in their sins, and so come to hell also; whom, perhaps, he, by his wretched life (or atheistical notions), had hardened in ungodly ways, whilst he lived among them. A grave author (as our annotators note) saith, that he prayeth not for them but for himself, that he might not be more miserable by their company, who upon earth were his relations, and dear unto him. But another, I think, speaks more to the purpose: take his words, viz., "It is most probable that the main reason which swayed the rich man to the making this request was the fear of the aggravation of his own torment by the continued sin and future damnation of his brethren then living on the earth, so that whatsoever he pretendeth, or appeareth at first sight, self was at the bottom. But we must (as he saith) remember that our Saviour here speaketh in a figure, and that which he intendeth by these expressions to instruct us in is no more than this, i. e., that all atheistical, rich, proud, and haughty persons, who in this life make a mock at hell and the wrath of God, and despise the poor servants of God, who by their doctrine, holy life, and good example taught them better things, yet shall find the fire of hell so hot, and the wrath of God so terrible and intollerable, that if it were possible they would gladly receive any relief from such ministers or persons, whom in their live's time they hated and despised (and were it possible for them, to have natural affections or bowels in them when in hell); they would beg the favour of them, to forewarn any whom they loved (who are out of hell) to leave their ways, and believe in Christ, and accept salvation on any terms, though themselves they see are past all hope of recovery.

But to proceed a little further on this, God, no doubt, will punish the wicked not only for their own sins, in which others partook not, but also for drawing of others into sin, either by actual enticements or by their example strengthened, and encouraged them to pursue the like horrid lusts and evil courses; some "Walk in the counsel of the ungodly," Psal. i. 1, 2. We read of some that caused others to sin; how often is Jeroboam branded with this brand, i. e. he "Who made Israel to sin." O, then, how dismal will the state of impostors be! who by false doctrine and heresies have deceived and eternally ruined thousands of souls, as well as such who entice persons to steal, or to drunkenness, or to uncleanness, &c. And, O, what torments shall the devils have, who have tempted so many millions to sin against God, to the eternal destruction of their souls. Also, such sinners, who have been instruments to draw many souls to commit cursed acts of sin, or that have been ringleaders to wickedness, be sure shall have a hot hell. Nay, my brethren, if just and righteous endeavours are not used to dissuade others from their sinful ways, it may provoke God; he hath punished some men in this life in indulging their children in sin, or not endeavouring to restrain them from acts of great wickedness, as in Ely's case; and he may punish others in hell for ever, for their great wickedness in this respect; how do some by their own evil example rather encourage their children in abominable acts of sin rather than forwarn them or strive to restrain them from it; and by sending them Dancing schools, &c. to such places where they can learn nothing but evil and cursed practices.

U S E.

1. Learn from hence not to be partakers of other men's sins: this may be done many ways; which here I shall not speak to. But,

2. Much more learn to avoid drawing others into sin. Look to it, you that entice others to drunkenness, or to uncleanness; or to hear false teachers, such that deny the Christ of God, or that preach not justification and salvation by Christ alone. You may bring the blood of such persons upon your own souls, and not perish yourselves only, but be instruments of their destruction, also, though all ignorantly done, "Take heed who you hear." Our days in this case are very perilous.

Be sure take heed you be not ringleaders to wickedness, nor into any false way, notions, and opinions.

The person here represented, it is concluded, had been an evil instrument to blind, and harden his brethren in some wicked ways or another; and so feared his torments might be augmented if they, through that means, came to the place of torment.

But to proceed,

"Abraham said, they have Moses and the prophets, let them hear them." ver. 29.

And he said, "Father Abraham, but if one went unto them from the dead they will repent." ver. 30.

"And he said unto him, if they hear not Moses and the prophets, neither will they be persuaded though one rose from the dead," ver. 31.

1. Note, it is no small blessing to have the written word, or God's sacred oracles; "Moses and the prophets were until John," Luke xvi. 16; that is, they were the chief external means God afforded his people to direct them into the way of life until John; but we have not only the Old Testament, or Moses and the prophets, but the holy doctrine of Christ and his apostles; we have the New Testament also, and so much clearer light than such had who lived under the ministration of the law, or in the times of the old prophets.

2. See the blindness of men's hearts, and the vainness of their imaginations. Alas! hell removes not that infidelity, folly, and ignorance that is in them; they remain in the same mind and filled with the same idle fancies and dreams that possessed them when on earth. Hell is no place of conversion. Sinners think that way to be the most effectual to bring them to repentance which God hath not ordained; they stop their ears, or are deaf to the voice of God's word, and think some sensible evidence (either of future joys in heaven, or of the wrath of God in hell) will work more powerfully on the hearts of sinners than the revelation of the word, or the preaching thereof; they oppose their fancies to divine oracles, or God's sacred institutions; "They have, saith the Lord, chosen their own ways," Isa. lxvi. 3; they will give the preference to what proceeds out of their imaginations; like as the "Jews and Pharisees, who made void the commandments of God through their traditions," Matt. xv. 6; or are like the people of old, "Who refused the waters of Shiloth, that went softly and rejoiced in Rezen, and Remaliah's Son," Isa. viii. 6; or esteemed the word of God as a small and contemptible book, and rather adhered to the lofty and proud notions of silly mortals. "Are not the rivers of Damascus better than all the rivers of Israel," said Naaman, the Syrian, 2 Kings v. 12. The cause of this (as one notes) Reverend Cruso. is their pride and arrogancy, together with self-love; as likewise, that rebellion and perverseness there is in their hearts against God, and no doubt Satan is not wanting in stirring them up through his malice, to contradict the wisdom, appointment, and authority of God; he knowing hereby the Holy God will be provoked, and that he will pour forth his wrath upon them for opposing his sovereign will and pleasure. For sinners hereby seem to intimate that their wisdom exceeds the wisdom of God, as if they knew what ways would sooner bring men to repentance than God himself; which is to confront divine wisdom, and so inexcusable presumption. Let this be a caution and warning to all such who go about to set up their post by God's post, or bring in their superstitious worship and vain traditions, as if God was negligent, or had omitted such things that would tend much to his own honour, and the profit of men's souls. "Vain man would be wise, though man is born like a wild ass's colt," Job xi. 12; i. e., he would be Caryl. wise beyond his line (saith one) or in things above him; though he is but like a brutish creature, yet would magnify his wisdom above the wisdom of God. O, ye children of men when will you leave your folly, and strive to bring down high thoughts that exalt themselves in you, against the will, pleasure, and authority of God, and submit to him before he draws forth his sword, and cuts you off in his anger.

"They have Moses and the prophets," &c.

That is, They have their writings, or those divine oracles, that God appointed as the chief outward means to deter men from sin, and to direct them into the way of salvation. They, my brethren, that lived before John the Baptist, Christ and his apostles (as I hinted before), had only the Old Testament, but it may be said, we who live in these gospel times have Christ the Son of God sent from heaven, whom "God hath spoken unto us in these last days," Heb. i. 1, 2; whose holy doctrine is laid down in the writings of the evangelist and the holy apostles. True, the Old Testament testified of Christ, Moses pointed unto Christ, the Shadows of the law and sacrifices held forth Jesus Christ, and the prophets prophesied of Christ, but yet that was but a dark dispensation of the gospel; and hence it is said, "Many prophets and kings desired to see those things which ye see and have not seen them, and to hear those things which you hear, and have not heard them," Luke x. 34. That is, to see Christ come in the flesh, and to behold the vail taken off, and so to see with open face as in a glass, the glory of God shining forth in the ministration of the gospel. But let no man mistake me, the law is still of great use, and the old testament is of the same authority with the new, "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable," &c.; the law convinceth of sin, and discovers the woeful state and condition all sinners naturally are in, and God, by Moses and the prophets, denounceth wrath against all ungodly sinners; but yet pray know that we are only to receive the law now from the hands of Christ, or from the mouth of our high priest. Moses, as a teacher, was not to abide in the house for ever; his ministration of the law abides not, though the law as it is in the hand of Christ, abides as a rule of righteousness for ever. And from hence note ;

Doct. That it is no small blessing and privilege for a people to have the written Word of God, especially the Gospel or New Testament, i. e., the writings of the evangelists, and holy apostles of our Lord Jesus Christ.

This I shall endeavour to demonstrate, and show wherein the written Word of God is of such great use.

Wherein the word of God is of use, nay, of absolute necessity.

1. The Word of God is of such great use that without the knowledge of it what can men know in any nation of the world concerning God, &c., but only mere natural religion, or what is made known by the light of natural conscience, through the help of the visible things of the creation : for the Heathen or Pagan world know no more, nor any people on earth who never had God's written Word, nor conversed with any persons who had the knowledge of them ; they may know the being of a God, together with his glory, wisdom, and mighty power, considered as a creator, "The heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament show his handy work," Psa. xix. 1. "For the invisible things of Him from the beginning of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even His eternal power and godhead, so that they are without excuse," Rom. i. 20. But they show nothing of Christ, or report nothing of a redeemer ; nor can any know this, but by the revelation of the holy Scripture.

The Jews had the advantage of the Gentiles, in having the written word of God, or the law.

2. Moreover, such is the usefulness of the written Word that upon this respect the apostle shows that the Jews had the advantage of the Gentiles, viz., "Because unto them were committed the oracles of God," Rom. iii. 2. For God only gave his laws and statutes unto Israel, some of which God wrote with his own finger, and he commanded Moses to write them in a book ; "He showed his Word unto Jacob, his statutes and his judgments unto Israel. He hath not dealt so with any nation, as for his judgments they have not known them. Praise ye the Lord," Psal. cxlvii. 19, 20.

3. Matter of fact proves that all men remain ignorant of Christ and salvation who have not nor ever heard of the sacred Scriptures, by which means it evidently appears that this great and importunate matter only depends upon revelation ; for such who have conversed with the Pagan or Heathen people found them altogether ignorant of the very name of Christ ; they never heard of any such person, much less of that blessed sacrifice he offered up to God for sin, and of faith in him, "For how shall they believe on him of whom they have not heard," Rom. x. 14.

4. This further appears, for though (as the apostle shows) "God at sundry times and in divers manners spoke in times past unto the Fathers by the prophets, hath in these last times spoken unto us by his Son," &c., Heb. i. 1, 2. By the Lord Jesus Christ only, as the last great prophet he promised to raise up, to reveal his mind and will unto the sons of men, whose holy doctrine, together with what he hath done and suffered, he commanded to be written, and to this very end, that men might know and believe in him ; though all things our Lord did are not written, yet so many things are left upon sacred record, that God saw was necessary for us to know, in order to instruction, reproof, correction, comfort, and eternal salvation, "But these things are written that ye might know Jesus is the Christ, and that believing ye might have life through his name," John xx. 31. This shows the absolute necessity of the writings of the New Testament ; God being pleased this way only to reveal or make known the blessed Saviour ; and to make his Word as it is wrote and opened in the ministration of the Gospel his ordinary way to work faith through the spirit in the souls of men : saith Paul, "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth, to the Jew first, and also to the Gentile." Why so, or how comes this to pass ? "For therein is the righteousness of God revealed," &c., Rom. i. 16, 17. It is thereby revealed and no other way except God doth it in some extraordinary or miraculous manner, who being a free agent may step out of his own ordinary and instituted way if he please ; but it is not revealed to any, by the light that is within all men, nor by the visible things that are made, &c.

5. The holy Scripture is (as the apostle shows) every way useful by God's ordination, being given by inspiration of God, or by holy men of God, who spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost, "All scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, and for instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be perfect, throughly furnished unto all good works," 2 Tim. iii. 16, 17. There is nothing needful for us to know or be instructed in, but is contained in the written Word of God, though they are not understood by any without the Holy Spirit opens them to us, and works faith in our souls.

6. And lastly, the written word (it appears from hence) is the only rule both of faith and practice; and, indeed, should this be denied, God hath left us no certain rule at all, as hereafter I shall (God assisting) endeavour to prove, which cannot stand consistent with the wisdom and goodness of his holy majesty. Therefore, the sacred oracles should be held in highest esteem, being beyond all pretended visions, dreams, or apparitions whatsoever.

And from hence, we may see the great blindness of this wicked creature in hell, who conceived that if one rose from the dead to tell his five brethren, the state of the dead in the other world, they would believe or be persuaded; who would not be prevailed with so to do by the written word of God; indeed he was for a sign, like as the Jews were: "What sign showest thou, that we may believe on thee? As if those miracles our Lord did, were not sufficient to confirm his holy doctrine. And thus it appears, that those who have not the written word of God, have not the greatest blessing under heaven; they are with the means God has appointed, to bring men out of darkness into light, and have no ways or means afforded them, to reveal Christ to them; they are without that stated and established rule and way of faith and conversion, and so left in a dismal condition.

U S E.

1. O, prize God's holy Word, esteem the law of his mouth above thousands of gold and silver, as David did: value it above your lives, account it your greatest riches, prefer it more than mines of gold.

2. Labour to believe the truths contained therein, never doubt of the verity of God's word; conclude all such thoughts that may be darted into your minds to question the veracity of the sacred Bible are from the devil.

3. Expect no new revelation from God, for God hath established his Word for ever, he will not alter the thing that is gone out of His mouth; heaven and earth shall pass away, before one jot or tittle of God's Word shall pass away. Expect no new revelation, nor any other prophet to be raised up, to discover the mind of God to you, or to make void any thing that is not written, or to teach you otherwise to believe, act, or do, that you may be saved.

4. Entreat God to bless his own blessed means, or his avowed and established institution, to your conviction, and conversion, and eternal salvation. O, take up and read, search the Scripture, neglect not reading your holy Bible, and pray that God would give you wisdom to understand what you read; pray over the Word which is 1 Pet. i. 18;
& ii. 1, 2. the immortal seed, by which the babe of grace is begotten and nourished.

5. Know that the Word of Christ remains just as you find it written, even every precept every ordinance, every promise, without any alteration, additions to it, or diminution from it: therefore have no regard to any who press things upon you as truths of Christ that are not written; for the precepts of Christ are laid down in the New Testament very plainly, the faithfulness of the Son exceeding the care and faithfulness of Moses, who was but a servant in God's house. The Jews had made void many of the commandments of God through their traditions, which from the beginning were not so. No Church, no people, or person under heaven, have any power to alter anything left in Christ's last will and testament; and such that add thereto or diminish therefrom are Deut. iv. 1.
Rev. xxii. 18.
Prov. xxx. 6. pronounced accursed.

7. Be aware of those men who contemn the holy Scripture, and such who strive to render it to be contradictory to itself, and full of falsities, and commend natural light above it, or those who pretend to inspiration and extraordinary revelation, and cry up their cursed books to be of equal authority with the holy Bible; nay, indeed, magnify their detestable nonsensical scribbling above those sacred oracles: the holy Scripture, they call a dead letter (as the Papists calls it a noise of wax) but their own books are called light and life, a word from God is the voice of God, &c.

Lastly, take heed you do not receive the Word of God's grace in vain, but strive to mix faith with it, for otherwise it would not profit you anything, or at least not be made an instrument of God's power to the salvation of your souls.

SERMON XXI.

And he said unto him, if they hear not Moses and the prophets, neither will they be persuaded though one rose from the dead.—Luke xvi. 31.

I SHALL from hence note,

Doct. That the written word of God is of divine authority, and therefore is above all pretended inspirations or apparitions of the dead, &c., and so of great efficacy to bring men to believe.

In speaking to this proposition I shall,

1. Lay down several arguments to confirm the truth of this doctrine.
2. Prove that the sacred scriptures as read (especially as preached and opened in the ministry of such men Christ hath sent, or authorized to preach) hath far more efficacy to bring men to believe, than any pretended immediate revelation, or than if one should rise from the dead.
3. Show you how the sacred scriptures should be heard, when faithfully preached.

Note this by the way, that it is no wonder that such who doubt whether the holy Scripture be of divine authority, find not the power and efficacy of them upon their own hearts; for who will regard that which they are ready to believe is a more devised fable or contrivance of man's own brain. Some men in these days, do, indeed count it but an idle tale, too many atheistical wretches are in these times, and God having left them withdraws all the operations of his Spirit from them.

Note these arguments and more fully laid down in my Key to Open Scripture Metaphors.

But to proceed,

The sublime matter of the Scriptures prove they are of divine authority.

Argu. I. My first argument to prove the divine authority of the holy Scriptures shall be taken from the matter contained in them, and their sublime style: certainly this proves they are not of an human product, what writings carry in them or discover such amazing mysteries?

1. What human brain could have imagined a Trinity in the Godhead, or have given such an account of the manner of God's existence, or of the Person of the Son of God in taking our nature on him, or into union with his own divine person; or would not God have showed his abhorrence of such an attempt long ago. Had the declaration of those things been the contrivance of any wicked man's brains, certainly divine vengeance had been quickly poured out upon such a person or persons, who should give a false account of the blessed Deity, as existing in the three sacred Persons; that so the generation of the righteous might not be deceived in, and about the object of divine worship; though in many cases the patience of God seems wonderful: but such things, sure, could not consist with his truth, wisdom, love and holiness to bear with.

2. The holy scripture only gives an account of the beginning of the world, which men by natural light have given full demonstrations could not be from eternity, but had a beginning; but deny the holy scriptures to be true, or from God. It is impossible for us to know how they were created, or how long since, or how long God was in creating of it, and all things that are therein; and can it be imagined that the holy God would keep mankind (for whom he made this world) ignorant of this important matter.

3. The Scripture only gives an account of sin, and discovers how, and by whom it came into the world; and unless men believe the truth of the scripture, men may deny that there is such evil in it, or that sinners must be punished in another for it.

4. What an amazing account is there given in the holy scripture of that covenant, that was between the Father and the Son before the world was made; and revealed as soon as man had sinned: could such things have ever entered into the hearts of men, what purity and wonderful equity, is there contained in every precept of the holy law; and how is the substance of the matter contained therein, confirmed by the light in every man's natural conscience.

4. What a self-denying doctrine doth the scripture bear witness unto, directly opposite to the whole corporation of debauched mankind, being utterly destructive to all men's carnal interest and to all impiety.

What foolish and imperfect rules of life, with the end and design of a holy life are those of Socrates, Plato, Aristotle, Tully, Seneca, &c., when compared to the holy scriptures, or the best and wisest of mere natural men, who have wrote of moral and Divine things.

Argu. II. My second argument shall be taken from the antiquity of the Scriptures; the writings of Moses being the first that ever were in the world (next to those wrote by the finger of God himself on mount Sinai): this Justin Martyr hath fully proved, who lived one hundred and thirty years after Christ; the same also is most excellently proved by Tertullian. And, indeed, if the Scripture be not of God, then Moses is a grand impostor, and the first religion a mere counterfeit, and that the devil set up his chapel before God built his Church. Since Moses' writings contained a platform of worship, of any notice, and given of God himself, and the first that ever the world knew, so that it would follow from hence, that the world's origin, the fall of man, and the way of his recovery, is all a cheat and delusion, and the Jewish worship, and all the sacrifices were devices of some wicked man or men; which is enough to cause all who deny the divine authority of the holy Scriptures to tremble.

The antiquity of the Scriptures shows they are of God.

Justin Martyr in his Parænetic to the Greeks Tertul. 1. Apology, cap. 19.

Argu. III. Consider the majesty and authoritativeness of the Spirit of God speaking in them, and that extraordinary and inimitable style wherein they are written: the style of the sacred Scripture is singular, they teach with awful authority, and have peculiar properties not found in other writings; its simplicity is joined with majesty commanding the veneration of all serious men. Not like the writings of men, filled with elaborate blandishments, or human elegance, that tickle the ear and fancy, and relish with the flesh. Commands here are given forth, and subjection peremptorily required with great severity; and no stronger arguments than the will of the law-maker; promises made unlikely to be accomplished, yet assurance of performance, though no other reason alleged, but "I, the Lord, have spoken," Isa. li. 22, and lii. 4. And to encourage against the greatest difficulties imaginable, that a man might believe in hope against hope, or things utterly impossible in the eye of sense and reason, nothing is added but "I will come, and Sarah shall have a son," &c. Also the divinity of the style may be observed, that, without respect of persons, all degrees of men are commanded, high and low, rich and poor, noble and ignoble, kings and peasants, and such things, too, most distasteful to their natures, forbidding what they approve, and promising not earthly honour but everlasting life, threatening, not with rack and gibbet, but with eternal pains and torments in hell-fire.

The majesty and authoritativeness and style of the holy scripture, show they are of divine original.

Of all writings in the world, the sacred Scriptures assume most unto themselves, telling us, they are the Word of God, the words of eternal life, and given out by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, the testimony of Jesus, the faithful witness, John xii. 48; and that they shall judge the world, 2 Tim. iii. 16; that they are able to make men wise unto salvation, Rev. ii. 19; that they are the immortal seed, Exod. xx. 1. 2; their tenor is, "Thus saith the Lord," 1 Pet. i. 23; and no conclusion but "The Lord hath spoken," "Hear the word of the Lord," "He that hath an ear to hear let him hear." The nature, quality, or composure of the style and phrase of the Scripture, we say, is emphatical and signally different from all human writings. Here is no apology begging pardon of the reader, or insinuating into his good opinion by the art of rhetoric, but a stately plainness and mysterious simplicity. The Scripture so speaketh (saith Augustine) "That with the height of it it laughs proud and lofty spirited men to scorn, yet feeds men of the greatest knowledge and understanding, and nourisheth babes and sucklings."

Argu. IV. That excellent Spirit of holiness, which every where breathes in, and from the scriptures, show of whose framing they are: to this holiness they most powerfully persuade by amazing expressions and commands, "Be ye holy, for I am holy;" requiring men to be righteous and holy, and yet to behold themselves filthy, and not to trust to their own inherent holiness, nor to boast or glory, but to be ashamed and loath themselves after they have attained to the highest degree, while here in this world they are capable of arriving at, assuring that "No man without holiness shall see the Lord," Heb. xii. 14. And yet that their holiness is none of their title to eternal happiness, but that they must be found in the righteousness of another, and that their own is as but filthy rags; yet censuring men to eternal burning, not only for the outward acts of sin, but inward lusts of their hearts. From whence can such pure streams flow, but from the fountain of all perfections. Doth such a design to advance holiness and utterly debase man look as if it was the intrigue of any polluted and proud mortals, and which discovers such a way of attaining to righteousness and everlasting happiness, that lies above the reach, thoughts, invention, and comprehension of the wisest of mere natural men.

The excellent holiness that breathes forth in the Scriptures, proves their divine original.

The harmony of the Scripture proves they are God's holy oracles.

Argum. V. The sweet and admirable agreement, consent, dependence and harmony that we find in all and every part of the holy Scriptures prove their divinity, though there are so many books contained in them and written by so many different persons of various conditions, in different ages, in several places, and in different languages, yet all agreeing with each other, and every part with the whole; which could not be foreseen or contrived by any human wisdom or subtilties of men in writing any one part thereof; for all the histories, prophecies, promises, types, and doctrines in an orderly connection, tend to promote the same thing, and one admirably subservient to the other; and every age proves a fresh interpreter, and reveals to us more and more of this glorious concord and harmony, which could not be the effect of human artifice, nor of any other cause, but an infinite comprehension and foresight, and that the several writers of this book were in all times guided in what they wrote by the supreme wisdom of that one God, who is always constant to himself, and the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever.

The credit and sincerity of the penmen of the holy Scripture prove they are of God.

Argum. VI. Consider yet further, the credit and sincerity of the penmen of the sacred scriptures; for were they not what they pretend to be, viz., the Word of God, and dictated to the writers thereof by the Spirit of God, it would be the greatest affront to the Divine Majesty imaginable, and the greatest cheats towards mankind, that ever was put upon the world; but if we consider the penmen thereof we shall find them all of undoubted credit, and no ways to be suspected of imposture; some of them being kings, and of the deepest learning, not likely to be guilty of such a mean and base spirit, as to vent odious lies and forgery. Moreover, many of the prophets, and almost all the apostles were illiterate men, of parts and education so mean that of themselves it seems impossible they should write so profoundly, or lay so deep a contrivance for deluding the world; and, as it is incredible that so many men of such a distance, times, qualities, and abilities should all agree in the same imposture, and so harmonize in promoting it. So neither could any interest nor ambition prompt them thereunto; for, as in the main tendency of this book is to notify men's ambition and lusts, so most of them exposed themselves by publishing these writings to great hazards and persecutions. Many of the prophets, and almost all the apostles, being put to death in maintaining the things asserted and wrote by them; nor have several of them forbore to record their own great sins, failings, and imperfections, together with those of their brethren.

Thus Moses relates his own infidelity and averseness to submit to the extraordinary call of God. What an account have we of Noah and Lot, Jacob, David, and Solomon, and Peter's great sins and falls. Now, had the penman of the Scripture wrote only by a human spirit, or had they been impostors, be sure they would have hid or concealed their own and their brethren's gross iniquities; but no doubt those sins of theirs were by the Lord left on record for many grand and good causes; and one among the rest might be to support poor believers, who, through temptations, may fall fully, and that they might from thence have hope, that the root of the matter may be in them, though Satan and their own evil hearts might be too hard for them.

Argum. VII. My next argument shall be taken from the accomplishment, and punctual accomplishment of the prophecies of the Scripture to foretell events, which is the prerogative of God alone. Let them bring forth (saith God) what shall happen; or show us things that are to come hereafter, that we may know them" (Isa. xli. 22). Now, my brethren, the body of the Scriptures is enlivened with the spirit of prophecy almost throughout, and what a full and convincing prophecy is that of Jacob (recorded by Moses), i. e., "The scepter shall not depart from Judah, nor a lawgiver from between his feet until Shiloh come, and unto him shall the gathering of the people be," Gen. xlix. 10. This was not fulfilled till near two thousand years after. The first part was made good all along, from the entrance of the tribe of Judah upon the government in king David, until the going of it off in the person of Hircanus, whom Herod slew, as Josephus testifies; but when Herod, a stranger, and of another nation, had cut off the house and line of Judah from the government of the Jews, then, at that very time, Shiloh, viz., the long expected Messiah, punctually came into the world. That by Shiloh the Messiah was meant, the Jewish Rabbins do not deny, which, being well considered, one would think might convince the Jews their Messiah is long since come. But, however, what a plain and wonderful confirmation in this prediction of the sacred verity of the Scripture; also I might mention that concerning Cyrus, foretold by the prophet Isaiah one hundred years before he was born, and how he should conquer Babylon, and rebuild the temple at Jerusalem; which came to pass accordingly. As also the seventy years' captivity of the Jews by the Babylonians. Moreover, Daniel's prophecy of the four monarchs, and of the fourth or Roman monarch, which, as he foretold, should be so much different from all the others before it, and of the rise of Antichrist signified by the little horn, Dan 7, who should wear out the saints which the whole world long since hath seen exactly come to pass. And also, that of Daniel's seventy weeks, discovering the very time when the Messiah should be cut off, which was punctually fulfilled accordingly. Also, if we come unto the New Testament times, how fully were the predictions of our Saviour accomplished, touching the destruction of Jerusalem and the temple, and also Paul's predictions of the revelation of the Man of Sin, and John's prophecies in his revelations, of the general apostacy from the Christian faith; and the rise and tyranny of the Papacy, or the Church of Rome, under the name of Mystery Babylon; together with the time of the Beast's reign for forty and two months, and state of the witnesses of Christ in sack-^{2 Thes. ii. 8.} cloth for one thousand two hundred and sixty years all these prophecies do abundantly rove the truth and divine authority of the holy Scripture.

Argum. VIII. Those writings and doctrine, that was confirmed by real and wonderful miracles must needs be of God; but the books and doctrine of canonical Scriptures were so confirmed. What miracles did Moses work by the finger of God in Egypt, and at the Red Sea to confirm the Jewish religion, or the truth of the Old Testament. And, also, how amazing were they wrought by our blessed Saviour and his Apostles, to confirm he was the true Messiah, and to confirm the doctrine of Christianity, or the truths of the New Testament, which, as to matter of fact, none dare or can deny, for those miracles were not done in a corner: the very Turks deny not the miracles of our Lord, and Josephus makes mention of them in his history of the wars of the Jews. When God puts forth his miraculous working power, in the confirmation of any word or doctrine (saith reverend Owen) he avows it to be of and from himself, or to be absolutely and infallibly true, setting the fullest and openest seal unto it, which men who cannot discern his essence or being are capable of receiving or discerning, &c.; the worst enemies of the Christian religion cannot deny the miracles wrought by our blessed Lord. Moreover, take notice of this, i. e., that the devil can work no real miracles, for could he, what mortal might he not deceive? all the miracles which he, or his instruments pretend to work, the Lord calls lying wonders; those miracles in the primitive times, sirs, did not soon cease in the Church. For I find, that Irenæus who lived near two hundred years after Christ, declares that miracles were not ceased in his time, but that in the name of Christ "The dead were raised, and devils cast out," in his days.

The scripture confirmed by miracles.

Argum. IX. I might add the wonderful preservation of the holy Scriptures for so many ages, which, indeed, seems to me to be none of the least of miracles, considering what enemies they have met withal; certainly, if they belonged not to God, as the author and parent of them, they had not continued to this day. For why should God suffer such a book to remain, and be under his peculiar care, declaring itself to be of his dictation, if falsely pretending to his name and authority? Many works of eminent men are lost, but the sacred Bible continues in spite of the wrath and malice of men and devils. What, the holy God suffer a book to remain, calling itself the Word of God? If it was not indeed so, be sure it had been obliterated and blotted out long ago; but since it hath surmounted all difficulties and oppositions for so many generations, and against such unwearied and diabolical attempts, we have no reason (in the least) to doubt of the certain verity thereof.

The preservation of the Scriptures proves they are of God.

Argum. X. The wonderful success wherewith the Gospel has been attended might be brought in as another argument to prove the Divine authority of the Scripture. How in the first ages did Christianity prevail and spread itself, notwithstanding the opposition made against it by the Heathen emperors and many cursed heretics: though published by a few weak and illiterate fishermen and contemptible instruments, yet it strangely prospered and prevailed (as I may say) against wind and tide, earth and hell; and what a multitude were brought to the obedience of the cross in many nations.

The wonderful success the Word of God hath had.

Argum. XI. The fearful judgments of God inflicted in several ages, upon many wicked men, for contemning these sacred oracles, might be brought in as a weighty argument to prove this great truth, God having in a dreadful manner cut off some, who have blasphemed his Word and holy name, by immediate death, as approved histories testify.

Judgments fallen on many who have blasphemed God's Word.

The mighty power God's Word hath on man's heart.

Psal. xix. 10.

Argum. XII. The wonderful power the writings of the Holy Scripture have had, and still have upon the hearts of men, is a forceable argument to prove they are of Divine authority; they convince the conscience, enlighten the eyes, convert the soul, stop the mouths of gainsayers, kill, and terrify obstinate sinners, and comfort the minds of sorrowful and dejected saints, manifesting the thoughts and intents of the heart, causing the godly to bear and endure the greatest sorrows with the greatest cheerfulness, the unshaken hopes they give to good men of a future glory, and the horror that through them oft-times falls on wicked men for fear of hell, shows they are of God.

Argum. XIII. The faith, confession, and universal testimony born to the truth of the Scriptures, by the martyrs and consent of the godly, and universal Church in all ages, is another strong and powerful argument, for the confirmation of the verity of the Holy Scriptures: what power could support, and bear up the spirits of the martyrs in the flames, testifying to the truths of the written Word, save the mighty power of God.

The holy Scriptures not compiled by men.

Argum. XIV. If the Scripture be not of God they are human: viz., compiled by men, and if by men, either they were godly men or wicked men; good or godly men they could not be, for what is more foul and abominable in men, than to invent or forge a book out of their own brains, and to father it upon the holy and ever blessed God. Moreover, there is no reason to think they were compiled by wicked men, for what impious wretches would, nay, could frame such a book, that promotes such a holy, self-denying life as the Scriptures do; so opposite and contrary to the natural interest and inclinations of all ungodly persons.

The inward testimony and witness of the Spirit.

Argum. XV. To all these I might add the Divine testimony of the Spirit upon the hearts of all the godly, which unremovably doth establish our faith, and give us a full assurance of the truth of them. Though this testimony is not the formal reason of our belief of them, yet it is of such a nature, that we are wonderfully confirmed hereby; so that neither men nor devils can weaken our confidence, nor alledge anything to shake our belief of the sacred oracles, because we have the witness of the Spirit, testifying to our conscience within, to what they speak and declare without.

SERMON XXII.

And he said, if they will not hear Moses and the prophets, neither will they be persuaded though one rose from the dead.—Luke xvi. 31.

I AM upon proving the Divine verity and authority of the holy Scriptures. I shall proceed to another argument and demonstration.

Argum. XVI. If the Scriptures be not the Word of God, then God hath left us no certain rule at all, either of faith or practice; nor is there any way for us to know truth from error. The Papists say, the Church is the rule. To which we reply, that the true Church is only known by the Word of God, for twenty communities of men, whose doctrine and discipline may directly differ from each other, may each pretend to be the true Church; and if we have no certain rule, whereby to know which is the true Church, no Church can be an infallible rule but the former is true; ergo., the like I might say (as you will hear by and by) touching immediate revelation.

He, therefore, that disowns the Bible to be of Divine authority must prove there is some other way to know the true way to heaven, and the true worship and will of God, or else it will follow that God hath utterly neglected mankind in the highest matter of importance in the world, which must of necessity cast the greatest contempt and reproach upon the wisdom, goodness, love, and mercy of God to his creatures imaginable; and if a man thinks there is no certain rule, then he doth not only give the lie to the Christian and Jewish religion, but generally to all religion that has been or is in the world: all may be false or a counterfeit: but that infinite wisdom and goodness should deal thus is absurd and unreasonable to conceive and most abominable.

Argum. XVII. The doctrines and matters of fact recorded in the Scripture, if true, then its divine original cannot be doubted of. But many things spoken of in the Scripture as to matter, are not only avouched by its own votaries, but divers things contained therein are acknowledged by its enemies. As to instance, in a few particulars. The creation of the world is intimated by Ovid, the long lives of men in the first age of the world by Manetho, the Egyptian; Berosus, the Chaldean, and others. The Flood, also, is mentioned by the same Berosus, whose words are recited by Josephus; also Noah is mentioned under the notion of bifronted Janus, because he lived in both worlds, by Berosus and Heroditus. We read also of the ark in Polyhyssor, and of the destruction of Sodom. We read in Pliny that there was such a man as Moses, and a people called Israelites, whom he was captain of, and led out of Egypt, is testified by the most ancient records of the Egyptians, Chaldeans, and Grecians; and also Manetho speaks particularly of the Israelites coming in, and going out of Egypt. Of the coming of the Israelites into Canaan. See Procopius. Of Solomon we read in Dionysius, Cassius. And Tacitus, the great Roman historian, speaks of the persecution of the Christians by Nero. The star that appeared at the birth of our Saviour, is taken notice of by Pliny, and also by Caloidius an Heathen philosopher. The slaughter of the infants by Herod is recorded by Macrobius. Moreover, Josephus gives an account of our Lord Jesus Christ, whom he calls a man (if it be, saith he, lawful to call him a man, for he was a worker of great miracles, and a teacher of such that received the truth, &c.)

The same thing is also spoken by Lentulus in his epistle to the emperor Tiberius, recited by Eutropius in these words: There hath appeared in our days, and yet is living, a man of great virtue or power, named Jesus Christ; who is called of the nations the Prophet of Truth, whom his disciples call the Son of God, a raiser of the dead, and an healer of all manner of diseases. Now, how unreasonable a thing is it for men to give credit to the truth of many human histories and matter of fact that never was so confirmed, as the sacred Scriptures, have been, and yet boldly dare deny or doubt of the divine authority or truth of this book.

Now extant in Bibliotheca Patrum.

Now, how

But to proceed,

Secondly, I shall endeavour to prove that the holy Scripture, in the ministration thereof, hath far more efficacy attending it to bring men to believe and repent than immediate revelation, or apparition from the dead, &c.

1. For the proof and demonstration of this great truth I shall show you the uncertainty of the evidence of all other pretended ways, particularly that of immediate revelation.

1. Suppose a man pretends to immediate inspiration or revelation, by which he says he knows the truth, or the only way to be saved, and how to worship God, how can we be assured that what he says is a true and infallible revelation. For, perhaps, twenty men, who may all teach contrary doctrine one to the other, yet all pretend to immediate revelation or inspiration of God, how shall any enquiring and doubting person be assured, which of these are truly inspired; one may say, I witness it in myself, and know it is of God; well, and so may another of them say, and so all; and how, then, is the doubting person left at an utter uncertainty.

The uncertainty of immediate inspiration.

For unless one or another of this sort who pretends to immediate inspiration can do that or such things to confirm his mission which no impostor can pretend unto, or do the like, he is not in the least to be regarded, in what he says or teaches from such a spirit.

Quest. What must he do?

Answ. He must work real miracles, as to raise the dead, and open the eyes of such that were born blind, by that spirit he pretends to be led; and if he cannot do such things he can do no more than any grand deceiver or impostor can pretend unto.

Moreover, pray consider that Almighty God himself, who is a Free-Agent, and is under no obligation to his creatures, never gave forth but two religions, or two sorts of public worship, laws, and ordinances (the first was the Jewish religion, and the second the Christian religion) and neither of these he imposed on his people without confirming them by signs and wonders.

The first was given forth by Moses, and pray what amazing miracles and wonders did he work in Egypt before Pharaoh, and at the Red Sea, to prove his mission; or that he was sent of God, and such that none could do the like: though Jannes and Jambres withstood him, and strove to do the like things, but at last were forced to cry out, it was "the finger of God." Moreover, when the time of the Jewish worship, and their Church-state was expiring, and our Lord was sent from heaven, to give forth the doctrine and worship of the New Testament; and what wonderful miracles did he work to prove he was sent from heaven; he also said, "If I work not the works that no other man can do, believe me not." And again he saith, "The works that I do, they bear witness of me." They proved that the Father sent him, and that his doctrine was of God, "Or else believe me for the very work's sake," John xiv. 11.

3. Suppose a man should say he is come from the dead, either from heaven or hell, who will believe him? he may be an impostor, a liar, he is not to be regarded, unless he works miracles; and to confirm what he says he must raise the dead and open the eyes of such that were born blind, or such like wonderful works which no deceiver can do; for the devil, and all lying spirits can work no real miracles, no, they are all lying signs and wonders, for were not this so, the world were left in a woeful condition. Besides, then the miracles our Lord wrought could be no infallible evidence that he was the Son of God and sent by Him, and his doctrine was from heaven.

4. Moreover, suppose one should really come from the dead, and preach to sinners, and tell them what they should do to be saved; yet his testimony would be only the testimony of a mere human creature; but the sacred Scriptures are the word of God, "All Scriptures are given by inspiration of God," 2 Tim. iii. 16, Heb. i. 1, 2. Nay, the doctrine of the Gospel, or word of the New Testament was spoken by Christ himself, the Son of God from heaven; he, in His own person and with His own mouth, gave it forth as He received it from the Father, and confirmed it by wonderful miracles. And now, which should we soonest believe, or is of the greatest authority? what the Son of God himself spake, or what an human spirit should declare?

5. But the grand argument is this, viz., that way, or that word, or that means, which God hath ordained or appointed (as the ordinary and most effectual way or means) for the conversion of sinners, or to bring them to believe and repent, hath a great and divine power and efficacy in it (yea, above all or any other way or means whatsoever), to effect that end. But God hath ordained or appointed the sacred Scriptures as read, especially as preached by his faithful ministers, as the ordinary and most effectual way or means for the conversion of sinners, or to bring them to believe and repent, therefore the Scriptures as so read and preached hath a real and Divine power and efficacy in it above all or any way or means whatsoever, to effect that great end. Will God leave his own ordinance, and own an ordinance of man's own devising, or cause that to succeed to answer the great end proposed by himself in his own institution? no, no, the rich man in hell magnifies the apparition of a spirit; concluding that what one that riseth from the dead might declare would have more effect upon his five brethren than the written Word. But,

Certainly, that way and means God hath ordained to such or such an end, he will bless and own, for the effecting his own gracious design and purpose, above any way or means else. Now, for the confirmation of this argument, see what the apostle John saith, "Many others signs truly did Jesus, in the presence of his disciples, which are not written in this book. But these are written that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ the Son of God, and that believing ye might have life through his name," John xx. 30, 31. The reason why the doctrine and miracles of our blessed Saviour are written in the Book of the New Testament is that we might believe this is the way and means God hath ordained to this great end, compared with Rom. x. 14, 15. "How shall they call upon him in whom they have not believed? and how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard, and how shall they hear without a preacher? and how shall they preach except they are sent." (1.) Note, that faith comes by hearing the Gospel preached as the ordinary way God hath ordained. (2.) That they must be such that preach it whom God hath ordained and sent. Now, either he hath ordained mortal men to preach it, or angels, or else the spirits of men who are dead; but God hath not ordained his angels to preach it, nor the spirits of men that are dead; therefore he hath ordained and sent mortal men, whom he hath gifted to that end, to be the preachers thereof. Besides, matter of fact puts it out of all doubt, for nothing is more evident than this, that mortal men were chosen, gifted, ordained, and sent by the Lord Jesus Christ, to be the only ministers or preachers of the gospel. Matt. x. 14. First, he chose his twelve disciples, and sent them forth to preach it, (Luke x. 1), and afterwards he sent out the "seventy." And when they went away he said to them, "Behold I send you the promise of my ather, but tarry in the city of Jerusalem until you are endued with power from on high," Luke xxiv. 49. Also it is said, "When he ascended up on high he gave gifts to men." Not to angels, nor to the spirits of the dead. "And he gave some apostles, and some prophets, and some evangelists, and some pastors and teachers," Eph. iv. 8, 11. The first had an extraordinary mission and call; such offices as apostles, and extraordinary prophets, and evangelists, none can pretend to have since the extraordinary gifts ceased; but pastors and teachers remain in the church to the end of the world, who preach by virtue of those gifts Christ received and gave when he ascended up on high, and hath left rules how pastors should be qualified, and how both pastors and teachers should receive their ordinary and regular call, and so be sent by the Church.

G. That Word which is more sure than in the voice that came from the "excellent glory in the holy mount" must needs be of the greatest authority, and most powerful efficacy attending it, to bring to believe, &c. But the holy Scriptures is a more sure word than the voice that came from the most "excellent glory in the holy mount;" ergo, the holy Scripture is of the greatest authority, and hath most power and efficacy in it to bring men to believe, &c. "For we have not followed cunningly devised fables, when we made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but were eye-witnesses of his Majesty. For he received from God the Father honour and glory, when there came such a voice to Him from the excellent glory, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well-pleased. And this voice which came from heaven we heard, when we were with him in the Holy Mount. We have also a more sure word of prophecy, whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shines in a dark place until the day dawn, and the day-star arise in your hearts," 2 Pet. 1, 16,—19. Well, and what is that more sure word? see the next verse, "Knowing this first, that no prophecy of Scripture is of any private interpretation," &c.

Know this first, viz., The rule of your faith and practice, or first and principally above all things, as the great article of your faith, that the holy Scripture is of divine authority, and is to be preferred above that glorious voice heard in the mount; and so far above all pretended visions, new inspirations, spirits, or any other way or means whatsoever, that any can pretend unto. And that this doctrine contained therein, and as a sure rule, remains until Christ the Day (or Morning) Star comes in his glory, when our hearts shall be perfectly illuminated, or that which is perfect is come, and that no one place of the Scriptures is to be interpreted by men's own spirits, or is of any private interpretation, contrary to what is confirmed by other Scriptures; God being the Author of it, all agrees and sweetly harmonize, though, through the ignorance of men, and by the delusions of Satan, some understand them not, and others wrest them to their own destruction; but not that we are to conceive no man is to interpret the Scriptures unless he hath received extraordinary gifts of the Spirit, or the knowledge of the tongues, for the Scripture may be understood of the ignorant (as the ancients well observe), who have but the ordinary gifts of the Spirit, by comparing one scripture with another; for the Scripture itself is the best interpreter of the Scripture.

7. If we read of many thousands that have been converted by preaching the Gospel, or by the unerring Word of God or his sacred oracles and not one converted by the Spirit of any of the dead, or by any spirit whatsoever, teaching directly contrary to those sacred oracles, or not adhering or referring to them by pretended immediate inspiration, then the Scriptures, or the preaching of God's written Word, hath the only authority and efficacy in it through the Spirit of Christ (which always teaches according to it), but we read of thousands this way converted, and not of one converted by the Spirit of any come from the dead, nor by immediate inspiration or by a Spirit that teacheth directly contrary to those sacred oracles; or not adhering or referring to them. Ergo,

Many thousands have been converted by preaching the Word.

Acts ii. 42, 44.

My brethern, such who pretend that they were converted by any spirit, light, or inspiration of or by any spirits that speak not according to this Word, it is a lying spirit, and no light is in them, but that they are certainly deluded and deceived by the devil.

Isa. viii. 30.

8. If the holy Scripture be not the certain way and means of faith and practice, or of faith and repentance, then God hath (as I before hinted) left us no certain rule, way, or means at all, and be sure that cannot stand consistent with the wisdom, goodness, mercy, pity, honour, and faithfulness of the holy God. If any say God hath left a certain rule for our faith, practice, and conversion besides the Scriptures, let them prove it by such evidences that are infallibly certain, that no man led thereby can be deceived. I deny not, but God may convert men by afflictions, &c., but what though yet he makes use still of the written Word in the light and promises thereof, though it may not be by preaching.

There is no certain rule left us of faith, &c., if the Scripture are not that rule.

9. If no man or spirit is to be regarded, unless they speak according to this Word, viz., the written Word of God, then the holy Scripture is the only rule and ordinary means, answering the great end pleaded for: but that this is so, see Isa. viii. 19, 20. "And when they shall say unto you, seek unto them that have familiar spirits, and unto wizards that peep and mutter; should not a people seek unto their God?" &c.; "to the law and to the testimony, if they speak not according to this Word, it is because there is no light in them."

10. If the holy Scriptures, through faith, are every ways sufficient, in respect of faith, practice, and salvation, then the holy Scripture hath the only efficacy in them for this great end, but that this is so, see what the apostle says; "That from a child thou hast known the holy Scriptures, which are able to make thee wise unto salvation, through faith which is in Jesus Christ. All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness; that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works," 2 Tim. iii. 15—17. And now, my brethren, what is further necessary that the Scriptures fail in to any one that believes in Jesus I see not.

Lastly, I might add that the personal ministry of our Saviour, could it be enjoyed again, (as Reverend Crusoe notes) it would be ineffectual to them whom the written Word hath no effect, "Had you believed Moses you would have believed me; but if you believe not his writings how shall you believe my words," John v. 46, 47. O, how doth our Lord magnify the written Word? There is the same reason why Christ's Word should not be believed by such that believed not Moses' writings, who confirmed his mission with miracles as our Saviour did his. You, therefore, that despise the written Word of God, should Christ come again and preach to you (in such a state and condition as he appeared in when on earth), you would despise him or not believe in him.

Thirdly, How should the sacred oracles or the holy Gospel be heard?

How we ought to hear the word of God preached.

1. As it is indeed the Word of God or holy Gospel of Jesus Christ, you that hear it as only being the word of man, it is no wonder you profit not by it. See how Paul commended the believing Thessalonians, "For this cause, also, thank we God without ceasing, because when ye received the Word of God which you heard of us, ye received it not as the word of men, but as it is in truth the Word of God, which effectually also worketh in you that believe," 1 Thess. ii. 13. The apostles preach the Gospel, and that Word or doctrine they preached he saith truly, is the Word of God, and as being such we should hear it.

2. With prayer, or join prayer with hearing, for the Holy Spirit to accompany it; for unless the Holy Spirit works with the Word it will not be effectual to them that hear it; God must open the heart, and work faith in the heart, or bless the Word with the divine influences of His Spirit.

3. With all diligence, and holy awe and reverence, "I stand in awe of thy Word," Psal. cxix. 161: thus saith David, and the Lord saith "To this man I will look, that trembleth at my word," Isa. lxvi. 2. It is by the word we shall be judged at the great day. Nothing should divert our thoughts while we are under the Word, but attend upon it with our utmost diligence. Some think it is enough if they hear the Word, though they never regard how their hearts wander abroad, like the eyes of a fool to the ends of the earth; whilst they hear it, and others perhaps sit and sleep, whilst the Word of Life is preached to them.

4. With all endeared love and affections. If we love not the Word how should we profit by it? it will not be a burden to him who esteems it above God. "O, how love I thy law?" We should prize it above our necessary food, and hunger for it, love and esteem it, as a hungry man loves and hungers for bread, prizes and esteems bread; so should our souls hunger for the Word of God.

5. With a full purpose of heart to receive it, to hide it in our hearts, Psal. cxix. 11. Not only receive it into our ears and heads, but into our hearts, into our understandings and affections; and so, also, have our wills bowed to the authority and power thereof, and retain the savour of it in our memories, and with a firm resolution to yield all due ready, hearty, and present obedience to it. We must believe the promises, obey the precepts, and fear the threatenings of the Word.

6. Believing. If we do not mix faith with the Word it will not profit us; we must feed Heb. iv. 3. upon the Word, "Thy words were found, and I did eat them." The Word of God is the food of the soul, "And thy word was to me the joy and the rejoicing of my heart," Jer. xv. 16. This was Jehoshaphat's advice to the people of Israel, "Believe in the Lord your God, and believe his prophets, so shall you prosper," 2 Chron. xx. 20. Some will not, do not so much as give such human credence to the Word of God as they give to human histories; if they did, durst they persist in sinful ways as they do?

1 Cor. vi. 9, whereas the Word pronounceth wrath and Divine vengeance on all ungodly men,
 10. Mark xvi. 16. and shows that swearers, drunkards, unclean persons, liars, and all that live in John iii. 3. any known sin or course of wickedness, or believe not in Christ, shall be damned; or such who are not born again.

APPLICATION.

1. I infer that such who cast contempt upon the Word of God, and magnify any spirit, rule, or light, that some pretend is in all men, above the holy Scripture, are deceived by Satan, and are in a fearful condition, and are greatly to be pitied.

2. It reproves such that neglect reading and hearing the Word of God, and it may inform us that the reason why some men are not converted, it is, alas, because they attend not upon that means which God hath appointed to that great end.

3. Moreover, it may inform us why some who do hear God's word profit not; alas, they hear it not as it is truly the Word of God, nor attend upon it with diligence, with faith, and godly reverence: the voice of the minister of Christ is God's voice, or the voice of Jesus Christ; but this they believe not, "They that receive you receive me," saith our Lord 2 Cor. v. 18—20. Ministers are God's ambassadors, by whom he offers terms of peace, and a marriage with his son.

4. It may inform us what a mercy and blessing it is to have the holy Scriptures, or the sacred oracles, and what a loss and dismal judgment it would be should God take the ministration of the Gospel from us, or bring upon us a famine of the Word. The glory of England lies in this, it enjoys the light of God's word, it is a land of vision; but if God should take from it the Gospel, it would soon become a land of darkness: no judgment, as I have shown in opening another parable, is like to such a judgment, as many in our neighbouring nation find by woeful experience.

See the parable of the vineyard let to husbandmen opened. Matt. xxi. 33—46.

5. O, let us highly prize the Word of God, and beware of Satan's designs now on foot, in labouring to render it of little worth or value, by stirring up some to magnify natural religion above that holy religion revealed in the blessed Gospel of our dearest Lord, and in stirring up others to cry up the light in all men as the only rule of faith and practice, and their foolish and erroneous books above the sacred Bible, "God hath magnified his Word above all His name:" though, perhaps, incarnate the world may chiefly be meant thereby, yet what way of revelation of God to His creatures hath God magnified as He hath His written Word, as God's name by which He is made known; for all other ways by which He is made known to us fall short of that revelation we have of Him in His word.

6. Prize and esteem the messengers or ministers of God's Word, for though they are but instruments in God's hand, yet it is by them and through their word we come to believe, "Who, then, is Paul, and who is Apollos, but ministers by whom ye believed, as the Lord gave to every man," 1 Cor. iii. 5; but, O, let us look beyond ministers, unto God; who is the great and only agent of all Divine operations, "I have planted and Apollos watered, but God gave the increase," ver. 6.

Now to conclude and close with this parable, let us all learn from hence to bless God that hath afforded us the best and most effectual way and means to believe in Him, and to turn our souls from our evil ways, that so we might be eternally saved; and let none once think in their hearts that if God would send one from the dead to preach unto them that they then should be persuaded to leave their sinful ways and receive Jesus Christ, or that that would be a more effectual means to awaken them, and work upon their hearts and consciences. For if they will not believe Moses and the prophets (or Christ's written word and His apotles) neither will they be persuaded though one rose from the dead

OF THE
P H A R I S E E A N D P U B L I C A N .

S E R M O N X X I I I .

Two men went up into the temple to pray, the one a Pharisee, the other a Publican. The Pharisee stood and prayed thus with himself: God, I thank thee I am not as other men are, extortioners, unjust, adulterers, or even as this Publican.

I fast twice a week, I give tithes of all I possess.

And the Publican, standing afar off, would not lift up so much as his eyes to heaven, but smote upon his breasts, saying, God be merciful to me a sinner.

I tell you this man went down to his house justified rather than the other, for every one that exalteth himself shall be abased, and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted.

—Luke xviii. 10—14.

THE occasion of our Saviour's speaking of this parable is expressed in the precedent verse, "And he spake this parable unto certain which trusted in themselves that they were righteous, and despised others." So that the design or scope thereof is,

The occasion of Christ's speaking this parable.

1. To discover the sad and fearful state of all self-righteous persons, or such that trust in their own righteousness.

The scope of the parable.

2. To make known the frame of a person's spirit that is justified in God's sight, viz., one brought to the foot of God, being humbled through the sight and sense of his sin, and so a self-condemned sinner. Moreover, it might be to inform us, what great encouragement there is for great sinners to fly to the mercy of God; and that it is not only the duty of sinners to pray, but to let us know God regardeth their prayers, who are under the sense and conviction of sin, when he rejects the prayers and worship of self-righteous persons.

But to proceed,

The parts opened.

First, in this parable we have mention made of two men, and also who they were or what sort of men; viz.,

1. One was a Pharisee. 2. The other a Publican.

Secondly, we have an account of what they did, viz., "They went up into the temple to pray."

As all the families of Jacob were to discharge the duty of prayer in their dwellings-places, so likewise they were enjoined to pray and worship God in the temple, God having promised to hear the prayers that were made in that place.

Who the Pharisees were.

The Pharisees were a strict sort of people amongst the Jews; but though they seemed to be very devout yet were guilty of great hypocrisy, and very vain-glorious, doing what they did to be seen of men, against whom our Lord denounced many bitter woes.

Who the Publicans were.

The Publicans were toll-gatherers, being such that collected Cæsar's tribute, and were greatly hated of the Jews.

1. Because they were servants to the Romish emperors, whose yoke the Jews could not abide.

2. Because they were generally very loose, or profane persons, extorting from the people more than their due, to enrich themselves; there were some who were masters of the society of the Publicans; and it is thought that Zaccheus was one of them because he is said to be "chief of the Publicans," Luke xix. 2; but though they were great sinners yet divers of them were converted, and became the disciples of Jesus Christ; the evangelist Matthew was a Publican before he was called to be an apostle. Moreover, we read that the Publicans were so hated by the Jews that though they were of their own nation yet they would not suffer them to marry with their daughters.

These two men (it appears) differed very much the one from the other; one was a zealous professor, and the other a profane and an ungodly sinner, yet both went to the temple to pray and worship God.

Thirdly, we have a relation of both their gestures and manner of their devotion.

1. "The Pharisee stood and prayed." Standing in prayer is not condemned by our Lord, it was used by good men, as well as kneeling; but, perhaps, the Pharisee stood to be seen of men, with his hands and eyes lifted up towards heaven, that all might see that he prayed, for may be his voice at this time was not heard.

"He prayed with himself." Intimating as if he did not speak out with a loud voice at this time, which at other times the Pharisees and Pharisaical persons were ready enough to do, that others might hear them; but it seemed to be a strange kind of prayer; we find not one petition he put up to God, or asked anything.

He prayed thus, "God I thank thee, I am not as other men are," &c. I grant that thanksgiving is part of prayer, but certainly all sincere persons, when they pray, have something to desire of God, some request to put up by way of humble supplication to God for what they want, as well as to give thanks for what they have received of him; but the Pharisee, it is like, saw no want of anything, glorying in himself, and in his own righteousness, and commending himself to God; whereas nothing is indeed more hateful and abominable in the sight of God than so to do, and such (as our Saviour saith) shall be abased.

Godly persons in prayer always make supplication to God, for what they want as well as give God thanks for what they have.

2. We have, also, an account of the gesture of the poor Publican. (1.) His standing afar off. (2.) Not daring to lift up his eyes unto heaven. (3.) He smote upon his breast. (4.) Saying "God be merciful to me a sinner."

Fourthly, we have an account how successful this man's prayer was, and how unsuccessful the other's; or of the acceptance of the Publican, and the rejection of the Pharisee, "I tell you this man went down to his house justified rather than the other."

Fifthly, an intimation from whence it was the Pharisee was rejected; and an account of the frame of the other's spirit that was accepted and justified; i. e., the one exalted himself, was proud and conceited, and therefore abhorred of God, and shall be abased. The other was of a humble, lowly, and broken frame of heart; he was accepted, and shall be exalted; signifying that God justifies and exalts all whom He doth justify only in a way of free grace, and that all such whom he doth accept, pardon, and justify, are sensible sinners, broken-hearted, and self-condemned sinners. But to proceed, Proud persons abhorred of God.

Note. Doct. 1. That all Pharisaical and self-righteous persons God rejects, and will cast off for ever.

Doct. 2. That a justified person looks upon himself with abhorrence, or sees himself, as in himself, a woeful, lost, and an undone sinner.

In speaking to the first of these propositions, I shall,

1. Give you the character of this Pharisee, and in him of all self-righteous persons.

2. Show you from whence they justify themselves, and why God rejects them, and their condition is so dismal.

1. The Pharisees were hypocrites; they did all they did in religious matters to be seen of men. I do not say they were also without exception: some might act out of a principle of moral sincerity, as certainly Paul did when he was a Pharisee; but generally our Saviour condemns them for hypocrites. Woe to you, Scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites, they did all to be seen of men or for vain-glory sake, and therefore were hypocrites. And this appears in respect of three religious duties performed by him, viz., giving of alms, prayer, and fasting.

The Pharisees were hypocrites.

In their giving of alms they blew a trumpet, "Therefore, when thou doest thy alms do not sound a trumpet, as hypocrites do in the synagogues, and in the streets that they may have glory of men," Matt. vi. 2. When they purposed to give alms to the poor they caused one to sound a trumpet, not to call the poor to them, but to let all men know what religious and charitable persons they were.

The hypocrisy of the Pharisees in giving of alms.

2. When they prayed they did it to be seen of men; this our blessed Lord also charged them with and condemned them for. "And when thou prayest, thou shalt not be as the hypocrites are, for they love to pray standing in the synagogues, and in corners of the streets, that they may be seen of men; verily, I say unto you they have their reward," Matt. vi. 5. They stood up in the synagogue, in such places that all might see them when they prayed, and would get into some corners of the streets merely out of ostentation, that they be thought to be more holy and devout persons than any others. My brethren, I never approved of such who in their families pray so loud as that such that go by their houses in the street may hear them, for, if it doth not savour of hypocrisy, I am sure it doth betray their folly and weakness, because it opens the mouths of all that hear them to censure them for hypocrites; therefore our Saviour directs us when we pray to enter into our closets and shut the door (Matt. vi. 9.) Though in family-prayer, where people live in rooms next to the streets, possibly (though they speak low) yet their voices may be heard, and they not reprobable; but let us all look well to our hearts, ends, and aims.

The hypocrisy of the Pharisees in praying.

The hypocrisy of the Pharisees in fasting.

3. In fasting, also, the hypocrisy of the Pharisees appeared, "Moreover, when ye fast, be not as the hypocrites, of a sad countenance, for they disfigure their faces, that they may appear to men to fast; verily, I say unto you, they have their reward. But when ye fast, anoint thine head, and wash thy face," &c., Matt. vi. 16.

Quest. Some (perhaps) may say, why do we not do thus when we fast, since our Saviour directs us thus to do?

Ans. Should we do thus, it might in a little time savour of as great hypocrisy in us as it did in the Pharisees to disfigure their faces; because, it being not a custom amongst the people of this nation to anoint their heads, &c., anointing the head, and causing the face to shine amongst the Jews was a sign of joy, and to put on sackcloth, and disfigure the countenance, and look demurely, was a sign of great sorrow; but neither of these are used in these northern countries. Therefore, where that action or practice is used, it would have quite different effects; the use of it is not, ought not to be complied with, for whatsoever may favour of hypocrisy or vain ostentation is utterly condemned by our Saviour in these places.

The Pharisees only took care of their outward conversations.

II. The Pharisees only made clean the outside, i. e., strove only to keep their outward conversation unspotted, and took no care to have their hearts washed from sin and filthiness, "Woe unto you Scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites, for you make clean the outside of the cup and of the platter," Matt. xxiii. 25, "that the outside of them may be clean," ver. 26. They were outwardly holy but inwardly wicked. And hence our Lord compares them to "painted or whited sepulchres," which appeared beautiful outwardly, but were within full of extortion and excess (Matt. xxiii. 27,) or all manner of filthiness and pollution. Thus, this Pharisee cries, "God, I thank Thee I am not as other men are, nor as this Publican," that is, not outwardly profane and wicked, extortioners, unjust, adulterers, &c. But though they did not perhaps appear to men to be unjust, &c., yet, by what our Lord shows, they deceived themselves in that respect, for he charges them for devouring of widows' houses, "Woe unto you Scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites, for ye devour widows' houses, and for a pretence make long prayers," Matt. xxviii. 14. Their practice (it seems) was to persuade widows under specious pretences to give their estates when they died to them to the service of the tabernacle, they making long prayers for them.

III. They gloried much in negative holiness, being not profane persons; though it is true personal holiness partly consisteth in departing from sin, or outward acts of wickedness; yet not chiefly from the outward act, but from the love of it, and evil habits also; which inherent negative holiness they never arrived at.

The Pharisees gloried also in positive holiness.

IV. They were much also in some acts of positive holiness; "I fast twice a week;" they prayed, you heard, often, and were frequent in the public worship of God in the temple and synagogues, and paid tithes, or their tenths to the priests, as God under the law commanded; but pray note that all Pharisaeical persons chiefly show their zeal in a constant performance of the outward acts of worship; they were for the easiest part, but the more hard parts of religion they would not put forth their finger to do. What people are more zealous at their public devotion than the Papists and common Protestants? they will be at their public worship (may be) twice, or thrice a day, and say over with a great many prayers, but it is all done from false principles, and in show only.

V. The Pharisees, and all self-righteous persons have a self-fulness in them, they are not poor in spirit, nor do they see any need to confess their sins to God, no, they see not that they are sinners, but righteous persons. "There is a generation that are pure in their own eyes, yet are not washed from their wickedness," Prov. xxx. 12. They are increased in goods, and have need of nothing, but are the people the prophet speaks of, “Stand by thyself, come not near me, for I am more holy than thou! (saith the Lord) these are a smoke in my nose, a fire that burneth all the day,” Isa. lxx. 5. A great conceit of a man’s own righteousness, of his knowledge, parts, learning, or self-fulness is the character of a Pharisaical person; the Pharisee confesseth no sin to God, he asketh not for pardon, nor cries for mercy.

VI. They expected to be justified by their own righteousness before God, and see no need they have of any other righteousness to be found in at God’s bar; not doubting but by their own obedience to the law, and the precepts thereof, they shall be saved; as many among us think, by keeping the ten commandments (though they break them many times in a day), and by conforming to the rules and precepts of the Gospel, they shall be justified in God’s sight and saved when they die; never being convinced of the want they have of the righteousness of Christ (to be clothed with that) and to cast off in point of truth all their own.

VII. They were always more strict and zealous (as I hinted) for the smaller matters of the law than the more weighty things thereof, and made a great stir about days, meats, drinks, garbs, dresses, &c., but neglected judgment, justice, mercy, faith, and the love of God, Matt. xxiii. 23.

VIII. They were such whose eyes were more abroad than at home, could sooner see a mote in their brother’s eye than see the beam that was in their own eye. This is the character of an hypocrite, “And why beholdest thou the mote that is in thy brother’s eye, but considerest not the beam that is in thine own eye. Thou hypocrite! first cast out the beam that is in own eye, and then thou wilt see clearly to cast out the mote that is in thy brother’s eye,” Matt. vii. 3, 5. It is notorious wickedness to censure and condemn others for this or that fault when we are guilty of worse ourselves; indeed we should take heed that we do not judge others at all, nor censure them unless they are found guilty of a palable violation of God’s law, or of the rules of the Gospel and good order: who art thou thou judgest thy brother? So much as to the first thing proposed.

Secondly, I shall show you from whence it is that they justify themselves, and God rejects all self-righteous persons, and so their state is so dismal.

1. It is from their ignorance of God. (1.) They know not the rectitude of his nature nor pure holiness, who is of such pure eyes that he abhorreth all who have the least stain of sin in them, nor can any stand before him in judgment who have sinned. If a man be justified with God it must be by a perfect, spotless righteousness, but this the Pharisees saw not. (2.) They were (and such persons still are) ignorant of the eternal counsels and purpose of God in Jesus Christ. (3.) They were ignorant of the holy law of God, thinking if they keep the external precept, so as not to break the law in the letter of it, they might be justified by the righteousness thereof; not seeing that by the secret lusts of their hearts they violated the law every day, and that the justice and holiness of God required satisfaction for the former breach of it. “They being ignorant of God’s righteousness, went about to establish their own righteousness,” Rom. x. 3. Paul himself, when a Pharisee, was without the law, that is without the true knowledge of it.

The cause or reasons why the Pharisees justified themselves, and so of their woful state and condition:

II. It was because they knew not Jesus Christ, nor the end and design of God’s sending his son into the world, to take our nature into union with his own divine person; they knew not why He was made under the law and therefore He lived in an exact conformity to the precepts of it, nor wherefore He died the cursed death of the cross; they thought their Messiah when he came would appear like a glorious king in outward glory and grandeur, to save them from all their enemies, and so only a law-giver; and not to work out a righteousness by His obediences and sufferings to justify such that believed in Him, and since they were ignorant of this, how could they believe in Him, and so be justified by him, “But he that believeth not shall be damned,” Mark xvi. 16; that is, that doth not fly to Christ to be justified; and, indeed (as I have often told you), we have them in and about this city and nation who look upon Christ to be little more than a law-giver. One that hath purchased a mild law of grace, of faith and obedience, by living up to which they expect to be justified before God, even and so far as they do obey in sincerity, so far they think they are justified; which error I have in opening other parables fully confuted.

III. They justified themselves by reason they knew not what a fearful state they and all the Jews (as well as the Gentiles) were in, or there being no difference, “For all have sinned and come short of the glory of God,” Rom. iii. 22, 23. All being under the guilt of original sin, and all under the breach of the first covenant, and all the children of wrath by nature. Alas! the Pharisee saw not this; he looked upon his state very good, though he thought the state of the Publican was bad; but Paul shows all were gone out of the way, &c., "And that by the deeds of (that broken) law no flesh could be justified in God's sight."

IV. They saw not any necessity of regeneration, or of a changed heart, nor could they attain thereunto without the Spirit and true faith in Jesus Christ: how ignorant of this was Nicodemus (though a master in Israel), and yet our Saviour shows, that "Except a man be born again he cannot enter into the kingdom of heaven," John iii. 1, 2, 3. And hence their state was so miserable, they thought a reformed life from gross acts of sin and wickedness was sufficient to save them, as too many do now-a-days.

V. Because, they looking upon themselves righteous, whole, or such who saw no need of a physician; they were such a people as Christ came not to call, "The whole need not a physician, but they that are sick; I came not to call the righteous but sinners to repentance," Matt. ix. 12; but such sort of sinners the Pharisees were not; they knew not that God would have mercy and not sacrifice; and hence publicans and harlots went into the kingdom of heaven before them; and our Lord shows that except our righteousness exceeds that of the Scribes and Pharisees we can in no wise enter into the kingdom of heaven, Matt. v. 20; whether the righteousness of the hypocritical Pharisees or such that were morally sincere.

APPLICATION.

1. We from hence infer that men may be legally or morally righteous, and yet perish for ever; moral righteousness gives no man a title unto eternal life.

2. We infer but very few people know the true and only way of salvation. Most think it is by leading a sober life, or that holiness is the only way to happiness, or, because no man can be saved without holiness, they think their inherent holiness and good works will save them: but, alas! sirs, while some men (with the Jews) follow after righteousness they may not attain to the law of righteousness and the reason of it the apostle gives, viz., "Because they seek it (as it were) by the works of the law," Rom. ix. 32 (or by their own righteousness), and others who are great sinners, such as the Gentiles were, "Who follow not after righteousness may attain to righteousness, even the righteousness which is of faith," ver. 31.

3. Exhort. Be exhorted you that are conceited of your own righteousness to make your boast of that no more; but utterly despair of any relief or help that way for your poor souls; but look out to Jesus Christ for a better righteousness, "Even the righteousness of Christ, which is by faith of the Son of God," Phil. iii. 9. And this do with all speed, lest publicans and harlots go into the kingdom of heaven before you; for you hear the publican (who humbled himself) was exalted or justified; and the Pharisee who trusted to his own righteousness was rejected and cast off by the Lord.

For the pressing this great duty upon you consider these things following:

1. Consider that you are condemned notwithstanding all your righteousness for original sin, and also for all your own actual sin, you lying under the guilt of both, until you believe in the Lord Jesus Christ.

2. Consider that all sincere and most pious Christians in the world who believe in the Lord Jesus, and are justified, do see so much sin cleaving to their own inherent righteousness (though it far exceeds your's) that they look upon it but as dung or as filthy rags.

3. And from hence also know and well consider that none of the holy saints of God durst ever plead their own righteousness at God's bar; mind what Job says, "I abhor myself," Job xlii. 6; and David, "Enter not into judgment with thy servant, O Lord, for in thy sight shall no flesh living be justified," Psal. cxlii. 2: though David thus cries out, yet what man had ever greater repentance and sorrow for sin, or arrived to an higher pitch of inward sanctification, or had a clearer testimony of his uprightness, it being positively said he was a man after God's own heart, to which I might add what holy Paul saith, Phil. iii. 8, 9.

4. Consider that all the godly ever made mention of God's righteousness, "I will go in the strength of the Lord, I will make mention of thy righteousness, even of thine only," Psal. lxxi. 16; that is, for his acceptation and justification before God, I will not so much as once think upon or speak of my own strength or abilities, or what I have done, but only plead thy strength, thy covenant, thy promises, thy righteousness, which I have by faith, and through thy faithfulness.

5. Consider that Jehovah saith that in his righteousness alone is the help of all his people, "Surely shall one say, in the Lord have I righteousness and strength: even to him shall men come, and all that are incensed against him shall be ashamed : in the Lord shall all the seed of Israel be justified and shall glory," Isa. xlv. 24, 25. That is, all that truly believe, or such who are true Israelites, whether Jews or Gentiles, they shall not, like the Pharisee, glory in their own righteousness, but shall be acquitted and freed from the guilt of all sins, by Christ's righteousness, received by faith alone : it is not by every one's own obedience, but by the obedience of one that many are made righteous, Rom. v. 19.

6. Consider, O sinner, though thou art as vile as the worst, or a notorious and profane person, such as the Publicans were, yet if thou art helped, as an undone sinner, to fly to Jesus Christ, there is certainly mercy and pardon for thee : true, whilst thou remained unconvinced of thy sins and sinful state, there is no hope, no ground for thee to conclude God will forgive thee ; but if thou smitest upon thy breast, and lookest upon thyself not worthy to lift up thine eyes to heaven, and canst plead for mercy through the satisfaction of Christ, thou needest not doubt of finding mercy with God. O, what a happy man is a convinced sinner, a sin-sick sinner, a wounded and self-condemned sinner. Sirs, as no man's own righteousness can save him, so no man's unrighteousness (if penitent and believing) can damn him.

Consolation. What, comfort, then, is here for broken-hearted sinners, and for all true believers ; your sins God will forgive, nay, he hath forgiven them, and will remember them no more : no enemy, no devil, nay, no sin can ever separate you from the love of God, which is in Jesus Christ our Lord, " If any man sin we have an Advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous," 1 John ii. 1, 2. But this, I know, will not, cannot be an encouragement to you to sin ; no, God forbid, you know by what a dear price you come by pardon (dear, I mean to Christ, though in a cheap and easy way to us) ; the love of God will constrain you to hate all sin, and to love holiness : O, be persuaded to lead a holy life, that your faith may be evidenced to your own conscience to be of the right kind ; and let it be your care and mine to show forth the glory of God's rich grace who hath pardoned and justified us freely " Through the redemption that is in Jesus Christ ; " " And being now made free from sin, and become the servants of God, you have your fruit unto holiness, and the end everlasting life," Rom. vi. 22. Amen.

SERMON XXIV.

Two men went up into the temple to pray, &c. And the Publican standing afar off, would not lift up so much as his eyes unto heaven, but smote upon his breast, saying, God be merciful to me a sinner, &c.—Luke xviii. 13.

If the Publican was a Gentile he was not admitted into the court of Israel, but must stand as far off in the temple as the court of the Gentiles was from the other ; but it is thought this Publican was a Jew, and that the Pharisee would not suffer him to stand near to him, nor, indeed, would they any but those of their own sect : Brethren, from what is said of the Pharisee I have prosecuted one point of doctrine, and from what is spoken of the Publican I shall take notice of another, and speak briefly unto it, viz.,

Doct. 2. That an enlightened person whom God justifieth looks upon himself with abhorrence, or is humbled at the foot of God, and sees himself (as in himself) a woeful, lost, and an undone sinner.

First, this appears to be an undeniable truth from what is said of this publican.

The publican stood afar off, and would not lift up his eyes unto heaven, &c. A sinner enlightened, convinced, or thoroughly humbled at God's foot, sees so much guilt and filth in himself, that he dares not, or is ashamed to look up to God.

But smote upon his breast.

1. O, here is the plague (as if he should say), it is in this vile heart of mine ; O, what a rebellious and obstinate sinner have I been against God ; how have I contemned his authority, resisted his will, violated his holy law, slighted his goodness, abused his patience, &c. ; he had thorough sense of the majesty and holiness of God upon his soul ; like that of the prophet, " Woe is me, I am undone, because I am a man of unclean lips, and dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips, for mine eyes have seen the King, the Lord of hosts," Isa. vi. 5 ; " I that am but dust and ashes," said blessed Abraham ; who was a man brought to the foot of God, who before was an idolator ; “ Who raised up righteously the man from the east, and calling him to his foot,” Isa. xli. 2 : so from the Hebrew some read it. Thus, the poor publican looks upon himself, even a loathsome and vile creature, a filthy leper, or as abominable carrion in the sight of God ; he stood afar off, (as one notes) that a Mediator might come between God and him, or between him and sin avenging justice.

The parts of the parable concerning the publican opened.

What may be meant by smiting on his breast.

“ Smote upon his breast,” &c.

2. This smiting upon his breast may denote his great sorrow for his sins, or as a demonstration of his unfeigned repentance (as commonly a man doth that sees his state deplorable) ; yet, no doubt, he was convinced of the pardoning mercy of God in Christ ; for in vain do any plead for mercy until they see God is reconciled in his Son, and that in Him there is forgiveness that He may be feared.

3. His smiting upon his breast may also signify his indignation against his sin (for true repentance, the apostle shows, worketh this in the soul of a sinner, “ Yea, what indignation ; yea, what fear,” &c., 2 Cor. vii. 11). He had an utter abhorrence of himself for his iniquity, and a hatred of his sins.

4. His smiting upon his breast may also signify that apprehension he had of the infinite love, grace, and mercy of God to him, upon his flying to him in and through Jesus Christ ; as when a man is apprehensive of some great, wonderful, and undeserved favour from one that he hath abominably abused, smites upon his breast, “ Lord (as if he should say) who could have once thought that I who have been such a rebel against Thee, should see hopes of pardon, and that purpose of Thy love and grace of receiving me into Thy favour and gracious presence, and confer honour upon me ; but can it indeed be thus, Lord, or am I in a dream, or only flatter myself ?” for some doubts, my brethren, especially at first may attend true faith in poor, convinced sinners.

“ Saying, God, be merciful to me, a sinner,”

Certainly (as I hinted before) this publican represents one that was enlightened into the knowledge of a Mediator ; this is implied though not expressed ; he pleads not for mercy, but in that way God only lets his mercy and pardoning grace forth to sinners, which is only in Jesus Christ.

But pray observe his confession. “ To me a sinner.”

1. He confesseth himself a sinner, nay, one of the worst, the greatest, or chief of sinners, as Paul saith and confesseth, “ This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners, of whom I am chief,” 1 Tim. i. 15. He does not say he had been the chief of sinners, but he had such a sense of his former sins upon his heart (when he was a blasphemer, a persecutor, and injurious) that he still loathed himself, counting himself still the greatest of sinners ; “ I am,” &c., and “ Less than the least of all saints,” Eph. iii. 8.

The nature of the publican's confession.

2. No doubt but the poor publican confessed his sins, with all the aggravations of the abominable circumstances thereof, and also how he stood charged ; nay, condemned by the law of God, the commandment coming now with power upon his conscience, as it came upon Paul, “ Sin revived and died,” Rom. vii. 9, 10, 11 ; by which means sin became to him exceeding sinful.

3. Nay, a true confession hath more in it, no question, for he acknowledged the justice of God, that he might righteously execute the sentence of the law upon him, and send him to hell : sholndst thou, O Lord, enter into judgment with me I am gone for ever.

4. It was a deep, a sincere, and hearty confession, with a resolution and full purpose of heart to sin no more ; “ God, be merciful to me a sinner,” “ My sin is ever before me ;” what a good and gracious God have I offended ? I will not hide my transgressions ; “ Against Thee, Thee only have I sinned,” saith David, Psal. li. 4 ; I am willing to take shame to myself, and give glory to thee, “ That thou mayest be justified when thou speakest, and be clear when thou judgest ;” I am contented that Thou should lance my sore, and lay open my wounds ; that so Thy pardoning grace may be more sweet, and consolatory to my bleeding and sin-sick soul, and that I may have the greater obligation on me to live to Thy glory, and to advance thine honour, Lord : as if the poor publican should say I am ready to sink down under the burden of my sin ; O, some relief, one word of comfort, Lord ; apply the plaster, the only remedy, I have nothing to bring, no motive, no argument to plead with Thee but Thy mercy, Lord, be merciful to me ; and thus David cries out also, “ I said, Lord, be merciful to me, heal my soul for I have sinned against thee,” Psal. xli. 4.

5. In confession there is also contained restitution, if the sinner hath wronged any man. Thus Zaccheus who was a publican. “ And Zaccheus stood and said unto the Lord, behold, Lord, the half of my goods I give to the poor, and if I have taken anything from any man, by false accusation, I restore him fourfold," Luke xxxix. 8. If a man be able who hath wronged any person he must make restitution, or else his repentance is not true.

And thus having opened the parts concerning what the publican said, and showed the nature of his confession, which partly proves the truth of the proposition, I shall,

1. Further endeavour to confirm the doctrine, viz., that an enlightened or convinced person who God justifies looks upon himself with abhorrence, or is humbled at the foot of God, and sees himself (as in himself) a woeful, lost, and undone sinner. And then,

2. I shall show what persons may be said to be undone, or in a woeful condition, or what sinners see cause to abhor themselves for.

3. Show from whence it cometh to pass that a person enlightened cries out for mercy.

4. Show how God deals with such a person.

First, further to confirm this doctrine, consider, that it is no wonder that this publican cries out, "God, be merciful to me a sinner," (I abhor myself), because the most eminent saints cried out in the same manner as was showed before. The prophet Isaiah was a holy person (as I hinted), yet, having a glorious sight of God, cries out, "Woe is me, I am undone;" the sight of a holy God on his throne made him dread and tremble; and thus it was also with holy Job, though he was a "Perfect and an upright man, one that feared God and eschewed evil," Job. i. 1, yet he cries out, "I have heard of thee by the hearing of the ear, but now mine eyes seeth thee; wherefore I abhor myself, and repent in dust and ashes," Job. xlii. 6.

Job, no doubt, had not only heard of God, but he had also seen much of God before this time, but now had a more glorious vision or manifestation of God than ever he had until now, and see the effects it had upon him, "Therefore I abhor myself," &c., as if he should say (as Mr. Caryl notes).

1. I abhor myself, that ever I had one good thought of my own self.

2. I abhor myself and repent in dust and ashes, that I ever complained of God's severe dealings with me; it is enough that I am out of hell.

3. I abhor myself that I was ever so bold as to desire to plead with God my innocence.

4. I abhor myself that ever I set such a value upon, or commended my own righteousness, my faith, and sincere obedience to be justified at thy bar.

O, I am, alas, an undone creature as in myself; thus Habbakuk also, when he heard his belly trembled, his lips quivered; "O Lord, I have heard thy speech and was afraid," Hab. iii. 10. David cries out, "Enter not into judgment with thy servant, O Lord, for in thy sight shall no man living be justified," Psal. cxliii. 2. He would have the Lord to hear his supplication in righteousness, ver. 1. In whose righteousness? even in that righteousness whereby God is ready and stands engaged to favour such who by faith fly to Him; but, Lord, I cannot stand before Thee in my own righteousness, upon a severe trial, at the tribunal of Thy divine justice; for if Thou shouldst rigorously examine all the passages of my heart and life, I dread the thoughts and consequences of it; I know I should be cast upon the terms of strict justice, and be undone for ever, unless I am found in the righteousness of my redeemer.

My brethren, although the profane hear of God, yet they are not afraid, they tremble not, hypocrites and presumptuous persons are secure. From whence is this? alas! they know not God, they see not the purity of his nature, his justice, and holiness: but it is far otherwise with such who are enlightened by the Holy Spirit, they dare not vindicate themselves, justify themselves, nor plead their faith, their inherent righteousness, nor sincere obedience: but see cause, notwithstanding all those things that are wrought in them by the Holy Spirit, or done by them, though the fruits and products of true faith, to cry out they are undone, "For I know nothing of myself, yet am I not hereby justified," I Cor. iv. 4. Not that Paul was without sin, or knew no evil in himself; no, no, this is not his meaning, for then he would have contradicted what he speaks in Rom. vii., but in the discharge of his ministry, and in the whole course of his life he had nothing to charge himself with in respect to any willful failing; he had in all things been as blameless (perhaps) as any saint or child of God ever was: well, but what of all this? some sin cleaved to him in his own sight, and much more in the sight God who judgeth him; and therefore saith he, "I am not hereby justified; I dare not plead my own works, or my own righteousness at God's bar, for he knew he had sinned, and formerly broken the law more than in one point; and now also, when he did good, evil was present with him; nay, saith he, "The evil which I would not that I do;" "O wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me from the body of this death?"

The doctrine further confirmed.

What Job might abhor himself for.

Why profane persons fear not the holy God.

Paul means not that he had no sin in him.

Rom. vii. 17—24. I am undone in myself. Now, if such holy men were forced to plead the mercy of God, and the mercy of Christ, is it any strange thing to see the poor publican to cry out, "Lord, be merciful to me a sinner?" So much as to the proof of the doctrine.

Secondly, I shall show you who it is that may be said to be undone, or is miserable.

But before I proceed, let me note one thing, viz., what being undone doth imply? viz., that such a person was once, either originally or actually, in a good condition, or rich and happy. For a man that was ever poor and miserable, having nothing, can not in a proper sense be said to be undone: he that never had anything can not have less; or a person that is not in misery need not plead for mercy. Now all mankind originally in the first Adam were rich, and every ways in a most blessed and happy state and condition. But every one of his offsprings, as well as himself, by virtue of his first sin were undone, being brought into a state of misery, and so need God's mercy.

I. A man, who is possessed of a vast estate or great riches, that hath lost it all, even every farthing by thieves or by fire, or otherwise, we say is undone, and thus were all mankind originally undone.

II. But, may be, such a man (mentioned) that hath lost all, may not be every ways so undone as to be so miserable neither as all men are in the first Adam; for, perhaps, he may be able to work, and so to help and relieve himself; but if he be a poor, impotent, or indigent person being utterly unable to work to get himself one bit of bread, we say, Poor creature he is undone. Indeed, now thus it is with every man and woman in the world, as they stand in the first Adam, or under the covenant of works; not a man living who hath any strength, power, or ability to help himself, but by sin adds every day to his own misery, and further undoing, and therefore needs God's mercy.

III. But although the man I speak of so undone as to have lost all he had, and hath no power or ability to help himself, so as to get one bit of bread or morsel of meat, yet, notwithstanding, he may not be so undone, as all Adam's off-spring in a spiritual consideration are; for he may have some friends or brother that may relieve him and raise him again to a high, a rich, and prosperous condition in the world. But no one son, or child of Adam hath any friend or brother in all the earth, to do anything for him; because the whole family or posterity of fallen mankind were undone, and brought into the same deplorable state and condition of want and poverty; let a distressed soul go to what door he will, not one house hath one bit of bread in it; not one person, neither friend, enemy, or brother, which hath so much as a bit of bread for himself, much more unable to relieve another. Now, thus I say it is with all mankind, as they are in the first Adam, and as they are in themselves; and, therefore, may well cry out for mercy, being distressed and utterly undone, or in misery.

IV. But such wretched creatures I speak of (among men) may not be so miserable neither as Adam's off-spring are in a spiritual sense: for though he may have lost all he had, and is unable to work (being blind, lame, &c.), and hath not any friend or brother to do anything for him, yet he may not be in debt, he may not owe anything; but poor, lost, and undone sinners, besides all I have said, are in debt, deeply in debt to God! not one of them but owes ten thousand talents; and one talent, as our annotators note, is one hundred, eighty-seven pounds, ten shillings, therefore ten thousand talents is a vast sum.

V. A man may be said to be in a miserable condition, who, being once in a king's favour (and raised to great honour), but for some heinous crime, as treason, rebellion, &c., is cast out of his favour; and not only so, but is condemned to die a most fearful and amazing death. O, say all that (hear of it, how happy was this nobleman once? how great, how rich, and honourable a person was he? but alas! alas! now he is undone, and is become a most miserable person; who can be in a more deplorable condition than he is in now? Why, thus it is in a spiritual sense with mankind in the first Adam, how dear and near to God were we while we stood in the state of innocency in which we were created? What creature was more in the love and favour of God? man was then in a state of honour, but for horrid treason and rebellion against the glorious Majesty of heaven we were cast off and rejected of God, and became the objects of his wrath and fearful curse, being sentenced to die a lamentable death, even to be burned alive, or to lie in eternal flames for ever and ever. And every man and woman naturally is in this fearful state, therefore he might cry out, I am undone, "O Lord, be merciful to me a sinner."

VI. But the man I before mentioned thus cast out of his prince's favour, and condemned to die a cruel death, yet he may repent and humble his soul, and his sovereign prince

The aggravations that attend a man that is miserable.

Who are in a miserable condition.

No person so miserable among men, as sinners in a spiritual sense.

may pardon him, and so reverse the sentence. But the law which we have broke admits of no repentance, "He that sinned against Moses' law died without mercy under two or three witnesses," Deut. xix. 15; "The law is not of faith," Heb. x. 28; Gal. iii. 12. That speaks nothing of faith in a Mediator, though faith in God is commanded in the first precept; but faith in Christ is not commanded by the law (as that by which the soul shall live), no, no, but every man is required to keep the law perfectly, nay, to continue "In all things which are written in the book of the law to do them," Gal. iii. 10, or else he must perish. The law saith "Do this and live," but it doth not say for your non-doing of these things, Repent, and ye shall live; no, repentance is not of the law but of the gospel. God's law is an impression of His holy nature, and He is just, nay, justice itself; and therefore He by the law will not forgive any man: nay, I may say (with holy reverence) God cannot forgive, His justice puts in a bar, and stops the plea of mercy until satisfaction is made to His justice, truth, and holiness, for the breach of the holy law; so that every man is utterly undone as he is in himself, and as considered under the law and stands in need of God's mercy.

The law admits of no mercy.

VII. Though it be thus, or this be the tenor of the law of perfect obedience, ye some, perhaps, may say, mankind may not be quite undone notwithstanding this fiery and severe law; may not God reverse that law, abrogate the law that requires perfect obedience, and give forth a more mild law that will admit of faith, repentance, and sincere obedience, that so by such a sweet and more gentle and mild law sinners may be justified.

Ans. Unto this I answer (as I have elsewhere) that the law which requires perfect obedience, God will never reverse, repeal, or abrogate; no, the pure moral law stands as an eternal rule of obedience (though as a covenant of works it is abrogated); God doth not now require us to keep the law that we may be justified (as He did require the first Adam), no, we must believe in Jesus, yet not one jot of the law, not one precept of the moral law shall pass while heaven and earth abides.

The moral law abides for ever, as a rule of life and obedience.

1. For what is the sum of the moral law, is it not To love the Lord our God with all our hearts, with all our souls, and with all our strength, and our neighbour as ourselves, Matt. xxii. 37—39. Now, is not this our indispensable due still, or is it not as much our duty thus to do as it was the duty of God's people under the law? nay, are not we commanded to be "perfect, as our Father which is in heaven is perfect?" Matt. vi. 48.

2. The law is (as it were) an image of God's nature; God allows of no sin, no more doth his holy law; all precepts of the moral law are good, and therefore commanded and not commanded and therefore good (as all mere positive precepts are); therefore should God offer violence to his law, or abrogative that, his very essence would change, nay, he would cease to be God; for he may as soon cease to be God as cease to be less holy; or give a law to justify a sinner that admits of imperfect obedience, or such obedience which is attended with any sin and horrid filth and pollution; therefore the publican might well cry, "Lord, be merciful to me a sinner."

3. Moreover, had there been a law given, or could such a law have been given that could have given life, God, no doubt, would have given such a law for justification. For what reason can be given by our adversaries who plead for such a law why the blessed God did not give such a mild law of grace at first, wherein man's imperfect obedience, if sincere, might so have been accepted and be justified (when fallen) in the sight of God.

And certainly, had the law simply proceeded from the sovereignty of God, such alterations had been made that man's sincere obedience thereunto would have been accepted to his justification; and so God might have spared his own beloved Son, for then there would have been no need for the Son of God to come into the world to take our nature upon Him, and to be made under the law, being obliged to work out a perfect righteousness by His complete obedience thereunto, and to die for our breach thereof; and if a sincere, though an imperfect, obedience would have done, we may say with the apostle, "If righteousness, came by the law then is Christ dead in vain," Gal. ii. 21. If righteousness could have been by any law, and furthermore the same apostle saith, "If there had been a law given which could have given life, verily, righteousness should have been by the law," Gal. iii. 21. But nothing is more clear than this, viz., That the righteousness to a sinner's justification cannot be by man's obedience to any law whatsoever in his own person; therefore he is utterly undone as to any help or relief in himself, and must plead for mercy through Christ's merits.

The moral law resulted not as an act of God's simple sovereignty, but from the rectitude of his nature.

My brethren, the law must be kept perfectly, and satisfaction must be made to

Divine justice for our violation of it, by one substituted in our room, partaking of our nature, and accepted of God as our surety, and if God in his infinite wisdom had not found out such a representative, substitute, &c., and accepted of such a surety we had been eternally undone; and if any man hath his eyes open to see this Saviour provided he beholds the holiness of the Lord God of Hosts, and the nature of His holy law; he must cry, "Lord, be merciful to me, I am undone."

VIII. Moreover, if the least sin, whether it be a sin of omission, or of commission, lays man under God's wrath, the curse of the law and eternal condemnation, he is undone as in himself, and must cry for mercy; but thus it is, and all persons must therefore cry out as the prophet, and the publican did, when God's Spirit openeth their eyes to see what a state and condition, as in themselves, they are in.

IX. Moreover, if God hides his face from any believer, so that he cannot see his interest in Jesus Christ, nor be able to behold his discharge from sin and wrath by our blessed Saviour the Lord Jesus Christ, he is ready to cry out he is undone, or as an object of pity and mercy. Thus I have done with the first thing proposed, viz., What it is to be undone, and when a person may be said to be undone and to see himself miserable as in himself.

Secondly, I shall further (God assisting) demonstrate, from whence it cometh to pass that persons who are enlightened by the Lord come to cry out they are undone.

From whence it cometh to pass that sinners are miserable and see themselves so to be.

1. From the manifestation of the holiness of God's pure nature: God is infinitely holy, amazingly holy, he is holiness itself in the abstract, essentially holy; holiness is his very being and nature, he infinitely hateth all sin and iniquity, or whatsoever is contrary and opposite to his holiness and the rectitude of his nature; God cannot love nor delight in, nor justify any creature, that is polluted and defiled with sin as he is in himself, nor have communion with them, who have the image (or likeness) of the devil stamped upon their polluted and degenerate hearts; but indeed as they are so considered He abhorreth them.

2. It riseth from, or is occasioned not only from a sight of God's glorious holiness, but also from the sight and of His justice. For God will not pardon or forgive guilty sinners, i. e., to the eclipsing the glory of His holiness and infinite justice. Pray see what He Himself declared to Moses, when Moses desired to see His glory, "And the Lord passed by before him, and proclaimed The Lord, the Lord God merciful and gracious, long-suffering, abundant in goodness and truth," Exod. xxxiv. 6, 7. Ver. 6, He is merciful and gracious, but His mercy is only let out in a Mediator, "Forgiving iniquity, transgression and sin," but mind what follows, and he "Will by no means clear the guilty," &c. Now all are guilty, and stand charged before Him by His law and justice, as in themselves; and so remain until they are pronounced just and righteous in Christ. Sirs, legal repentance and sorrow for sin renders no person a subject of Gospel pardon, or such that God will forgive; no, be they penitent or impenitent it is all one, unless they fly to Him by faith, in and by Jesus Christ, they stand charged, and "He that believeth not, the wrath of God abideth on him," John iii. 36. My brethren, there is no begging mercy for the sake of mercy, without eyeing a complete satisfaction made to Divine justice, or without seeing how or by whom this satisfaction is made, and therefore until a poor sinner seeth his discharge in Jesus Christ, and Divine wrath pacified in Him, if he be thoroughly convinced by the Spirit, he will behold himself miserable, as in himself.

3. An enlightened sinner comes to see that he is undone, by his being convinced of the purity and holiness of the law of God which he hath broken; he understands the spirituality of the law, and how every sinful thought and lust of the heart is a breach thereof, and lays him obnoxious to God's wrath and curse; and by this means he is brought to cry out he is undone. Thus it was with Paul, "I was alive without the law once, but when the commandment came sin revived and I died," Rom. vii. 9. The law entered or came with power upon his conscience and sin abounded; he thought he was alive, and in a good condition before, but soon saw he was deceived, and thus he was made to cry out, and thus no doubt it was here with the publican.

4. It riseth from a clear and full sight and sense of sin, which is so opposite and contrary unto the pure nature and holiness of God.

1. In respect of the guilt of it.

2. In respect of the abominable filth and pollution that is in sin, and how it hath defiled the soul.

3. From the sense of the great power and strength of sin.

I have repeated this great doctrinal truth, in speaking to several parables, because it is the main gospel truth, and that many are ignorant.

The sight and true knowledge of the law makes a man cry out for mercy.

4. From the sense and sight of God's entering into judgment, and calling of the soul to his bar and fearful tribunal; or by the beholding the severe punishment and just demerit of sin. Had not the prophet some apprehension of this, when he saw the Lord upon a "Throne high and lifted up?" Our annotators on this place say, "I dread the thoughts of appearing before Thy judgment-seat, which I see erected in this place. The sight of this glorious and Holy God gives me cause to fear that He is come in judgment against me."

Poole's Annota. on
Isa. vi. 6.

1. It is from the sense of the guilt of sin, and of that abominable evil which is in it, it being directly contrary to the holy nature of God, rebellion against him, and a resisting of His will. Can the spirit of a man bear him up, or support him, when the weight of sin lies upon his conscience and presseth his soul? or when God comes by His Spirit, and shows him what a holy and just God he hath sinned against, wronged, and abused, and what a holy law he hath violated, both originally and actually also? and that many thousand times. Alas! should God but charge the guilt of one sin upon the soul of any man in the world, and demand satisfaction to His justice, what could the sinner do? What distress of conscience would he be in? and how would he cry out for mercy? Who then can bear the weight of such a mountain of horrid guilt that lies upon every sinner out of Christ, or in his natural state, or that seeth not how he is discharged, justified, and acquitted in our Lord Jesus Christ.

The sense of the guilt of sin renders men as in themselves
miserable.

Can the feeble sinner bear the weight of sin when the guilt thereof is charged upon him, considering how it made the great and mighty Saviour to shrink and faint, nay, to cry out, and to sweat great drops of blood, when the guilt of the sins of the elect was laid upon him.

1. Can the law, or his keeping the commandments, ease him of this burden; no, no, saith he, the law accuses me and condemns me, and all that seek to it for relief and succour, thinking to be justified thereby; for it is the strength of sin, "The sting of death is sin, and the strength of sin is the law," 1 Cor. xv. 56. The law entered not to discharge us from sin, no, but that sin might abound, "and become exceeding sinful," Rom. vii. 13. The law lays every sinner that seeks for relief thereby, under its fearful curse, "Cursed is everyone that continueth not in all things that are written in the book of the law to do them," Gal. iii. 10. The law slays the sinner, it kills him, and lays him dead at the foot of God, that flies thither for help; and this the sinner sees when his eyes are opened by the Spirit, and convictions are set home upon his conscience; he thereby sees the purity and spirituality of the law; so that from thence, instead of obtaining relief and succour, he is forced to cry out, "Woe is me!" "Lord be merciful to me a sinner."

No relief under the guilt of sin by the law.

2. Can a man's own obedience and inherent righteousness, in conformity to the Gospel, under the sense of sin, relieve him? No, no, saith the enlightened sinner; Alas! alas! all my own righteousness is but filthy rags (Isa. lxiv. 6,) or it is loathsome in God's sight, being attended with abominable pollution; and this made David cry out, "Enter not into judgment with thy servant, O Lord, for in thy sight shall no man living be justified," Psal. cxliii. 2.

Bare obedience to Gospel precepts can relieve no man.

3. Will a godly man's pleading his external privileges relieve him? Many boast of the great privileges they have attained, like the people of Israel, of old who cried out, "The temple of the Lord, the temple of the Lord are we." Thus many now glory in that they have been baptized, are members of a Church of Christ, and have often received the Lord's Supper, are endowed with great learning and many spiritual gifts; but alas! those things can afford them no relief under the guilt of sin, nor be a sufficient plea at the bar of God, would he enter into judgment with them. See what Paul saith, "If any other man thinketh that he hath whereof he might trust in the flesh, I more; circumcised the eight day, of the stock of Israel, of the tribe of Benjamin, an Hebrew of the Hebrews; as touching the law, a Pharisee. Concerning zeal, persecuting the Church, touching the righteousness which is in the law blameless," Phil. iii. 4, 7. But notwithstanding all this, see what he further saith, "But what things were gain to me, those I counted loss for Christ." If any man by his external duties and religious privileges, might hope for acceptance with God, Paul much more. Who of the Jewish Church excelled him, or had that cause to glory or receive relief and succour under the guilt of sin, from hence, like unto him?

Outward privileges cannot relieve a sinner.

Object. But, perhaps, some may object and say that Paul only in this place and upon this occasion refers to his legal duties and legal privileges; those (say they) it is true could not commend him to God, nor are to be trusted in, or to be pleased with God, for by the works of the law, no flesh can be justified in God's sight; but he was now a converted man, and had attained too many great and glorious Gospel privileges, and to a high degree of Gospel obedience and holiness; and those things sure will avail him, and might relieve him under the sense of sin and the guilt thereof, he speaks of the time past, &c.

Ans. I answer, it is evident he comprehends all his Gospel duties and Gospel privileges also; and excludes them likewise, or accounts them and all his present inherent righteousness as nothing, in point of trust or dependence, "Yea, doubtless, and I do count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Jesus Christ my Lord, for whom I have suffered the loss of all things, and do count them but dung that I may win Christ," Phil. iii. 8. He speaketh now universally what he did but indefinitely before (as our annotators note), using the present tense with a discretive particle. He disesteemed and excluded not only his Jewish and legal privileges, duties, and righteousness, which he had before, but also his Christian or Gospel privileges, &c., after conversion. Though he was an apostle, and had been an instrument in Christ's hand to convert many thousands to the faith, and had planted many Churches, but he sought for no relief by these things as having any worth in them to commend him to God, or as any matter to be trusted to, or rested on for justification before God. He remarkably puts in all he had when a Pharisee, and now he is an apostle, yea, whatsoever could be thought of besides Jesus Christ, as being in comparison of Christ accounted but dung; therefore in himself (or as so considered), notwithstanding all his duties and privileges, he saw he was lost and undone, and must fly to God's mercy in Christ.

No sacrifices but the sacrifice of Christ can relieve a poor sinner.

4. But some, perhaps, may say, will not sacrifices (which a poor sinner may bring and offer up to God) appease and satisfy Divine justice, and so relieve and give ease to his distressed conscience? suppose he could bring, "A thousand rams, or ten thousand rivers of oil, or offer his first-born, the fruit of his body, for the sin of his soul," Mich. vi. 7. God in the law required a ram, or a few rams to be offered up in sacrifices; but if they were too few we will offer a thousand, or a very great number. The phrase (as one notes) is an hyperbole. Also, oil was required in sacrifices in meat-offerings, though in no great quantity, a log, or hin, about half a pint, or two or three quarts; that was too little, and infinitely short to satisfy Divine justice; but what if we should offer ten thousand rivers of oil, had we such store, (which no man ever had or could have) would such an offering satisfy for our sins, and procure God's favour? or if that will not do, suppose we should do as Abraham did, offer our first-born; which sacrifice must needs excel any other. But, alas! such a sacrifice God would reject. But then,

Repentance cannot justify a sinner, or procure God's favour.

5. Will not repentance give a man ease, or relieve him under the guilt of sin, when it lies heavy on his conscience? No, it cannot; for then David's heart needed not to have failed him, nor he to have roared out in distress and horror, for who had greater repentance than he, who watered his couch with his tears, "I make my bed to swim, I water my couch with tears, I am weary of my groanings," Psal. vi. 6. How! who would be weary of such groanings, or the shedding of such tears, which could wash away the guilt of sin, and appease an accusing conscience? But, alas! alas! be found no relief that way, but still cries, "Lord, be merciful to me, for I have sinned against thee; wash me thoroughly from mine iniquity, and cleanse me from my sin," Psal. li. 2, 3. He (with the Publican and all convinced sinners) saw a fountain opened for sin and for uncleanness, Zech. xiii. 1; in which he must be washed, which is, the blood of Christ.

No more can a reformation of life.

6. But will not a new course of life, a changed or reformed life give ease and procure a sinner's acceptance with God under the sense of sin and guilt? No, this will not do neither, though it is to be feared many trust to this as their last refuge. Will promises a debtor may make (and keep them) that he will run no more, or any further in his creditor's debt, to whom he owes ten thousand talents, pay off that old score or so vast a sum? Besides, who can promise God that he will sin no more, there being no "Just man on earth, that doth good and sinneth not."

But to proceed,

The filth of sin distresses an awakened person.

II. The cause of a poor convinced sinner's crying to God for mercy is from the sense he hath of the filth of sin; I am (saith the soul) a man of unclean lips.

1. The convinced sinner sees the pollution of his heart. My heart (saith

he) is defiled; even in all the faculties of my soul is much sin. O, how depraved and dark is my understanding, how carnal is my mind, how rebellious my will, and how earthly my affections, how treacherous is my memory, and misled and misguided is oftentimes my conscience? "I am carnal, sold under sin," Rom. vii. 14, (saith the great apostle); "the good that I would I do not," ver. 19; "but what I hate that do I," ver. 15; "O, wretched man that I am." ver. 24.

2. Sin cleaves to our desires, and what weakness and inconstancy is there in our purposes and resolutions, and how oft have we broke our promises with God.

3. Sin more or less defiles our whole conversations, in our daily walk and converse with men. My brethren, though a believer is sanctified in every part, in every faculty, yet it is but in part in any; and though his conversation is holy, yet is not his conversation without sin.

Sin cleaves to the lips and lives of the best of saints.

III. Nay, my brethren, sin also defiles all our graces, or cleaves to every grace of the Spirit in believers.

Sin cleaves to every grace.

1. Some make a great noise of their faith, and place it in the room of perfect obedience to the law of works; but, alas! faith itself needs a Saviour (I mean the sin that cleaves to our faith); we may all say, we believe, Lord, help our unbelief. Abraham, though at one time he was strong in faith, giving glory to God, yet, alas! how weak was his faith at another time, "Say, I pray thee, thou art my sister; I am afraid they will kill me for thy sake." Can any say, there is no sin, no doubts, no weakness, no fear attends their faith.

Sin cleaves to our faith.

2. Sin cleaves to our love. Do we love God with all our hearts, with all our souls, and with all our strength, and our neighbours as ourselves? This is, 'tis true, our duty, but we can as soon perfectly keep the whole law as thus to love God; for though our love be sincere (and so it is said to be perfect) yet no man loves God in the highest degree of perfection. O, how is our love divided between God and the creature; yet I deny not, but every true Christian loves God with a superlative love. Again, do we love the Church and every believer as we ought? Do we love our brother as ourselves, and miss not at any time, fail not in heart, word, or deed?

Sin cleaves to that love we have to God and to one another.

3. Sin cleaves to the grace of humility. What think you, is there no pride, no high thought, nor conceitedness in our hearts, of our wisdom, gifts, parts or learning? do we always esteem others better than ourselves?

4. And then as to temperance and sobriety. Do we never exceed in the inordinate love of the creature, or in the use of lawful things? Do we never exceed the bounds of temperance in eating, drinking, nor sleeping, nor in buying, selling, and possessing? Do such who have wives live as if they had none? Do you never exceed in weeping or worldly sorrow, nor in earthly comforts? Do they that buy, buy as though they possessed not, and they that use this world as not abusing it.

1 Cor. vii. 29-31.

4. And then as to the grace of patience. Doth no sin defile or cleave to that grace? Are any so patient that they are never disordered, having no inordinate passion, no impatience under afflictions, trials, losses, and cruel reproaches, and great provocations? Are there any who are quite free from wrath and all degrees of murmuring, or undue complainings under God's hand, or never are disturbed in their spirits, nor moved to anger?

III. Sin also cleaves to all our duties.

1. Take repentance as it is a grace or as a duty, hath it not many defects cleaving to it? Who can mourn for sin as much as he ought? Hath not our sin murdered our Saviour? Is there not an infinite evil in sin, considered objectively? Can then a finite creature mourn sufficiently in the sight and sense of sin? Have we not fought against God and contemned his authority, resisted his will, grieved his Spirit, abused his patience? What kind of sorrow doth such sins call for?

Sin cleaves to all the duties the saints perform.

2. What sin attends us in preaching and hearing the Word? Are we never secretly lifted up when men foolishly praise us? or do we preach with that zeal, power, and constancy as we ought? and do we always hear the Word as it is the Word of God? and also with that holy awe, diligence, and reverence that becomes us? and are our hearts never wandering abroad in the time of hearing, nor are ever drowsy nor weary under it? and do we always believe and obey the Word preached, and take the reproofs of the Word kindly, and never offended with the poor preacher while he discharges his duty with wisdom and faithfulness?

3. I might also proceed in the like manner, in speaking to the duty of reading God's Word.

4. As to the duty of prayer. Do we pray always in faith, lifting up holy hands without wrath or doubting? Do we never restrain prayer from God, nor are we at no time remiss in it?

5. I might also speak of the ordinance of the Lord's supper, and of Church-communion, and,

6. Of the duty of distributing to the poor.

7. Of all relative duties; as those of husbands to wives, and wives to husbands; parents to children, and children to parents; masters to servants, and servants to masters. And also of the duties of one neighbour to another. Are there any who never fail in any of these duties, or hath not every one need to cry out, "Lord, be merciful to me a sinner!"

Thirdly. Every one hath cause to cry out and to plead the mercy of God in Christ, in respect of the power of sin. What bones hath sin broken, what strong men, strong in grace, have been worsted and overcome by sin? David cries out, "All my bones are broken." Nay, my brethren, how did it crush the Son of God himself, and cause him to sweat great drops of blood when it lay heavy upon him, he standing in our law place.

Fourthly. They cry out and beg mercy in respect of the demerit of sin, or from that sense they have of the severe judgment of God, or the severe punishment that is due to it. Alas! it deserves infinite wrath, even the least sin that a child of God commits, for the satisfaction of Christ doth not lessen the demerit of sin though our Lord hath borne it for us, yet sin is not less evil, nor less deserving as in itself.

Fourthly and lastly, I shall show you what care God takes of such that are humbled at his feet, or cry out for mercy through Christ's merits, as being in themselves undone, or show the happy state such are in.

I. As God hath found out a ransom, a Saviour, or hath laid help upon one that is mighty, so this ransom is applied to these souls; they find help in this Almighty One.

II. And as the Father laid all the sins of the elect upon his own Son, and he hath paid all their debts, so those souls who are thoroughly humbled, and are brought to believe in Jesus, are justified and pardoned. He went away rather justified. The Pharisee was not justified, but this publican was. "He that humbles himself shall be exalted," saith our Lord, which words be uttered to show that the publican was humbled, and therefore was exalted. Justification, my brethren, tends to lift up, or exalt a poor sinner, for such are brought into a state of peace and of union and communion with God; their persons are in the special love and favour of God, nay, they are the sons and daughters of God; this our Lord discovered to Zaccheus. Such who are the true spiritual seed of Abraham, and in the covenant of grace with God as Abraham was, and so the children of God.

III. They are the very proper objects of mercy, or such to whom God sent his Son to call, to heal, to seek, and to apply the precious virtue of the blood of the covenant unto, "The whole need not a physician but them that are sick; but go and learn what that meaneth, I will have mercy and not sacrifice, for I am not come to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance," Matt. ix. 13.

IV. By virtue of their receiving the Spirit, by which they are united to Jesus Christ, they have his righteousness imputed to them, and have interest in all the riches of Christ, and therefore, though poor in themselves, yet are very rich, "I know thy works, and tribulation, and poverty, but thou art rich," Rev. ii. 9. None that are poor in spirit, poor in themselves, but are rich in Christ. Such that think they are increased in goods, and have need of nothing, are poor and miserable; and such who see they have nothing, possess all things, because they have Christ.

V. God looks upon these persons with a look of approbation, affection, and benediction, "To this man will I look, even to him that is poor and of a contrite spirit, and that trembleth at my word," Isa. lxvi. 2. Such that look upon themselves with abhorrence God looks upon with acceptance.

VI. God doth not only look unto them, but also he dwells with them, yea, dwells in them, "For thus saith the high and lofty one, who inhabiteth eternity, whose name is holy, I dwell in the high and holy place, and with him also that is of a contrite and humble spirit," Isa. lvii. 15. Well, but why will God dwell in such spirits, and what advantage will this be? See the next words, "To revive the spirits of the humble, and to revive the heart of the contrite ones:" their spirits would otherwise fail, and their souls would faint. What can administer greater comfort, and what can be higher honour, than to have God by his Spirit in us, and dwell with us? "For ye are the temple of the living God, as God hath said, I will dwell in them and walk in them, and I will be their God, and they shall be my people," 2 Cor. vi. 16. They have life in them, the Holy Spirit is that life, which is as "A well of water, springing up unto everlasting life," John iv. 14.

VII. See what care God takes of such; no sooner did the prophet see his own filthiness, or that he was a man of unclean lips, but he cries out he was undone; and immediately God sent one of his angels to him to comfort him, "Then flew one of the seraphims unto him, having a live coal in his hand, which he had taken with the tongs from the altar and laid it on my mouth." This shows the work and office of the Holy Spirit, who applies the blood of Christ, the righteousness and merits of Christ, and comfort to a poor undone sinner, denoting the great speed and haste God takes to comfort poor, dejected, humbled, and broken-hearted sinners; as if God should say to one of the seraphims, Be gone, behold, my servant Isaiah is almost pressed down into despair under the sense of his sin, and uncleanness of his lips—assure him that all his sins are passed away and pardoned for ever. The Holy Spirit must first come, and touch our hearts and lips, before we have ease and cure; "And he laid it upon my mouth, and said this hath touched thy lips, and thine iniquity is taken away, and thy sin is purged."

VIII. Our Lord pronounceth in the first place (in the beatitudes) blessedness to them who are humbled souls, who see their own nothingness, and cry to God for mercy, "Blessed are the poor in Spirit, for their's is the kingdom of heaven." Matt. v. 3. They are the only heirs of eternal glory above, and have not only a true title to it, a right to the heavenly inheritance, but a proper meetness for it also: and, therefore, such that are poor in Spirit, who see their own poverty, and cry unto God for mercy as this publican did, are exalted and in a blessed state and condition.

APPLICATION.

Infer. I. I infer that sin is of all undoing nature, it hath brought all men into a woeful state and condition. Adam was once rich (and we in him), but by sin he and all his off-springs were undone, and so remain in a miserable state until they are transplanted out of that dead root and united to the second Adam, or implanted into Jesus Christ.

Infer. 2. We may also infer that the Pharisees and self-righteous ones are woeful blind, for if believers see themselves (as in themselves) to be so poor and miserable, and cry unto God to have mercy upon them, what blindness is in such persons, who think themselves rich and have need of nothing.

II. Admirat. God's love in Jesus Christ, who hath out of his infinite wisdom, grace, and goodness, found out a way to enrich undone sinners, and to raise our admiration.

1. Consider that the remedy was provided before we were wounded, a garment prepared to cloth us before we were naked and needed it.

2. Consider also that God hath raised us to greater honour, and bestowed better riches in the second Adam than those we lost in the first, "Where sin abounded grace hath much more abounded," Rom. v. 20.

3. Consider, God hath not only brought us into Christ, into a better state, or bestowed greater riches and honour upon us, but it is also firm, more sure and abiding: we can be undone no more. all our wealth and riches is put into a safe hand to secure it for us; it is all laid up in our head, in our Lord Jesus Christ! Our life, and riches, "Our life is hid with Christ in God." It is hid with Christ, by virtue of our union with him: as Christ is one with the Father, so are believers one with Christ, "Because I live ye shall live also," John xiv. 19.

Trial III. Examine yourselves. Did you ever see yourselves in a miserable state, ever made sensible of your spiritual poverty, and that you stood in need of God's mercy? did you see justice and Divine wrath pursuing you (like as the avenger of blood pursued the man-slayer), and are you still at the foot of God, and poor in spirit, bewailing the filth and corruptions of your own hearts, and evil of your lives or are you not proud and conceited, and glory in what you have received, or think you are full. O, let us all see how it is with us in this case.

Quest. But why doth the Lord bring poor sinners into such a condition as to see themselves to be in a miserable state, as in themselves, and to cry out to God for mercy, when he is about to advance them to a state of happiness?

Ans. 1. It is to imbitter sin unto our souls, that we may know how hateful it is unto God, and that we may the more sympathize with our blessed Lord in his sorrows (when our sins lay heavy upon him): though we satisfy not Divine justice yet is reasonable we should mourn and be grieved that we have offended, and be in bitterness for him whom we have pierced.

2. It is to show the insufficiency that is in us, to help or relieve ourselves, and that we might be abased to the dust, and for ever be delivered from pride and vain-glory, and have no confidence in the flesh. Man being born under a covenant of works Phil. iii. 3. is naturally a proud creature, but God, by letting in true light into our understandings,

Why God brings poor sinners to see the great need they have of his mercy. Zech. xii. 10.

discovers our odious and filthy hearts to us, and so pulls down our pride and abaseth us to the dust.

3. It is to discover the absolute necessity of Jesus Christ to us, and the great need we have of such a Saviour, of such a physician, and of such a righteousness, which Christ hath wrought out for us, to render us lovely in the sight of God.

4. That we might be brought to ascribe all the glory of justification, sanctification, and salvation unto God; or that it is wholly of God's mercy and free-grace, through the Lord Jesus Christ, and so magnify rich bounty, mercy, and goodness as long as we live in this world. It being the grand design of God in the work of our redemption to advance his honour, and the honour and high praise of his blessed Son, our redemption, for ever. Who can admire sovereign and undeserved mercy more than they that have been in the depths of sorrow and misery, and are for ever delivered and raised to glory and eternal happiness?

5. Moreover, that we may never trust in ourselves, "We had the sentence of death in ourselves, that we might not trust in ourselves but in God that raised the dead." Though we are weak in ourselves, yet are strong in the Lord; and though sinners in ourselves, yet righteous in the Lord; and though dead, yet God can raise the dead; and though we have no sufficiency in ourselves, yet that the grace of God is sufficient for us.

Inform. IV. This may inform us what the reason is that sinners cry out no more as being distressed. Alas! they see not, know not their misery, or that woeful state they are in; nor, indeed, will they until their eyes are opened, they neither know God, the law, sin, nor themselves.

V. And from hence, also, we may be informed what kind of persons they are in their own sight that God justifies, or when he pronounceth them righteous and pardoned persons; viz., they are sensible sinners, humble, and nothing in their own eyes, and that such who justify themselves God justifies not, but, contrarywise, leaves them under His wrath and condemnation; and therefore all self-righteous persons may see cause from hence to be afraid and tremble.

VI. And lastly. Let this be matter of encouragement to great, nay, the vilest of sinners, to fly to God in Jesus Christ. O, what great sinners have obtained mercy! many of those very sinners that put to death the Lord of life and glory found mercy; nay, our Saviour willed his disciples to offer mercy first to them when he gave them commission to go and preach the Gospel to all the world, and begin at Jerusalem. Let those very persons that cried out, "Crucify him, crucify him," (as if our Lord should say), see what mercy and bowels, what pardon and mercy is in my heart. And thus I close with this parable.

THE

OF A

SERVANT PLOUGHING AND FEEDING CATTLE.

SERMON XXV.

But which of you, having a servant ploughing or feeding cattle, will say unto him by and by, when he is come from the field, go and sit down to meat? And will not rather say unto him, make ready wherewith I may sup, and gird thyself and serve me, till I have eaten and drunken, and afterward thou shalt eat and drink. Doth he thank that servant because he did the things that were commanded him? I trow not. So likewise ye, when ye shall have done all those things which are commanded you, say, we are unprofitable servants, we have done that which was our duty to do.—Luke xvii. 7—10.

THE scope of this parable seems to be two-fold.

1. To discover what kind of servants we ought to be, namely, such who are wholly devoted to our Lord's service, and to attend upon him at all times, though they did neglect some things that good servants in the proper season ought to do or might do.

The scope of this parable.

2. To discover that no thanks, no honour is due to us from Christ our Lord and Master for what service we are capable to do; no, though we do all things he commandeth us yet we merit nothing, or deserve not so much as thanks from the Lord Jesus Christ.

“Which of you having a servant ploughing, &c.”

As the learned note, our Lord refers to servants, who, in those countries and in those days were bought with their money, or taken in war, and so were wholly their masters, and at their command, and all their time, and all they could do, was to be laid out in obedience to them, and to attend upon and honour their master.

Such servants are, or ought we to be to the Lord Jesus Christ, we being bought with a price, yea, with the price of his own blood.

“Will say to him by and by, when he is come from the field, go and sit down to meat?”

“And will not rather say, make ready wherewith I may sup, and gird thyself,” &c.

Supper-time being come, though our servant has laboured hard, yet we do not say to him, go, eat your supper first; or, at leastwise, they did not say so to their servants; no, but provide my supper first, before you serve yourselves. Such servants we should be to the Lord Christ, not attend upon him when we have served ourselves; no, but though we have done that business he commandeth us, yet still we must attend upon him and forbear eating and drinking, or minding any secular business; if our master hath any further service for us to do, we must observe his motion, and honour him, and prefer his glory above our good, though we go with hungry bellies.

We must observe the proper season to feed and provide for ourselves, and not neglect our attendance on Jesus Christ.

Secondly, And when we do thus, even everything our Lord requires of us, we are not to think we deserve anything of Christ Jesus, but say, we are thine, Lord, our lives are thine, our time is thine, our talents are thine, our service is thine, and we, when we have done all, see cause to be ashamed we have done it no better; we deserve to be blamed rather than commended, much less not think that we deserve wages, or thanks from Jesus Christ for what we have done.

USE.

1. From hence we may note, that as we are bought by Jesus Christ, we must not seek to please ourselves, in anything, in the neglect of our attendance upon him.

2. That we are wholly our Lord's and not our own, being obliged to love him with all our hearts, souls, and strength, and that our labour for our Lord must not cease, until the Lord cease commanding us, or we have no more to do for his glory in this world, which cannot be said until we die.

3. That we should not murmur if our Lord should command us to do such things that may seem hard to the flesh; no, but attend upon his word and ordinances, when some may say perhaps you may first mind yourselves and families, and provide what you and they need.

4. That when we have done all Christ hath commanded us, to acknowledge all is of free grace, and that we deserve not anything at his hands.

5. That the Lord may delay allowing us that which we may think is necessary in our time, and yet commanded us to show our sincere love to him, and honour him with a ready mind and willing heart.

6. That we should not so much mind what we shall have or receive at the hands of Christ in doing his work, as we should to glorify him and promote his honour, owing Christ to be our master, and we his servants.

1. This may reprove such who call themselves Christ's servants, but choose rather to serve themselves first, and their Lord afterwards; when they have done their own business, and have little else to do, they will obey Christ's commands, and attend upon him and hear his word.

2. Also it reproves such that murmur at the service of Christ, thinking it too hard.

3. And such that are proud and conceited, or that look for praise from men for what they do, or expect something at Christ's hands for what they have done.

4. Such that mix their own faith and obedience with Christ's merits, these cannot think they are unprofitable servants, if by their inherent righteousness they are justified in God's sight.

Lastly, By this we may know who is a true and faithful servant of Jesus Christ; it is the honour of Christ such seek in all he doth, and accounts himself unworthy of the least favour and mercy of God, and also will do whatsoever the Lord Jesus Christ hath commanded should be done.

THE
OF CHRIST THE DOOR INTO THE SHEEPFOLD.

S E R M O N X X V I .

Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that entereth not by the door into the sheepfold, but climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber. But he that entereth in by the door, is the shepherd of the sheep.—John x. 1, 2, &c.

THE holy and beloved disciple, the evangelist John, only hath recorded this parable, and (as I think) but one more.

The scope and main design of this famous parable (as our annotators

The scope and design of this parable.

call it) is, as I conceive,

1. To prove our blessed Lord Himself was the true Shepherd, the true Messiah, and only Saviour.

2. That all that came before him pretending that they were the Messiahs, or teachers sent of God, and yet had not their mission from the Father, were false teachers or thieves and robbers.

3. To show that the Scribes and Pharisees and the teachers of those times were none of the shepherds of the sheep of Christ, but thieves and robbers also.

4. To show the nature of the infinite love of the true shepherd to His sheep.

5. To prove that no man can be a true leader or shepherd who is not sent of God.

6. To discover who the sheep of Christ are, and their great safety and happiness. Some conceive that this parable reacheth to verse 31.

Ver. x. 27, 28.

But to proceed to the parts thereof. Our lord confirmeth the truth of that he is about to say, as he commonly used to do.

“Verily, Verily, I say unto you, he that entereth not by the door in the sheepfold, but climbeth up some other way,” &c.

Thesheepfolds, I find, in those eastern countries were houses (and not like unto those among us) which had doors, by which both the shepherd and the sheep entered in. By the sheepfold is meant the Church of God, which, under the law, was the national Church of the Jews, or the commonwealth of Israel; and the door into that Church was by God’s institution by the first birth, i. e., all the seed of Abraham proceeding from Isaac were born members of that Church, by virtue of that covenant God made with Abraham and his carnal seed as such, though none of his male children could partake of all the privileges and blessings of that legal Church without they were first circumcised, which rite did not only simply belong to the children of godly parents that proceeded from Isaac, but to the children of ungodly or unbelieving parents also, which some good men among us seem not willing either to see or confess; they pretending to prove the right of infants (born of believers) from thence to baptism and church membership under the Gospel, which is far enough off to prove any such thing; for the Church of God under the Gospel dispensation is not national but congregational, it consisteth not of the natural seed of believers as such, but only of those who are the true spiritual seed of Abraham, who were comprehended in the covenant of grace, or free promise of God made to Abraham, namely believers, or such who obtain the faith of Abraham, and walk in the steps of Abraham. And if any man be in Christ he is one of Abraham’s seed, and an heir according to the promise, Gal. iii. 29; it is the second birth that gives right to Gospel Church privilege ; yet, pray note, it was not the covenant as such that gave right to the male children of the Jews to circumcision, but God's mere positive precepts given to Abraham ; and so it is Christ's own mere positive precept or institution that gives right to baptism under the Gospel, and not a person's being in the covenant of grace : for both those ordinances were of mere positive right, depending wholly on the pleasure and will of the great lawgiver ; so that if there is no precept nor president for infants' baptism and Church membership in the New-Testament, that tradition is gone for ever, and all the pretended proofs taken from circumcision and the covenant made with Abraham's natural seed as such signifieth just nothing, unless it be to please men's fancies, and blind the eyes of the ignorant.

The Church under the law was national, but under the Gospel it is congregational.

Circumcision under the law, and baptism under the Gospel, of mere positive right.

From hence note, that Christ in His institution is the door into the visible Church under the Gospel ; the door is of God's appointment, or of his ordination, and not that of man's making.

Secondly, Christ is not only thus the door into the Church, but he is also the door into heaven, even as He is the only way to salvation, so He is also the door.

“ Neither is there salvation in any other,” &c., Acts iv. 12, John xiv. 6.

1. My brethren, whatsoever Christ is made to us, as He is the way into the Church, and the way unto the Father, that He is made as He is called the door.

2. And whatsoever may be said of the usefulness, end, and excellency of a door into a sheepfold, or into a house, in respect of appointment and necessity (according to the scope of this parable), that is the Lord Jesus made as mediator by the Father, as a spiritual door both into the Church below and into heaven above.

First, A door refers sometimes to a house, and sometimes to a sheepfold ; so, Christ the door, sometimes refers to the Church, and sometimes to salvation itself, and also sometimes to the success the Gospel meeteth with, which door Christ is also, for all success of the Gospel is by Christ : “ A door was opened unto me of the Lord,” 2 Cor. ii. 12, &c. ; “ For a great door and effectual is opened to me,” 1 Cor. xvi. 9 ; “ I have set before thee an open door,” &c. Rev. iii. 8.

Secondly, A door is appointed by the owner of a house, or the builder thereof, and so of a sheepfold, also the form and manner of it : so the great God, whose the flock is, hath constituted, ordained, or appointed His Son, considered as Mediator, to be the door in His institutions into the Gospel Church, and the way to heaven, and the door into it.

Thirdly, A door is fitted (by the wisdom of the shepherd who owns the sheep) every way to answer the great end and design thereof : so Christ is every ways fitted, according to the wisdom of God, who contrived the whole platform of our salvation and of the Gospel Church, to answer His great end and design. Moreover, there is the like necessity of Christ to let us into communion with Himself here, and into heaven hereafter, as there is of a door into a sheepfold, or into a house, or palace, &c ; it is by him we enter into both.

Christ is fitted by the Father as a door into heaven.

They that cannot find the door into the Church, or into heaven, cannot enter rightly into one, nor shall ever enter into the other.

Fourthly, And such that know not, or cannot find the door into a house or sheepfold, such cannot enter into it ; so they that know not Christ, or cannot find him who is the only door, know not the way into the Church nor into heaven : no, all must find the power of the Spirit of Christ upon their hearts (as well as what Christ is made of God to all that are saved) and be truly regenerated, if they are by the Lord let into the Church below, and heaven above.

Therefore, if men let any into the Church and not by the door, but some other ways, will they not be accounted worthy of great blame ? Look to it you that receive into the Church the carnal seed of believers as such, who know nothing of regeneration, or you receive adult unbelievers and unholy persons : will you open a door, that Christ, who hath the keys of David, hath shut ?

Fifthly, A door into a palace gives such who enter in a full view of all the glory and excellencies thereof, or, if it be into a sheepfold, of all the benefits, safety, and privileges of that sheepfold. So Jesus Christ gives to believers who enter into the Gospel Church by Him a clear view of all the blessings, security, and privileges of the Church or House of God, they partake of the riches of grace, and take a view of the beauty and glory of the Lord Jesus Christ ; they by him enter first into a state of union with him, and into a state of life, justification, pardon, peace, communion, sanctification, adoption, and of free access unto the Father, and are fed there, lie down there, and have rest and safety there : in the Church is a place of security, it hath strong walls about it, “ Walk about Zion, go round about her, tell the towers thereof, mark well her bullwarks,” Psal. cxviii. 12, 13, &c.

He that climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber.

My brethren, as Christ is the door, so He is said to come in at the door, that is, by God's appointment, or by the ordination of the Father, from whom He had His mission to be both the door and the shepherd also. Now, for any to come and pretend themselves to be shepherds of the sheep, and teachers of the people, and have the conduct and government of a Church, who come not in by the door, that is, by the authority, commission, and appointment of God, or having no regular call from God, according to His ordination in the Gospel, they are thieves and robbers, and their design is to make prey of the sheep, or to shear them to have the fleece, but care not to feed the flock; nor will an human constitution or appointment of man give them any right to that work and office. Every true shepherd hath a true and right call from God; he that preaches the Gospel must be sent, and not thrust himself into the fold, or into the ministry, without a due and regular call, for such come not in at the door, but climb up some other way, and so are thieves and robbers, whose pride and ambition, or secular advantage, prompt them to do what they do, and are not owned by the Lord Jesus Christ.

But he that entered by the door is the shepherd of the sheep.

Our Lord in these words shows His great mission, which He received of the Father, to be the only Mediator, Saviour, and great shepherd of the sheep, having before showed that all whom God sent not were thieves and robbers; and, indeed, the first argument the apostle uses to prove Christ to be an High Priest, is His regular call, "No man taketh this honour unto himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron. So, also, Christ glorified not himself to be made an high priest, but he that said unto him, Thou art my Son, to-day have I begotten thee," Heb. v. 4, 5. Aaron had a divine call to his office; and so had Christ, as he saith in another place, "Thou art a priest for ever, after the order of Melchisedec," Psal. cx. 4.

The first thing that every minister is to do is to show by whose authority he is made a minister, or produce his mission to preach the Gospel, being sent according to the appointment of God in the New-Testament; he must prove he came in at the door, that is, by God's ordination and constitution, and that his call is Jure Divino; for, if he hath no Divine right or call of God, he comes not in at the door.

Now this call, or being sent, is either extraordinary, or ordinary: the Father gave His Son, as Mediator, an extraordinary call, and sent Him into the world, and He confirmed His mission by extraordinary miracles, and Christ gave His apostle also an extraordinary call and mission; but none have an extraordinary call now, no, only an ordinary call, viz., Christ having given them ministerial gifts and grace, and they being members of a true visible Church, and approved of by the Church, are sent or authorised (according to the rules Christ hath left in his Word, and authority given to each particular, regular congregation): and what regular Gospel call any can pretend to besides this, I know not.

See Dr. Tho. Goodwin and Dr. Owen.

"To him the porter openeth, and the sheep hear his voice," ver. 3, &c.

By the porter I understand is meant the Holy Ghost; for it is he that opened the hearts of men to receive the Lord Jesus Christ. The work of a porter is to open the door, and give entrance to persons who may be admitted into the house: now every man's heart is shut against Christ till the blessed Spirit opens the door.

"And the sheep hear his voice."

The sheep, historians tell us, in those countries will know the voice of their shepherd: so Christ's sheep know His voice, (i. e.) the true doctrine of Christianity; they do not only hear the voice of ministers, but the voice of the Son of God, whose voice raised them from the dead. This refers to the internal operations of Christ's Spirit on the soul of his people.

"And he calleth his own sheep by name."

The shepherds, also, in those eastern countries gave names to every one of their sheep; and our Lord, it is thought, alludes to that. The Lord Jesus knows all His saints, as He said to Moses, "I have known thee by name;" so He knows every saint by name, also where they live, and what estate and condition they are in.

"And leadeth them out."

The shepherds lead out their sheep into green pastures, and by the still waters, and into shadowy places in the heat of the day. So Christ leads His sheep out. Psal. xxiii. 1, 2, Cant. i. 7.

1. Out of themselves, wholly to rest upon Him for righteousness and justification, also for food, refreshment, succour, protection, shade, and safety, in the day of persecution.

2. He leads them out of the world, and from idolatry, and false ways of worship.

3. And out, also, into a visible profession of His truth, and into universal obedience to all His holy ordinances.

“And when he putteth forth his own sheep, he goeth before them, and the sheep follow him, for they know his voice,” ver. 4.

Our shepherds follow their sheep, but those shepherds always went before the sheep. So the Lord Jesus, the good Shepherd, went before His sheep; He went before them in His obedience and suffering, and hath left “us an example, that we (and all his sheep) should follow his steps,” 1 Pet. ii, 21; and hence they are said to follow “the Lamb whithersoever he goes,” Rev. xiv. 4. Also, His sheep will not follow a stranger; they know false teachers, such who hold not the Head, who neither preach the true Saviour, or not the true Christ, nor the true doctrine of Christ, and others not his true worship, and ordinances, though, through temptation and Satan’s delusions, Christ’s sheep may for a while be misled or carried away into errors, yet they are again recovered; for the elect cannot finally be deceived, so as to perish by damnable heresies.

“This parable spake Jesus, but they understood not what things they were he spake unto them,” ver. 6.

From hence it appears, that a parable is not easy to be understood; they did not know what our Lord meant by these metaphorical allusions; and therefore he condescended so far to them, as further to explain what he meant hereby.

“Then said Jesus again unto them, I am the door of the sheep,” ver. 7.

Before, He said He was the door by which the Shepherd entered in, here He saith He is the door of the sheep; He Himself entered in a regular way by His Father’s commission into His work and office, and He is the door by His commission given to His disciples, and of all His sheep, entrance or admission into the visible Church, but chiefly it may refer to Him as He the door into a state of peace, reconciliation, and union with God, and so into heaven itself.

“All that came before me, were thieves and robbers, but the sheep did not hear them,” ver. 8.

Not that the holy prophets, who went before Him, were thieves and robbers; God forbid; He speaks not of them, but all that went before Him, who pretended they were the Messiah; or such who were false prophets, and deceivers, that bore no testimony to our blessed Saviour, but taught another way to be saved, than by the Son of God, (who was to come and suffer for our sins in the flesh, even in that flesh which He was to assume in the womb of the virgin, or the same flesh and blood that the children partake of, (Heb. ii. 14, 15). And as all such who went before Him, who were false Christs, or false teachers, were thieves and robbers, so are all those false Christs and false prophets and teachers that come after Him; but His elect, as they did not follow the false prophets of old, so they do not, will not, follow such cursed deceivers, who He foretold would after Him arise, and beguile many.

“I am the Door,” ver. 9.

See how our Lord repeats the same great truth of His being the Door, as if He should say, There is no salvation but by Me; no obtaining eternal life, except ye believe in me; no coming to the Father but by Me, John xiv. 6; “He that findeth me, findeth life,” Prov. viii. 35; and he that knoweth and followeth My doctrine, shall find the way into the sheepfold, and be led into green and fat pastures; Psal. xxiii. 1, 2.

“If a man enter in he shall be saved,” &c.

He that believeth on Me shall be saved; he that obtains true faith in Christ finds the door to peace and safety.

“He shall go in and out, and find pasture.”

He shall find whatsoever his soul needeth, or whatsoever is truly good, (i. e.) he shall have grace and peace here, and eternal life hereafter.

Go in and out; that is, he shall go into the pastures where I feed my sheep, viz., into, the assemblies of my people, and out, and be blessed in coming in and in going out, in lying down and in rising up.

“The thief cometh not but for to steal, and to kill, and to destroy,” v. 10.

Though by the thief here may be meant any deceiver, yet perhaps our Lord chiefly may by this thief refer to Satan. Indeed, when deceivers come, Satan, the grand thief, comes, whose purpose is to steal, kill, and utterly to destroy. Many deceivers are deceived, and they may not come with an intention to kill and destroy, but that is Satan’s design. Yet the poisonous doctrine of grand impostors kills and destroys all that suck it in. I come regularly in at the door, deceivers climb up some other way; and that shows they come not to feed the sheep, but to make a prey of them.

"I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it much more abundantly."

"That they might have life," that is, my sheep, mine elect, or them that my father hath given to me, that was the reason I came into the world; it was with an intention and absolute purpose to save them for ever. They were dead in sins and trespasses, and condemned, or under the sentence of death and wrath, and I am come to bear that sentence, and suffer that wrath that was due to them, or to die in their stead, "the just for the unjust;" unless I came and lay down my life for them, they could not live; I am come to discharge them from condemnation, to acquit them, that they by me might have the life of union, and have a principle of spiritual life infused into them, and have the life of justification and of sanctification, and the life of comfort and consolation, and of glorification also.

"And that they might have it much more abundantly;" or a life far exceeding that life they had once in the first Adam, a righteousness far exceeding man's original righteousness; also a more sure and certain life, a life that far excels in its nature and quality; for they being united to me, their immutable head, cannot die, "Because I live, ye shall live also," John xiv. 19. So, in quantity, it is much more abundant, more abundant peace, joy, and comfort, their joys shall be full, they shall drink, "yea, drink abundantly," Cant. v. 1, and their peace be like a river, Jesus Christ is their life, and, O, what a superabounding life is in the Lord Jesus Christ!

"I am the good shepherd, the good shepherd giveth his life for the sheep."

I. Christ is the chief shepherd of the sheep, and "When the chief shepherd shall appear ye shall receive a crown of glory," 1 Pet. v. 4.

(1.) All other shepherds are his servants, they have their authority from Christ the chief shepherd.

(2.) All particular flocks or each company of true believers are under the care of the Lord Christ.

(3.) And so is also the whole universal Church; he provides, leads, feeds, and governs them all.

II. Jesus Christ is the great shepherd, "Now the God of peace, that brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus Christ, that great Shepherd of the sheep, through the blood of the everlasting covenant," Heb. xiii. 20. He is endowed with almighty power, no lion, no enemy, no devil, can rescue one sheep out of the hands of this shepherd, "I give them eternal life, and they shall never perish, neither shall any pluck them out of my hand," John x. 28.

III. Christ is a wise shepherd.

(1.) He is the wisdom of God, nay, the only wise God.

(2.) He knows all his sheep throughout all the world, the sheep of ten thousand folds, he knows their names, their hearts, their thoughts, their wants, their diseases, their fears, their sorrows, their temptations, trials, and dangers, and knows how to supply all their needs.

IV. Jesus Christ is the good shepherd, a loving, tender-hearted and compassionate shepherd; "He shall feed his flock like a shepherd, he shall gather the lambs with his arms, and carry them in his bosom, and shall gently lead those that are with young," Isa. xl. 11.

V. Christ is a living shepherd; he lives when other shepherds die; he can raise his sheep that are dead to life.

But he that is an hireling, and not the shepherd, whose own the sheep are not, leaveth the sheep and fleeth, and the wolf catcheth the sheep, ver. 12.

An hired servant will not expose his life for the sheep, but the owner perhaps will do as David did, he will run great hazards before he will lose his sheep. He that taketh care of Christ's sheep merely for filthy lucre is an hireling, and he cares not what becomes of the flock; so he hath but the fleece he matters not though the sheep perish, so that he hath his wages; he seeks not them, but their's, and this shows he is a false teacher; deceivers and cruel wolves may enter and devour the flock for all him.

"I am the good shepherd, and know my sheep, and am known of mine, as the Father knoweth me, even so I know the Father, and I lay down my life for the sheep," ver. 14, 15.

I am no hireling, I have tender bowels to my sheep, and a peculiar knowledge of love and approbation of them all, and my Father knoweth me perfectly, and I have a perfect knowledge of my Father, I know his divine essence, his eternity, his decrees, and counsels. "My Father and I are one." In these words he shows that he is the great, the chief, and the good shepherd indeed, because this maketh it appear that Christ is the great, the good, and only wise God; for none hath a perfect knowledge of God but God himself, or he that is one in essence with the Father.

“And other sheep have I, which are not of this fold, them also I must bring,” &c.

Our Lord refers here to the Gentiles, and he calls them His sheep, that is, His elect among the heathen nations, they were His sheep decretively, though then in their sins and idolatry, and not His sheep actually, they not having then the nature of His sheep.

I shall go no further, but observe one or two points of doctrine.

Doct. That Christ's sheep lay dead, dead in sin, and unless He came to give them life, they could not live.

See my Golden Mine, which opens the latter part of this parable.

1. They were dead in a law sense, the sentence of death had passed upon them.

2. They were without a principle of Divine or spiritual life. And,

(1.) Such that are dead cannot quicken themselves. Moreover,

(2.) No angel could satisfy for sin, which brought this death upon them, and on all mankind.

(3.) And the law could not give them life, “For if there had been a law that could have given life, verily righteousness should have been by the law,” Gal. iii. 21.

(4.) It must be by Christ alone, because that death which we were sentenced to die, and were under, He must undergo that gives us life.

(5.) And he must be such a person also that could quicken or raise himself from the dead, and who could do that but he that was God? he must be man, or else he could not die, and also he must be God, or else he could not satisfy; and therefore he must be God and man in one person, for God could not die, nor a mere man satisfy Divine justice.

(6.) It must be one that could quicken his dead sheep, and raise them to life, and conquer Satan, who had power over death.

Note. The substance of what here is said was delivered at the funeral of Mr. James Willmut, June 8., who died Jan. 5. 170..

Quest. What a life is it Christ came to give His sheep?

1. Ans. I answer, it is a discharge from that sentence of death, that passed upon them in the first Adam, and by the law, that they might be freed from that obligation they were laid under. “Therefore as by the offence of one judgment came upon all men to condemnation, so by the righteousness of one the free gift came upon all men unto justification of life,” Rom. v. 18. Or, as all in Adam died, so in Christ, all united to Him, or whom He was the common head of, are made alive.

2dly. Christ came to give them life by infusing a vital principle into them by which they are quickened, “Wherein also you are risen with Him through faith of the operation of God, and you being dead in your sins and uncircumcision of your flesh, hath he quickened,” Col. ii. 12, 13. This life is by His infusing of His Spirit into their dead souls.

What a life Christ's sheep have.

(1.) And this life it first appears in convictions.

(2.) In regeneration.

(3.) In a further progressive work of mortification and sanctification.

3dly. They shall also have the life of glorification.

(1.) And they shall be all made like to Christ, both in body and soul. Phil. iii. 21.

(2.) Be crowned with glory. To be crowned with glory, is to have the highest glory creatures are capable of, they shall sit with Christ on His throne, and judge the world with Christ. 1 Cor. vi. 2.

For, is Christ a King and their Bridegroom crowned? yea, well then they are His Queen, and shall be crowned also, and have the same glory with Him, they being “Heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ,” Rom. viii. 17.

3dly. They shall be with Christ where He is, and behold His glory, and have His celestial attendance or retinue; this is the life Christ came that they might have.

Quest. Why shall Christ's sheep have this life?

Ans. Because Christ lives, “Because I live, you shall live also,” John xiv. 19. This refers to the twofold life of Christ.

1. To Christ's life on earth; I now live (as if Christ should say) on earth for you, to procure or work out a righteousness and life for you by my actual obedience (because I live.) He lived that life as our Surety for us, to obtain the life of justification, and a title or right to glorification, and if Christ lived this life on earth for His sheep, they shall have life in both these respects.

2dly. Because Christ lived after He was dead, and doth live for ever for them. “I am He that liveth, and was dead, and behold I am alive for evermore,” Rev. i. 18. Well, what of this?

Quest. Some may say, wherein lies the stress of this argument? (i. e.) because Christ lived after He was dead, and now liveth, therefore His elect shall live?

Answ. It is the greatest argument of all.

1. Because He died to pay our penal debt, or debt of eternal punishment, our sins were laid upon Him, charged on Him as our Surety, and He was carried to prison, and kept awhile under death; death we owed, yea, such a death as to pacify divine wrath, or God's offended justice. Now if Christ our Surety lives no more, or riseth not again, we are undone; for our life of justification, as it refers to a discharge from hell and wrath, depends wholly upon Christ being discharged out of prison, and so living again. For if God doth not discharge Him, or justice doth not acquit Him, we cannot be discharged; and justice, be sure, would not acquit Him until our debt be fully paid. I shall (as if our Lord should say) in a little time die, but I shall live again, and because I shall live again you shall live also. I shall be raised from the dead, or have a resurrection, and, lo! I die personating you that are my sheep, and, when I rise again, I rise for your justification, to free you for ever from condemnation, and the wrath that is to come. Now, therefore, since He was discharged from death as our great Representative, all His sheep were then virtually discharged also in Him, and shall actually also be all discharged when they obtain a vital union with Him.

3rdly. Christ lives now in heaven for His sheep, and therefore they shall live; for he ascended up into heaven as their Representative or Forerunner, to show that justice had now nothing to charge His sheep withal; the Father took Him into heaven, and set Him down at His own right hand, and the world sees Him no more. To convince us that His righteousness will carry us to heaven, he shall convince the world of righteousness, "Because I go to the Father, and ye see me no more," John xvi. 8. 10. Nay, my brethren, all Christ's sheep were virtually glorified, when Christ was glorified in heaven; and therefore they shall all be glorified in heaven also. And see what a life Christ now lives in heaven, such a life His sheep shall have, because His life is the cause of their life, and the assurance of it, "Which hope we have, as an anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast, which entereth into that within the veil, whither the Forerunner is for us entered," Heb. vi. 19, 20.

See what I say, Paul confirms in this place, viz., that Christ took possession of heaven for all his sheep.

4thly. Christ's sheep shall live by virtue of that union they have with Him, I mean that blessed vital union; both the Head live always, and die no more? and can the body or any member thereof die! no, surely, that is impossible. Christ is the mystical Head, and all united to Him in the sense I speak of, are His mystical body, and our Head lives, ever lives, and therefore the whole body shall live also.

Shall the root of the tree live, and may the branches of such a root who can preserve its branches, (die which hath such abundance of sap in it)? Christ must not suffer one branch of His to be cut off! nor can He lose any member without having an imperfect body; will a body suffer a member to die and be cut off, that can preserve every one of them? And though a natural root, or a natural body, cannot preserve every branch or every member, yet Christ can, and He says, His sheep shall never perish. Therefore, because Christ lives, they shall live also.

5thly. Because Christ lives in us who are His sheep, therefore, we shall live; neither sin, devils, nor death can separate us from the Spirit of Christ, nor from the love of Christ; though death may separate our souls from our bodies, yet death cannot separate us from the Spirit, "I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another comforter," John xiv 16. What to do, to abide with us for a day, a month, or a year? see what he says, "That he may abide with you for ever." My brethren, it is Christ in you the hope of glory, and having the Spirit in you, and dwell in you for ever is a sure ground of hope of your living for ever. "And if Christ is in you, the body is dead because of sin, but the Spirit is life because of righteousness." Our souls or spirits are life, or alive, because the Holy Spirit dwelleth in them, or is the vital principle of our souls, as the soul is the vital principle of the body. Death doth not, cannot separate the Spirit of God from our immortal souls, and by that spirit that eternally remains in our souls, shall our bodies be quickened at the last day. "He that raised Christ from the dead, shall also quicken your mortal bodies by His Spirit that dwelleth in you;" not dwelleth in your dead bodies; no, but in your living souls.

6thly. Because Christ lives now in heaven for us a life of intercession; He prays that we may live, and not die, or that our faith may not fail, or never fail, and that the Spirit may supply all our wants, and that we may be kept alive in our souls, and be at last with Him, where He is. "He ever lives to make intercession for us," Heb. vii. 25. "Father, I will that they that thou hast given me, may be with me where I am," &c. John xvii. 24.

7thly. Because Christ lives as our Guardian, Surety, or Trustee, to take care of us, and to supply all our needs, and because we have eternal life in the seed and earnest of it now, and by the Spirit are also sealed unto the day of redemption; and thus Christ is come that his sheep might have life, and have that life made sure to them for ever.

Eph. i. 13, 14,
vi. 30.

USE.

1. I infer the love of Christ to his sheep is wonderful.
 2. That it is not because our graces are alive and lively, or that we are in lively frame, that we shall live; no, but because he lives, and came that we might live, or because he lives with such a fulness in him.
 3. I infer the life of Christ's sheep is a sure and certain, nay, an everlasting life, "He that believeth in me shall never die," John vi. 47.
 4. Then let us not fear death, nor mourn inordinately for such that die in the Lord. But to proceed;
- "Other sheep have I that are not of this fold, and them I must bring," ver. 16.
2. Doct. That all Christ's sheep, or all his elect, who are not yet called, he must bring into a state of grace here, and unto a state of glory hereafter, he calls them the sheep. They are

1. His by choice, or decretively they are his sheep, "I have much people in this city," &c.—"The Lord knows them that are his."

In speaking to this,

1. I shall show what his bringing them doth denote.
2. Show why he must bring them.
1. It denotes they are before called afar off, or in a state of alienation from God.
2. It signifies his absolute design of love, and purpose of grace towards the Gentiles, "I know the thoughts I have towards you, thoughts of peace," &c. Jer. xxix. 11; "Yea, I have spoken it, and I will bring it to pass, I have purposed it, I will do it," Isa. xlvi. 11; Eph. i. 9, 10.

3. It denotes the means Christ was to use in order to bring them home who were not yet called, or their effectual vocation, and so his removing that enmity that was in their minds, and darkness that was in their understanding, "He will give them a new heart," Ezek. xxxvi. 26.

4. It implies his putting forth his almighty power in bringing them to God, or his working faith in them.

5. It denotes his bringing out of a state of wrath into a state of grace, or out of a state of death into a state of life and peace, and from a state of bondage into a state of liberty, and out of the world into his own fold, or his adding them to his Church, and making them fellow-heirs with the saints and household of God, Eph. ii. 19, 20.

6. Or as he died for them, so he will renew and save them.

Secondly, Why must Jesus Christ bring them?

Christ must bring them unto a state of grace,

1. Because they were given to him by the Father, "All that the Father giveth me shall come unto me," &c., John vi. 37.

2. Because he struck hands with the Father in the covenant of peace, and engaged to bring them, and his covenant he cannot break, nor alter the thing that is gone out his lips.

3. Because he died for them, and in their stead; "The just for the unjust, that he might bring them unto God," 1 Pet. iii. 18.

4. Because the decree of election must stand.

5. Because naturally they are all dead, and none but he can quicken them, and so bring them.

6. Because they are given to be members of his mystical body, and his body cannot be perfect without them.

USE.

2. O! wonder what Christ hath done to bring His sheep home, and also at that obligation he laid himself under to do this, "Them I must bring let it cost me what it will, my blood must be shed, I know, to bring them, "I lay down my life for my sheep," John x. 15. Our Lord showed to his disciples how he must suffer, Matt. xvi. 28.

2. This pre-supposeth there was a necessity of Christ bringing his sheep home, 'the glory of one holy attribute must not be eclipsed to magnify another, "That God might be just, and the justifier of him that believeth in Jesus," Rom. iii. 26. We were all obliged to keep the law, and to die for the breach of it, and Christ must therefore in our nature perfectly keep it, and die for our violation of it.

O, what love hath God showed to His elect in their redemption ! how is His love, His pity, His wisdom, His justice, holiness and power manifested thereby.

4. What fools are they, and how blind, that think they can return to God by a reformation of life, or by repentance, or by trusting in the mere mercy of God, having no saving knowledge of Christ crucified.

5. What evil is in sin, and at what a distance had it set us from God ?

6. Be thankful, and also be filled full of joy, you that Christ among the Gentiles hath brought home. And,

7. This also may stir us up to pray for the fulness of the Gentiles to be brought in ; for Christ must bring them in, even all of them that are His sheep

THE

OF

GOD BEING AN HUSBANDMAN.

SERMON XXVII.

I am the true vine, and my Father is the husbandman ; every branch in me that beareth not fruit he taketh away, &c.—John xv. 1, &c.

THE occasion of this parable some think, was from our Saviour's celebration of the holy supper ; for he newly had administered that unto his disciples. Others think, that he saw a vine as he passed over the mount of Olives ; see our late annotators. It is doubtful what might be the immediate occasion thereof.

We will therefore proceed to consider the scope and chief design of our Lord herein.

1. It may be, as I conceive, to show that God the Father is first in all spiritual operation, or the prime or original author of all spiritual blessings.

1. Is Christ, as Mediator, planted as the true vine ? Why our Lord shows us here that it was the Father, that blessed Husbandman, that planted him. He is the first and chiefest plant of God's right-hand planting. And

1. He was first planted in that eternal covenant, or holy compact, that was betwixt the Father and the Son.

2. And the Father also planted Him in this world, by preparing Him a body to do and suffer for us.

2. The Father also grafts or planteth all those plants that are united to the Lord Jesus Christ, provided they are truly united to His person, who are fruitful ; for such, and none but such, bring forth fruit to his praise.

2ndly, It may be to show the necessity of our being united to Jesus Christ if ever we bring forth fruit to God ; and that we have no ability or power of our own, to do any thing which is truly spiritually good.

3rdly, To show that in Christ mystical (for so is Christ taken sometimes) are some barren branches, I mean in the visible church, and that such shall in time be cut off and cast into the fire.

4. To discover to us that all who obtain to true spiritual union with Christ (who partake of the holy Spirit) do abide in Him, and bring forth fruit unto eternal life, as our Lord himself positively shows in ver. 16. and that there is a necessity of our abiding in Him, in order to our fruitfulness.

But to open the parts.

“I am the true vine,” &c.

That is, I am the true Messiah, the true Saviour, the right plant, and the true root of all grace ; even He only that communicates life unto the souls of men, or He whom my Father hath ordain'd and planted to be supported of all his elect, out of whom they must grow, being first united to me if ever made fruitful unto God.

Quest. But why is Christ compared to a vine ?

1. A vine is not a stately and amiable plant to look upon, as some other trees are ; it is not so lofty as the cedar, nor so stroug as the oak, nor so beautiful as the palm tree.— So the Lord Jesus in his humiliation appeared not to carnal eyes, to be beautiful or glorious, as many princes and kings of the earth, who shine forth in outward glory, beauty and grandure. But as it was prophesied of him ; “ He shall grow up before him as a tender plant, and a root out of dry ground, he hath no form nor comeliness, and when we see him, there is no beauty that we should desire him.” Isa. liii. 2. 3. So what form is there in a vine ?

2. Yet perhaps it may be, also because of the honourable names given to the vine above all other trees.

(1.) It is called a goodly vine.

(2.) The noble vine.

The vine hath honourable names given to it. Jer. li. 2: Ezek. xvii. 8.

Now, however contemptible our blessed Lord seemed to be when on earth, yet he hath a name above every name, “ That at the name of Jesus every knee should bow,” Phil. ii. 9. (not at the naming of Jesus.) What a name hath he who is called the Son of God, the Mighty God, the Everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace, the Wonderful Counsellor ; and what name excels His name, Jesus ? “ And his name shall be called Jesus, because he shall save his people from their sins,” Matt. i. 21. And what a sweet and noble name is that Immanuel, “ They shall call his name Immanuel,” viz., God with us, or God in our nature.

Pea. lxxx. 9. Christ hath honourable names.

3rdly. A vine wonderfully aboundeth with sap and inward virtue, bearing and nourishing branches, which shoot forth perhaps beyond most plants. So the Lord Jesus Christ is full of spiritual sap, full of Divine life. “ In him are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge,” Col. ii. 3. No vine is so full of sap as Jesus Christ is full of grace, “ And we beheld his glory, as the glory of the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth,” John i. 14. And as the vine communicates of its sap to the branches, so doth the Lord Christ communicate of His grace. “ And of his fulness have we all received, and grace for grace,” John. i. 16. And, O, how fruitful is the true Vine, and what a multitude of branches grow out of this sacred plant, many churches, and multitudes of true believers.

A of vine is full of sap, so is Christ the true vine.

4thly, The vine is a most fruitful plant ; what tree excells it in this respect ? when God promised fruitfulness, it is expressed by the vine ? “ Thy wife shall be as a fruitful vine,” Psal. cxxviii. 3. But how fruitful then is the true Vine ? (1.) Unto God ! what glory hath He brought unto God the Father ! He produced much fruit to God in one day, even three thousand souls. (2.) And also how fruitful hath He been, and is unto us, in His life, and in His death, and in His resurrection, and in His intercession !

5thly, The vine bears and brings forth choice and pleasant fruit. What are more sweet and pleasant than grapes in some countries ? and how good, pleasant, and reviving is the richest wine ! it is a cordial, and makes glad a heavy heart, “ And wine that maketh glad the heart of man ;” “ Give wine to those that are of a heavy heart ; let him drink and forget his poverty,” Psal. civ. 15. Nay, wine is said to “ Cheer the heart both of God and man,” Prov. xxxi. 6, 7 ; “ When the new wine faileth the merry hearted sigh, and all joy is darkened,” Isa. xxiv. 11. Jesus Christ, the true Vine, far exceeds the vine in this respect ; for how pleasant is that fruit which he hath brought forth by His obedience unto God the Father ! it is of “ a sweet smelling savour,” Eph. v. 2 ; and unto us what can be so sweet and delicious, or so excellent and precious to our taste ? His “ love is better than wine,” Cant. i. 2 ; more cheering, more restorative, more reviving ; nor is there any such cordial in the world to revive a drooping and heavy heart ? How sweet is the vine of reconciliation, redemption, union and communion, pardon of sin, peace of conscience, and joy in the Holy Ghost ! All is the fruit of the true Vine, for all this sweet fruit hath Christ brought forth, by His death, resurrection, ascension, and intercession. And they that drink of this wine, forget their sorrows, it is so cheering, so reviving, so strengthening, so restorative, no cordial in the world is like this. “ Are the consolations of Nod small with thee,” Job xv. 11.

The vine bears choice fruit.

See the parable opened of the Marriage Feast, Book 3.

6thly, The vine is a shadowy plant ; we read of men “ Sitting under their own vines,” what pleasant arbours are made of vines ! So Jesus Christ is a shadow to us, he shadows us from the scorching heat of God’s wrath, and from the wrath, rage, and fury of the devil and wicked men; and hence he is also said to be an "hiding place from the tempest, and as the shadow of a great rock in a weary land," Isa. xxxii. 2.

7thly, The fruit of the vine is bruised and pressed that the wine may flow forth, so was Jesus Christ bruised under the pressure of divine anger, that we might drink plentifully of his fruit. Without the bruising and pressing the grapes we can have no wine; so unless the Lord Jesus Christ had been bruised we could have had no wine of true consolation, viz., no peace with God, no justification, no pardon of sin; therefore it is said, "It pleased the Lord to bruise him, and to put him to grief," Isa. liii. 5.

But this spiritual Vine (as I hinted) far excels all vines.

Christ the true vine excels all vines.

(1.) Other vines only bear fruit but once a year, in the summer only; but this Vine bears fruit for our souls continually, both in the winter of afflictions and tribulation, or adversity, as well as in the summer of prosperity; go when you will to Christ the true vine, and you shall find he is full of fruit, full of grace; there is comfort in him, strength in him, consolation in Jesus Christ.

(2.) Other vines bear fruit only that comforts and cheers the body and natural spirits; but the fruit of this Vine cheers, revives, and strengthens our immortal souls.

(3.) The fruit of other vines, viz., grapes or wine, may and doth soon decay, and is good for little, but the fruit of the true Vine never decays, but yields us everlasting strength, everlasting consolation.

(4.) The fruit of other vines may be taken to excess, nay, it may surfeit, and prove mortal to him that receives it, but no man can eat or drink of the fruit of this vine to excess, neither can they be surfeited thereby; no, they that are Christ's friends are bid to eat and drink, yea, to drink abundantly of this fruit, Cant. v. 1.

(5.) Other vines are feeble or weak and need to be supported; but this Vine, the Lord Jesus Christ, is the eternal God, and needs none to support him; no, he is able to support us, yea, the whole Church, and every weak believer, though never so feeble; and no marvel, because he "Upholds all things by the word of his power," Heb. i. 2, 3.

And my Father is the Husbandman.

That is, he is like unto, or may be compared to an Husbandman. Now God may be compared to an Husbandman in respect of these things following.

What an husbandman doth denote.

elect, whose hearts to ground, Matt. 13;

See the parable of the sower opened, Book 1.

other spiritual trees or plants grow out of his root: also, all the godly are called "trees of righteousness, the planting of the Lord that he may be glorified," Isa. lxi. 3.

Moreover, it is said, "The trees of the Lord are full of sap," Psal. civ. 16. All trees which our heavenly Father hath not planted will not bear any good fruit, but shall be plucked up.

4. God hath also servants to employ.

(1.) Jesus Christ considered as Mediator is God's servant, "Behold my servant, whom I have chosen," &c., Isa. xlii. 10; "Thou art my servant, O Israel," Isa. xlix. 3. The Lord Jesus is the best servant that God ever had, and he had done the hardest work; no other servant indeed could do what Christ hath done, nor ever brought that glory unto him; he did not only sweat at his work, but bled also, yea, sweat great drops of blood.

(2.) His ministers also are his servants whom he employs in his work; "We, then, as workers together with him, beseech you also that ye receive not the grace of God in vain," 2 Cor. vi. 1. O, what an honour is it to be fellow-workers with Jesus Christ!

(3.) All believers are God's servants, whom he employs to work in his vineyard. Moreover, he having the command of all in heaven, earth and hell, he can make use and sometimes doth, of wicked men, and devils also to do some work for his glory.

Secondly, An Husbandman denotes one that is skilful, one that is wise, and knows how to manage husbandry. God is all-wise, wisdom itself; he is wise in heart, he knows all the mysteries of his own counsels, purposes, and decrees, and how to do all his work, and to do also in the proper time and season; some husbandmen are unskilful, but God is infinite in wisdom and knowledge, no winds nor weather, storms nor tempests, can hinder him from working, no, not men nor devils. "I will work and who shall let it," Isa. xlii. 13.

What servants the great husbandman doth employ.

Thirdly, an husbandman hath a stock; a great husbandman must be rich, and have a good stock to manage all, or to defray the charge of all his husbandry; now the great God cannot want a stock, for all things in heaven and earth are His. Jesus Christ is God's, "All things are your's, ye are Christ's, and Christ is God's," 1 Cor. iii. 22, 23. He is not only His Son, but His servant; also (as you newly heard), all the riches of Christ as Mediator, he received from God the Father, the Holy Spirit, and all grace is His, the word and ordinances, and the promises are this husbandman's, the angels are His, and ministers are His, therefore he hath stores of riches, or stock sufficient to manage His spiritual husbandry.

God the Father hath a vast stock to manage his husbandry.

Fourthly, a husbandman's life is a laborious life, and great diligence also it requires. God is an Almighty workman. "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work." Yet nothing is hard with God, though his work is too hard for men or angels to do, and that also as He is considered an husbandman. Is it not hard work to make hard and rocky ground good ground, and to cause seed to grow in rocky hearts? also to make trees that naturally are evil, and that bring forth evil and bitter fruit, to bring forth good fruit, and turn them into good trees; nay, he can cause trees that never bear, to bear abundantly, this husbandman can make the proud, humble; the carnal, spiritual; the earthly, heavenly.

God's work too hard for men or angels.

Fifthly, an husbandman denotes an employment that there is an absolute necessity of; for without the labour of the husbandman the world cannot long subsist or stand: if there was no ploughing nor sowing we should all in a little time be starved; we have need therefore to say "God speed the plough," so also there is as great necessity of this great and gracious husbandman's labour, for if God had not planted Jesus Christ the true Vine, we and all mankind must have perished for ever, and if He doth not plough up the fallow ground of our hearts none can, and also sow the seed of the Word, and plant us in Christ, we must perish; "Ye are God's husbandry," 1 Cor. iii. 9. It is this husbandman that causeth the seed to take root in our hearts; it is God that transports us out of the first Adam into the second Adam.

An absolute necessity of an husbandman's labour.

Sixthly. An Husbandman, in all his labours aims at his own profit, though thousands receive advantages by his cost and pains also. So God, in all he doth working about our salvation, designed his own glory: nay, in his creating, preserving, and governing the world, this was that which he aimed at; though his work properly profits him not. Can there be anything added to his perfections? but if we have profit, God reaps glory to his own name, that is, it tends to raise his honour and to magnify his name; for there is no addition can be made to his essential glory, "And he said, thou art my servant in whom I will be glorified," Isa. xlix. 3. These are the words of God the Father unto the Son as Mediator; also, in His forming us, renewing us by His Spirit, what doth He say? "This people have I formed for myself, they shall show forth my praise," Isa. xliii. 21; "The Lord hath made all things for himself, even the wicked for the day of evil," Prov. xvi. 4. Also in our fruitfulness, our Lord saith, "Hereby is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit," John xv. 8.

God in all his husbandry aims at his own glory.

Seventhly, An Husbandman fences in his ground, his fields, and makes walls about his vineyard; so the good Husbandman by his common providence preserves all the things that he hath made; all things are governed by his wise providence, but about His Church and every true Christian He makes a strong wall, that is, His special providence is over them, "Hast thou not made a hedge about him, and about all he hath," &c., Job i. 10; "I will be to her a wall of fire," &c., Zech. ii. 5; which some think refers to the holy angels, who are compared to fire, and they are as a wall round about His people, that no wild beasts may hurt or devour them; for a wall of fire is the best defence in a wilderness from cruel and devouring beasts.

The spiritual husbandman makes a fence about his people.

Eighthly, An husbandman views, and often well observes how his corn and trees grow or thrive; and takes good notice which of his trees are barren, and also expecteth fruit according to the cost he bestows, and the pains he takes; so the holy God views and well observes His Church and all His saints, and takes notice how they grow in grace, and who are barren among them, and also looks for fruit according to the cost and pains He is at, "And he looked that it should bring forth grapes," Isa. v. 2. But,

God views his corn and his trees, to see how they thrive and bring forth fruit.

2ndly, God excels all husbandmen.

1. Other husbandmen many times want stock, and some of them want skill, and so wax poor, but in God are all perfections of riches and wisdom.

2. Other Husbandmen cannot cause it to rain, nor give increase to their labours and pains, or make their corn and trees to grow, but God giveth, and can give rain at His pleasure. "My word shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it," Isa. lv. 11.

"Every branch in me that beareth not fruit, he taketh away," ver. 2.

Some are in Christ mystical, viz., in His Church, who are not united to Christ by the Spirit, or by the faith of the operation of God, and these bring not forth fruit.

There is a two-fold being in Christ.

1. By an external or visible profession.

2. By virtue of a true spiritual union; and such that are internally in Christ, or have a vital union with him, shall bring forth fruit, see ver. 16.

"Every one in me that beareth not fruit."

By branches are meant professors of the Gospel, or Church-members; and some from the original read it, "Every branch that bringeth forth fruit in me," or that is not truly united to me. This seems to be the true sense of the text; for without a person is in Christ, or savingly united to the Lord Jesus, God regards not that fruit he brings forth; no, it must be fruit brought forth in Christ, or of such that are in Him: and what seeming fruit soever such bring forth that are not in Christ, God taketh away; hypocrites may bring forth some kind of fruit for a time, but it is not by virtue of their union with Christ, and therefore not good or right fruit; so that there is a being in Christ and not a being in Christ, or a being externally in Him, but not savingly or spiritually being in Him, and these bring not forth fruit in Him.

"He taketh away."

How God may be said to take away withered branches.

Either He takes away their gifts or leaves them to a carnal or worldly spirit, or else give them up to strong delusions, or lets them fall into some one sin or another, and so He cuts them off by the bill of Church discipline, or by excommunication, or otherwise He may take them away by withdrawing His restraining grace and common influences of His Spirit from them, or smite them with blindness of mind and hardness of heart, and that is a dreadful taking away of such fruitless persons, or unfruitful branches.

And every branch that beareth fruit He purgeth that it may bring forth more fruit.

The Husbandman prunes and purges fruitful plants; so God purges by His Spirit and by His Word, and sometimes by His rod, all fruitful Christians, "By this, therefore, shall the iniquity of Jacob be purged, and this is the fruit to take away his sin:" by this, that is by affliction or sharp trials also, and this shall cause Jacob to blossom and bud. God hath many ways to purge His fruitful branches, though the blood of Christ alone cleanses from all sin, yet God may make use of this or that way to purify through Christ's blood our souls: by a live coal from the altar the iniquity of the prophet was purged: Isa. vi. 7, 8, also Solomon saith, "By mercy and truth iniquity is purged, and by the fear of the Lord men depart from iniquity," Prov. xvi.

What ways God hath to purge His saints.

6. By God's mercy in Christ, and by His promises (which are sometimes called His truth,) which He hath made to them that believe in Jesus, "Having these promises, dearly beloved, let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God," 2 Cor. vii. 1.

They are all fruitful, God will make more fruitful, "Now ye are clean through the word I have spoken to you," ver. 3. Now the traitor is gone out from you, ye Annotators. are clean; you that remain are holy persons, ye are clean, (i. e.) no hypocrites; but not clean by their own works, no, but by Christ's Word, by His promises, by believing in Him, and applying of His faithful Word to their souls, by His Spirit, for without that His Word cleanses none.

"Every branch."

Quest. Why are believers called branches?

1. Answ. The vine bears the branches; so Christ supports believers.

2. Branches grow out of the vine, and by partaking of the sap of the vine they bring forth fruit. So believers grow out of Christ that blessed Stock, they being first grafted into him: "From me is thy fruit found."

3. According to the nature of the vine such is the nature of the branches: so every believer grafted into Christ partakes of His Diviue nature; they are like Christ, holy, humble, meek, &c.

"Abide in me, and I in you, as the branch cannot bear fruit of itself, except it abide in the vine, no more can ye except ye abide in me," ver. 4.

Those words do not intimate there was a possibility that they might not abide in Christ, but.

To show the necessity of a vital union with Christ, no man being able until then to bear fruit of himself.

2. To show this union must remain, they must for ever abide united to Christ if they cease not in bearing fruit.

3. To show the reason why some who seem to be in Him, (or externally in Him by a visible profession, or in Christ mystical) do not bear fruit, viz., because they are not indeed and in truth savingly in Him.

By abiding in Christ is partly meant abiding, believing his Word; so ver. 7, by abiding, loving Him, or in the strength of their love and affections to Him, though a dismal storm was coming upon Him and them; and also abiding in His Spirit or remaining spiritual, and also abiding in keeping his commandments.

Our Lord strove by these words to convince them from whom, or by what means they should remain fruitful, and also to stir them up to a constant witness to him, and in using all means for their abiding in him, and faithful to him, and also to let them know the time was near when many who seemed to be in him, and to be his disciples would forsake him as indeed they did.

“I am the Vine, ye are the branches.”

Even as the vine feeds, nourishes, supports and makes the branches fruitful; so it is by Christ: we are fed, nourished, supported and made spiritually fruitful: and as the branch that is not in the vine partakes not of its sap, so such that are not united to Christ partake not of his spiritual virtue.

“He that abideth in me, and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit.”

These words more clearly open our Lord's design, in repeating the same things, viz., that he or that person who hath a spiritual union with Christ, being in Him by His Spirit, and he in Christ by faith, shall never cease bearing fruit. Also, it is observable that our Lord presses them to see that He Himself did abide in them; neither of which was in their power, for the branches are passive in being grafted into the stock, the husbandman doth that, all know: so are we in our union with Christ and in regeneration. It is the good spiritual Husbandman that grafts us into the true Vine, and he that prunes us, and doth all that is necessary to be done, to make us fruitful, and to abide fruitful.

“For without me ye can do nothing,” ver. 5.

I am to my members that which a vine is to the branches; I give life, strength, and fruitfulness: the vine may be said to abide in the branches by conveying juice and nourishment, whereby they grow, flourish, and are fruitful: so Christ abideth in His saints by His Spirit and spiritual influences, upon which depend all their life, strength and fruit.

“Without me.”

1. Without union with Christ.

2. Without influences from Christ, “Every branch in me that beareth not fruit.” If they had been really in Christ, they had been fruitful. But some are only in Him by appearance, and “so can do nothing;” nothing, that is, spiritually or truly good. This union is reciprocal: “Abide in me, and I in you.” The Jews were said to be in the “True olive,” else they could not have been said to be broken off. (i. e.) they were in and of His visible Church, but not really in Christ; and so are some in the Gospel-Church, but not in Christ, nor Christ in them; for the union between Christ and believers is inseparable and indissoluble, like that of Christ's being in the Father, and the Father in him. John xvii. 23.

Man's natural impotency to do anything that is spiritually good.

3. “Without me;” that is, without Christ's concurrence, co-habitation and co-operation, we can do nothing.

Christ is a Head of influence to the body and members: how can a branch cut off the vine bear fruit, it being dead? and so is every sinner that is not united to Christ, “dead in sins and trespasses,” Eph. ii. 1. Christ must quicken us by a principle of life, and also excite that principle and habit of grace; there is in all natural men a privation of power to do that which is spiritually good, an absence, nay, a total privation, not an absence of radical power, and not only a suspension of acts, as may be in us when asleep; and as it is a total privation in respect of power, so it is universal (as one observes) in respect of the subject of that power. Every faculty is wholly depraved, the judgment, will, affections, memory, &c.; and not only so, but in the “carnal mind is enmity against God,” Rom. viii. 7, they resist all good motions, they have no power, nor any will to receive power, until their hearts are changed, and their will is made willing. “Ye always resist the Holy Ghost,” &c., Acts. vii. 51. “Ye will not come to me,” your wills are rebellious.

“If ye abide in me, and my Word abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you.”

Such abide in Christ, in whom His Word abides, His promises abide in them, so as to believe them, and His precepts abide in them, so as to obey them, and the prayers of such in all things agreeable to the Will of God shall be answered.

“Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit and so shall ye be my disciples,” ver. 8.

By virtue of our union with Christ we bring forth much fruit, and that fruit which glorifies God, or is to the praise of His rich grace: were the fruit the product of man's own natural powers it would glorify the sorry creature, and be to the praise of man's free-will, and not tend to glorify God's free grace. But all spiritual fruit, being solely from God, it tends to the glory of God, as it causeth such to shine forth in holiness and good works before men.

But this parable might seem yet dark unto the disciples, and our Lord might perceive they might fear, that though their hearts were right with God, and were truly in him, that they might cease bearing fruit, and wither, and so be cut off. He, therefore, (finally to satisfy them that none of his words should be so understood) tells them in ver. 16. “Ye are my friends;” and again saith, “Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you, and ordained you, that you should go and bring forth fruit, and that your fruit should remain,” &c., ver. 16.

I have, as if our Lord should have said, told you of some that bring not forth fruit in me, though they seem to be in me, and are members of my visible Church; but do not you think that you are of that sort that abide not in a profession of my name, or may become withered branches, and be cast into the fire; for you are not only called, but also chosen, chosen to salvation, and not that you chose me first, and so I chose you, as being fruitful persons; no, but I have chosen you, you have not chosen me first. I loved you first, and therefore you love me, and have chosen me, and I have ordained you to be holy, as well as to be eternally happy; yea, I have ordained you to bear fruit, and that your fruit should also remain, that you might not cease bearing fruit, and so like others wither, and be cut off, and perish for ever.

Indeed, my brethren, had not our Saviour added these words, and explained his sense and meaning to us, some expressions might seem to favour what the Arminians too boldly affirm from this parable; but what is said in this verse tends utterly to stop their mouths, and silence them for ever.

Now from the whole I might note these propositions following.

1. That God the Father is the prime or original Author of all spiritual blessings and privileges.

2. That Jesus Christ, the Son of God, considered as Mediator, is the Root or blessed Tree, Vine and true Olive, into whom all the elect are grafted, united, and so become fruitful.

3. That some who seem to be in Christ, and to bring forth fruit, do not bring forth fruit in him, or by virtue of a real and spiritual union with him, and so they wither and shall be cut off, or taken away, and perish eternally.

4. That all God's elect are chosen and ordained to be fruitful, and to remain fruitful all their days on earth, as well as to eternal life in heaven.

But I, having prosecuted the substance of all these truths under other parables, and wanting room, shall not speak of them here.

USE.

1. Let all hypocrites, from what hath been said, tremble, or such who seem to be in Christ, but are not.

2. Let all believers who are united to the Lord Jesus, rejoice, and see what a happy and secure state they are in, though they may seem to wither, yet they shall revive again.

1. Be exhorted to admire the love of God the Father, and ascribe all glory unto him as the Author of all grace, and the First Person in all Divine operations, as well as He is the First Person in the Godhead, or of the Trinity.

2. Ascribe all glory to the Son, for as all things are from the Father, so all things are through the Son; all grace and Divine blessings were purchased for us by his blood, and we have them as the fruit of His mediation.

It is impossible for true believers to cease bearing fruit, or to wither and perish for ever.

3. Ascribe all glory to the Holy Spirit, by whom we are renewed and helped to believe, and to apply the blood of Christ to our souls, and who by his immediate influences hath made us fruitful, and shall be helped to abide so unto eternal life.

And now to close all, let "every creature which is in heaven, and on the earth, and under the earth, and such that are in the sea, and that all that are in them, say, blessing, honour and glory, and power be unto him that sitteth on the throne, and to the Lamb for ever and ever," Rev. v. 13. Amen.

THE BONMAHON

Infant, Embroidery, Printing, and Agricultural Schools, CO. WATERFORD.

CITY PRESS, 1, LONG LANE, LONDON, JUNE 30, 1855.

Having recently returned from a visit to my friend, the Rev. D. A. DOUDNEY, at Bonmahon, it has occurred to me that a brief narrative of what I saw and learnt, during my sojourn, might prove of interest to the friends of the BONMAHON INDUSTRIAL SCHOOLS, and at the same time, be productive of good to the great work of improvement now in progress there. Under this impression, I venture to relate, in a plain manner, the facts which came within my observation, either as relates to the Schools themselves, or the peculiar circumstances out of which they have arisen, and are now surrounded.

To those not immediately interested in such a matter, a visit to Industrial Schools, in one of the wildest regions of the South of Ireland, would present features more interesting than many remoter and more celebrated scenes; but to those who have aided, by personal endeavours and sacrifices, a work so eminently in accordance with the teaching of Him who said, "Suffer little children to come unto me," the facts of the case, as seen by a visitor, must, I think, have a peculiar and pleasing value.

I left London on Monday morning, May 26, and after experiencing the usual trial of a passage from Holyhead to Kingstown, arrived in Dublin the same evening. On Tuesday morning I proceeded by railway to Waterford—a journey occupying about seven hours. A pleasant drive of two hours and I reached Bonmahon. On entering the village I found that my arrival had been expected; I saw the flag waving about the Printing School, and the lads gave me an Irish welcome.

Bonmahon is a retired, out-of-the-way nook on the coast of the county of Waterford. It is built irregularly, in the bight of a small bay, between Tramore on the east, and Dungarvan, a small port on Dungarvan Bay, on the west. The sea view is bold and open, the cliffs rugged and picturesque. To the south-east lies the wide expanse of St. George's Channel, dotted with white sails in the distance, and with rude fishing-boats near the shore. The village itself lies in a valley which runs down by a sandy slope to the sea, forming a magnificent strand, from which rises, at the distance of half a mile, a splendid wall of dark majestic rocks. Northward the valley runs back from the village, and terminates in the green slopes of the Comeragh hills, which encloses the scene on the land-side with a charming panoramic background. The hills are ten or twelve miles off, but to me they appeared much nearer.

Adjoining the village, are mines of Knockmahon the property of the "Mining Company of Ireland." These mines are noted for the excellence of the ore which they furnish, and afford the chief employment of the inhabitants of Bonmahon, which is strictly a mining village. The name, Bonmahon, is from two Irish words, signifying the heel or foot of the river—Knockmahon implying the hill of the river.

Though the land is barren, and the constant drift of sand and sea-spray renders farming difficult, all the elements of worldly prosperity are to be found here. The population does not much exceed 1500 souls of all ages. Amongst these the mines distribute a weekly sum of £350 in wages, while the tillage of the land contributes something additional to the common resources of the place. A weekly expenditure of £350 in so small a village should produce far more comfort than is visible here; and for the cause of the destitution and vice which exists, we must doubtless look to that power which has desolated so many of the fairest portions of the earth.

But at Bonmahon, as elsewhere in Ireland, the capability for something better exists, as my recent visit proved to my satisfaction.

On Wednesday morning I visited the Schools. There are five of these. First, the Infant School; second, the Embroidery School; third, the Printing School; fourth, the Agricultural School; fifth the Parochial School.

Each of the Schools is conducted in a separate building, situate at an easy distance from each other, and all presenting a pleasing scene of busy life.

The School buildings are substantial and roomy. There is the Industrial Printing School, with its five young women employed in the binding department, two compositors, five pressmen, fifteen boys, and three presses, full of bustling activity, yet as orderly and business-like as a London Office.

The Infant School interested me exceedingly. It was a pleasing sight to see fifty infants so well trained, and apparently happy, and to hear them sing, in that dark, Popish village—

"We won't give up the Bible, God's holy book of truth," &c.

Now comes the Embroidery School. Here forty-seven girls are taught and employed, many of them earning Five to Eight shillings per week, and producing work of a high order of merit. I was soon convinced that, though at first unable to thread, or even to hold a needle, such teaching as they obtained here would soon enable them to earn their bread honourably, wherever their future lot may be cast. This School, conducted by a competent Mistress, is under the immediate superintendence and control of Mrs. DOUDNEY. In the same building is opened a Bible Depository, for the sale of Bibles and Testaments at a reduced price.

Having had some experience in Printing matters, it may be supposed that I should readily detect any short-comings in the mechanical arrangements of a Printing School. The intelligent perseverance in the teaching of these lads is well rewarded in the order and activity of the establishment—the completeness with which industry and skill combine their forces for the production of a noble result, afford a reflection of that presiding mind, which under God's blessing, has wrought so successfully in the projection and establishment of this admirable institution. The lads are very skilful, not in the manual labour only, but in those departments which require judgment, shrewdness, and care. The overseer brought a proof-sheet of the reprint of "Keach's Metaphors," which had been read, and was about to be given out for correction in the usual way. It was as clean and perfect as the work of any ordinary compositor, though the production of boys who, but a short time previous, had neither seen printing-type nor press—such is the change effected by culture and kindness. There are in these various Schools one hundred and fifty young persons who enjoy these advantages, and thus far removed from the debasements of poverty and a vagabond life, and placed in a position to acquire useful handicrafts.

Any one who will open the pages of DR. GILL'S COMMENTARY, OR AMBROSE SEARLE'S CHURCH OF GOD, and criticise the character of the typography, may see to what perfection of skill the hand of an Irish peasant may be brought under opportunity and tuition. Dr. Gill's work contains nearly 47,000,000 separate letters, covering about 6,000 pages of close and beautifully clear letter-press. Previous to the 12th of October, 1851, when the only suitable building came into the possession of the indefatigable Curate of Monksland, not one of these lads had seen a printing-type; yet by the January following, they had produced one part, of about 240 pages of the Commentary, containing 1,200,000 letters, mixed with no small amount of Greek and Hebrew quotations—the Bishop of Cashel witnessing the printing of the first sheet. Who can say how many lads were rescued from the dark apprenticeship of vice by the timely opening of these Schools?

On Thursday evening I attended the weekly lecture, held in the building used for the Infant School. To this Thursday evening lecture, and the usual Sunday services, all the children are free to attend, though it is a rule, essential to the success of any Protestant movement here, that they should not be requested to attend; nor is attendance ever made a condition of employment. A little incident occurred in my presence, illustrative of the policy of such a course. One of the guardians of the poor, meeting Mr. Doudney and myself in the public street, mentioned the case of one of the girls belonging to the Embroidery School, who, having become a dependent on the parish funds, alleged that she could earn five shillings a week, but, having refused to attend the Protestant services, she had been dismissed. "Oblige me by going over to the School, and hear the reason for her dismissal, from the lips of the mistress herself," said Mr. Doudney. "No," said Mr.—, "I do not wish that; your word is sufficient that the girl's story is false." Mr.— at last consented to go up into the work-room of the Embroidery School. Mr. Doudney at once put the question to the whole School:—"Did I, or Mrs. Doudney, at any time ask one of you to attend any of our weekly or Sunday services?" A universal "No!" was the response. Again Mr. Doudney put the same question, and the same answer, "No!" was repeated in a distinct, truthful, and unmistakable tone, at which the guardian became still more satisfied, and then was informed of the real cause of the child's dismissal, viz., idleness, unwillingness, and conduct injurious to the School generally. Such is the craft of babes under Popish teaching and example!

It was with much pleasure that I walked over the grounds of the Agricultural School, in company with my friend, the Rev. D. A. Doudney. This School has only recently commenced operations, and the land at present in a preparatory state. The object of the School is to teach practical husbandry, in combination with a sound course of mental training. The Boys attend four hours at their lessons in-doors, and four hours are spent in tillage. They are taught to ridge, furrow, and drain the land; learn to preserve the strength of the soil, and to adapt the crops to the seasons, &c. Some of these will be fitted for service as gardeners, or for other similar capacities; while they will be taught to cultivate, profitably, the patch of cottage ground—an art here at present comparatively unknown! Indeed, the need for such training is evident enough in the wretched aspect of the land, which recalls to one's mind the painful narratives of the Times' Commissioner. The soil is overgrown with weeds, undrained, badly ploughed, and planted over and over again with potatoes, till from utter exhaustion, it literally refuses to produce a scanty crop. The hedges run wild, and eat up large tracts of land with briars and thorns, while ditches are suffered to roam at will, for want of slight repairs to their banks, converting fields into noxious quagmires, the home of filth, fever, and vermin. Manure is not thought of till they are about to quit their tenancies; then they cover the land with sea-weed, which extracts the last miserable relic of its strength, and ruins it completely for the succeeding tenant. Barns, cottages, and homesteads fall into decay, and as they fall so they remain: there is no energy to repair, no desire to make things better. Everywhere one sees destitution, spiritual degradation, and ruin—ruin stalking over the land, and before which the people seem perishing from the soil—perishing of bodily and spiritual exhaustion. The aspect of the land, the broken mud walls, the stagnant, fever-producing pools, the wretched crops that scarce pay the labour of reaping, and the besotted superstition which darkens over all, speak plainly enough of the nature of that dark shadow under which Ireland pines and withers, and to dispel which there is only one light that can be effectual—the light of the glorious Gospel. May similar blessings attend the progress of the Agricultural School as have followed in the wake of the Printing, and Embroidery, and Infant Schools, already established!

On Thursday morning the monthly packages of the Gospel Magazine were made up, and despatched, by post, to the Subscribers. I have heard, with pain, the frequent complaints of friends that they do not obtain their copies until many days after the time when they should be delivered. Now I saw and understood the cause of delay—another of the many impediments to industrial and Protestant progress in Ireland. To save the village postmaster the usual labour of stamping, and the messenger the additional labour of carrying a large number of Magazines, Mr. Doudney despatched them, in the care of a lad, with a donkey-cart, direct to Kilmacthomas (a distance of five miles,) the post-town of the district. The boy returned after having delivered his parcel of stamped Magazines, and the question was asked him, "Have the Magazines gone forward?" "No please," said he, "the man said there was no room for them on the car, but they'll go to-morrow." The next day the lad was sent again, and returned with the same answer—"No room on the car—they'll go to-morrow." From day to day this is repeated; the stamped papers lie at the post-office, during the pleasure of Hibernian caprice; the subscribers waiting in anxious expectancy, annoyed at their non-arrival, while the Editor has to bear the blame for unpunctuality. Here is the secret of the delay—There is no room on the car for the conveyance of Protestantism!

I left Bonmahon on Friday morning, and proceeded from Carrick-on-Suir direct for home.

I may suitably close this letter with a few remarks on the nature of the labour in which Mr. Doudney is engaged, and the results which, up to this time, have flowed from it.

It may truly be said that he found this place a desert, and has made it a garden. Yet he owes his success, under God, to those who have aided him by sympathy and means. The income arising from contributions has, up to this time, averaged nearly £300 per annum; but the Schools are not at all—some of them cannot be—self-supporting. The difficulties of instructing a rude peasantry, the outlay for implements, the difficulty of finding a market for all the goods produced, tend to increase the expense far beyond the limit of production.

He is, moreover, surrounded by adverse influences. Priests terrify the parishioners by cursing him from the altar; false reports are in constant circulation:—Now that he is in possession of untold wealth—now that the scheme is a failure, and must be abandoned for want of funds. He is, in fact, just in that position in which it has been said no man should be who is "not prepared to die by bullet or by fever."

The feeling of party jealousy, which pervades all classes in Ireland, manifests itself with terrible malignity and power when any, however laudable, attempt is made to turn back the tide of ruin in which the country has been so long immersed. Before the first press was landed at Bonmahon, the curse of the priest had gone forth, and the people had ejaculated "Amen." But when the first portion of material arrived, a storm of opposition showed itself; the country around was alarmed, and the altars rang with expressions of bitter and unscrupulous jealousy. Eight-and-forty hours had not elapsed after the arrival of the steamer at the Quay of Waterford, ere the so-called liberal newspaper of the place denounced the Industrial School as a proselyting scheme, and the assistants as braggarts and scoundrels! The inhabitants were cautioned to shun it, and to withhold their children from the work and instruction offered them. Yet the cherished ignorance of the Romish Church was successfully baffled, and the most promising scholars of the Parochial School, and afterwards many belonging to the National or Roman Catholic School, were initiated, and the presses were set going. The difficulties which the friends of the movement anticipated sunk into nothingness before the real difficulties that had to be conquered. Only stout hearts, supported by hope and faith, could have performed a labour such as this. If the storm without raged fiercely, the labour within doors was indeed no trifling task. What the excellent friend of Ragged Schools (Joseph Payne) said of the children received into London Ragged Schools, applied with double truth to these; for they might well be described as "precocious, and ferocious, and mendacious, and capacious; and odd in attitude, but great in gratitude—always tameable, but never irreclaimable."

The Schools of Bonmahon have been established a period of nearly four years. In this brief space, spite of obstacles, the presses have thrown off a mass of sound works of so high an order of typographical excellence, that many London houses would be glad to point to them as specimens of their work. Those acquainted with the mechanical details of the printing art, will best know how to appreciate the production of that superb Commentary which, while it is an imperishable monument to the learning, labour, and piety of its great author, Dr. GILL, is, in its present form, a noble and enduring proof of the genius of Irish peasant boys, when brought under wise and kindly instruction.

Of this great work, two thousand two hundred and fifty complete sets, or thirteen thousand five hundred volumes, were produced in two years and two months. Of this stock, only a few remain on hand, and there is little or no probability that so voluminous a work will be again reprinted, at least for another half century. Those who desire copies should therefore secure them forthwith.

The great Commentary was followed by a reprint of two thousand five hundred copies of Dr. Gill's Exposition of the Canticles, a work which is considered to be the author's masterpiece for savour and power. Following this, came a reprint of Dr. Hawker's Morning and Evening Portions, of which five thousand copies were completed in a few months. Four-fifths of this large impression have been sold already. Other works were simultaneously put in progress, and the presses sent forth successively an edition of one thousand copies of a reprint of the Rev. B. Keach's Key to Open Scripture Metaphors.* This work had become so exceedingly scarce, that the edition was sold in about three months, and orders for quantities refused. It is now in course of reprinting, and is expected to be ready early in October. One thousand copies of Hart's Hymns were ready immediately after the completion of Keach's Metaphors, and but few copies of the Hymns now remain.

* Rev. B. Keach's Exposition of the Parables has since been published.

Next came the print of two thousand copies of Ambrose Searle's Church of God (to which is added Christian Husbandry), a choice work of established reputation. An edition of two thousand five hundred copies of Dr. Gill's Cause of God and Truth—"a sterling work, that plucks up by the roots the Arminian heresy"—is just published, and, in its beauty of typography, affords a pleasing instance of the capabilities of the Irish peasant boys, when directed to definite and beneficial purposes. Since November, 1852, the Gospel Magazine has been produced at Bonmahon. The Gospel Cottage Lecturer, Dr. Hawker's Sermons and Tracts, and other sound and valuable works are in progress; and Bonmahon—all shrouded in sin and darkness—now shines forth among neighbouring sister villages, and sends into many corners of the world the bright rays of spiritual truth.

But though so much has been done, the position of the Projector of this enterprise is by no means free from anxieties and difficulty—he has about one hundred and fifty mouths to feed! A scheme which distributes nearly £1200 a-year among the poor of a remote Irish village, often taxes its Manager severely to provide the necessary means of support. Yet, if the sale of goods is slow, Mr. Doudney dares not discharge superfluous hands. It is a machine which, once set going, it is dangerous to stop. In this district, "here is no outside sea of labour into which the hands would flow—seeking employment elsewhere, as in any of the large towns in England. Once out of the walls, they must go back to hereditary vagrancy, to afford real grounds, in place of those imaginary ones, out of which the Romish clergy have wrought their bitter anathemas—the more bitter from the conviction that industry and enlightenment are the death-blows to the priestly power of the Papacy.

To continue the scheme in its present or increasing success, it is necessary that a market should be found for the goods produced. There are few who cannot purchase, or who do not purchase, Books and Embroidery. The lady friends have so often shown their earnestness in the support, that it may be superfluous in me to call their attention again to the fact, that the ready sale of the needlework is vastly beneficial, and promotive of the welfare of those humble but useful Irish children who produce it.

The sale of the work produced, is, of course, the primary source of income; but the Schools are not yet self-supporting, and therefore contributions are respectfully solicited, both from friends who have not hitherto subscribed, and from those who have already so liberally assisted.

Though priestly influences work in opposition, though they dread the spread of that light which blinds and confuses them, there is little fear that this good work will come to a pause. Glad hearts and ready hands have helped, so far, the energy of the Promoter, who started the enterprise at his own risk and peril; such hands and hearts are as vigorous as ever; the band of instructors are strongly knit together with their hearts in the work, and with God's blessing on all their efforts, we may look forward to the realization, at the lone village of Bonmahon, of the conversion of the thriftless, the untaught, and the spiritually benighted, to a knowledge of the amenities of civilization, and the blessing of the Gospel.

My letter has already run beyond the limit—I will therefore subscribe myself,

Your's faithfully,

WILLIAM HILL COLLINGRIDGE.

Price £3 18s., six royal Svo. vols., cloth, of 1000 pages each, and Portrait of the Author (the Old Testament may be had separately, 4 vols., price £2 12s.); calf, 5s. per vol. extra,

An Exposition of the Holy Bible; by JOHN GILL, D. D., containing the Old and New Testaments. In the former are recorded, the Origin of Mankind, of the several Nations of the world, and of the Jewish nation in particular; the lives of the Patriarchs of Israel: the Journey of that People from Egypt to the land of Canaan, and their settlement in that land: their Laws, Moral, Ceremonial, and Judicial; their Government and state under judges and kings; their several Captivities, and their Sacred Books of Devotion; in the exposition of which it is attempted to give an account of their several Books, and the Writers of them; a summary of each Chapter, and the genuine sense of each Verse; and, throughout the whole, the Original Text, and the Versions of it, are inspected and compared; Interpretation of the best Notes, both Jewish and Christian, consulted; Difficult Passages at large explained; Seeming Contradictions reconciled; and various passages illustrated and confirmed, by testimonies of writers, as well Gentile as Jewish. In the New Testament, the Doctrinal and Practical Truths are set in a plain and easy light; and whatever is material in the various readings and several Oriental Versions is observed. The whole Illustrated with Notes, taken from the most ancient Jewish writings.

* * * This work contains nearly 47,000,000 letters, and was composed, or put in type, by a little band of Irish lads.

It is clearly and beautifully printed in Royal octavo, and will, when completed, form a very handsome edition.—Earthen Vessel.

It is elegantly printed—good paper....Zion's Casket.

We have no hesitation in saying, that it will bear comparison with any of the beautifully-printed books of the day; and when we consider the deeply-interesting circumstances connected with the Irish nativity of the work, our hearts are wholly rejoiced. We see here a beautiful instance, redeemed from the darkness, of the singular capacity of the human family to wait at the posts of learning, and become—not the ravens of Israel—but the honoured instruments of telegraphing the truth. Wherefore, let us not fear to take children by the hand, for we know not what they can do; but rather let us derive a lesson from the wild sea-washed village of Bonmahon. The Work is worthy of the Publisher, the Printer, and the Purchaser—Pot of Manna.

The republication of Dr. Gill's Commentary of itself constitutes quite an epoch in the history of literature; there are circumstances connected with this new edition which invest it with peculiar interest; they are such as prove the projector to be possessed of marvellous fortitude, patience, and perseverance.—Spiritual Magazine.

For a sound, consistent, Scriptural Exposition of the word of God, no Commentary, we believe, in any language can be compared with Dr. Gill's.—The Editor of the present edition has, in the face of most arduous and numerous difficulties, been favoured with health, strength, and perseverance, to surmount them all, and to bring his laborious undertaking to a successful termination.—Gospel Standard, third notice.

A scheme noble in intention—admirable in principle—and worthy of imitation, is the Industrial Printing School. Distant from any immediate source of supplies, and raw Irish Lads for his assistants, the productions of his press are lasting records of his Christian perseverance. First and foremost was a splendid edition of Gill's Commentary on the Bible, and latterly a complete and well-printed edition of Hawker's Morning and Evening Portions, and Hart's Hymn's.—Zion's Trumpet.

In the March Number of our Magazine during the past year we welcomed the appearance of the first part of this well-known and incomparable Exposition of the Holy Bible. We then stated that in the present day, when the great principles advocated by the renowned John Gill are, to a great extent, cashiered and denounced, it has been a matter of deep regret that the expensiveness of his invaluable Commentary, and the scarcity of the work, should render it impossible that vast numbers of ministers and others, who revere the memory, and appreciate the writings of Dr. Gill, should be in possession of so rich a treasure. The difficulties, however, which have prevented a more general acquaintance with this great work are about to disappear. The desideratum will be supplied in the completion of the present correct and handsome edition of the entire Commentary, at a cost which will place it within the reach of most of those whose limited means have hitherto precluded the hope of such an acquisition to their libraries. In noticing the completion of the project, we cannot but rejoice that the worthy Editor has been enabled to overcome the great and apparently insurmountable difficulties which at times threatened his work. That, situated in a wild district of Ireland, and with the help of but little manual assistance, he should have been enabled to give to raw and ignorant Irish Lads such a knowledge of the printing art as enabled him to issue in the space of a few months, a six-volume work of near 1,000 pages each, reflects the highest credit upon the zeal, industry, and devotedness which he has displayed on behalf of those residing in his district, who had been previously neglected and forsaken. Even did our limited space admit of a lengthened notice of this valuable work, the Exposition is too well known, and too highly appreciated by all who love the distinguishing truths of which the learned Gill was so able an advocate, to render such a notice necessary. We must therefore content ourselves with giving the work our warmest commendation, and trust that many ministers and heads of families will avail themselves of the opportunity to become possessed of this valuable work. The whole six volumes bound in cloth, may be procured for £3 18s.—Yet there are, doubtless, many devoted and faithful ministers in our churches who would rejoice in the possession of such a work as Dr. Gill's Commentary, but whose limited means preclude the possibility of their becoming themselves the purchasers of it. Surely there are to be found many in their several churches who might be found willing—by a contribution to a special fund for that purpose—to present this Exposition of the Holy Bible to their beloved Pastor as a testimony of their friendship and esteem. We trust the suggestion here thrown out will be cordially taken up, as we are confident that the people themselves would reap the advantages of such an act of kindness and respect, from the increased light and knowledge which under the guiding influences of the Holy Spirit, the study of a work of this nature would enable their Pastor to bring before them, in his frequent expositions of divine truth in their midst.—Gospel Herald, July, 1853.

We are glad to see a new edition of Gill's Commentary, and our pleasure is enhanced by the manner in which the one now under notice, has been produced. The purchaser of this work will be indirectly contributing to the advancement of the social and religious welfare of the sister isle. We sincerely rejoice in the labours of Mr. Doudney, and trust he may long be spared, and be rendered still more signally useful—Gill's general learning was of the highest order. In the languages, in the writings of the fathers, in ecclesiastical history, in pagan literature, and in Christian theology, his attainments were stupendous. * * His Commentary remains in our opinion, a monument of solid learning, of indefatigable laboriousness, and of fervent piety: a becoming tribute, in short, to that holy volume, the meaning of which it is intended to illustrate.—Primitive Church Magazine.

We have previously noticed the appearance of the preceding volume of this extraordinary production; we do not merely mean extraordinary in its literature, its piety, its acumen, its industry, and its research; those qualities of the invaluable Commentary of Dr. Gill are generally known; but for the circumstances of its projection, its execution, the excellence of its mechanical workmanship, and in its wonderful accuracy. Those technically acquainted with the many accessories necessary to the well-printing of a voluminous work like the present, containing numerous placita, references, marginal notes, and Latin, Greek, and Hebrew quotations, even in places where competent workmen and all the needful appliances are available, will wonder most that in a wild village of the Irish sea-shore, by the hands of the village boys, through the energy of a village Curate, such a work should be produced. Each succeeding volume increases our admiration of the perseverance and faithfulness of the Rev. D. A. Doudney, to whose exertions the foundation of the Bonmahon Printing School, and this extensive work owe their origin. That the Rev. Gentleman's endeavours to diffuse Gospel light in the moral wilderness in which his lot is cast, and that health and strength may be given him for the labour of love in which he has engaged, must be the wish of all who desire to see enlightenment and faith spread in the dark regions of Romish idolatry and superstition.—Morning Advertiser, July, 18, 1853.

On Monday, the 6th of February, a purse of one hundred and fifty sovereigns, and a silver tea-and-coffee service, were presented to the Rev. D. A. Doudney, upon the completion of the printing of Dr. Gill's Commentary on the Holy Scriptures, at the Bonmahon Industrial Printing School, Waterford, Ireland. The whole of these six large volumes were set up and printed by 'raw Irish lads,' who, two years ago, had never seen a printing type.—Gospel Herald, March, 1853.

Price 6s., Royal 8vo., cloth; grained calf, 10s. 6d., and Portrait of the Author, uniform with "Dr. Gill's Commentary," (if bound up with Dr. Gill's "Cause of God and Truth," 1 vol., cloth, 10s. 6d.; calf grained, 5s. extra), Dr. Gill's Exposition of the Book of Solomon's Song commonly called Canticles. Wherein the authority of it is Established and Vindicated against Objections, both Ancient and Modern; several Versions compared with the Original Text; the different senses both of Jewish and Christian Interpreters considered; and the whole opened and explained in proper and useful observations.

* * * This work is considered to be Dr. GILL's master-piece for savour and power.

The work before us is not a portion of his voluminous Exposition of the Old and New Testaments, but an independent publication, comprising the substance of a hundred and twenty-two sermons.—Baptist Magazine.

The Doctor maintains, and, we think, clearly proves that it is canonical, and of divine inspiration; they cannot doubt its inspiration to whose hearts the Holy Ghost has applied its glorious and animating declarations concerning Christ and his Church, with sacred power and union.—Gospel Herald, Aug. 1854.

Mr. Doudney has immortalized his name in the best of causes, by republishing the voluminous writings of the learned Gill. He has laid the Church of Christ under lasting obligation by reprinting the works of this able Divine. With prayerful solicitude we have often thought of the tremendous undertaking of the earnest Editor; and can only say, our heart's desire is, that his labours may be crowned with abundant success.—Biblical Messenger, July, 1854.

Mr. Doudney has done the Church of God right good service. His arduous undertaking of publishing the voluminous work of Dr. Gill, at such a low rate as to be within reach of all, has been, under the divine blessing, crowned with success. None can fully enter into the great difficulties he must have had to contend with, but those who are acquainted with the Press. Had he been surrounded with first-rate talent, still his position would not have been an enviable one; but when we recollect his master mind had to grapple with circumstances (relative to the poor Irish boys who had never seen types or presses) that would have paralysed many a strong nerve; we again repeat, and again, that the Church of God is greatly indebted to the untiring energies and perseverance of Mr. Doudney, for a work that cannot fail to prove highly beneficial and truly useful to all the spiritual seed of the house of Jacob. The Exposition of Solomon's Song by the late learned Doctor, in our opinion, ranks pre-eminent among his valuable works.—Zion's Trumpet, Aug. 1854.

It is enriched in learned lore, and in the delineations of experimental and practical religion; and although partaking of the diffuseness and quaintness which characterised the times in which it was written, we envy not the person who could rise from its perusal without having received much spiritual profit. The excellent James Hervey was a great admirer of this work, and in his "Theron and Aspasio," describes it in the following eulogistic terms:—"It has such a copious vein of sanctified invention running through it, and is also interspersed with such a variety of delicate brilliant images, as cannot but highly entertain a curious mind. It presents us also with such rich and charming displays of the glories of Christ's Person, the freeness of his grace to sinners, and the tenderness of his love to the church, as cannot but administer the most exquisite delight to the believing soul. Considered in both these views, I think the work resembles the paradisaical garden described by Milton, in which " * Blossoms and fruits at once of golden hue Appear'd, with gay enamell'd colours mix'd."

—The Freeman (Religious Newspaper), Aug. 1, 1855.

Price 6s., royal 8vo., cloth; calf grained, 10s. 6d.; with Portrait of the Author, uniform with the "Commentary," (if bound up with Dr. Gill's "Exposition of Solomon's Song," 1 vol., cloth, 10s. 6d.; calf grained, 15s. 6d.), Dr. GILL's Cause of God and Truth.

"A sterling work, that plucks up by the roots the Arminian heresy."

This work contains the result of a vast amount of study and of learned and laborious investigation, of the writings of the early fathers on the Calvinistic and Arminian controversy, and published originally at a time when the nation was alarmed with the growth of Popery. Its republication at the present is, therefore, most seasonable. The learned Doctor has herein laid the axe at the very root of the tree—Arminianism and Pelagianism—the very life and soul of Popery. This new edition is published marvellously cheap.—Baptist Messenger, July, 1855.

To say the least, none of our Ministers should be without a copy.—Primitive Church Magazine, July, 1855.

Its elaborate expositions of debated passages of Scripture, its admirable quotations from the writings of the early fathers, and the force with which evangelical truths are stated and defended, all entitle it to warm commendation.—The London Freeman.

1 vol., 700 pages, large, cloth, price 3s.; eight copies for 21s.,

Dr. HAWKER's Morning and Evening Portions, being a selection of a Verse of Scripture, with short observations, for Every Day in the Year; intended for the use of the Poor in Spirit, who are Rich in Faith, and heirs of the Kingdom.

Precious treasures to the Christian, and will remain so as long as they are printed. We notice this edition to recommend them for their cheapness.—Bucks Chronicle.

The Editor has laid the poor of Christ's flock under great obligations, by furnishing this very neat and useful edition to Subscribers at the low price of a half-a-crown.—Gospel Herald.

Calculated to incite to close self-examination, and to lead to an humble and holy walk with God.—Freeman

A Key to Open Scripture Metaphors. In Four Books. To which are prefixed, Arguments to prove the Divine Authority of the Holy Bible; together with Types of the Old Testament. By the Rev. BENJAMIN KEACH.

The pleasure I have anticipated the last three months in the perusal of the work, has been fully realized; and every time my attention is drawn to it, only enhances its value. I think it needs only to be known, to be generally appreciated by the Clergy. To say the least of it, it is an extraordinary cheap book.—Rev. T. R. Falpy, Hingham.

The Book is well worth waiting for, and is published at a very low price.—E. G., Barnstaple.

A book without which no Christian Minister's Library can be complete, and which may be very useful to every attentive reader and lover of the Word of God.—De Coetlogan.

AMBROSE SERLE'S Church of God: Essays upon some descriptive Names and Titles, given in the Scriptures, by God the Holy Ghost, to the General Assembly of all True believers in God the Son, or the God-man Jesus Christ; and denoting the Nature and Means of their salvation, through the everlasting Covenant made, by God the Father, with those Divine Persons in the One Jehovah. To which is added, CHRISTIAN HUSBANDRY; or, a Companion for the Christian in his Field or Garden.

It must recommend itself to every spiritual reader by its own sweet, savoury spirit, and the mellow gospel tone of its voice.—Royal Diadem.

In purchasing, our readers will help forward a great philanthropic work.—Bucks Chronicle.

A truly precious wedge of Ophir's gold.—The Little Gleaner.

The Church of God is here contemplated under nearly forty different Scripture characters or descriptions, and the various illustrations are generally interesting, instructive, and profitable. The second part of this volume, respecting the seasons, is also well worthy of an attentive perusal.—Gospel Herald, July 1855.

Another reprint of some sterling divinity, executed by the Irish lads. We rejoice in the success which has already attended the foundation of this excellent School, and trust that it may long be continued in existence, and that it may be the means of training up many Irish lads to habits of industry and application. The work before us is full of the very marrow of the Gospel, and indicate that their author was a man full of faith and the Holy Ghost. It is written in an earnest and pious strain, and would form an excellent companion for the closet. As to the style in which the work is executed, we can speak with the highest satisfaction. The printing is clear and distinct. It is a credit to the lads who printed it.—Primitive Church Magazine, July, 1855.
It is full of "grace and truth."—Baptist Messenger.

REVIEWS OF SERLE'S CHURCH OF GOD—Continued.

The present volume is a beautiful description of the Church of God from the first moment of her generation till safely housed in glory. The author commences by expounding on the signification of the word "Church," dwells on the ceremonials of the Jewish Tabernacle and Temple, and at last launches forth with great sublimity, on the various characteristics of the regenerated family of God, not leaving them till he bids them farewell in their ultimate glorification. Part II, under the title of "Christian Husbandry," is a comparison of the various seasons of the year with Christian experience. It is well printed; and Mr. Doudney deserves great commendations for his laudable efforts in bringing out some of the choicest works ever penned by Christian writers, and, by the low prices charged, placing them within the reach of those whose means forbade their purchase in their original forms.—Zion's Trumpet
